I am aware that there is an instruction in the Burma Courts Manual (para. 102) which says that, in the event of a gazetted Govt. Officer desiring to inspect any record of a Subordinate Magistrate's Court, on his application to the District Magistrate the latter, after inspecting the record, shall decide, in the exercise of his discretion, whether it should be forwarded to such officer or not. This instruction, which is based on the provisions of s. 17 (1), Criminal P. C., no doubt applies to pending as well as to completed proceedings; but the discretion which has to be exercised is the discretion of the District Magistrate, unfettered by influences and pressure which may weigh with the Deputy Commissioner, and it can very rarely be a proper exercise of such discretion to remove a pending proceeding from the Court of a Magistrate and forward it to an executive officer, and even in the rare cases when such a course might be justifiable it would be essential for the District Magistrate to take adequate steps to see that the record must be returned within a reasonable time so that the trial could proceed. In the present instance the District Magistrate never exercised his discretion at all, and it would seem that he never even inspected the records after they had been received from the Magistrates, but that they were forwarded as a matter of course by Headquarters Assistant to the Deputy Conservator of Forests. This action was not in accordance with either the letter or the spirit of the instruction contained in the Courts Manual.

This matter was brought to the notice of this Court by the successor-in-office of the District Magistrate who originally directed his head judicial clerk to call for these records, and he has stated that frequent reminders and letters for the return of the record were sent to the Deputy Conservator of Forests, who, in reply, had stated that he was unable to obtain any answer to his requests to the Ministry of Forests for the return of the records. This statement, to my mind discloses a serious state of affairs, and shows how very hazardous it is for a District Magistrate to remove the record of a pending trial from a Subordinate Magistrate and forward it for perusal to an executive authority, and confirms what I have already stated, that it is only on the rarest occasion that it can be a proper exercise of the District Magistrate's discretion to do so. The action of the Ministry of Forests in calling for the records of these pending cases was, an unwarranted interference with the course of justice, and their retention for over a year heightened the gravity of the matter. The respondents have been called upon to show cause why the trials should not proceed to a conclusion, but it would not, in my opinion, now be in accordance with the principles of natural justice to bring the respondents again before the Criminal Courts to answer for these petty offences after such gross delay. I therefore suggest to the present District Magistrate that he should instruct the Public Prosecutor to apply under the provisions of s. 494, Criminal P. C., to the Magistrate concerned for permission to withdraw from the prosecution of the respondents, or, if he prefers to adopt this course, transfer these pending cases to his own file and put an end to the proceedings under the provisions of s. 249 of the Code. The records of the trials will now be returned to the Magistrates concerned and a copy of this judgment will be forwarded to the District Magistrate of Yamethin for his information.

Order accordingly.

SUGAMBAR SINGH—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 22, 30—Notice issued under r. 22 but not served on recipient of notice—Sale held in execution is nullity—Proper recipient of notice can maintain suit for declaration that sale was not binding on him.

Where no notice under O. XXI, r. 22, Civil P. C., has been issued, a sale in execution is wholly without jurisdiction. Mere issuing a notice is not, however, sufficient. The Court must be satisfied that the notice has been served on the person whom the Court regards as the proper recipient of the notice. Hence where notice is issued but not served at all, the sale held subsequently is wholly ineffective against the person against whom the notice under O. XXI, r. 22 was issued and this is not a case of irregularity or fraud in the publication or conduct of a sale so as to attract r. 90 but rather a case where no sale at all has been held. In the eye of the law the sale in such a case is a nullity and the person on whom the notice ought to have been served is entitled to maintain a suit for a declaration that the sale of property in execution was not binding on him and for recovery of possession of the same together with mesne profits. 24 Ind. Cas. 304 (1), relied on, Malkarjun v. Narhari (2); distinguished.

L. P. A. from a decision of Mr. Justice Wort, dated March 19, 1940.

Mr. P. B. Ganguly, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. P. Das, for the Respondent.

Harries, C. J.—This is a defendants' appeal from a decision of Wort, J. in second appeal affirming the decision of the lower Appellate Court.

The plaintiff brought a suit out of which these proceedings arise for a declaration that the sale of certain property in execution was not binding on him and for recovery of possession of the same together with mesne profits. The trial Court dismissed the suit, but on appeal the learned Subordinate Judge reversed the decree and decreed the plaintiff's claim. In second appeal this decision was affirmed.

The plaintiff claimed that the execution was not binding on him by reason of the fact that it was a sale wholly without jurisdiction. According to the plaintiff, no notice under O. XXI, r. 22, Civil P. C. was served upon him, and that being so, the executing Court had no jurisdiction whatsoever to proceed with the sale.

The lower Appellate Court has held as a fact that the executing Court issued notice, but it was an improper one. Further, it was found that such notice was never served upon the plaintiff. The latter is a finding of fact which cannot be challenged in this Court. Counsel for the appellants tried to persuade us to reject this finding on the ground that the order sheet of the executing Court showed that notice had been served. What weight is to be attached to the evidence is a matter for the lower Court, and that Court has found that no notice under O. XXI, r. 22 was ever served and that concludes the matter.

There is no doubt whatsoever that where no notice under O. XXI, r. 22 has been issued a sale in execution is wholly without jurisdiction. That was decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (1). Counsel for the appellants has attempted to distinguish this case from the Privy Council case. In the latter no notice was issued, whereas in the case before us notice was issued but was not served. The appellants rely on the case of Malkarjun v. Narhari (2). In that case the Court issued notice, and it was served. The recipient of the notice protested that he was not the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor, but the Court wrongly held that he was and ordered the sale to proceed. In those circumstances, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the sale was with jurisdiction as notice had not only been issued but served and the Court had jurisdiction to decide who was the legal representative, though as a matter of fact it decided that question wrongly. In my view mere issuing a notice is not sufficient. The Court must be satisfied that the notice has been served on the person whom the Court regards as the proper recipient of the notice. In the present case as no notice was served at all, the case clearly comes within the decision in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (1) to which I have already made reference, and, therefore the sale was wholly ineffective against the plaintiff.

It has been contended that the plaintiff should have moved to set aside the sale under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 90. It was contended that the failure to serve notice under O. XXI, r. 22 was a material irregularity or fraud in the publication or conduct of the sale. In my view there can be no sale at all unless the notice under O. XXI, r. 22 is served, and this is not a case of irregularity or fraud in the publication or conduct of a sale but rather a case where no sale at all has been held. In the eye of the law the sale in this case was a nullity, and in my judgment the plaintiff was clearly entitled to the relief claimed.

In the result, therefore, I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Fazi Ali, J.—I agree.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

June 17, 1940

PANCKRIDGE, J.

JATINDRA MOHAN BANERJEE

—PLAINTIFF

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA—

DEFENDANT

Malicious prosecution—Suit for damages—Essentials—Municipal Corporation prosecuting Pleader in spite of his paying requisite licence-fee—Pleader discharged on his producing requisite licence—Pleader's suit against Corporation for damages for malicious prosecution—Pleader held had no cause of action—Corporation, if can rely on entries or absence thereof in their books—Corporation Officer responsible for prosecution knowing that Pleader had paid licence-fee—Malice or reasonable and probable cause for prosecution.

There are three sorts of damage, any one of which is sufficient to support an action for malicious prosecution. First, damage to a man's fame, as if the matter whereof he is accused be scandalous. Secondly, damage to his person, as where a man is put in danger to lose his life, limb or liberty. Thirdly, damage to his property, as where he is forced to expend money in necessary charges to acquit himself of the crime of which he is accused. It is no answer to an action for malicious prosecution to show simply that the offence, which was the subject-matter of the prosecution, is punishable with fine only. [p. 376, col. 1.]

A Pleader was prosecuted by the Municipal Corporation for practising without licence in spite of his having paid the requisite licence-fee. He was, however, discharged on his production of the licence. The Pleader thereupon instituted a suit for malicious prosecution:

Held, that there was no danger to life, limb or liberty in the case, because failure to take out a licence when practising a profession was punishable with fine only. Similarly the matter of which the plaintiff was accused could not be described as scandalous. The charges incurred by the plaintiff in engaging the Pleader could not also be said to be justified. If there had been witnesses to be cross-examined, it might have been different, but as it was the plaintiff, who himself was a professional man, had a complete answer to the charges in the form of the licence granted by the Corporation, the plaintiff had no cause of action. [p. 376, col. 1.]

Held, further that the Corporation could not rely on the entries or the absence of the entries in their books or the absence of corrections in their books which were due solely to their own failure to maintain proper supervision. If any Corporation Official who was responsible for the prosecution knew that the plaintiff had paid his licence-fee there was no reasonable and probable cause and equally there must have been malice.

Messrs. S. B. Sinha and A. K. Bhat-tacharjee, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. S. R. Das and J. C. Sett, for the Defendant.

Judgment.—The plaintiff in this case claims Rs. 5,100 as damages for malicious prosecution. The circumstances are as follows: The plaintiff is a Pleader of 19 years standing. He originally practised in the District of Jessore, but since 1928 he has been practising in Calcutta. To obtain his annual license under the Legal Practitioners' Act he has to apply to one of the Courts that grant such licenses, and in fact he is in the habit of obtaining this license from the Calcutta Small Cause Court, and he is shown on that Court's roll of practitioners. He does not however practise in the Small Cause Court. His evidence is that he practises exclusively before the income-tax authorities who, until the pujahs of 1937, had their offices in Hare Street, but now have their offices in Govt place. In addition to his professional license he has to obtain a Municipal license under s. 175, Cal. Municipal Act of 1923. The license is an annual one, and as a Pleader the plaintiff is required by the Act to pay a yearly fee of Rs. 25. The financial year of the Corporation as every one knows begins on April 1, and terminates on March 31, following. The penalty for failing to take out a Municipal license is provided by s. 492, Municipal Act, which enacts that if any person exercises on or after the first day of July in any year any profession, trade or calling referred to in Chap. XII without having the license prescribed by that Chapter, he shall be punished with fine which may extend to three times the amount payable in respect of such license. On March 14, 1936, the plaintiff paid for and obtained his license in respect of the year 1935-1936. In the license he is described as "carrying on business at No. 3, Bankshall Street."

In spite of this, however, the Corporation License Inspector instituted proceedings against him on June 13, 1936 for having practised without a license during the period concerned. A summons was issued, and before the day fixed in the summons for appearance the plaintiff filed a petition before the Magistrate in which he stated that he had already paid for his license and held a receipt for it. He gave his private address as 28/3, Jamapur Lane, Calcutta and described himself as "a Pleader practising in the Income-tax offices." In para. 3 of the petition he stated that he was enrolled in the Small Cause Court, but practised exclusively in the Police Court, and he added that the license receipt gave as the address of the plaintiff No. 3, Bankshall Street. When the case came up on August 25, 1936, the License Inspector, H. D. Sen, who is defendant No. 2 in this suit, admitted that the license-fee had been paid and the plaintiff was accordingly discharged.

The plaintiff's story is that at the termination of the proceedings he had an altercation with defendant No. 2, in the course of which he remarked that this was the sort of thing that happened under what he described as "this Swarajist Corporation." According to the plaintiff defendant No. 2 indicated that the "Swarajist Corporation" would make the plaintiff regret the observations he had made. I find it difficult to accept the plaintiff's evidence as to this altercation. The Corporation has been Swarajist since 1923, if by that is meant that since that date it has been presided over by the Mayor of Calcutta assisted by the Chief Executive Officer and his subordinates instead of having a Chairman nominated by Govt. as was the case prior to that date. The Chairman of the Corporation prior to 1923 was invariably, as far as I know, a member of the Indian Civil Service. The taunt that the Corporation is a Swarajist Corporation seems to me to be somewhat out of date in 1936. I may also add that the letter of demand which the plaintiff wrote to the Corporation before the present proceedings were initiated, contains no reference to the altercation. This is of considerable importance because save for this altercation there is no incident alleged or suggested which could have aroused the anger of the license authorities. The fact that summons was taken out although the license had already been paid appears to have been due to the fact that the responsibility for collecting license fees and prosecuting defaulters is allocated among a considerable body of License Inspectors.

Up to the year 1935-36 license fees had been collected from the plaintiff without trouble by the Inspector who was responsible for collecting license fees from Pleaders practising in the Income-tax offices in Hare Street. Apparently, in the assessment which took place early in 1936, the License Inspector responsible for the fees of Small Cause Court practitioners looked at the roll of legal practitioners maintained in that Court, and found the plaintiff's name on it, and a demand was accordingly made for the license fee which the plaintiff paid, as I have said, on March 14, 1936. Meanwhile no correction had been made in the assessment list of the Income-tax office practitioners, with the result that the plaintiff was shown as a defaulter in that list, and proceedings were started against him. On March 30, 1937, the plaintiff paid his license fee in respect of the year 1936-37. The plaintiff said that both this fee and the one for the preceding year were collected from him at his residence by a Corporation official. The evidence given by the Corporation officials and the form of the two licenses would certainly lead one to suppose that the licenses were obtained direct from the Corporation office by the plaintiff or some one acting upon his behalf. There is however no particular reason why, if this was so, the plaintiff should set up the story about the official calling at his residence, and the question where the money was actually paid, is of no importance in the case.

The next incident which is common ground is that on June 25, 1937 defendant No. 2 filed a complaint before the Municipal Magistrate charging the plaintiff, whose address was given as 17, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane, with carrying on the profession of a Pleader at 1, Hare Street without a license during the year 1936-37. A summons was issued and came back with an endorsement indicating that it had been served on the plaintiff. The bailiff alleged to have served the summons was at a later stage examined by the Magistrate who thereupon, as the plaintiff did not appear, issued a warrant for the plaintiff's arrest. The plaintiff was arrested on April 21, 1938 and furnished bail. When the case came up for disposal the plaintiff produced his license and was discharged. The Magistrate called upon the License Inspector concerned, Dharendra Nath Banerjee, for an explanation which was furnished, and accepted by the Magistrate. This suit was instituted on July 20, 1938, the date of the plaintiff's discharge being May 7, 1938.

Two points of law are submitted by Mr. S. R. Das on behalf of the defendants. He first submits that this is not a case in which an action for malicious prosecution can lie, and for this he relies on Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban District Council (1). In that case a complaint had been made under s. 95, Public Health Act, against the occupier of a house for non-compliance with a notice stating that a nuisance existed at the house arising from the want of cleansing of certain rooms, and requiring him to abate the same by stripping the paper off the walls, and doing other repairs. The Justices dismissed the complaint and awarded costs to the plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon instituted proceedings for malicious prosecution and was awarded £250 by way of damages. Horridge, J., as Judge of first instance ruled that the complaint was a proceeding involving damage to the plaintiff's fair fame within the first three heads of damage stated by Lord Holt, C. J., in the old case in Savile v. Roberts (2). The Court of Appeal set aside the verdict of the jury, holding that the ruling of Horridge, J., to which I have referred, was erroneous. Buckley, L. J., in his judgment quoting Lord Holt, observes:

"There are three sorts of damage, any one of which is sufficient to support this action. First, damage to a man's fame, as if the matter whereof he is accused be scandalous. Secondly, damage to his person, as where a man is put in danger to lose his life, limb or liberty. Thirdly, damage to his property, as where he is forced to expend money in necessary charges to acquit himself of the crime of which he is accused."

Admittedly there was no danger to life, limb or liberty in the case I am considering, because failure to take out a license when practising a profession is punishable with fine only. In Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban District Council (1), the plaintiff had been awarded costs against the complainant, but he had his costs, as between Solicitor and client which amounted to more than the sum awarded. It was held that this did not bring the case within the third head of damage mentioned by Lord Holt. In the present case the plaintiff has given some evidence that he engaged a Pleader and paid him a fee. Accepting the story that he did so, in my opinion, the circumstances were not such as would justify such a course. If there had been witnesses to be cross-examined, it might have been different, but as it was the plaintiff, who himself is a professional man, had a complete answer to the charge in the form of the license granted by the Corporation. I am also inclined to think that in the present case the matter of which the plaintiff was accused cannot be described as scandalous. Taking Wiffer v. Bailey and Romford Urban District Council (1), as a guide, in my opinion, the commission of an offence under the Public Health Act involving an alleged nuisance would, by most people, be regarded as more culpable than a practising profession without having taken out a Municipal license. I agree that it is nowhere laid down that it is an answer to an action for malicious prosecution to show simply that the offence, which was the subject-matter of the prosecution, is punishable with fine only, yet I should be inclined to hold on the authority of the English case that the plaintiff has no cause of action. However I do not expressly decide so, as I consider the plaintiff fails on another ground.

Another point is made by Mr. Das to the effect that it can hardly be said there was no reasonable and probable cause in this case because having regard to the admitted facts the plaintiff's case was clearly covered by s. 492. Section 534 of the Act limits the period in which proceedings may be brought against persons for offences under the Act, to three months. Sub-section (2) of s. 534 provides that failure to take out a license under this Act shall be deemed for the purpose of sub-s. (1) to be a continuing offence until the expiration of the period for which the license is required to be taken out. In my opinion, on the true construction of s. 492 the plaintiff was guilty of an offence by practising on and after July 1, 1936, and that was an offence continuing certainly upto March 30, when he paid the fee, and I think upto March 31, when the period for which the license required to be taken out expired.

However, there are various other considerations to be taken into account. Generally speaking, it is not open for a defendant in an action for malicious prosecution to question the correctness of the plaintiff's acquittal, and secondly this point has never been taken by the Corporation or any of their officers, who have throughout agreed with the plaintiff in this, that if he paid his professional license at any time during the Municipal year 1936-37 he could not thereafter be charged with having committed the offence mentioned in s. 492 in respect of that year. This again is a point I expressly decline to decide. That leaves me to deal with the facts, and the question I have to decide is whether the Corporation had reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution and whether if they had no reasonable and probable cause the defendants or either of them were actuated by malice. Now, it is obvious that a repetition in successive years of the prosecution of a man who has already paid his licence fee for not having paid it ought to be impossible, and I have come to the conclusion that there is a considerable lack of co-ordination in the Corporation's license department. It appears that when the earlier prosecution terminated, although the matter was brought to the notice of the Corporation authorities, the only material entry made in the books was by showing the plaintiff's assessment at the income-tax office as cancelled in the defaulter's list, that is to say, a list compiled after the expiry of the year. Apparently when the new assessment is made the demand entry of last year is used which, in this case, had not been corrected. The consequence is that for the second year in succession the plaintiff's name appeared upon two lists for the same ward, which appears to be inexcusable. I should be inclined to hold that the Corporation cannot rely on entries or the absence of entries in their books or the absence of corrections in their books which are due solely to their own failure to maintain proper supervision. This is not one of those cases where a reckless though honest inference is drawn from facts furnished by a third party, and the cases which deal with that state of things appear to me not to cover circumstances like these, where the defendant Corporation is responsible itself for the reason of the error that has been made. In this case, however, the question of reasonable and probable cause is to a large extent bound up with the issue of malice. Of course, if any Corporation official who was responsible for the prosecution knew that the plaintiff had paid his licence fee there was no reasonable and probable cause, and equally there must have been malice.

Now, although the plaintiff has spoken to an altercation with defendant No. 2, I have not accepted his story, and even if I did accept it, I should equally accept defendant No. 2's evidence that when he instituted the proceedings the plaintiff's name meant nothing to him. He says he was responsible for forty thousand prosecutions a year, and it appears from the written complaint in this case that it was not signed by him, but by the Licence Inspector, the other witness, Dharendra Nath Banerjee, I see no reason why when he filed the petition of complaint before the Magistrate the proceedings of the previous year should have occurred to his mind. With regard to Dharendra Nath Banerjee no reason for malice on his part is alleged, and the only possible theory on which malice can be attributed to him is that defendant No. 2 in his anger at the plaintiff's tone enlisted sympathy of his fellow official; but I have pointed out the difficulties about accepting the plaintiff's version on this part of the story, and if it is not accepted there is no reason to attribute malice to Dharendra Nath Banerjee. It is true that the fate of the first prosecution was directly brought to his notice and he made a report thereon, and he admits that he realised that the person who had paid the licence fee as being on the Small Causes Court assessment was the same person as was on the income-tax assessment. But I cannot find it proved that this fact was present in his mind when he signed the petition of complaint, which formed the basis of the second set of proceedings.

It is admitted that Dharendra Nath Banerjee on one occasion met the plaintiff at the Income-tax office. According to the plaintiff that was after he had paid the income-tax fee, and on Dharendra's questioning about it, he says, he explained, the payment had already been made. Dharendra said that in the ordinary course of his routine he went to the Income-tax office towards the end of the financial year and asked the plaintiff if he had paid his tax, and he said that the plaintiff gave him no reply—a course of conduct which appears strange to me—but which Dhiren says is not uncommon. If Dhiren was a party to a plot to have the plaintiff improperly prosecuted, I think it most unlikely that he would have approached him. If he had wanted to find out whether or not he had paid through the Small Cause Court he would have consulted the appropriate records, and I do not see what motive he could have after the close of the year for putting the plaintiff on his guard by asking him if he had paid. The plaintiff, having regard to what had happened in the previous year, might very well have called up by-stander and explained that for the second time in two years doubts were being thrown upon his having paid his licence fee punctually. I may also add that the plaintiff's version of the conversation between himself and Dharendra Nath Banerjee finds no place in the letter of demand written to the Corporation. In these circumstances I am of opinion that the plaintiff has failed to prove malice against the other defendant, and it is an essential part of his cause of action.

The plaintiff also attaches some importance to the course of the proceedings before the Municipal Magistrate. The summons was returned, endorsed as having been served upon the plaintiff, but the plaintiff swears that he was never served, and it is suggested that the service was what is generally called suppressed. The bailiff and the alleged identifier have not been called, and it is stated that the bailiff is no longer serving the Municipal Magistrate's Court. One knows that identification by a by-stander, as is usual in cases like this, is of very little value, and Court peons are often careless in the discharge of this particular duty. Further, the address given in the summons is not the plaintiff's present address. In these circumstances I am fully prepared to accept the plaintiff's statement that the summons was not served upon him, for I do not think that if it had been served he would have endeavoured to aggravate his grievances by courting arrest. At the same time I do not feel justified in coming to a conclusion that the alleged service was a sham and that the fact that the plaintiff did not receive notice of the proceedings against him can be attributed to the defendant Corporation or to the Corporation servants. I have some sympathy with the plaintiff, and I think that the Corporation should certainly take steps to overhaul the organisation of their licence department, but that does not entitle me to give him any relief when, in my opinion, he has not established his claim. The suit is dismissed with one set of costs. As it is an unimportant and simple case I certify for one Counsel.

April 2, 1941

MEREDITH AND SHEARER, JJ.
RAI BAGESHWARI PRASAD AND ANOTHER—PETITIONERS

TULSI GARAIN—OPPOSITE PARTY

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii)—Suit for declaration that order of Revenue Officer fixing reduced rent under s. 112, Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), was illegal and of no effect and for enhancement of rent to original one—Suit does not fall under s. 104-H, Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), but is for declaration pure and simple—Court-fee payable is under Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii).

A suit was brought for the following reliefs. (1) A declaration that an order of the Revenue Officer fixing a reduced rent roll under s. 112 of the Bihar Ten. Act, was wrong, illegal, without jurisdiction, unenforceable, and not binding on the plaintiffs. (2) For enhancement of the reduced rent to the rent formerly paid :

Held, that the suit was not one under s. 104-H, Bihar Ten. Act. The declaration sought was necessary in view of s. 15 of the Bihar Restoration of Baksht Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act. The only relief however, which the plaintiff could ask the Court to grant, was a declaration that the proceedings were illegal and without effect. The Court could not be asked, to cancel the proceedings of the Revenue Officer. Once that declaration was given, there could be no need for any additional relief in the shape of restoration of the old rates of rent, or an enhancement of the rent to the old rates. Once it was declared that the alteration in the rates was illegal and of no effect, the old rates of rent would be restored automatically. Therefore, the second prayer for restoration of the original rate of rent by enhancement, was in fact quite unnecessary, and should be disregarded as surplusage. The Court must in such cases go by the substance rather than the wording of the plaint and substantially the suit was for a declaration, pure and simple and there was clearly a court-fee payable for the declaration under Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii), Court Fees Act.

Held, further that the Civil Court was not sitting in appeal or revision from the orders of the Revenue Officer, and if those were voidable orders, it was not for the Civil Court to cancel them.

C. R. from an order of the Munsif, Jehanabad, dated April 26, 1940.

Mr. Sarju Prasad, for the Petitioners.
No one for the Opposite Party.

The Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Meredith, J.—This is an application by plaintiffs for revision of an order of the learned Munsif of Jehanabad, calling upon the petitioners to pay deficit court-fees:

The suit was one of a number brought for the following reliefs:—

- (1) A declaration that an order of the Revenue Officer fixing a reduced rent roll under s. 112 of the Bihar Ten. Act was wrong, illegal, without jurisdiction, unenforceable, and not binding on the plaintiffs,
- (2) for enhancement of the reduced rent to the rent formerly paid, and
- (3) for arrears of rent said to be due for certain years.

The petitioners paid ad valorem court-fees as regards the third prayer, namely, for a decree for arrears of rent, and there is no question before us with regard to the correctness of that. In regard to the first two prayers, however, the court-fee paid by the petitioners was ad valorem upon the basis of one year's rental. It is contended that the first two prayers were treated as being for a declaration and consequential relief, and that the court-fee paid under this head was paid under s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act, the plaintiffs having valued their consequential relief at the amount of one year's rental. It seems, however, more probable that the court-fee on the basis of one year's rental was really paid under s. 7 (vi) (b). However, that may be, the learned Munsif held that the suit was one for a declaration, without further consequential relief, and a necessary declaration, and the proper court-fee payable was Rs. 15 under Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii) of the Court Fees Act.

As the question of Govt. Revenue is involved, we have had notice served on the Advocate-General, who has appeared, and we have had the benefit of his assistance. There is no appearance on behalf of the opposite party.

It has been argued before us that the suit is really a suit under s. 104-H of the Bihar Ten. Act, and it is pointed out that it has been held judicially that certain suits under s. 104-H are for declaration and consequential relief, and governed as regards court-fees by s. 7 (iv) (c). These rulings are Pajiruddin v. The Secretary of State for India (1) and Trailokya Nath Pal v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (2).

There are two answers to this argument. In the first place, these rulings do not lay down any general rule with regard to suits under s. 104-H. They relate only to the particular case where in addition to the prayer for declaration there is a prayer for settlement of fair rent, and in those two cases it was because of the existence of the prayer for settlement of fair rents that it was held that consequential relief was an ingredient in the suits. Mr. Sarju Prasad for the petitioners frankly concedes that there may well be suits under some of the provisions of s. 104-H, for example, s. 104-H (3) (a) or (c), which are plainly purely declaratory suits.

In the second place, it is quite clear that the present suit is in no sense a suit under s. 104-H. Section 104-H (3) enumerates certain grounds, and provides that the suit may be instituted on any of these grounds, and on no others. The scope of a suit under s. 104-H is, therefore, limited, and Mr. Sarju Prasad is unable to say that the present suit falls under any of the grounds (a) to (g) specified in s. 104-H. It is indeed obvious that a suit for a declaration that the proceedings of the Revenue Officer are ultra vires and illegal, is not at all the sort of suit contemplated by s. 104-H. The decisions cited have, therefore, no relevance.

Mr. Sarju Prasad argues, however, on general principles, that this is a case where, if they had to pray for a declaration at all, the plaintiffs had to pray for something more by way of consequential relief, while if the proceedings of the Revenue Officer were wholly void ab initio, they could be ignored without any declaration; the prayer for declaration was unnecessary, and the suit could be treated purely as a suit for rent. On the other hand, if the proceedings were merely voidable, then the prayer to restore the old rates of rent was in no sense a surplusage, but was a necessary consequential relief.

In my view, these arguments are not correct. The necessity of a declaration is clear from the provisions of s. 15 of the Bihar Restoration of Bakasht Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act (Act IX of 1938), since the effect of this section is that the landlord cannot sue for recovery of rent at a rate in excess of the reduced rate fixed by the Revenue Officer.

On the other hand, it appears to me that all that it was necessary for the plaintiffs to ask for in this case, and indeed the only relief they could ask the Court to grant, was a declaration that the proceedings were illegal and without effect. This was not a case comparable to a case for a declaration of the invalidity of a document and for its cancellation. The Court cannot be asked, and was not asked, to cancel the proceedings of the Revenue Officer. The Civil Court is not sitting in appeal or revision from the orders of the Revenue Officer, and, if those are voidable orders, it is not for the Civil Court to cancel them. In fact, as I have said, all that need be asked for, and all the Court could do, is to give a declaration that the proceedings of the Revenue Officer were illegal, and so of no effect. Once that declaration was given, there could be no need for any additional relief in the shape of restoration of the old rates of rent, or an enhancement of the rent to the old rates. Once it was declared that the alteration in the rates was illegal and of no effect, the old rates of rent would be restored automatically.

It seems to me, therefore, that the second prayer in this case, for restoration of the original rate of rent by enhancement, was in fact quite unnecessary, and should be disregarded as surplusage. Substantially and we must in these cases go by the substance rather than the wording of the plaint—the suit was for a declaration, pure and simple, a necessary declaration, coupled with a prayer for a decrees for arrears of rent. That prayer was in no sense consequential relief and it has not been argued that it was. It was a quite independent prayer for relief. Separate court-fees were, therefore, quite rightly paid and accepted for that relief. But apart from that, there was clearly a court-fee payable for the declaration under Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii). The Munsif was, in my view, quite right in demanding that court-fee.

I would, therefore, dismiss this application. There will be no order for costs. It will be open to the petitioners to apply to the learned Munsif for reasonable time in order to make up the deficiency in court-fees.

Shearer, J.—I agree. What the plaintiffs in substance asked for was a declaration that, in spite of the proceedings in the Revenue Courts, they were entitled to recover rent from the defendants at the same rate as they had been entitled to recover it before these proceedings commenced. Such a suit is, in my opinion, a suit under s. 42 of the

Second Appeals Nos. 14 and 15 of 1938

Partnership Act (IX of 1932), ss. 9, 29—S. 9, construction of—Subsequent sections are mere amplifications and illustrations of principles embodied in s. 9—Assignment by ex-partner in firm after dissolution—Suit by transferee for accounts of dissolved partnership as whole and not for accounts after dissolution only—Assignors, if necessary parties—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 130 (2), effect of—Partners' position—His rights and obligations, if chose in action—Right to recover share in partnership property, whether assignable—Practice—Appeal—New plea—Legality of partnership as regards constitution, is mixed question of law and fact.

All the subsequent sections to s. 9 of the Partnership Act dealing with the relations of partners to one another are no more than amplifications and illustrations of the principles contained in s. 9. [p. 382, col. 1.]

In a suit by a transferee or an assignee from an ex-partner in a firm after the dissolution of the partnership, for accounts of the dissolved partnership as a whole and not for accounts after the date of the dissolution only, the assignors are necessary parties. Hence, when they are not joined either as plaintiffs or defendants till more than three years after the dissolution of the partnership the entire suit must stand dismissed. Section 130 (2), T. P. Act, does not obviate the necessity of impleading the assignor in such a suit. Public Trustee v. Elder (1), followed.

The position and rights and obligations of one partner in a partnership in relation to the other partners is clearly not a chose in action and cannot be assigned. But the share of a partner in a partnership is property and may be assigned. The right to recover it is a chose in action. In re Bainbridge, Ex parte Fletcher (5), Cassels v. Stewart (6), 75 Ind. Cas. 817 (7) and 80 Ind. Cas. 642 (8), explained. [p. 384, col. 2.]

The question as to the legality of the constitution of a partnership is clearly a mixed question of law and fact and the Appellate Court cannot, for the first time raise such a question and decide it.

S. As. against the judgment and decrees of the First Class, Sub-Judge, Shikarpur, exercising appellate powers.

Mr. Fatehchand Asudamal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Srikishindas H. Lulla, for the Respondents.

Lobo, J.—The facts which have led up to these two second appeals are somewhat involved and need to be set out in considerable detail for a proper understanding of this judgment. Suit No 7 of 1926 in the Subordinate Civil Court of Jacobabad was filed by the firm of Mulchand Tagiomal of Shikarpur, the appellants in these appeals for the settlement of accounts of the partnership firm of Chellaram Tharumal which had been dissolved on October 31, 1923. The constitution of this firm of Chellaram Tharumal was peculiar, for the firm consisted of five individuals: Tharumal, Shamdass, Hotumal, Gunomal, Gellomal, defendants Nos. 1 to 5 in the suit, and two firms: Chellaram Bhojraj and Mulchand Tagiomal of Jacobabad, the latter being defendant No. 6 in the suit. The firm of Chellaram Bhojraj again, was composed of an individual Mathuradas Lekhraj and two firms: Kishindas Kimatram and Nandumal Mulchand. The partners in the firm of Kishindas Kimatram were Sobhraj, Kishindas, Rijharam and Kimatram, defendants Nos. 7 to 10 in the suit. Nandumal Mulchand, again, consisted of two firms, Nandumal Tarachand, the partners in which were Tarachand and Jethanand, defendants Nos. 11-a and 11-b in the suit; Mulchand Shambumal, the partners in which were Tagiomal, Kachumal, Khanchand, Parmanand, Lilomal and Chuharmal, defendants Nos. 12 to 17 in the suit, and two individuals, Chellaram and Hundraj, defendants Nos. 18 and 19 in the suit. Defendant No. 20 in the suit is the son of Mathradas Lekhraj, deceased. Defendants Nos. 11 to 20 were not originally impleaded in the suit; they were brought on the record only in 1931, a great deal more than three years after the dissolution of the firm of Chellaram Tharumal.

The plaintiffs in the suit, the firm of Mulchand Tagiomal of Shikarpur, were thus not originally partners in the firm of Chellaram Tharumal, but under certain documents which are Exs. 100, 215 and 228 in the case, they became the assignees of the firm of Nandumal Mulchand and of Mathradas Lekhraj, two of the partners in the dissolved firm of Chellaram Tharumal. In the trial Court the suit was contested by defendant No. 2 Shamdass, respondent No. 1 in these appeals and by defendants Nos. 7 to 10, the partners in the firm of Kishindas Kimatram, respondents Nos. 2 to 5 in these appeals. Defendants Nos. 1, 4, 5 and 6 and 11 to 20 raised no contest; defendant No. 3 Hotumal denied he was a partner.

The suit was in the first instance dismissed by the trial Court, the learned Judge holding that the plaintiffs' assignors were necessary parties to a suit for settlement of accounts of the partnership carried on in the name and style of Chellaram Tharumal, and as these assignors had not been joined as parties for much more than three years after the dissolution of the firm, the accounts of which were sought to be settled, the entire suit was barred by limitation. The plaintiffs went on appeal, and the Appellate Court ordered that the assignors referred to should be joined as parties to the suit and the trial Court should decide the question of limitation after such joinder had been effected. If the plaintiffs, however, refused to join the assignors the suit should stand dismissed. This order of the Appellate Court is not on the paper books of these appeals but is referred to in the judgment of the learned Judge of the trial Court. In the trial Court after this appeal the plaintiffs joined the assignors in the suit as defendants Nos. 11 to 20. The suit then proceeded to trial and the learned Subordinate Judge, Mr. Hardasnal Banasing, decreed the plaintiffs' suit holding that the assignments in favour of plaintiffs were valid and legal, that defendants Nos. 11 to 20 were proper but not necessary parties to the suit, and that therefore the suit for settlement of partnership accounts was not barred by limitation; the learned Judge then disposed of certain minor issues in the case and ordered that a preliminary decree be framed on the basis of his findings. Against this preliminary decree, an appeal was preferred to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Shikarpur with appellate powers being Civil Appeal No. 98 of 1932.

The learned First Class Subordinate Judge reversed the judgment and decree of the trial Court and allowed the appeal. He agreed with the learned Judge of the trial Court that defendants Nos. 11 to 20, the assignors of the plaintiffs, were not necessary parties to the suit and that their non-joinder in the first instance therefore did not result in the suit being barred by limitation. He held, however, that the assignments in favour of the plaintiffs were illegal and invalid, and he further held that the entire proceedings were bad as the firm of Chellaram Tharumal consisted of more than 20 members and not having been registered under the provisions of the Companies Act the partnership was invalid according to law and the suit should have been dismissed. During the pendency of the appeal Hundraj and Bhojraj, defendants Nos. 19 and 20, had died and their legal representatives had not been brought on the record. The learned Judge of the Appellate Court held that the appeal had not abated by reason of the non-joinder of these legal representatives. Another respondent, Tharumal, original defendant No. 1, also died during the pendency of the appeal and his legal representatives had also not been brought on the record. The learned Judge rejected the contention that the non-joinder of the legal representatives of Tharumal resulted in the abatement of the appeal as a whole.

This judgment of the learned Appellate Judge was delivered on March 26, 1938. In the meanwhile a final decree in the suit had been passed by the learned Judge of the trial Court on September 30, 1932 and an appeal had been presented against that final decree being Civil Appeal No. 17 of 1932 of the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Shikarpur with appellate powers. While dismissing the suit in appeal from the preliminary decree the learned Judge also dismissed this appeal from the final decree by a judgment dated March 31, 1938. It is against these two judgments of the learned Appellate Judge that these Second Appeals Nos. 14 and 15 of 1938 have been preferred to this Court. The learned Advocate who appeared for the appellants to argue these matters before us took four points. He contended: (1) that the appeal had abated by reason of the non-joinder of the legal representatives of Hundraj and Bhojraj and should therefore have been dismissed; (2) that the appeal had also abated because of the non-joinder of the legal representatives of Tharumal and should on this ground as well have been dismissed; (3) that the learned Judge had erred in raising on appeal for the first time the question of the legality of the constitution of the firm of Chellaram Tharumal and in deciding this issue against the appellant; (4) that the learned Judge erred in holding that the assignments in favour of the plaintiffs, the appellants in these appeals, were invalid and illegal.

We have heard long and interesting arguments in support of and against these contentions of the learned Advocate for the appellants, but it appears to us unnecessary to decide the points debated, because we feel that these appeals can well be disposed of on one single point of law which both the lower Court decided in favour of the appellants, both which has been reargued before us by the learned Advocate for the respondent Shamdass, the only respondent represented before us in these appeals, and on which the learned Advocate contended he was entitled to support the judgment of the lower Court dismissing the suit of the appellants with costs, although the learned Judge of the appellate Court had decided the point against him. That the learned Advocate for respondent Shamdas was entitled to do this is perfectly clear from r. 22 of O. XLI, Civil P. C., which provides that "any respondent, though he may not have appealed from any part of the decree, may not only support the decree on any of the grounds decided against him in the Court below, but take any cross-objection to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal."

The learned Judge of the trial Court held that the assignors of the plaintiffs, the present appellants, were not necessary parties to the suit and that their non-joinder, till more than three years after the dissolution of the firm of Chellaram Tharumal, did not result in the entire suit being barred by limitation. The learned Judge of the Appellate Court upheld this finding of the trial Court. The learned Advocate for respondent Shamdas before us has contended that both the learned Judges were in error in arriving at this conclusion, that defendants Nos. 11 to 20, the assignors of the plaintiffs, the present appellants, were necessary parties to a suit for the taking of accounts of the partnership of Chellaram Tharumal, and they admittedly not having been joined either as plaintiffs or as defendants till more than three years had elapsed after the dissolution of the firm of Chellaram Tharumal, the entire suit was liable to be dismissed. After having heard the learned Advocate for respondent Shamdas, and the learned Advocate for the appellants on this point at very great length, we are of the opinion that this contention is sound and must succeed and that these second appeals must be dismissed. The contract of partnership is a contract uberrimae fidei. Section 9, Partnership Act, which materially reproduces s. 257, Contract Act, thus defines the relations between the partners in a partnership:

"Partners are bound to carry on the business of the firm to the greatest common advantage, to be just and faithful to each other, and to render true accounts and full information of all things affecting the firm to any partner or his legal representatives."

All the subsequent sections of the Partnership Act dealing with the relations of partners to one another are no more than amplifications and illustrations of the principles contained in s. 9. The assignment of his rights in a partnership by a partner is clearly contemplated in the Partnership Act. Section 29 of the Act provides:

"(1) A transfer by a partner of his interest in the firm, either absolute or by mortgage, or by the creation by him of a charge on such interest, does not entitle the transferee, during the continuance of the firm, to interfere in the conduct of the business, or to require accounts, or to inspect the books of the firm, but entitles the transferee only to receive the share of profits of the transferring partner, and the transferee shall accept the account of profits agreed to by the partners.

(2) If the firm is dissolved or if the transferring partner ceases to be a partner, the transferee is entitled as against the remaining partners, to receive the share of the assets of the firm to which the transferring partner is entitled, and for the purpose of ascertaining that share, to an account as from the date of the dissolution."

It would appear then that where a partner transfers or assigns his share in a partnership to a third party, that third party has no right to call for an account of the partnership business from the other partners, and even when the transfer results in or is followed by a dissolution of the partnership such transferee or assignee can claim an account only from the date of dissolution. The Partnership Act does not deal with the case of a transfer or assignment by an ex-partner in a firm after the dissolution of the partnership, but we can see no reason why the right of such a transferee or assignee to claim an account of the partnership from the other ex-partners should be any larger than the right of a transferee or assignee under s. 29.

In the case before us the firm of Chellaram Tharumal was dissolved on October 31, 1923 and the plaintiffs in the suit, the present appellants, became transferees or assignees of two of the late partners after dissolution. They filed a suit for accounts of the dissolved partnership as a whole and not for accounts after the date of dissolution only. The question is could they do so in their own right or were the late partners necessary parties to such a suit by the plaintiffs.

The answer to this question is furnished by a consideration of the general law of partnership and the relations between partners and their mutual obligations to which we have referred above, and in the provisions of the Civil P. C., relating to necessary and proper parties to a suit. But, in our opinion, a clear exposition of the law on this point can be found in Public Trustee v. Elder (1) a decision of Eve, J. in the Chancery Division of the High Court of England which was affirmed by the Court of appeal in separate judgments delivered by Lord Hanworth, Master of the Rolls, Warrington and Sargant, L. JJ. The facts in that case were these: At the outbreak of war on August 4, 1914 three German subjects were carrying on in partnership with an English partner F, the business of merchants in London under the style of Arnold Otto

Meyer & Co. F was the managing partner in London and on the dissolution by the declaration of war he carried on the business and collected assets with a view to liquidation. No accounts had been taken between partners since December 31, 1913. F died in 1920 and the defendant was his legal personal representative. By an order of the Board of Trade dated April 1, 1924 it was ordered that all the property rights and interests of the three German partners in the assets of the firm in respect of any claim against the English partner or his estate should vest in the plaintiff who should take all necessary proceedings to collect what would be due to the German partners. In an action by the plaintiff as custodian of enemy property with the object of winding up the partnership he claimed an account against the defendant of all dealings between the German partners and the English partners including all dealings with the partnership assets since its dissolution, payment of what should be found due and inquiry of what the partnership property consisted. The German partners were not added as plaintiffs in the action. It was held by Eve, J. that in the absence of the German partners as parties to the action no such relief as was asked could be granted and that the action failed. The learned Judge stated :

"The plaintiff in my opinion is in no better position than any other assignee of the interests of the Germans and his claim to be treated as a creditor of the defendant's testator is a misconception. I conceive the following to be a correct summary of the legal relations of partners in a dissolved partnership. Where assets are collected and got in, no partner has any definite share or interest therein, his right is merely to have the assets so collected applied in discharging the liability of the partnership firm and to receive his share of any surplus there may be when the liquidation has been completed ; and further there can be no relationship of debtor and creditor between partners unless and until the accounts have been finally taken and a balance has been ascertained to be due from each one to the others. Nor is any partner entitled to an account from his co-partners except upon the footing that in accordance with the implied obligation arising under the contract of partnership he will himself account and submit to be charged with any balance found to be due from him.

Such being the legal position of the parties, the defendant, subject to the determination of certain other defences with which I do not propose to deal, would not resist—indeed, having regard to the fact that his interest in the whole matter is that of a trustee only, would welcome an order for the usual partnership decree on the terms that the plaintiff is willing to submit to be charged with all sums properly chargeable against the assignors, or, alternatively, to amend the record by adding the German partners as co-plaintiffs. But the plaintiff declines to accept either alternative, and insists on his right to have the accounts taken in circumstances calculated to inflict grievous injustice upon the defendant. I do not think he has any such right, and therefore I cannot give him the relief claimed in the action.

At the trial the plaintiff asked, as an alternative, for an account under sub-s. (2) of s. 31, Partnership Act. I am not prepared to hold that in no case, and more particularly in a case where some of the partners are out of the jurisdiction, can the Court make an order for such account of the partnership dealings and transactions prior to the dissolution, I think the Court would be slow to make the order until all the accounting partners were parties."

Sub-section (2) of s. 31, English Partnership Act, is substantially reproduced in s. 29 (2), Indian Partnership Act, and relates to a claim for accounts after the date of the dissolution of a partnership. The plaintiffs in the matter before us were in the position of the public trustee in this Chancery case. Defendants Nos. 11 to 20 who were joined only in 1931 were in the position of the German partners in the Chancery case. As in the Chancery case the assignment had taken place after the dissolution of the partnership between the English partner and his German colleagues, so in the case before us the firm of Chellaram Tharumal had been dissolved before the assignments in favour of the plaintiffs. As in the Chancery case, so in the case before us, the account claimed by the plaintiff was not an account merely after the dissolution of the firm but an account of the entire period of the partnership. The decision of Eve, J. in Public Trustee v. Elder (1) and in the same volume at p. 776 Public Trustee v. Elder (2) is the decision of the appellate Court. The head note to the decision of the appeal Court reads thus :

"Held that it was necessary for the proper liquidation of the firm's affairs and the ascertainment of the amounts divisible or payable by the partners inter se; that each partner should personally account to the others for his receipts and transactions in the winding up; that reciprocity of personal obligation for that purpose was as complete as it was under ss. 28 and 29, Partnership Act, 1890, during the continuance of the partnership; that, that being so the assignee of the share of a partner in a dissolved partnership, when requiring an account, as from the date of dissolution, could not substitute for the reciprocal personal obligation of the assignee himself to account, while still requiring the other partners to discharge as towards him their personal obligations :

Held, therefore, that the German partners were necessary parties to the action, and accordingly that the action was defective for want of parties and must be dismissed."

The question involved has been dealt with in greatest detail in the judgment of Sargant, L. J., thus :

"The whole difference between the parties is as to the results of an absolute assignment after the dissolution of a partnership of the shares of some of the partners. But for that assignment the shares of the assigning partners would obviously have been ascertainable only in proceedings to which those partners were parties, and in which they would have been under reciprocal personal obligations to the other partners to render full and just accounts. What then is the effect of these obligations on the assignment? Is it to substitute for the personal obligations of the assigning partners to account; a corresponding personal obligation of the assignee to account, so that on performing this obligation to the best of his personal ability he can call on the other partner for the full benefit of his personal accountability? Or is it merely to substitute the assignee as the ultimate recipient of the value of the share, as ultimately ascertained in the same manner as it would have been ascertained apart from the assignment, that is to say after the assigning partners had themselves performed their reciprocal personal obligations to account?.....

The contract of partnership is essentially one involving in the highest degree reciprocity of personal obligation and trust. In the words of James, L. J. in Baird's case (In re Agriculturist Cattle Insurance Co.) (3) at p. 733, 'ordinary partnerships are by the law assumed and presumed to be based on the mutual trust and confidence of each partner in the skill, knowledge, and integrity of every other partner'. And under ss. 28 and 29, Partnership Act, 1890, partners are under mutual personal liability to render true accounts and full information of all things affecting the partnership, and to account for any benefits derived from any transaction concerning the partnership or from any use by any of them of the partnership property, name or business connection. And the position and rights of a partner as towards the other partners are recognized by the law as being so personal and individual that, under s. 31, sub-s. 1, Partnership Act, 1890 an assignment by a partner of his share in a partnership does not entitle the assignee to interfere in the partnership or to require accounts or to inspect the books, but entitles him solely to receive the shares of the profits as ascertained by the partners to which the assigning partners would otherwise be entitled. It would hardly be possible to express more clearly the essential non-assignability in a subsisting partnership of the position and rights of one partner in relation to the other partners.

On the dissolution of a partnership however there is no occasion to limit quite so strictly the right of an assignee as regards transactions occurring after the dissolution. And accordingly under sub-s. 2 of s. 31 it is provided that the assignee is not only entitled to receive the share of the partnership assets to which the assigning partner is entitled as between himself and the other partners, but is also entitled for the purpose of ascertaining that share to an account as from the date of dissolution. The result seems to be that down to the date of dissolution the accounts have to be agreed to personally by the partners and the assignee is bound to accept the accounts as so agreed; and that the sole account the assignee is entitled to have taken in his presence or to question is an account from the date of dissolution.

What then are the rights of the original partners as regards the taking of the accounts on a dissolution? Are there rights still reciprocal, personal rights involving mutual, personal trust and confidence? In my judgment, the only possible answer to this question is an affirmative one. The dissolution of the bond between them is as to new enterprises and transaction only. For the winding up of affairs of the partnership, the authority of each partner to bind the firm and the other rights and obligations of the partners continue, as expressly recognized and enacted by s. 38 of the Act of 1890. It is accordingly necessary for the proper liquidation of the firm's affairs and the ascertainment of the amounts divisible amongst or payable by the partners inter se, that each partner should personally account to the others for his receipts and transactions in the winding up. The reciprocity of personal obligation for this purpose is as complete as it was under ss. 28 and 29 during the continuance of the partnership. This being so, can an assignee of the share of a partner in a dissolved partnership when requiring an account as from the date of dissolution, substitute for the reciprocal personal obligation of the assigning partner to account to the other partners a mere personal obligation of the assignee himself to account, while still requiring the other partners to discharge as towards him their personal obligation? Such a claim in my judgment involves a violation of the fundamental conditions of reciprocity and personal confidence involved in the partnership contract and it is directly negated by the reasoning in the unanimous judgment of the Court of appeal, as delivered by the then Master of the Rolls, in Tolhurst v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers Ltd. (4)."

It must be remembered that s. 31 of the English Partnership Act of 1890 finds its counterpart in s. 29 of the Indian Partnership Act of 1932 and the provisions of ss. 28 and 29 of the English Partnership Act, relating to the duty of partners to render accounts and to the accountability of partners for private profit are to be found in ss. 9, 13, 15 and 16 of Indian Partnership Act of 1932. We can see no material point of distinction between the case before us and this case in Public Trustee v. Elder (2) and we can therefore have no hesitation in following it. It has been argued that the share of a partner in a partnership concern is his own private property, that it is assignable under the provisions of the T. P. Act and that s. 130 (2), T. P. Act, gives the transferee of such a share a statutory right to "sue or institute proceedings for the same in his own name without obtaining the transferor's consent to such suit or proceedings, and without making him a party hereto."

We have no quarrel with this line of argument; but a suit by an assignee for recovery of the share of one partner in a partnership is one thing and a suit for rendering of accounts of a partnership as a preliminary to ascertaining the value of that share is quite another thing; and while s. 130 (2), T. P. Act, confers on an assignee the right to sue for such a share without impleading his assignor, it cannot in reason be read as conferring on him the right to sue for the accounts of a partnership without his assignor being a party to the suit so as to enable all the partners in the partnership to fulfil their mutual and personal obligations to account. Section 130 (2), T. P. Act, neither expressly nor impliedly abrogates the provisions of the Partnership Act. The position and rights and obligations of one partner in a partnership in relation to the other partners is clearly not a chose in action and cannot be assigned; the share of a partner in a partnership (4) (1902) 2 K B 660.

is equally clearly property and may be assigned. Reliance has been placed by the learned Advocate for the appellants on the case in In re Bainbridge; Ex parte Fletcher (5), on the case in Cassels v. Stewart (6), on the case in Shrinath v. Kanhaiyalal, 75 Ind. Cas. 817 (7), the judgment of a Single Judge of the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court and on the case in Vishindas Nihalchand v. Thawerdas (8). But none of these cases goes further than laying down a proposition we admit, that the share of a partner in a partnership is property and the right to recover it is a chose in action assignable under the T. P. Act.

In our view therefore the assignors of the plaintiffs in Suit No. 7 of 1926, the present appellants were necessary parties to the suit and not having been joined till a suit for taking partnership accounts as against them was time-barred the entire suit was barred by limitation and should have been dismissed. These second appeals therefore fail and must be dismissed with costs and we order accordingly. We have in the course of this judgment made reference to the peculiar constitution of the firm of Chellaram Tharumal, a peculiarity which attracted the attention of the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court and induced him to raise and decide in appeal for the first time an issue as to the legality of such a partnership in view of the provisions of the Companies Act. We are informed, however, that such firms are quite common in Sind and are by no means peculiar. While we think that this learned Judge could not in appeal for the first time raise such a point, clearly a mixed question of law and fact, we would invite the attention of subordinate Judges to the necessity of raising the point which could no doubt with advantage be raised and decided in other cases by a Civil Court at the appropriate time.

Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 11 (2) (3)—Appellate Court coming to conclusion that lower Court had no jurisdiction—He should not straight way dismiss the appeal and direct the lower Court to send case to proper Court—He should consider the question whether under or over-valuation has prejudiced the party, otherwise in case the objection was taken at earliest opportunity, consider the appeal on merits.

Sub-sections (2) and (3) of s. 11, Suits Valuation Act make it clear that the matter has not to be disposed of summarily merely on the ground that the Court of first instance or lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction. Even in cases where the point as to under-valuation is properly taken, the Court can deal with the appeal provided the provisions of sub-s. (2) are complied with. If the objection is properly taken but the Appellate Court is not satisfied as to both the matters mentioned in cl. (b), that is over or under-valuation and prejudice, the Court, if it has the materials before it, can proceed to determine the appeal. However, it cannot act under sub-s. (2) if it is satisfied that the question of under-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits. Before the Court disposes of the case, he should be satisfied himself one way or another on this question of prejudice.

L. P. A. from a decision of Mr. Justice S. C. Chatterji, dated September 6, 1940.

Mr. G. P. Das, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. K. Mitra and G. N. Mukharji, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal from a decision of Chatterji, J., setting aside a decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and remanding a case to the Court of the learned Munsif.

The suit giving rise to these proceedings was brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that a certain ex parte decree and a sale in execution thereof were not binding upon the plaintiff as it was alleged that the ex parte decree had been obtained by fraud. The suit was valued at Rs. 516 which was the price paid by the decree-holder for the property in the execution sale.

The suit was instituted in the Court of the Third Munsif at Arrah, who had jurisdiction to hear suits up to Rs. 2,000 in value. However, before the suit was read for hearing it was transferred to the Court of the Second Munsif who had only jurisdiction to try suits up to Rs. 1,000 in value. Up to the stage of trial no objection had been taken that the plaintiff's suit was under-valued. During the trial, however, evidence was given which went to show that the property in question was worth at least Rs. 1,500 if not considerably more. When this evidence was adduced, the defendants immediately took objection that the trial Court had no jurisdiction to hear the suit. The learned Munsif, however, held that the proper valuation was Rs. 516 and that he had jurisdiction to dispose of the matter. Eventually he decreed the plaintiff's claim.

On appeal it was contended before the learned Subordinate Judge that the evidence clearly showed that the value of the property was over Rs. 1,500 and that, therefore, the suit was under-valued. As the Munsif's jurisdiction did not extend beyond Rs. 1,000, it was contended that he had no jurisdiction whatsoever to hear the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge acceded to this contention, set aside the order of the Munsif and remanded the case to him with the direction that if he still had no jurisdiction to try suits exceeding the valuation of Rs. 1,000, he should return the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation in the proper Court.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal, and the learned Single Judge held that the decision of the lower Appellate Court was manifestly wrong. The moment the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the real value of the suit was over Rs. 1,000 he held that the Court below had no jurisdiction whatsoever to hear it and, therefore, the plaint would have to be returned for presentation in the proper Court. The learned Single Judge points out that the lower Appellate Court had not considered the provisions of s. 11, Suits Valuation Act, (Act VII of 1887). The material portions of that section are as follows :—

"11 (1) Notwithstanding anything in s. 578 of the Civil P. C., an objection that by reason of the over-valuation or under-valuation of a suit or appeal a Court of first instance or lower Appellate Court which had not jurisdiction with respect to the suit or appeal exercised jurisdiction with respect thereto shall not be entertained by an Appellate Court unless—

(a) the objection was taken in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were first framed and recorded or in the lower Appellate Court in the memorandum of appeal to that Court, or

(b) the Appellate Court is satisfied, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, that the suit or appeal was over-valued or under-valued, and that the over-valuation or under-valuation thereof has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit or appeal on its merits.

(2) If the objection was taken in the manner mentioned in cl. (a) of sub-s. (1), but the Appellate Court is not satisfied as to both the matters mentioned in cl. (b) of that sub-section and has before it the materials necessary for the determination of the other grounds of appeal to itself, it shall dispose of the appeal as if there had been no defect of jurisdiction in the Court of first instance or lower Appellate Court.

(3) If the objection was taken in that manner and the Appellate Court is satisfied as to both those matters, and has not those materials before it, it shall proceed to deal with the appeal under the rules applicable to the Court with respect to the hearing of appeals; but, if it remands the suit or appeal, or frames and refers issues for trial, or requires additional evidence to be taken, it shall direct its order to a Court competent to entertain the suit or appeal."

It is clear that objection to valuation was not taken in the trial Court before the issues were framed, but the learned Single Judge was satisfied that it was taken at the first possible opportunity. In any event, the point was taken in the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court. Sub-ss. (2) and (3) of this section however, make it clear that the matter has not to be disposed of summarily merely on the ground that the Court of first instance or lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction. Even in cases where the point as to under-valuation is properly taken, the Court can deal with the appeal provided the provisions of sub-s. (2) are complied with. That sub-section expressly provides that if the objection was properly taken but the Appellate Court is not satisfied as to both the matters mentioned in cl. (b), that is over or under-valuation and prejudice, the Court, if it has the materials before it, can proceed to determine the appeal. However, it cannot act under sub-s. (2) if it is satisfied that the question of under-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits.

Before the learned Subordinate Judge could have disposed of the case, he should have satisfied himself one way or another on this question of prejudice. The learned Single Judge has rightly pointed out that the learned Subordinate Judge never addressed himself to this question at all, and that being so, his decision could not be sustained. All that the learned Single Judge has done is to point out that the provisions of sub-ss. (2) and (3) of s. 11, Suits Valuation Act, must be considered by the lower Appellate Court and after consideration that Court must proceed according to law. It appears to me that on the plain words of the section the learned Single Judge was bound to set aside the decision of the Court below and to make the order which he did.

In the result, therefore, this appeal fails and I would dismiss it with costs.

Fazl Ali, J.—I agree.

U. P. Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act (XVIII of 1939)—Act not ultra vires—S. 3—U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act (IV of 1937), s. 2—Appeal pending when Act IV of 1937 came into force—If liable to be dismissed under s. 3 of Act XVIII of 1939—Suit or appeal liable to be stayed under s. 2 of Act IV of 1937—No stay order passed—Whether can be dismissed under s. 3 of Act XVIII of 1939.

The U. P. Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act XVIII of 1939, is not ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature. [p. 388, col. 1.]

Section 3 of the U. P. Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act operates to dismiss all suits for arrears of rent stayed under Act IV of 1937, or which if instituted, would have been stayed, that is to say all suits for arrears of rent prior to Rabi 1344 F. It also operates to dismiss all applications for the recovery of arrears of rent, that is, so far as the Oudh Rent Act is concerned, all applications for execution of decrees for arrears of rent already instituted or which might have been instituted relating to the same instalments prior to the instalments for Rabi 1344 F. Where the suit relates to the arrears of rent prior to Rabi 1344 F. an appeal pending when the U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act IV of 1937, came into force is liable to be dismissed because even if the appeal be allowed to proceed and the plaintiff-appellant be successful in his appeal he will be unable to institute or prosecute any application for execution of his decree since that decree relates to arrears of rent and to instalments prior to Rabi 1344 F. [p. 389, col. 2: p. 390, col. 1.]

Where it is provided by the U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act that all suits shall be stayed, all such suits are stayed automatically, and no order of the Court is necessary. Where, therefore, a suit or an appeal is liable to be stayed under the Stay of Proceedings Act 1937, it is liable to be dismissed under s. 3 of the Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act, 1939, even if no stay order has been passed under s. 2 of the former Act. S. Rent Ap. against the order of the District Judge of Unao, dated February 3, 1937.

Yorke, Bennett and Ghulam Hasan, JJ.—(March 5, 1941).—This is a Full Bench reference on a point of law made by a Bench of this Court to which Second Rent Appeal No. 37 of 1937 was referred by the Hon'ble Chief Judge sitting singly for decision under s. 14 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act.

The matter arises out of a suit under the provisions of s. 108 (2) of the Oudh Rent Act for arrears of rent for Rabi 1340 to 1343 F. The defendants pleaded payment and claimed certain remission. This defence was upheld by the trial Court, which on October 26, 1936, decreed the plaintiff's claim for only Rs. 14-2-0, out of Rs. 158, and odd. The plaintiff went in appeal to the District Judge. On February 3, 1937, the District Judge upheld the trial Court's decision in the matter of remissions, but held that the plea of payment had not been substantiated and he, therefore, decreed the claim for a considerably larger sum than that decreed by the trial Court.

In a second appeal before the Hon'ble Chief Judge it was contended that the appeal was liable to dismissal under the provisions of s. 3 of the U. P. Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act XVIII of 1939. The appeal was instituted in this Court on May 4, 1937, and during the subsistence of the U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act IV of 1937, the appeal was treated as stayed. The contention put forward before the Bench on behalf of the respondents was that the effect of s. 2 of that Act was to stay the appeal, and that in consequence the effect of the provisions of s. 3 of Act XVIII of 1939 was to dismiss the suit in toto. For the opposite party it was contended that the sections did not have this effect and that Act IV of 1937 did not affect appeals but only suits and those proceedings (in execution) which are specifically mentioned in the section, and in consequence s. 3 of Act XVIII of 1939 could not operate to bring about a dismissal of the suit in toto. It was further contended that in any case Act XVIII of 1939 was ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature.

The following two questions of law were, therefore, referred for decision to this Full Bench namely :

(1) Whether in the circumstances of the present case the appeal filed by the plaintiff-appellant is liable to dismissal in view of the provisions of s. 3 of the U. P. Act No. XVIII of 1939 read with s. 2 of the U. P. Act No. IV of 1937?

(2) Whether the U. P. Act No. XVIII of 1939 is or is not ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature?

As regards the second of the two questions raised, no arguments have been addressed to us, it being conceded that in the light of a decision of the Federal Court reported in The United Provinces v. Atiqa Begum, (1941 O. A. p. 159) (1), there can be no room for doubt as to the powers of the Provincial Legislature to legislate on the subject. We may quote from the head-note of this decision in this connection. It runs as follows:—

(Per Gwyer, C. J.)

"The general descriptive words in item No. 21, List II of Seventh Schedule to Govt. of India Act, include the collection of rents; and if a Provincial Legislature can legislate with respect to the collection of rents, it must also have power to legislate with respect to any limitation on the power of a landlord to collect rents, that is to say, with respect to the remission of rents as well as to their collection. Legislation with respect to the remission of rents is legislation with respect to a matter included in item No. 21. The U. P. Regularisation of Remissions Act, 1938, is an Act with respect to the remission of rent and it was within the competence of the U. P. Legislature to enact it."

(Per Varadachariar, J.)

"The U. P. Regularisation of Remissions Act, 1938, intended to deal and does deal with the subject of remission of rent made under orders of the Provincial Govt., and was intra vires of the U. P. Legislature."

(Per Sulaiman, J.)

"When the question is whether any impugned Act is within any of the three Lists, or in none at all, it is the duty of Courts to consider the Act as a whole, and decide whether in pith and substance the Act is with respect to particular categories or not. This can be inferred only from the design and purport of the Act as disclosed by its language and the effect which it would have in its actual operation. In pith and substance the U. P. Regularisation of Remissions Act is an Act not only with respect to 'the relation of landlord and tenant' or the 'collection of rents', but is also with respect to conferring on the Provincial Govt. very extensive powers of interference with the legal rights of landholders in their lands."

It may be said that in pith and substance Act XVIII of 1939 relates to depriving the landholders of their rights to collect arrears of rent relating to all the years prior to Rabi 1344 F. We can see no ground on which it can be held, if the U. P. Regularisation of Remissions Act, 1938, is not ultra vires, that nonetheless Act XVIII of 1939 is ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature. We would, therefore, answer this question by saying that in our opinion the U. P. Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act, XVIII of 1939, is not ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature.

As regards the first question, the first point for consideration is whether the words "proceedings in suits" in s. 2 of the U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act, IV of 1937 include appeals. This section runs as follows:—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Agra Ten. Act, 1926, or the Oudh Rent Act, 1886, or the (1) 1941 O A 159; 192 Ind. Cas. 138; 7 B R 433; 13 R F C 15; A I R 1941 F C 16; 1941 O W N 297; 72 C L J 550; 1941 O L R 121; 45 C W N F C 27; (1941) A L J 170; 53 L W 397; 1941 R D 121; (1941) 1 M L J (F C) 65 Sup. (F C).

Civil P. C., 1908, all proceedings in suits and applications of the classes specified in the schedule to this Act, pending on the date when this Act comes into force (September 25, 1937), or instituted during the period this section remains in force, shall be stayed for such period as this section shall remain in force, all attachments of movable property made in connection with such suits and applications shall be withdrawn, all judgment-debtors detained in prison in execution of decrees and orders passed in such suits and applications shall be released, and all sales of immovable property in connection with such suits and applications shall be stayed."

Suits and applications under the Oudh Rent Act referred to in the Schedule of this Act are suits and applications under ss. 52, 53-A, 54, 60 (1), 61 (1), 62 (1), 62-A (1) and 108, sub-s. 2 (with some exceptions), (3), (3-a), (4), (5-a), and (8). Matters which fall under s. 108 are suits, while the rest relate almost entirely to ejectment. So far as the Oudh Rent Act is concerned, the word 'applications' could only refer to applications in connection with ejectment. It clearly does not refer to applications in execution cases. Those are dealt with separately under the references to attachments of movable property, detention of judgment-debtors in prison and sales of immovable property made in connection with 'such' suits, that is, suits of the classes specified in the Schedule. Section 2 has three provisos, and roughly speaking it may be said that the effect of the first proviso is that the section does not apply to suits in respect of rents for Rabi 1344 F. or subsequent years. It follows that the section operates to stay all proceedings in suits and execution of decrees in respect of all instalments prior to Rabi 1344 F. It would seem that unless the words 'proceedings in suits' are sufficiently comprehensive to cover appeals, the section as it stands does not interfere with the disposal of appeals arising out of decrees in suits of the classes specified in the Schedule.

On behalf of the respondent contending that the appeal has been stayed under Act IV of 1937 and must, therefore, fail on account of the provisions of the subsequent Act reference has been made to some cases in which it has been held that "suits" include appeals. It is pointed out that it has been held in connection with s. 10 of the Civil P. C. that the word "suit" includes "appeals". Section 10 of the Civil P. C. provides that "no Court shall proceed with the trial of any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties....."

It has been held that where there has been a previously instituted suit and that suit is pending disposal even in second appeal, an application for stay under s. 10, Civil P. C. may be made, that is, the word "suit" has not been interpreted strictly as referring only to a suit in the course of its trial in the original Court. We do not think that any very sound inference can be drawn from the wider meaning of the word "suit" in this particular instance because obviously the decision in such a suit, if that suit were not treated as still pending while it was in the course of appeal, would have to operate as res judicata for a subsequent suit and thus be equally a bar to the trial of the same matter in the subsequent suit. In this connection reference has been made to a case reported in Chaudhury Jamini Nath Mallick v. Midnapur Zemindary Co., (A. I. R. 1923 Cal., p. 716) (2), where, according to the head-note, it was held that "suits" in s. 10 include 'appeals', but that the section is not applicable where the suits are for distinct and different debts. In that case Rankin, J. remarked

"I think that the reference at the end of the section to 'His Majesty in Council' shows that for this purpose 'suits' include appeals."

The learned Judge, however, went on to hold that s. 10 had no application to that case so that the remark was in a sense obiter.

In the same way, however, and for the same reasons it has been held in a decision of the Chief Court of Sind reported in Badaldas Jethmal Firm v. Gurdinomal Narumal Firm, (A. I. R. 1939 Sind, p. 329) (3), that in s. 10, which is closely connected with s. 11, 'suits' must include appeals, but the foundation for this view is that the section itself refers to suits pending before His Majesty in Council and such suits could not be other than appeals. It does not appear to us in any way to follow that because for the purposes of s. 10 of the Civil P. C. 'suits' include appeals, the words 'proceedings in suits' in s. 2 of the U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act, IV of 1937, also include appeals.

Prima facie there are two grounds on which it can be argued that these words "proceedings in suits" in s. 2 of Act IV of 1937 do not include appeals. First this is a special Act depriving plaintiffs in suits, both pending and decreed, of their legal rights under the ordinary law of the land and it may be said that the expressions used in such an Act must be construed strictly. Secondly, it is to be noticed that the Legislature was not content to rely on the words "all proceedings in suits" as wide enough to cover proceedings in execution, and it has gone on to define separately those proceedings subsequent to decrees in suits of the classes mentioned, which were to be stayed during the period while the section remained in force.

Coming to s. 3 of Act XVIII of 1939 we have to note that the wording of this section differs very considerably from the wording of s. 2 of Act IV of 1937. This section provides that "notwithstanding anything contained in the Agra. Ten. Act, 1926, or the Oudh Rent Act, 1886, or any other Act for the time being in force, but subject to the provisions of s. 5 (which section excludes from the application of the Act tenants liable to pay more than Rs. 500 as rent per annum, or assessed to income-tax in the year 1937, or to a local rate in excess of Rs. 25 in the year 1344 F.) all suits or applications for the recovery of arrears of rent which have been stayed under the provisions of the U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act, IV of 1937, shall be dismissed and no Court shall entertain any suit or application for the recovery of arrears of rent which, if instituted or made during the period in which the U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act IV of 1937, is in force, would have been stayed under the provisions of that Act."

This section does not affect suits for ejectment, possibly because nothing of the kind was necessary in view of the provisions of the U. P. Ten. Act. It operates to dismiss all suits for arrears of rent stayed under Act IV of 1937, or which if instituted, would have been stayed, that is to say all suits for arrears of rent prior to Rabi 1344 F. It also operates to dismiss all applications for the recovery of arrears of rent, that is, so far as the Oudh Rent Act is concerned, all applications for execution of decrees for arrears of rent already instituted or which might have been instituted relating to the same instalments prior to the instalment for Rabi 1344 F. As regards this only the first of the two arguments available with reference to Act IV can be adduced for favour of a strict interpretation of the word "suits."

In this connection we are unable to accede to the argument which found favour with Agarwal, J. in a case reported in Daya Shankar v. Badri Prasad, (1941 O. A., p. 218) (4). In that case it was held "that under s. 3 of Act XVIII of 1939 only those suits or applications will be dismissed which have been stayed under the provisions of Act IV of 1937," and that as those particular suits or appeals had never been stayed by any order of the Court they were not affected by s. 3 of Act XVIII of 1939. We are of opinion that where it is provided by the Act that all suits shall be stayed, all such suits are stayed automatically, and no order of the Court is necessary.

(2) A I R 1923 Cal. 716; 75 Ind. Cas. 231; 27 C W N 772.

(3) A I R 1939 Sind 329; 186 Ind. Cas. 533; (1940) Kar. 15; 12 R S 203.

(4) 1941 O A 218.

On the other hand the effect of this section seems to us to be such that the question put must be answered affirmatively and the appeal held liable to dismissal. The suit relates to arrears of rent for the years Rabi 1340 to 1343 F. and even should the appeal be allowed to proceed and the plaintiff-appellant be successful in his appeal the position will arise, that in view of the provisions of these two Acts and particularly of Act XVIII of 1939, he will be unable to institute or prosecute any application for execution of his decree since that decree relates to arrears of rent and to instalments prior to Rabi 1344 F. All suits and proceedings in execution by attachment of movable property and arrest of judgment-debtors as well as sales of immovable property in respect of such instalments of arrears of rent were stayed and have been dismissed and can no longer be instituted.

It follows that although in express terms the prosecution of such an appeal has not been prohibited by the earlier act, by the later act it is rendered infructuous and by implication therefore is to be taken to be liable to dismissal.

Our answer to the first question is therefore that the appeal is liable to dismissal.

Final Judgment.

Bennett and Ghulam Hasan, JJ.—In view of the decision by the Full Bench that the appeal is liable to dismissal, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

POLLOCK AND GRUER, JJ.

GANPATRAO AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS

Nos. 3 AND 4—APPLICANTS

Court-fees—Mortgage suit—Subsequent mortgagee added wanting determination of his rights—Valuation of suit for purposes of jurisdiction—Amount claimed on prior and subsequent mortgages exceeding pecuniary jurisdiction of Court—Court's jurisdiction, if lost—Court-fees, if payable on claim on subsequent mortgage.

When in a mortgage suit a subsequent mortgagee is added who wants his rights to be investigated and decided the suit is to be valued for purposes of jurisdiction, ad valorem on the amount due on the plaintiff's prior mortgage and jurisdiction is not lost if the amounts claimed on the prior and subsequent mortgages taken together exceed the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court.

The claim under the subsequent mortgage is neither a set-off nor a counter-claim on which court-fees should be paid. Where the puisne mortgagees ask for this relief in their written statement, it does not require to be stamped at all. It is no doubt advantageous to puisne mortgagees to obtain a decree on their mortgages without paying any court-fees and it would be especially so where the later mortgages happen to be for very large sums. The Legislature no doubt could have provided for payment of court-fees by the puisne mortgagees when they claimed a determination, or recourse perhaps might have been had to s. 9 of the Suits Valuation Act. But in the absence of any such provision or rule no court-fees are payable on the claim under the subsequent mortgages.

C. R. App. of the order of the Court of the Fourth Sub-Judge, Second Class; Nagpur, dated July 5, 1938.

Order of Reference

Gruer, J.—(October 3, 1939).—In this mortgage suit the applicants (defendants Nos. 3 and 4) were subsequent mortgagees. Defendant No. 1 was the original mortgagor and the plaintiffs (non-applicants Nos. 1 and 2) were the prior mortgagees. These applicants, subsequent mortgagees, claimed to be allowed to pay off the prior mortgage and to have a decree in their favour for the combined amounts of the two mortgages in Form No. 9 of Appendix D read with O. XXXIV, r. 4, Civil P. C. The lower Court, Fourth Sub-Judge, Second Class, Nagpur, points out that the total claim on the subsequent mortgages is Rs. 2,557 plus Rs. 4,502-Rs. 7,059 which is beyond the inherent jurisdiction of a Second Class Sub-Judge. It therefore, holds that these mortgages of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 cannot be enquired into in the present suit.

The present application against that finding is not opposed by the plaintiffs who say that they have nothing to urge. It is opposed by defendant (No. 2) who points out that O. XXXIV, r. 4, Civil P. C. provides for the case of subsequent mortgagees and "for the adjudication of the respective rights and liabilities of the parties to the suit in the manner and form set forth in Form No. 9, Form No. 10 or Form No. 11, as the case may be, of Appendix D with such variations as the circumstances of the case may require."

Now Form No. 9 provides for a statement of the amount due on the subsequent mortgage so that evidently that amount would have to be determined in the suit and all objections to the mortgage would have to be decided. It is said however, that though this no doubt would have to be done if the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the total claim it cannot be done where the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court has been exceeded as is the case here.

Section 6 of the Civil P. C., says :

"Save is so far as is otherwise expressly provided, nothing herein contained shall operate to give any Court jurisdiction over suits the amount or value of the subject-matter of which exceeds the pecuniary limits (if any) of its ordinary jurisdiction."

The valuation of a suit for purposes of jurisdiction is determined by the valuation in the plaint. That is the general rule, but here by reason of O. XXXIV, r. 1, Civil P. C., the subsequent mortgagees having a right of redemption had to be joined as parties, and by reason of r. 4, sub-s. 4, their rights and liabilities had to be determined in the manner and form set forth in Form No. 9 seeing that they themselves wished to redeem. The Court, therefore, apparently has no option but to investigate the validity of the mortgages and the amount due not only on the mortgage primarily in suit dated December 22, 1925, but the two subsequent mortgages of 1931 and 1933 of which the principal sums are Rs. 4,000 and Rs. 3,000 respectively. I doubt therefore, whether the lower Court's order refusing to consider these mortgages can stand. It seems to me that if it had jurisdiction it was bound to go on with the suit as a whole, otherwise to return the plaint to be presented to the Court having jurisdiction.

The question whether jurisdiction has been exceeded in such a case is somewhat puzzling, and I have not been able to find any authority bearing directly on the point. There are of course cases in which it has been held that the Court has power to pass a decree in excess of its pecuniary jurisdiction: for instance where mesne profits accruing pendente lite are concerned (Hemanga Bhooshan Ray Chaudhuri v. Bheem Gharmi (1)) and where the amount finally due on accounts exceeds jurisdiction (Olpherts v. Arjundass (2) and Kalooram v. Ramkshen (3)). I doubt, however, whether the analogy of these cases is a good one. In Sarada Sundari Basu v. Akramannessa Khatun (4) the suit brought was one for redemption and it was held that jurisdiction depended on the amount ultimately found to be due. That case turned on s. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, and is of course distinguishable from one like the present where the suit as brought is for sale on the mortgage. At p. 743* of that ruling it is said.

"Prima facie it is the plaintiff's claim which determines jurisdiction, and the jurisdiction continues whatever the event unless a different principle comes into operation to prevent such a result or to make the proceedings from the first abortive."

It may well be argued that here the investigation of the subsequent mortgages is implicit in the case from the beginning, and will really be part of the subject-matter of the suit unless the defendants decline to redeem.

It is also contended that the subsequent mortgagees' demand for investigation of their mortgages is in the nature of a counter-claim and that court-fees should be paid. That question does not arise directly in this revision application, but it is important that the proper procedure in such cases should be clearly laid down. The question in my opinion is one of some difficulty and should be decided by a Bench. I should refer it as follows :

"(1) When in a mortgage suit a subsequent mortgagee is added who wants his rights to be investigated and decided how is the suit to be valued for purposes of jurisdiction, and is jurisdiction lost if the amounts claimed on the prior and subsequent mortgages taken together exceed the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court ?

(2) If the Court cannot deal with the whole claim should it dispose of the suit without enquiring into the subsequent mortgages or should it return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court ?

(3) Should court-fees be payable also on the claim under the subsequent mortgages and if so, by whom ?"

This reference be submitted to my Lord the Chief Justice for passing orders about a Bench.

Opinion.—The facts leading up this reference and the points to be decided are set out in the order of reference itself. The position is briefly that in a mortgage suit in which a decree for sale is sought defendants Nos. 3 and 4 have been joined as subsequent mortgagees. Plaintiffs' mortgage involved a sum of Rs. 1,330-8-11 only, and so was within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court of Sub-Judge, Second Class, in which it was brought, but the claim on the two subsequent mortgages comes to Rs. 7,059, which is beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction (Rs. 5,000) of a Second Class Sub-Judge. These subsequent mortgagees went to pay-off the prior mortgage and have a decree on the foot of their mortgages in Form No. 9, Appendix D, Civil P. C., read with O. XXXIV, r. 4 of the Code. On objection raised by defendant No. 2, who is the legal representative of the purchaser of the mortgaged property from defendant No. 1 the lower Court framed a preliminary issue whether the subsequent mortgages of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 could be enquired into in this suit and has held that it cannot as it would thereby be acting beyond its jurisdiction.

The suit was rightly valued for purposes of court-fee on the amount due on plaintiffs' mortgage. Under s. 7 (ixA) of the Court Fees Act that is also now the valuation for court-fees in the Central Provinces in suits to foreclose a mortgage or, where the mortgage is made by conditional sale, to have the sale declared absolute. The plaintiffs' mortgage is a simple one not falling under s. 7 (ixA), but it has to be valued on the amount claimed, and according to s. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act the value for purposes of jurisdiction would be the same: Shailendrakumar Palit v. Haricharan Sadhukhan (5). Learned Counsel for defendant No. 2 relies on s. 6 of the Civil P. C., and says that the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit includes the amounts due on the subsequent mortgages and therefore the pecuniary limits are exceeded. In our opinion the subject-matter of the suit is plaintiffs' mortgage as stated by them, and this is not altered by the obligation to join subsequent mortgagees or by the possibility that such subsequent mortgagees may in their defence claim to redeem and to have their own mortgages investigated. Our answer to the first question is that the suit for purposes of jurisdiction has to be valued ad valorem on the amount due on the plaintiffs' prior mortgage, and jurisdiction is not lost if the amounts claimed on the prior and subsequent mortgages taken together exceed Rs. 5,000, the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court.

On this finding the second point does not arise. So we refrain from answering it. The third point is: "Should court-fees be payable also on the claim under the subsequent mortgage, and if so, by whom?" This is neither a set-off nor a counter-claim on which court-fees would have to be paid. These puisne mortgagees ask for this relief in their written statement, which does not require to be stamped at all. It is no doubt advantageous to puisne mortgagees to obtain a decree on their mortgages without paying any court-fees and it would be especially so where the later mortgages happen to be for very large sums. The Legislature no doubt could have provided for payment of court-fees by the puisne mortgagees when they claimed a determination, or recourse perhaps might have been had to s. 9 of the Suits Valuation Act. But in the absence of any such provision or rule we find that no court-fees are payable on the claim under the subsequent mortgages. We answer the reference accordingly.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 68 (a) —Mortgage—Construction—Usufructuary mortgage—Held on construction that there was no covenant by mortgagor to pay, within meaning of s. 68 (a).

A usufructuary mortgage for a term of five years contained the following term "when the term of this deed will expire in the month of Bhado 1338 Fasli, then at that time the executant on paying the entire mortgage money will get back the deed and the rehan will be redeemed. In case of non-payment, this deed with all the above conditions will precisely remain intact and hold good till the payment of the said rehan money, that is, for nine years from 1334 to 1342. When we shall pay the said rehan money we shall pay it towards the end of Bhado of any year."

Held, on construction that there was no covenant by the mortgagor to pay within the meaning of cl. (a) of s. 68, T. P. Act. There was merely a provision that the bond might be redeemed at the end of Bhado 1338; but if it was not, the term of the bond was extended. There was no promise by the mortgagor to repay the amount, and hence the suit to recover the amount of money advanced could not succeed.

L. P. A. from a decision of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Wort, dated April 17, 1940.

Messrs. Mahabir Prasad and Girijanandan Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Lalnarayan Sinha and G. P. Singh, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal from a decision of Wort, J. allowing a second appeal and decreeing the plaintiffs' suit.

The suit out of which these proceedings arise was brought by the plaintiff to recover a sum of money said to be due on a mortgage bond. The claim was based upon a covenant to pay which was said to be in the bond. The learned Munsif who tried the case at first instance substantially decreed the claim, but on appeal the learned Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the trial Court and dismissed the claim. In the view of the learned Subordinate Judge there was no covenant to pay in the mortgage bond in question. In second appeal Wort, J. was of opinion that there was a covenant by the mortgagor to pay within the meaning of cl. (a) of s. 68, T. P. Act, and he accordingly reversed the decision of the lower Court and restored the decree of the learned Munsif.

The only question to be decided in this appeal is whether the mortgage contains a covenant by the mortgagor to repay the sum advanced. The material portions of the mortgage are as follows:—

"We have, on taking Rs. 425 by way of rehan money paying no interest, let out in rehan and pledged the whole and entire one bigha of kaimi raigati nakdi kasht land lying in mauza Aunta, which is owned and possessed by us, together with all the rights and interest appertaining thereto for a term of five years from Asin 1334 to Bhado 1338 Fasli to Mst. Chahautra Kuari.....

Now, we have on receipt of the said whole and entire rehan money put the said rehandar in possession and occupation of the property let out in rehan hereunder. It is desired that the rehandar should enter into possession and occupation of the property let out in rehan hereunder, cultivate or get it cultivated and appropriate the entire produce of the property covered hereby as profit of her rehan money and remuneration for labour and her right as rehandar.

Then follows the most important term:—

"When the term of this deed will expire in the month of Bhado 1338 Fasli, then at that time the executant on paying the entire mortgage money will get back the deed and the rehan will be redeemed. In case of non-payment, this deed with all the above conditions will precisely remain intact and hold good till the payment of the said rehan money, that is, for nine years from 1334 to 1342. When we shall pay the said rehan money we shall pay it towards the end of Bhado of any year."

The learned Single Judge was of opinion that the term as to redeeming the mortgage contained a personal covenant by the mortgagor to repay as contemplated in s. 68 (I) (a), T. P. Act, which provides that a mortgagee has a right to sue for the mortgage money where the mortgagor binds himself to repay the same. In my view there is no covenant by the mortgagor in this mortgage to repay the money. All that is provided is that at the expiry of the term in the month of Bhado 1338 the mortgagor, if he pays the money, will be entitled to the return of the deed in other words, he may, if he chooses, redeem the mortgage at the end of Bhado 1338. He, however, need not do so, and if he does not repay the money the term of the mortgage is extended. Nowhere does he personally bind himself to pay the money at the end of Bhado 1348 or at any other time.

The decision of this case must depend upon the construction which this Court places upon the particular words of this deed; but there are a number of decisions which afford some assistance. A Bench decision of this Court, Kamal Nayan Prasad Sinha v. Ram Nayan Prasad Sinha (1) was referred to by Wort, J. in the Court below and distinguished. In my judgment, however, the covenant in that case was very similar to the covenant in the present case, and the learned Judges declined to hold that there was in that particular mortgage a covenant to pay the mortgage money. At p. 75* Das, J. observed:—

"An absolute covenant cannot be coupled with a condition that if the money be not paid within the time fixed the mortgagee would continue to be in possession and the mortgage bond will remain in force."

A case in which the term was very similar to the term in the present case is Luchmeshwar Singh v. Dookh Mochan Jha (2). In that case the term was "and having paid the principal money in the month of Chait 1297 we shall take back the document and the land. In case we fail to repay the principal money at due date the sudbharna bond shall remain in force." It was held that there was no personal covenant to repay the mortgage money in that mortgage.

A recent case of this Court relied upon by Wort, J. is the case of Raj Kumar Bharthi v. Surajdeo Sahi (3). It is to be observed, however, that in that case there was no provision as to what was to happen if payment was not made on due date. At p. 749† Manohar Lall, J. referring to Kamal Nayan's case (1) and the provision in the bond in that case that if the zarpushgi was not paid in due time by the executant in one lump sum then the patta would remain in force and intact until the repayment of the zarpushgi money, stated that the presence of such a term meant "that the parties contemplated that on the expiry of the due date if the money had not been paid by the mortgagor the result would be exactly as if a new zarpeshgi had been executed on the same terms as before". It appears to have been Mr. Justice Manohar Lal's view that if there had been a term dealing with what was to happen if the mortgage money was not paid on due date, he would have held that there was no covenant to repay.

Mr. Lal Narain Sinha who has appeared for the respondent has referred us to the case of Jag Sahu v. Mst. Ram Sakhi Kuar (4) but that case cannot assist us because the precise terms of the covenant in question are not set out.

He also relied upon the case of Pargan Pandey v. Mahatam Mahto (5) in which a Bench held that there was a promise to repay. It is to be observed, however, that in that case there was a most explicit promise, the words actually used being "I shall repay the principal amount on the full moon day of the end of Jaith 1287 Falsi and take back the bond."

As I have stated earlier, each case must depend upon the particular terms of the bond. In the present case there is merely a provision that the bond may be redeemed at the end of Bhado 1338; but if it is not, the term of the bond is extended. There is no promise by the mortgagor to repay the amount, and that being so, a suit to recover the amount of money advanced cannot succeed.

In my judgment the decision of the learned Single Judge cannot be sustained and must be set aside.

In the result, therefore, this appeal is allowed, the decision of the learned Single Judge is set aside and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs here and in the Courts below.

[Case-law referred to.]

S. C. A. against the order of the Civil Judge of Gonda, dated December 10, 1937:

Messrs. H. Husain and H. H. Zaidi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Siraj Husain, holding brief of Mr. Mohd. Ayub, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—This second civil appeal arises out of a suit brought by one Mst. Kaniz Fatima to obtain a share in the property of her father, Suleman Khan according to Muhammadan Law. The suit was brought against her cousin Harun Rashid Khan, and the plaintiff's mother and two sisters were also made defendants. The defence was that daughters were excluded from inheritance by a family custom. This defence was not accepted either by the learned Munsif who tried the suit or by the learned Civil Judge of Gonda who dismissed the first appeal preferred by Harun Rashid Khan. The latter is the sole appellant also in this second appeal.

The relationship between the parties is shown in the following short pedigree:—

ABDUR RAZAK KHAN

The principal questions for consideration were whether the custom set up by Harun Rashid Khan excluding daughters from inheritance was proved and whether the suit was within limitation.

Suleman Khan died in 1921 and in January 1922 mutation in respect of his property was effected by a compromise between his widow, Mst. Zainab Bibi and her brother-in-law, Saltanat Bahadur Khan. The deed of compromise Ex. A-6 has been proved. It shows that Mst. Zainab Bibi was allowed to remain in possession of her husband's share in three out of four villages during her lifetime on the basis of custom, Saltanat Bahadur obtaining possession of the fourth village, Khaprail. It was agreed that Saltanat Bahadur Khan should become absolute owner of the share in the other three villages also on the death of the widow. It was further stated that no heir of Mst. Zainab Bibi nor any member of her family should have any interest in the property.

The defence of the defendant Harun Rashid Khan was based on the wajib-ul-araz of three out of the four villages. They are Pihar (Ex. A-1), of Jafarabad (Ex. 8) and Khaprail (Ex. 3). The wajib-ul-arz of the fourth village, Mohammad Nagargrant alias Bhalwar, has not been produced, but the wajib-ul-arz (Ex. 11) of another village, Budhia Bakri, has been produced apparently because it was dictated by the same ancestors of the parties. Presumably, though this is not clearly shown, this other village was at one time in the family.

Both the Courts below held that the evidence of these wajib-ul-araz was not sufficient to establish the custom. They both held on the point of limitation that the suit was not barred, because under Muhammadan Law, which in their view applied, Mst. Kaniz Fatima was a co-sharer with the defendants, and there was, therefore, no question of the possession of the latter being adverse to her.

The learned Civil Judge conceded that the wajib-ul-arz of Pihar (Ex. A-1) recorded the exclusion of daughters from inheritance, and he also conceded that the wajib-ul-araz of two of the other three villages, Jafarabad and Budhia Bakri (Exs. 8 and 11), excluded daughters by implication without expressly referring to them. But he agreed with the Munsif that these wajib-ul-araz could not be relied upon as a correct record of custom. He might also have said that the wajib-ul-arz of Khaprail (Ex. 3) also indirectly supports the exclusion of daughters, since it only makes provision for inheritance by male issue.

The Civil Judge considered that there were glaring contradictions in the wajib-ul-araz. There was first of all discrepancy in the wajib-ul-arz of Pihar (Ex. A-1) in regard to the share owned by a man named Bhagga Singh,

(with whom the case is in no way concerned), and the entries in the wajib-ul-arz relating to Bhagga Singh are not in accord with a khevat (Ex. A-3). These discrepancies have not been explained by Counsel, and there is no material on the record by which they might be explained: but the question whether they could be reconciled was never gone into because it was of no direct relevance in the case. I think that had the question been examined it is quite possible that these discrepancies might have been cleared up.

The Civil Judge then referred to two other matters dealt with in the wajib-ul-araz, which he thought indicated that the latter were not to be relied upon. He remarked as follows:—

"I. Position of issueless widow. Exhibit A-1 says that if she is one of two widows she would hold half of the estate for life. But Exs. 3 and 11 say that she would hold the entire estate. And Ex. 8 allowed her maintenance only.

II. Adoption. Exhibit A-1 allows it; and Exs. 8 and 11 disallow it; and Ex. 3 is silent."

A close examination of the wajib-ul-araz discloses that the contradictions in respect of the issueless widow are not very serious. Exhibit A-1, the wajib-ul-arz of Pihar, shows that on the death of a co-sharer who has different issue by two wives or more his share shall be divided according to the number of wives: if one wife has got issue while the other is issueless, then the latter shall enjoy half the share without power of transfer during her lifetime: if there is only one wife and she is issueless she shall enjoy the entire share for her lifetime and after her death the nearest relations of her husband shall obtain the property. Daughters and daughters' sons are excluded from inheritance.

The wajib-ul-arz of Khaprail (Ex. 3) shows that on the death of a co-sharer his male issue inherits the property: if the co-sharer left two wives, one of whom has only one son and the other has more than one, the property shall be divided according to stribhag system, that is per stirpes. If one of the wives has got issue and the other is issueless then the issueless wife shall remain in possession of her husband's share without power of transfer during her lifetime, and on her death that share shall devolve on the wife who has issue.

Exhibit 11, the wajib-ul-arz of Budhia Bakri, also shows that only males can inherit and that on the death of a co-sharer who leaves more than one wife the property is divided according to their number, the male issue of each wife inheriting per stirpes. If some of the widows have issue and others are issueless the issueless wife shall continue to hold possession of her share during her lifetime and after her death her share shall be divided among the remaining issues of other widows per stirpes.

Exhibit 8, the wajib-ul-arz of Jafarabad, makes similar provisions, except that it refers to the portion of the issueless wife as a guzara (according to her status) and not as a share. But she is to get such guzara only where there is another wife who has issue. If a co-sharer dies issueless it is provided that his widow shall continue to hold possession of her husband's share during her lifetime without power of transfer.

As regards adoption Ex. A-1 says that a widow cannot make any adoption, that any co-sharer who has no issue and who wants to adopt a son can adopt from among the minor collaterals up to the age of 12 years.

Exhibit 8, says that the custom of adopting a son is not prevalent among the birtdars, and Ex. 11 says that there is no custom of adoption in the family.

Exhibit 3, does not refer to adoption.

It is true, therefore that there is some conflict between the various wajib-ul-araz on the point of adoption. But whatever the explanation may be, I doubt whether it justifies the conclusion of the Courts below that these records of custom are unreliable as a whole, and that therefore they cannot be regarded as establishing the custom which was set up by the defendants, although with regard to that custom they are in accord.

I have been referred to various authorities on both sides on the point whether a wajib-ul-arz should be rejected as unreliable as a whole because it is found to be unreliable in some respect or respects, and also on the question whether a Court in second appeal would be justified in reversing the concurrent finding of the Courts below on the question of the existence of a custom, in which connection it has to be considered whether that finding is a pure finding of fact or a finding of mixed fact and law.

On the first point I was referred by the learned Counsel for the appellant firstly to certain notes and comments in 3 O. W. N. 77 (at 84) where it is said:

"It is to be seen in the first place that one of the stock arguments based on certain discrepancies in the various wajib-ul-araz on matters irrelevant to the enquiry which used to be advanced by the older class of lawyers does not appear to remain open now in view of the recent pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Biswa Nath Singh v.

Jugal Kishore, (50 I. A. 179=26 O. C. 228) (1) by which their Lordships reversed the decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner reported in 6 O. L. J. 637 [Balmakund v. Bishwa Nath Singh]."

The reference should have been to 6 O. L. J. 337, Balmakund v. Bishwa Nath Singh (2). The case is that of Balmukund (dead and on his death Jugal Kishore) v. Bishwa Nath Singh (2). The case related to adoption and it was held by the learned Judicial Commissioners that where a wajib-ul-arz simply state that a Hindu widow has power to adopt and states nothing about any authority of her husband, it must be construed to mean that it gives the widow the ordinary power of adoption. They said (at p. 345*) :—

"The learned Subordinate Judge has also stated that the divergence in these wajib-ul-arzes on many other questions of family custom will not affect their validity as records of the peculiar custom of adoption set up. We are unable to agree with this finding. If the wajib-ul-arzes are not consistent, they cannot be relied on as correctly stating the custom of the family."

And they went on to show that the variation in that particular case was very great.

In appeal by Bishwa Nath Singh their Lordships of the Privy Council held that where in some wajib-ul-araz it was stated that widows could adopt without any authority from their husband and in other wajib-ul-araz it was simply stated that widows could adopt, the statements meant the same thing, that is, that they could adopt, although they had no authority from their husbands.

Their Lordships did not expressly refer to the view of the learned Judicial Commissioners that the wajib-ul-araz were unreliable because there was much divergence in them on other points of family custom, but it is clear that it did not appeal to them. It may be said that they impliedly rejected it since notwithstanding the variations on other points they accepted what they held to be an unambiguous statement on the point of adoption.

It is also clear that their Lordships of the Privy Council considered a single unambiguous statement in one wajib-ul-arz sufficient to prove a custom. In another case of the late Judicial Commissioner's Court Balگو bind v. Badri Prasad (3), the question under consideration was the same as in the present case, whether a daughter and her issue were excluded from inheritance. There was an entry in a single wajib-ul-arz :—

"Dukhter ko waristan hissa nahin milta."

The learned Judicial Commissioners said :—

"The question is whether on the strength of this single entry in the wajib-ul-arz it can be held that the alleged custom is proved.....Though there is nothing illegal in holding a family custom to be proved by a mere entry in the wajib-ul-arz yet we think that before accepting such an entry as sufficient proof of the alleged custom the Court should be satisfied that the entry is free from ambiguity and that it is in reality a record of a custom and not merely of the wishes of the proprietors at the time when the wajib-ul-arz was prepared. In the present case we are of opinion that the entry is in itself not altogether free from ambiguity. Coming as it does immediately after the statement that on the death of a proprietor his sons become owners of his property in equal shares, the entry with regard to daughters might be construed as meaning that in the presence of sons daughters do not get any share in the inheritance."

And the learned Judicial Commissioners went on to show from other sentences in the wajib-ul-arz that this might in their opinion be the meaning.

There was an appeal to the Privy Council and their Lordships allowing the appeal observed as follows :

"The learned Judicial Commissioners who heard the appeal apparently did not doubt that the entry of the custom in the wajib-ul-arz of the village Binduli was evidence of the custom which governed the right to inherit in the village Aunian Durga, but they were of opinion that para. 4 of the wajib-ul-arz of Binduli has ambiguous and that owing to that ambiguity the custom was not proved. It is quite true that a custom is not established by an ambiguous statement of it in a wajib-ul-arz.

In their Lordships' opinion there is no ambiguity in the statement as to the custom. The only construction to which it is open is in their Lordships' opinion that on the death of an owner of the village no daughter of his is under any circumstances entitled to a share in the property by right of inheritance, whether he had left sons or not."

The question whether wajib-ul-araz should be rejected as unreliable on one point of custom because they are discrepant on other points of custom was recently considered by this Court in Mohammad Jafar v. Lal Bahadur (192 Ind. Cas. 420) (4). The case was not however, referred to by Counsel in the present appeal. The following passages from the judgment of Yorke, J. are rele-

"The two wajib-ul-araz on the record...are certainly curious documents.....It is certainly remarkable that in one village the family should record a custom that a widow will get nothing more than maintenance, while in another village the same family records a custom that the widow will have a life estate ever half of her husband's property. Similarly it is remarkable that in one village the co-sharer is given a non-Muhammadan right of adoption, while in the other nothing is said about the existence of such a right.

On the other hand it seems to me to be quite unsound to suggest as an explanation of such differences that the differences have arisen because the wajib-ul-araz represent only the wishes of the co-sharers. The co-sharers were in both cases the members of the same family and one should expect that they would dictate the wajib-ul-arz of each village in the same terms, even if they were only seeking to make a statement of their wishes in the matter of inheritance. It seems to me therefore that it is not sound reasoning to say that these discrepancies lead to the conclusion that these documents represent rather the wishes of the parties who had them recorded than a declaration of an old established and binding custom. It appears to me rather that the differences are the result of the different mentalities of the officers who were, making the enquiries, or more probably of the clerks of those officers, who were under the direction of the Settlement Officers, recording the result of the enquiries. It seems to me to follow that where as in both these documents we find it recorded in clear terms in the one case that a daughter who has got a real brother will be excluded from inheritance, and in the other case that in case there is no male issue the daughter will be entitled to a share, we have a clear record of custom that daughters are excluded by sons."

In the present case the wajib-ul-araz considered together, furnish clear and definite evidence in my opinion of the intention to exclude daughters from inheritance altogether and I see no reason to reject this evidence. I entirely agree, if I may say so with the view of Yorke, J. that the differences in the record of these customs must be attributed to the idiosyncracies of the recording officials.

It was contended for the respondents that this Court would not be justified in interfering in second appeal with a concurrent finding of fact in the two Courts below. In Narain Singh v. Net Ram (1940 O. W. N., 1136) (5), it was no doubt said by the Allahabad High Court that the question whether the custom exists or not is one of fact and in support of this statement reference was made to the following Privy Council cases :—

Singh (I. L. R. 32 All. 363) (7) and Muhammad Kamil v. Imtiaz Fatima (I. L. R. 31 All. 457) (8).

The last case is to be found in I. L. R. 31 All. 457 (8). The case at I. L. R. 31 All. 457 (8) is that of Parbati Kunwar v. Chandarpal Kunwar (9). It was said in Muhammad Kamil v. Imtiaz Fatima (8), that the existence of a custom excluding female heirs was a question of fact. As the Courts in India had concurred on this question their Lordships saw no reason why they should not follow their usual practice of accepting concurrent findings of fact.

In Munna Lal v. Jai Indar Bahadur Singh (26 O. C. 386) (10), it was held by the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh that a question of custom is one of mixed fact and law. The point whether the facts found in any given instance prove the existence of the essential attributes of a custom or usage is a question of law, and in second appeal an enquiry must be made whether all the attributes of a local custom have been established or not by evidence which is accepted by the lower Courts.

In the case of Palaniappa Chetty v. Deivasikamony Pandara (44 I. A. 147 at 158) (11) it was said by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee :—

"Questions of the existence of an ancient custom are generally questions of mixed law and fact, the Judge first finding what were the things actually done in alleged pursuance of custom and then determining whether these facts so found satisfy the requirements of the law. This latter is a question of law—not fact."

In Raza Husain Khan v. Subhani (2 O. W. N., 838) (12), it was held by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner that the question whether in any given instance the evidence led to prove the existence of the attributes essential for a valid custom is adequate or inadequate proof of what the law requires is a question of law which can be discussed in second appeal.

In Ram Din v. Balbhaddar Singh (1939 O. W. N. 372) (13), reference was made to Palaniappa Chetty v. Deivasikamony Pandara (11), and it was added :—

"What has to be seen is not merely whether the decision arrived at by a Court is one of fact but whether in arriving at that decision the Court has committed an error in law or not: for instance if the decision of a Court that a certain custom existed was based on the acceptance of evidence which was inadmissible there can be no doubt that that decision could be questioned in second appeal."

Conversely it may be said that if the decision of the lower Court that a certain custom did not exist was based on the rejection of evidence which should not have been rejected, the decision can be questioned in second appeal. That is the position in the present case for in my opinion the Courts below were not justified in rejecting the evidence of the wajib-ul-araiz on the question of inheritance merely because there are some apparently conflicting statements in regard to other customs.

The question of the value to be attached to the record of a custom in a waji-ul-arz is no longer in dispute. As mentioned above their Lordships of the Privy Council accepted as sufficient proof the unambiguous statement in a wajib-ul-arz as to the custom of inheritance in Balgobind v. Badri Prasad (50 I. A. 196) (3).

In Abdul Wahab v. Tahira Bano (2 O. W. N., 357) (14), it was held by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh that where the language of an entry of a custom in a wajib-ul-arz is perfectly unambiguous and definite and there is no suggestion that in making the entry the Settlement Officer was guilty of any dereliction in the discharge of his official duties, the entry proves the custom.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the evidence of these wajib-ul-araiz clearly indicates that a daughter is excluded from inheritance and that this is a question which can be gone into in second appeal where the Courts below have drawn an inference from the wajib-ul-araiz which cannot be upheld.

It is unnecessary on this view to discuss the question of limitation. While on the case brought by the plaintiff, Mst. Kaniz Fatima, that she was a co-sharer in the property, the suit was not time-barred, it may be said that on the finding that she was not a co-sharer it was time-barred. It can also be said that if the compromise was valid in so far as it conferred on her mother a life-interest in three villages the suit was premature so far as those villages were concerned, though not premature as regards the fourth village.

I accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the decrees awarded by the lower Courts and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. I allow the appellant his costs in all Courts.

PATNA HIGH COURT

April 22, 1941

MEREDITH, J.

MOINUDDIN—INFORMANT—PETITIONER
versusSHEGOBIND SAHU alias GOBIND

AND ANOTHER—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 209—Duty of committing Magistrate—His power to weigh evidence and exercise judicial discretion—Weighing evidence and balancing it, difference—Trial of number of accused—Prosecution evidence identical against all—Evidence not believed against some—Either all must be discharged or all committed—Held that all accused ought to have been committed.

The law clearly empowers the committing Magistrate to weigh the evidence, and to exercise his judicial discretion, and it plainly contemplates that he should do so. Nevertheless, it is one thing to weigh the evidence with a view to determining whether there are or are not sufficient grounds for commitment within the meaning of s. 209, Criminal P. C., and another to balance the evidence, as it is the duty of the Sessions Court to do, in order to decide upon the guilt of the accused after considering the case as a whole. It is not for the Magistrate to usurp the functions of the Sessions Court. It is not for him to decide whether upon the whole this witness or that witness should or should not be believed. In short, though the Magistrate should weigh the evidence and exercise his judicial discretion, the criterion to be applied by him is not quite the same criterion as will be finally applied by the Sessions Court at the trial. If the Magistrate, after weighing the evidence, is satisfied that it is evidence upon which no reasonable Court could convict, it is his duty to discharge; but if it is a case of balancing probabilities, estimating pros and cons; if it is a case where a different Court might possibly, in his opinion, come to a conclusion different from his own, then it is his duty to commit where the evidence is sufficient for conviction, if believed, and that even though, he may himself not think the evidence sufficient for a conviction. In such circumstances he should leave it to the Sessions Court to estimate the result of the evidence as a whole after cross-examination and a full trial. These considerations are all the more applicable in a case where there are a number of accused persons, and the evidence led by the prosecution is practically identical against them all. Undoubtedly it is open to any of the accused to satisfy the Magistrate that that evidence is not at all fit to be believed; but if they do, the result should be the discharge of all the accused, and not commitment of some and discharge of others. 91 Ind. Cas. 34 (1), relied on.

A number of accused were produced before the committing Magistrate. The prosecution evidence was the same in case of all the accused. Two of the accused examined defence witnesses to establish an alibi. The Magistrate discharged these two accused and committed the rest. He did not in his order state definitely that he disbelieved the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, but held that in the case of these two accused persons the alibi had been established:

Held, that, in the circumstances the real alternatives were either to commit or to discharge all. Even without an express finding on the Magistrate's part that the prosecution witnesses were speaking falsely the course he adopted must, be liable to prejudice the trial of the persons he actually committed. It would have been better in such circumstances to leave the evidence as a whole with all its pros and cons to be weighed by the Court of Session. The case was one where all the accused should have been committed to stand their trial.

Cr. R. from an order of the Sessions Judge of Patna, dated December 31, 1940.

Messrs. Nizamuddin Khan and M. Rahman, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Nageshwar Prasad and P. N. Sanyal, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This rule had been issued at the instance of a private prosecutor against a Magistrate's order, discharging two persons, Sheogobind Sahu and Mahadeo Kahar, under s. 209 of the Criminal P. C.

Some occurrence took place in the evening of May 23, 1940, at village Nohsa near Patna, and in the course of it one Hamid met his death. A first Information, charging 19 persons with riot and murder, was lodged at the Police Station without any delay, and the Sub-Inspector of Police proceeded to the spot also without delay, and after completing his investigation he submitted charge sheet against all the 19 persons named in the First Information, including the opposite party, Sheo Gobind Sahu and Mahadeo Kahar.

The case was enquired into by the learned Sub-Divisional Officer of Patna Sadar Sub-Division. A number of persons testified as eye-witnesses, and were not cross-examined before the learned Magistrate. A large number of these eye-witnesses stated that it was Sheogobind who had given the order for assault, and it was Mahadeo who had struck the first blow upon Hamid. Prosecution witnesses Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9 and 10 identified Mahadeo Kahar as having been in the mob, and of them prosecution witnesses Nos. 3, 4; 5, 6 and 7 stated that they had seen Mahadeo giving a spear blow to Hamid. Moreover, the village defadar (P. W. No. 8) testified that before his death Hamid had made a dying declaration to him.

that the first bhala blow was struck by Mahadeo.

As far Sheogobind Sahu, his presence in the mob was deposed to by all the eye-witnesses in the case, eight in number, and six of them spoke of his carrying a bhala.

Though the prosecution witnesses were not cross-examined with regard to this evidence, Sheo Gobind and Mahadeo examined defence witnesses to establish an alibi. They examined an Advocate and a Mukhtear to prove that at the time of the occurrence they had been at the Advocate's house, instructing him with regard to the argument to be made in a criminal case in which they were accused, and which had been fixed for the following day.

The learned Magistrate did not state definitely that he disbelieved the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, but he held that in the case of these two accused persons the alibi had been established. He, therefore adopted the course, of discharging these two, and committing the remaining 17 accused persons to the Court of Session for trial upon charges under ss. 147, 148, 326, 302 and 302 read with 149 of the I. P. C.

The learned Sessions Judge has already declined to interfere in revision with the order of discharge. Nevertheless in my view, it was an order which, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, should not have been made. I have said that the learned Magistrate nowhere expressly found that the prosecution witnesses could not be believed, and were giving false evidence. That is a point made in support of the rule. It is a point which indicates the inadvisability of the course which the Magistrate adopted. It is obvious that it placed him in a difficulty. He could not very well say that the prosecution witnesses were liars, and then proceed to commit 17 persons for trial upon the evidence of those very witnesses. It appears to me that if he definitely held that the evidence produced for the defence was of such a character as to show that the prosecution witnesses were not witnesses of truth, that would be a ground for discharging all the accused, but not for discharging two of them, and committing the remainder. The evidence for the prosecution was the evidence of the same witnesses against all the persons accused before him. It was not by reason of anything these witnesses had said, but by reason of what the defence witnesses had said that he differentiated between the testimony of the prosecution witnesses as against some of the accused and as against others. That course cannot, in my view, possibly be justified. In such circumstances the real alternatives were either to commit or to discharge all. Even without an express finding on his part that the prosecution witnesses were speaking falsely the course he adopted must, it seems to me, be liable to prejudice the trial of the persons he actually committed. It would have been better in such circumstances to leave the evidence as a whole with all its pros and cons to be weighed by the Court of Sessions.

It is pointed out for the opposite party that the law clearly does not intend the committing Magistrate to act as an automaton. It clearly empowers him to weigh the evidence, and to exercise his judicial discretion, and it plainly contemplates that he should do so. A number of rulings have been cited in support of this proposition. It was hardly necessary to do so, because its correctness cannot be questioned. Nevertheless, it is one thing to weigh the evidence with a view to determining whether there are or are not sufficient grounds for commitment within the meaning of s. 209, and another to balance the evidence, as it is the duty of the Sessions Court to do, in order to decide upon the guilt of the accused after considering the case as a whole. It is not for the Magistrate to usurp the functions of the Sessions Court. It is not for him to decide whether upon the whole this witness or that witness should or should not be believed. The correct view of the matter has, to my mind, been very clearly and accurately expressed by the late Sulaiman, J. in Akbar Ali v. Raja Bahadur (1). In that case his Lordship said: "Section 213 uses the expression 'not sufficient grounds for committing the accused'. This expression is quite different from such expressions as 'the case not proved' or 'the accused are innocent'. I agree with the view of Lindsay, J. that when after hearing the evidence for the defence the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that their evidence rebuts that produced for the prosecution, or renders it so incredible or unreliable that a conviction will not follow, he may pass an order of discharge, as expressed by him in Muhammad Abdul Hadi v. Baldeo Sahai (2). I also fully accept the statement of the law laid down by my learned colleague in the case of Emperor v. Ganpat Lal (3), that if the Magistrate is satisfied that the charge is without foundation and that there are no sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial, he is entitled, and, indeed, it is his duty, to discharge him. This, however, does not mean that the Magistrate is to arrogate to himself the functions of the Sessions Court and try the case as if he were that Court himself. The policy of the legislature seems to be that serious offences should be tried by the Sessions Judges, who are ordinarily more experienced. They are the proper Court for pronouncing an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused in cases triable exclusively by the Sessions Court. Where, however, the evidence is wholly untrustworthy and the Magistrate is satisfied that it cannot lead to a conviction, he would be perfectly justified in discharging the accused, even though he has already framed his charge. The Magistrate has to see whether there are sufficient grounds of commitment or not. If he is satisfied that the evidence is altogether untrustworthy and not fit to be acted upon, he may discharge the accused. He should not, however, try to weigh the probabilities of the case and then after balancing the evidence on both sides decide whether the guilt of the accused has or has not been conclusively proved. In short, though the Magistrate should weigh the evidence and exercise his judicial discretion, the criterion to be applied by him is not quite the same criterion as will be finally applied by the Sessions Court at the trial. If the Magistrate, after weighing the evidence, is satisfied that it is evidence upon which no reasonable Court could convict, it is his duty to discharge: but if it is a case of balancing probabilities, estimating pros and cons; if it is a case where a different Court might possibly, in his opinion, come to a conclusion different from his own, then it is his duty to commit where the evidence is sufficient for conviction, if believed, and that even though, as was observed in Akbar Ali v. Raja Bahadur (1), he may himself not think the evidence sufficient for a conviction. In such circumstances he should leave it to the Sessions Court to estimate the result of the evidence as a whole after cross-examination and a full trial. These considerations are all the more applicable in a case like the present where there are a number of accused persons, and the evidence led by the prosecution is practically identical against them all. Undoubtedly it is open to any of the accused to satisfy the Magistrate that that evidence is not at all fit to be believed; but if they do, the result should be the discharge of all the accused, and not commitment of some and discharge of others. In my view, the present is a case where all the accused persons should have been committed to stand their trial.

The rule is, therefore, made absolute, the application is allowed, the order of discharge is set aside, and Sheogobind Sahu and Mahadeo Kahar must be committed to the Sessions Court to stand trial together with the other accused in the case.

Civil Revision Petition No. 356 of 1937

NITHOOR THIMMANNA BHAT—

PETITIONER

AITHAPPA ADYANTHAYA—RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 4—Applicability—Promissory note—On last day for suit on pro-note Courts closed—On re-opening day payee assigning pro-note and assignee filing suit on very day—Suit held maintainable—Limitation—Expiry of—Effect.

The wording of s. 3, Lim. Act indicates that s. 4 does not lengthen the period of limitation prescribed. So that suits to which s. 4 can be applied are, therefore, clearly not suits instituted during the period of limitation prescribed. Section 4 deals with one of the exceptions to the general rule that a suit filed after the period of limitation prescribed shall be dismissed.

On last day of limitation for filing a suit on a promissory note the Courts were closed for the summer recess. On the re-opening day the payee under the promissory note assigned his rights in the promissory note to other person and on the very same day the assignee filed the suit:

Held, that on the date of the assignment there was an interest that could be assigned. Section 4 applied to the case and the suit was maintainable. 136 Ind. Cas. 822 (1), relied on, 19 Ind. Cas. 820 (2), explained and held no longer good law, 169 Ind. Cas. 653 (4), referred to.

All that happens after the lapse of three years after the creation of a debt on a pro-note is that the debt cannot be enforced in a Court of law. The debt does not cease to exist; nor does the relationship of creditor and debtor.

C. R. P. to revise the decree of the District Munsif, Puthur, in S. C. S. No. 208 of 1936.

Mr. P. Sridhara Rao, for the Petitioner.

Mr. T. Krishna Rao, for the Respondent.

Order.—The promissory note on which the petitioner sued was dated May 10, 1930. There was an endorsement of payment on May 8, 1933, which gave a fresh period of limitation; and so the suit had to be filed on or before May 8, 1936. On that date, however, the Courts were closed for the summer recess. On the reopening day, June 1, 1936, the payee under the promissory note assigned his rights in the promissory note to the present petitioner, and on the very same day the petitioner filed the suit. The District Munsif of Puthur, in whose Court the suit was filed, held that the suit was barred by limitation. He relied on the observation of the Chief Justice in the Full Bench decision of this Court in Fatma Bi v. Nagoorkhan (1), to the effect that s. 4 did not extend the period of limitation. He was of opinion that as at the time when the assignment was made the suit was barred, no rights passed to the assignee under the assignment. He therefore, although finding all the other points raised in favour of the petitioner, dismissed the suit.

All that happens after the lapse of three years after the creation of a debt is that the debts cannot be enforced in a Court of law. The debt does not cease to exist; nor does the relationship of creditor and debtor. As Beasley, C. J. said in Fatma Bi v. Nagoorkhan (1), there was on the date of the reopening of the Court an enforceable debt. The question that arose in that appeal was whether a person who could have filed the suit on the reopening of the Court but was unable to do so because the debtor was adjudged an insolvent, could prove in insolvency; and s. 46, Presi. Towns Insol. Act, came up for consideration. That section says that all debts to which the debtor is subject when he is adjudged an insolvent shall be deemed to be debts provable in insolvency; and the Full Bench held that on the date of the insolvency, which was the day when the Court reopened, i. e., more than three years after the debt had been incurred, the debtor was still subject to the debt. If on the date of the assignment there was a debt, then there was nothing to prevent the creditor assigning it to some other person. A debtor might well pay his debt even though it were barred by limitation and one would expect an honourable debtor to do so. The lower Court is therefore clearly wrong in saying that on the date of the assignment there was no interest that could be assigned.

A decision of Beaman, J. in Visram Vasudeo v. Tadaji Balaji (2) has been referred to by the learned Advocate for the petitioner in support of his contention that the petitioner was entitled to sue, but that learned Judge, differing from a Bench decision of his own Court in Bai Hemkore v. (1) 55 M 630; 136 Ind. Cas. 822; A I R 1932 Mad. 287; 62 M L J 256; 35 L W 260; (1932) M W N 216; Ind. Rul. (1932) Mad. 321 (F B).
(2) 15 Bom. L R 348; 19 Ind. Cas. 820.

Musamalli (3), adopted a reasoning which has since been held to be erroneous both in his own Court and in other Courts. As to the actual point that is raised here, Beaman, J. had very little to say. He argued on an analogy from a case where an acknowledgment took place during the Court recess after the period of limitation had expired. A decision on which some reliance has been placed by the other side is one of King, J. in Chidambaram Chettiar v. Venkatasubba Naick (4). That was a case where an acknowledgment took place beyond the period of limitation but during the recess. Section 19, which saves limitation in the case of certain acknowledgments made within the period of limitation prescribed, says that :

"Where before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit . . . in respect of any property of right, an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing . . . a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed."

The wording of s. 3, Lim. Act indicates that s. 4 does not lengthen the period of limitation prescribed; for it says :

"Subject to the provisions contained in ss. 4 to 25 (inclusive), every suit instituted . . . after the period of limitation prescribed therefor . . . shall be dismissed."

So that suits to which s. 4 can be applied are therefore clearly not suits instituted during the period of limitation prescribed. Section 4 deals with one of the exceptions to the general rule that a suit filed after the period of limitation prescribed shall be dismissed. Whether, on the date of the reopening of the Court the petitioner could maintain the suit against the respondent would depend on the wording of s. 4, which permits of a suit being filed on the reopening of the Court beyond the period of limitation. Section 4 runs :

"Where the period of limitation prescribed for any suit . . . expires on a day when the Court is closed, the suit . . . may be instituted . . . on the day that the Court reopens."

The period of limitation prescribed for the filing of the suit with which we are now concerned expired while the Court was closed; and s. 4 says that when that is the case, the suit may be instituted on the date when the Court reopens. Section 4 therefore directly applies to the present case and the suit was therefore maintainable, and should have been decreed in the petitioner's favour. The petition is accordingly allowed and the suit decreed with costs. The respondent has filed an application under s. 8, Mad. Agri. Relief

Criminal Reference No. 17 of 1941

JHARIA MINES BOARD—

KARTAR AD-DHARMI AND ANOTHER

Bihar and Orissa Mining Settlements Act (IV of 1920), ss. 26 (3) (b); 25 (1)—By-laws framed under, by Jharia Mines Board of Health, s. 1 (h), Part III, s. 2—Definition of 'nuisance' in s. 1 (h) of by-laws, not exhaustive—Court must find out whether there has been nuisance affecting public health—S. 2, Part III, validity—Word 'nuisance' means nuisance affecting public health—Act itself, whether punishes nuisance as such.

The definition of nuisance in s. 1 (h) of the by-laws framed under s. 25 (1) of the Bihar and Orissa Mining Settlements Act by the Jharia Mines Board of Health is not exhaustive. The definition is no doubt unreasonable in so far as it makes the Medical Officer of Health the sole judge of 'nuisance' and leaves no option to the Court but blindly to act upon his opinion. But as the definition is not exhaustive the Court must in each case find out whether there has been any nuisance affecting the public health.

Section 2 of Part III of the by-laws framed by the Jharia Mines Board of Health under s. 25 (1) of the Bihar and Orissa Mining Settlements Act, is valid. It is quite consistent with the provisions of s. 25 (1) (x) of the Mining Settlements Act. Though in that section of the by-laws the word 'nuisance' only has been used, it must be understood to mean "nuisance affecting the public health."

It cannot be said that the Mining Settlements Act, itself does not punish nuisance as such. Section 26 (3) (b) of the Act clearly makes punishable any contravention of any by-law. Any by-law framed under the Act has the same force and validity as the provisions of the Act itself.

Cr. Ref. under s. 438, Criminal P. C., made by the Additional District Magistrate of Dhanbad in his letter No. 549-J., dated February 22, 1941.

Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha, In support of the Reference.

Mr. H. R. Kazimi, Against the Reference.

Judgment.—This is a reference under s. 438 of the Criminal P. C. by the Additional District Magistrate of Dhanbad recommending that the order of the trying Magistrate acquitting the accused (1) Kartar Ad-dharmi and (2) Jagar Ad-dharmi, be set aside and the case remanded for retrial.

The accused Kartar Ad-dharmi as owner, and accused Jagar Ad-dharmi as manager of a tannery and hide depot at Koiribandh within the Jharia Mining Settlement area were prosecuted for having contravened s. 2 of Part III of the By-laws of the Jharia Mines Board of Health framed under s. 25 (1) of the Bihar and Orissa Mining Settlements Act (IV of 1920). The trying Magistrate acquitted the accused under s. 245 of the Criminal P. C. An application then being made to the Additional District Magistrate, he has made this reference.

Section 25 (1) (x) of the Bihar and Orissa Mining Settlements Act authorises the Board to make by-laws consistent with the Act "providing for the prevention or abatement of nuisances affecting the public health committed by any persons within the limits of the Mining Settlement", "Board", as defined in s. 3 (b) of the Act, means "a Mines Board of Health established under this Act".

In exercise of the powers conferred by s. 25 (1) of the Bihar and Orissa Mining Settlements Act the Jharia Mines Board of Health framed certain by-laws which were approved by the Govt. of Bihar and Orissa under s. 25 (2) of the same Act. Section 2 of Part III of these by-laws provides "No person shall commit a nuisance, or allow a nuisance to continue, on his premises". Contravention of any of these by-laws is made punishable under s. 26 (3) (b) of the Bihar and Orissa Mining Settlements Act.

The word "nuisance" is not defined in the Bihar and Orissa Mining Settlements Act, but in s. 1 (h) of the by-laws framed by the Jharia Mines Board of Health it is defined as follows:— 'Nuisance' includes any act, omission, place or thing which in the opinion of the Medical Officer of Health is injurious to the public health."

The grounds on which the trying Magistrate acquitted the accused are as follows:

"The definition in the by-law clearly goes beyond the wording in s. 25 (1) (x) of the Act because the definition in the by-law makes the Medical Officer of Health the sole judge of 'nuisance' under by-law 2, Part III which is punishable under s. 26 (3) Mining Settlements Act. The Act itself does not appear to have contemplated such narrowing of the connotation of the words 'nuisance affecting public health'. If the definition in the by-law is accepted, there can be no appeal on the point if the facts alleged to have been committed amounted to a nuisance. The opinion of the Medical Officer of health may be relevant and important as being that of an expert. But it should not be definitive. As the accused have been prosecuted under s. 2, Part III of the by-laws which does not appear to me to be valid and as the Act itself does not punish nuisance as such, the accused are given the benefit of doubt and acquitted under s. 245 of the Criminal P. C."

It will be noticed that the definition of nuisance in s. 1 (h) of the by-laws does not say that 'nuisance' means any act etc. but says nuisance includes any act, etc. The definition is thus not exhaustive. The definition is no doubt unreasonable in so far as it makes the Medical Officer of Health the sole judge of 'nuisance' and leaves no option to the Court but blindly to act upon his opinion. But as the definition is not exhaustive the Court must in each case find out whether there has been any nuisance affecting the public health.

So far as s. 2 of Part III of the by-laws is concerned, the learned trying Magistrate had no justification for holding that it is not valid. This section is quite consistent with the provisions of s. 25 (1) (x) of the Mining Settlements Act. Though in that section of by-laws the word 'nuisance' only has been used, it must be understood to mean "nuisance affecting the public health."

Another reason given by the trying Magistrate is that the Mining Settlements Act itself "does not punish nuisance as such." This is obviously fallacious. Section 26 (3) (b) of the Act clearly makes punishable any contravention of any by-law. Any by-law framed under the Act has the same force and validity as the provisions of the Act itself.

The reasons given by the learned trying Magistrate for acquitting the accused appear to be wrong. The order of acquittal must, therefore, be set aside. He must decide for himself whether the acts complained of amount to nuisance affecting the public health.

Accordingly, I accept the reference, set aside the order of acquittal and remand the case to the trying Magistrate for disposal according to law in the light of the above observations.

Order accordingly.

OFFICER, COMMANDING STATION

MEERUT CANTONMENT—RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 29 as amended in 1922 and s. 5—Expression "the remaining provisions apply," meaning of—S. 5, applicability of, to appeal under s. 29, Cantonments (House Accommodation) Act (VI of 1923).

The expression "the remaining provisions of this Act shall not apply" in the amended s. 29, Lim. Act simply means that they are not to apply proprio vigore, that is, merely by virtue of the Lim. Act itself, and that if they are to apply, the grounds for applying them must be found in the special or local Act itself. The Cantonments (House Accommodation) Act is a special Act and s. 5, Lim. Act does not apply to an appeal under s. 29, Cantonments (House Accommodation) Act. 126 Ind. Cas. 299 (1) and 143 Ind. Cas. 802 (2), relied on.

Mr. Shabd Saran, for the Appellant.

Bajpai, J.—The learned District Judge of Meerut had before him a reference under s. 19 read with s. 15, Cantonments (House Accommodation) Act (VI of 1923) relating to the rent of bungalow No. 17, R. A. Lines, Meerut. He dismissed the reference on May 30, 1940. Chheda Lal Jain, the person aggrieved by the order of the learned District Judge, has filed the present first appeal from order against the decision of the Court below. It is conceded that the appeal has been filed more than thirty days after the decision of the learned District Judge and is prima facie barred by time by reason of the provisions of s. 29, sub-s. (2) of the Act which say that "no appeal under this section shall be admitted unless it is made within thirty days from the date of the decision against which it is preferred."

We have before us the appeal itself and an application under s. 5, Lim. Act. On behalf of the respondent it is contended that s. 5, Lim. Act, is not applicable to the present proceedings. There can be no doubt that the Cantonments (House Accommodation) Act is a special Act. The Preamble says:

"Whereas it is expedient further to amend and to consolidate the law relating to the provision of house accommodation for military officers in cantonments, it is hereby enacted as follows."

It is also not disputed before us that the Act is not a special Act. That being so, the question naturally arises whether s. 5, Lim. Act, is applicable to the special Act. Now s. 29, Lim. Act, as it stood before its amendment in 1922 was as follows:

"(2) Nothing in this Act shall—(a) affect the Contract Act 1872 s. 25; (b) affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India.

(2) Nothing in this Act shall apply to suits under the Indian Divorce Act.

(3) Sections 26 and 27 and the definition of 'easement' in s. 2 shall not apply to cases arising in territories to which the Indian Easements Act, 1882, may for the time being extend."

In view of the amendment effected in s. 29, Lim. Act, 1908, by the Act of 1922, the situation stands slightly altered, because as the section originally stood it laid down that the provisions of the Act did not affect or alter any rule of limitation prescribed in any special or local Act. Sub-s. (2) to s. 29 now says that the periods of limitation prescribed by special or local laws shall be regarded as prescribed by that Act for the purpose of s. 3 and that section and other sections, namely s. 4, ss. 9 to 18 and s. 22 shall apply unless they are expressly excluded by the special or local Act and that "the remaining provisions of this Act shall not apply." The last phrase can only mean that the remaining provisions of the Act shall not apply unless they are expressly made applicable by the special or local Act. Under the old s. 29 none of the provisions of the Lim. Act was applicable unless they were expressly included by the special or local Act. The amendment to s. 29, Lim. Act in 1922 has extended and not restricted the scope.

Under the new s. 29, some of the provisions of Lim. Act are made applicable without being expressly included unless they are expressly excluded by the special or local Act. The rest of the provisions remain as before applicable only when they are expressly included. The expression "the remaining provisions of this Act shall not apply" in the amended s. 29 simply means that they are not to apply proprio vigore, that is, merely by virtue of the Lim. Act itself, and that if they are to apply, the grounds for applying them must be found in the special or local Act itself. This was the view taken by a Bench of the Patna High Court in Hasan Imam v. Brahmddeo Singh (1) and this is the view which commends itself to us. We are further fortified by the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Neelratan Ganguli v. Emperor (2). Their Lordships were dealing with the Emergency Powers Ordinance, II of 1932, which was a special law within the meaning of s. 29, Lim. Act. It was held that s. 5, Lim. Act had no application to an appeal under s. 39, of the Ordinance. Rankin, C. J. at p. 574* observed :

"Accordingly, while the provision of the Ordinance is that the appeal shall be brought within a certain time, prima facie that attracts the operation of s. 3, Lim. Act, which contains a provision against the Court entertaining 'the appeal'. It is necessary, however, in this case, to pursue the provisions of s. 29 of the Act somewhat further. That section goes on to provide that, for the purpose of determining the period of limitation, certain provisions of the Lim. Act shall apply only in so far as and to the extent to which they are not expressly excluded by the special law, and further that 'the remaining provisions of this Act shall not apply.' Now, s. 5, Lim. Act, is not one of the provisions which are to apply in the absence of something to the contrary. It is one of the sections to which the concluding clause is applicable, namely 'the remaining provisions of this Act shall not apply', ... this is not a provision prohibiting any special law making the sections applicable or any special law according to the intention of which such a section as s. 5 can be deemed to be applicable. It means that, so far as the Lim. Act is concerned, the section is not to be deemed to be one which is to be applied to the special law."

Whatever, therefore, may be the merits of the present application under s. 5, which is supported by an affidavit not contradicted by the opposite party, it is clear that we have no jurisdiction to entertain the application. We accordingly dismiss the application under s. 5, Lim. Act.

Application dismissed.

Proceedings under the Encum. Estates Act, ripening into a decree under s. 14 (7) are at the same time proceedings for the determination of the amount due from the landlord to the claimant on the date of the application under s. 4, and also proceedings for redemption of the mortgaged property. In effect by merely filing his application under the Encum. Estates Act the debtor applicant has instituted proceedings for redemption of all his mortgaged properties. Where the claimant creditor is mortgagee, if any amount is payable to him under the provision of the mortgage deed at the time of redemption, then that amount is to be determined and included in the simple money decree passed by the Special Judge under s. 14 (7) of the Encum. Estates Act. [p. 407, col. 1.]

F. C. A. against the order of the Special Judge, First Grade, Bara Banki, dated September 25, 1937.

Mr. Akhtar Husain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ali Zaheer, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

Judgment.—These are two first appeals from the judgment of the Special Judge, first Grade, Bara Banki, in two claim cases under s. 14 of the Encum. Estates Act, founded on the same document, Ex. 1, a possessory mortgage for Rs. 37,800 executed by Kirat Singh applicant debtor on January 27, 1930. This document was executed by the debtor in favour of a number of persons in shares, Lala Dharam Das half, Ram Saran and Gur Saran a quarter and Avadh Behari a quarter. Dharam Das died in 1932 and his representatives were Mst. Shyama Kuer and Rameshwar. Kirat Singh filed an application under the Encum. Estates Act in 1935 and separate claim cases were instituted one by Rameshwar Prasad relating to 1-4th share in this mortgage and the other by the remaining sharers of 3-4ths, Ram Saran, Gur Saran, Avadh Behari and Mst. Shyama Kuer. Exactly the same questions arose in both cases on account of the terms of the mortgage deed, Ex. 1. The creditors claimed that under the deed a certain sum of money was calculated as the amount of profits which would accrue annually to the creditors, and there was a provision that if the amount of profits fell short (obviously that is for a reason not due to any default on the part of the possessory mortgagees), this would have to be made good by the debtor mortgagor. On the other hand the mortgagor applicant contended that no rate of interest was fixed and therefore there could be no accounting and the provisions of s. 77 of the T. P. Act were applicable.

The learned Special Judge framed two issues only.

"1. Are the plaintiffs (claimant) entitled to claim in respect of arrears of rent and on account of remissions? If so, what amount?"

"2. To what amount are the plaintiff's (claimants) entitled against the defendant applicant?"

On the first issue the learned Special Judge after a careful consideration of the terms of the mortgage deed, Ex. 1, came to the conclusion that although the deed was not ordinarily "accountive" vide para. 2 which provides that after the payment of Govt. revenue Rs. 1,010 odd annually the mortgagees may continue to take the entire income in lieu of interest on the mortgage money, yet the debtor was liable to make good, by a species of accounting, any deficiency in the profits. On the other hand he rejected the claim for arrears of rent of three years holding that, as the property was not going to be redeemed, that is, it was not going immediately out of the hands of the mortgagees, they had their own remedy by taking proceedings to realise those arrears of rent.

The first and main contention put forward on behalf of the appellant debtor is that the creditors were under the terms of the deed only entitled to realise any such deficiencies in the amount of profits at the time of redemption, and it is contended that the application under the Encum. Estates Act by the debtor and the present proceedings in the claim cases of the creditors do not come within the scope of redemption proceedings. On the other hand it is certainly to be borne in mind that in certain respects the provisions of the Encum. Estates Act override the ordinary provisions of the law. No doubt an application under the Encum. Estates Act is not itself an application for the redemption of a mortgage but the result of an application under the Encum. Estates Act is that the creditors have to file their claims under ss. 9 and 10 of the Act and the Special Judge has to examine those claims and determine the amount, if any, due from the landlord debtor to the claimant creditor on the date of the application under s. 4. He has further under sub-cl. (7) of s. 14 to pass a simple money decree for such amount together with any costs which he may allow etc. etc.

The effect of these proceedings is laid down in s. 18 of the Act which provides that "Subject to the right of appeal or revision, the effect of a decree of the Special Judge under sub-s. (7) of s. 14 shall be to extinguish the previously existing rights, if any, of the claimant, together with all rights, if any, of mortgage or lien by which the same are secured and, where any decree is given by the Special Judge, to substitute for those rights a right to recover the amount of the decree in the manner and to the extent hereinafter prescribed."

A further consequence of such a decree and the sending of such a decree to the Collector is set out in s. 35 which provides that

"if at any time after the decrees granted by the Special Judge have been sent to the Collector under the provisions of s. 19 any person entitled to possession of any property under the provisions of this Act applies to the Collector to be put in possession of such property, the Collector shall deliver possession of such property to him."

As has been held in more than one case, among the persons entitled to possession after the transmission of the decree by the Special Judge to the Collector is included the applicant who becomes entitled to possession as against the mortgagee because the mortgagee rights come to an end the moment a decree under s. 14 (7) is passed. By analogy therefore, proceedings under the Encum. Estates Act ripening into a decree under s. 14 (7) are at the same time proceedings for the determination of the amount due from the landlord to the claimant on the date of the application under s. 4, and also proceedings for redemption of the mortgaged property. In effect by merely filing his application under the Encum. Estates Act the debtor applicant has instituted proceedings for redemption of all his mortgaged properties.

In the light of these considerations the arguments based on the wording of para. 4 of Ex. 1 which makes such deficiencies as have been referred to earlier payable "at the time of redemption" have no force. That paragraph provides as follows:—

"If the present gross rental, which comes to Rs. 3,412-4-0 and which stands entered in the patwari's papers of 1337 Fasli, be reduced (us se kam pare, that is be reduced below that amount or come to the less than that amount) or be proved to be wrong, then I, the executant, shall be liable for the payment thereof and shall pay the same with interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem at the time of redemption."

It appears to us to be quite clear that if any amount is payable to the creditors under this provision of the mortgage deed then that amount is to be determined and included in the simple money decree passed by the Special Judge under s. 14 (7) of the Encum. Estates Act.

Learned Counsel for the appellant has argued that this paragraph cannot be interpreted so as to cover remissions of rent which under the orders of the Govt. amounted to eight annas in the rupee in 1338 Fasli and seven annas in the rupee in subsequent years. He does not contend that it will not cover the erroneous statement of the recorded amount of profits contained in the paragraph. The actual gross rental entered in the patwari's papers for 1337 Fasli was Rs. 3,401-9 and it is not disputed that the difference between the higher and the lower of these two sums must be made good by the mortgagor. On the other hand it is contended that the provision in this paragraph is not wide enough to cover the case of remissions. We are unable to accept this contention. We are quite clear that by this paragraph the intention was to secure that the mortgagees would get a fixed annual profit of Rs. 3,412-4 less the amount of Rs. 1,010-15-8 which had to be paid as Govt. revenue. By the remissions the amount of the annual profits was reduced and there was a large deficit in the payment of interest. Under the terms of this paragraph the appellant was clearly liable to make good the deficiency.

Learned Counsel has attempted to base an argument on s. 77 of the T. P. Act. Section 76 of the T. P. Act provides in regard to the liabilities of a mortgagee in possession and lays down under cl. (g) that "the mortgagee must keep clear, full and accurate accounts of all sums received and spent by him as mortgagee, and, at any time during the continuance of the mortgage give the mortgagor, at his request and cost, true copies of such accounts and the vouchers by which they are supported."

Section 77 on the other hand provides that:

"nothing in s. 76, cls. (b), (d), (g) and (h) applies to cases where there is a contract between the mortgagee and the mortgagor that the receipts from the mortgaged property shall, so long as the mortgagee is in possession of the property, be taken in lieu of interest on the principal money, or in lieu of such interest and defined portions of the principal."

The argument on behalf of the appellant seeks to read these two sections as leading to the conclusion that if under the terms of the mortgage there is to be no accounting on the part of the mortgagee, there can be no claim on the part of the mortgagee for such amounts as are referred to in para. 4 of the present deed, that is he puts forward the argument that if by virtue of the terms of a mortgage deed the deed is not "accountive", to adopt the phrase used by the learned Special Judge, then there can be no accounting on either side. We do not think that the terms of ss. 76 and 77 of the T. P. Act lead to any such conclusion.

Reference was made to several cases, but most of these are really in favour of the respondents and not of the appellant. In the case of Sitla Sahai v. Shambhu Singh (28 O. C., 100) (1), there were provisions in the preamble of the deed to the effect that neither the mortgagee should have any claim to interest against the mortgagor nor the mortgagor any for profits against the mortgagee and his heirs. On the other hand there were certain other terms under which (1) the mortgagor was to pay Rs. 109 annually to the mortgagee in addition to all the profits, (2) if the mortgagee had to advance takavi to the tenants, he could recover the amount at the time of redemption with interest at a specified rate, (3) if the profits of the mortgagee were decreased owing to increase of revenue, cesses and rates (the same provision is present in the deed Ex. 1 in the present case), then the mortgagee might demand the deficiency from the mortgagor every year, and if it was not made good, it would be payable at the time of redemption with interest at a specified rate. It was held that s. 77 and not s. 76 of the T. P. Act was applicable to the case and that the mortgagee was not liable to render accounts. The conditions following the preamble, (that is the terms quoted above) it was held merely set forth the various additional liabilities of the mortgagor, that is to say it is not inconsistent with the provisions of s. 77 that the mortgagor should have imposed upon himself additional liabilities such as those which are stated in paras. 4 and 6 of Ex. 1.

The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bachchu Lal Pandit, alias Ram Shankar v. Syed Mohammad Mab Chaudhari (10, O. W. N. 299) (2) embodies the same principle although there were certain undertakings by the mortgagors in the nature of personal covenants both to pay the amount of the decrease of the profits and the like. Their Lordships agreed with the view of the two Courts in India that the mortgage deed was a contract within the meaning of s. 77 of the T. P. Act, 1882. They enforced the covenant entered into by the mortgagors but did not hold the mortgagees liable to accounting.

Similarly there is really nothing in the case of Mahmood Ali Khan v. Ali Mirza Khan (11 O. W. N., 524) (3) which leads to any different conclusion. That was a case in which in a mortgage deed the rate of interest was mentioned but nonetheless it was held that it did not follow that the parties intended that there was to be accounting. It was remarked that a question of this description is to be decided with reference to the terms of each deed.

It seems to us clear that in the present case the creditors were not liable for any accounting to the mortgagors but the mortgagors contracted to make good to the mortgagees certain possible deficiencies. There is no force therefore in the contention that the debtor could not be made liable for the possible deficiencies and losses to the mortgagee indicated in paras. 4 and 6 of the deed because the mortgagee was not liable under the terms of the deed to account to the mortgagor.

The only other point to which a reference has been made in these appeals is the remark at the end of the judgment immediately preceding the operative order where the Judge remarks

"In the statement hereto annexed collection charges are added to the extent of 10 per cent of the collections. This the mortgagee is entitled to get in view of the rulings reported in Kazim Husain v. Debi Dayal (11 O. W. N. 387) (4), at p. 390 and Secretary of State for India v. Saroj Kumar Acharjya (1935 O. W. N. 261) (5)."

It is not disputed on behalf of the respondents that collection charges should not have been added. The cases referred to by the learned Special Judge are cases of mesne profits. In such cases collection charges are allowable as they are in ordinary suits for profits under the provisions of the Land Revenue Act, and it may well be that collection charges may properly be added where the mortgagee is held liable to accounting under s. 76 of the T. P. Act. In the present case, however, the rights of the parties are fully set out in the mortgage deed, and that deed makes no provision for collection charges. With reference to these collection charges and in consequence in respect of the interest allowed on those collection charges therefore the present appeals must succeed. The effect of this modification is that the amount to be decreed to Ram Saran, Gur Saran and Avadh Behari will be reduced from Rs. 20,225-10-1½ to Rs. 19,436-7-1½. The amount decreed in the case of Mst. Shyama Kuer will be reduced to Rs. 13,194-9-11½, while the decree in favour of Rameshwar Prasad will be for the same amount as that in the case of Mst. Shyama Kuer.

Subject to this modification of the amounts decreed we dismiss the appeals and direct that the parties shall pay and receive costs in proportion to their success and failure.

C. R. P. to revise the order of the Sub-Judge, South Malabar at Calicut, dated September 3, 1938.

Mr. N. R. Sessa Aiyer, for the Petitioners.

Mr. T. K. Raman Nambissan, for the Respondent.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—This is a petition to revise the order of the Court of the Sub-ordinate Judge of South Malabar amending the decree obtained by the petitioner in S. C. S. No. 432 of 1934 on the file of that Court, under s. 19, Mad. Agri's. Relief Act, 1938. The respondent sold some trees to the petitioner on September 29, 1931 for Rs. 400 but before the petitioner could cut and carry them away, a third party successfully asserted a paramount claim to them and the sale to the petitioner therefore failed to take effect. The petitioner thereupon sued for the recovery of the amount of Rs. 400 “with interest at 24 per cent. per annum from September 29, 1931.” The Court however allowed interest at 12 per cent. only and passed a decree for Rs. 538-5-3 for the principal and interest till August 20, 1934, the date of the suit and Rs. 94-9-4 on account of costs with further interest at 6 per cent. on the aggregate amount from November 4, 1936, the date of the decree. The respondent applied to the Court below under s. 19 of the Act claiming to be an agriculturist for scaling down the decree debt aforesaid in accordance with the provisions of the Act. There is no dispute that the respondent is an agriculturist as defined by s. 3 (ii) of the Act. But it was contended for the petitioner that there was no relationship of debtor and creditor created between the parties when the sum of Rs. 400 was paid by the petitioner as the price of the trees, that no interest was payable on that sum, and the Court having allowed interest only as damages, it was not “interest” which could be scaled down under the Act. It was said therefore that the only relief that the respondent would be properly entitled to was under s. 9 of the Act, in respect of the interest that was payable from the date of the decree, namely November 4, 1936. Alternatively, it was also urged that s. 8 was not in any case applicable as the liability in question must be deemed to have been incurred only when the consideration for the sale failed, that is to say, when the third party claiming paramount title to the trees successfully prevented the petitioner from cutting and carrying them away by obtaining an injunction from the Court, which was admittedly some time after October 1, 1932; so that, even assuming that the interest awarded under the decree prior to the date of suit was liable to be scaled down under the Act, it should be scaled down in accordance with the provisions of s. 9 and not s. 8. We are of opinion that both these contentions are unsustainable.

Learned Counsel urged that no interest would be payable under the law in respect of the plaintiff's claim for refund of the purchase money and the liability to pay the sum awarded as interest arose only on the date of the decree. It is unnecessary, in our view, to consider whether interest could be awarded on a claim for recovery of purchase money where a contract of purchase fails to take effect, as in this case a decree has been passed awarding interest and it is no longer open to the petitioner to question such award. It must therefore be taken that the petitioner's claim for the purchase money was a claim in respect of which interest was payable. The fact that the Court awarded interest as “damages” cannot, in our opinion, exclude the operation of the provisions of the Act. The Act nowhere defines “interest” and it must be remembered that “interest” is sometimes payable even where there is no agreement to pay it. The Interest Act provides for “interest” being allowed, subject to certain conditions, as damages for wrongful withholding of payment of sums due, and Illus. (n) and (r) to s. 73, Contract Act, contemplate “interest” being awarded as compensation for loss or damage caused by a breach of contract in certain cases. It seems to us therefore clear that whatever be the nature of the liability to pay the principal sum—whether it originates in contract or in tort, the compensation awarded for wrongful withholding of its payment can appropriately be regarded as “interest” and is thus liable to be scaled down under the Act. The petitioner's learned Counsel cited Mottai Meera

y. Abdul Kadir (1) as being contrary to this view. We are however clear that the case has no bearing on the question we are now considering. That was a case where a co-owner in possession of common funds had realized interest by their investment, and, in a suit for partition, he was directed to pay to the other co-owners their shares of such funds including the interest earned. An application having been made for relief under Act IV of 1938, the Court held that the liability enforced by the decree was not a "debt" within the meaning of the Act. It was pointed out that the interest awarded in such cases could be regarded either as an accretion to the fund liable to be divided or compensation for breach of trust payable under s. 23, read with ss. 90 and 95, Trusts Act, the application of Act IV of 1938 being excluded in either case. It is obvious that the position here is entirely different. The petitioner's suit for recovery of the purchase money paid under an abortive sale was one for money had and received to his account: see Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mumdar (2) at p. 126, and it cannot be disputed that the basis of such an action is an imputed contract, at all events in circumstances like those of the present case which plainly exclude any hypothesis of tort or trust. The decision cited has therefore no application here.

As regards the alternative contention that s. 8 does not apply to this case because the liability to refund the price must be held to have arisen only after October 1, 1932 when an injunction was obtained against the petitioner, it is to be observed that this is not a case where the petitioner got anything under the sale of which he was subsequently deprived. It is not denied that before the petitioner could cut any of the trees, the person claiming paramount title intervened and successfully prevented the petitioner from doing so by obtaining an injunction from Court. The case is thus one where there never was any consideration and the sale failed ab initio. The liability to refund the purchase money therefore arose when it was received by the respondent, i. e., on September 29, 1931 (see Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mumdar (2) already referred to) and falls under s. 8 of the Act. The revision Petition is dismissed with costs.

Misc. A. against the order of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated January 17, 1939.

Mr. Akhlaque Husain, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. I. Wahid, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a Miscellaneous Appeal arising out of an order passed by the District Judge of Hardoi, dated January 17, 1939, granting letters of administration to the respondent.

The facts which give rise to this appeal lie within a narrow compass. A short pedigree no longer in dispute between the parties may be set out below:—

Arif Ali died some time in 1930 and was succeeded upon his death by his son Muhammad Ali and his daughter Mst. Hajira Khatoon. Both Muhammad Ali and Mst. Hajira Khatoon were minors. Syed Ishtiaq Ali, a Pleader of Hardoi, was appointed as guardian of the minors by the District Judge of Hardoi. It is not disputed that Muhammad Ali inherited two-thirds and Mst. Hajira Khatoon inherited one-third in the property of their father, Arif Ali. Muhammad Ali died on May 24, 1936. The respondent applied on January 8, 1938, under s. 278 of the Indian Succession Act for the grant of letters of administration with respect to the property left by Muhammad Ali. Mst. Hajira Khatoon, who was made a party to this application, filed a caveat through her guardian, Syed Ishtiaq Ali, Pleader, and contested the petitioner's rights to the letters of administration. She alleged that she was the sole heir of Muhammad Ali deceased, and the petitioner had no right to his property. She further alleged that the petitioner had lost all his rights due to his conversion to Christianity. She claimed exclusive right to the property of Muhammad Ali on the ground that both Muhammad Ali and Arif Ali were Shias, while the petitioner contended that they were Sunnis. There was some reference in the oral pleadings that according to the custom of the village and wajib-ul-arz the entire property of Arif Ali had devolved upon Muhammad Ali. The particulars of the custom were not given. The learned District Judge of Hardoi framed six issues in the case. Two of these related to the question whether Arif Ali was a Sunni or a Shia and whether Muhammad Ali was a Sunni or a Shia. The third related to the question whether the petitioner was an heir of Muhammad Ali under the Muhammadan Law applicable to the parties and the fourth issue related to the question whether the petitioner's conversion to Christianity deprived him of his right under the Muhammadan Law. There was also another issue to the effect whether the letters of administration should be granted to the petitioner assuming that he was an heir and there was no particular property to administer. There was also another issue, namely, whether in view of the intricate questions of personal law involved in the case, the Court should not refer the parties to a Civil Court. The two latter issues were treated as preliminary issues and were decided in favour of the petitioner.

The learned District Judge held that both Arif Ali and Muhammad Ali were Sunnis, and that consequently the petitioner was an heir of Muhammad Ali deceased. He also held that the petitioner's conversion to Christianity did not deprive him of the rights under the Muhammadan Law. In the result he ordered letters of administration to be issued to the petitioner with respect to the estate of Muhammad Ali deceased.

Mst. Hajira Khatoon has preferred this appeal against the order of the learned District Judge.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that the order of the learned District Judge is wrong inasmuch as there is no estate in the present case which needs to be administered. It appears that the respondent left his residence in Sandila many years ago and returned shortly before the present controversy arose. He failed in his attempt to obtain orders for the appointment of guardianship in his favour by the removal of the present guardian, Syed Ishtiaq Ali. He carried the matter up to the Chief Court but was unsuccessful. Then he made another attempt to get orders of mutation from the Revenue Court, but that attempt also failed. It is urged that the respondent made the present application for letters of administration nearly 19 months after the death of Muhammad Ali.

A reference to the list of the properties left by Muhammad Ali filed by the guardian shows that Muhammad Ali owned a two-thirds share out of 11 pies share in village Ghoghhera, pargana and Tahsil Sandila and a two-thirds share in the mortgagee interest of 12 biswansis 10 kachwansis in Patti Bakhtawar Singh, village Damgarah, pargana and Tahsil Sandila. He also held a fractional share in a grove in Shahabad. He had also a two-thirds share in a residential house at Sandila and houses at Shahabad and Ghoghhera. As regards the debts due to Muhammad Ali, he had a two-thirds share in a final decree for sale for about Rs. 2,100, dated November 9, 1933, a two-thirds share in another sale decree for about Rs. 300 dated December 9, 1933, a two-thirds share in another sale decree, dated January 21, 1933, against Bakhtawar Singh and a two-thirds share in a simple money decree for Rs. 111, against one Darshan Singh, and lastly a debt for Rs. 25 was due to him from one Mujtaba Ali. He also had some cash in a Bank and some Post Office Cash Certificates and some money in the Savings Bank Accounts in Banks and in Post Offices. There is no evidence that Muhammad Ali owed any debt to any creditor.

It has been pressed upon us that after the death of Muhammad Ali the debts could not be realised and the property cannot be administered without the letters of administration as the guardian cannot execute the decrees in respect of the property of Muhammad Ali; whose guardianship terminated with his death. This matter was considered by a learned Single Judge of this Court in an application under O. XLI, r. 5 of the Civil P. C. by the appellant praying for the stay of execution of the order granting letters of administration, and a similar argument was advanced on behalf of the respondent. The learned Judge observed that the decrees stood in the names of both the brother and the sister and that under O. XXI, r. 15 of the Civil P. C. Mst. Hajra Khatoon was entitled to apply for the execution of any decree to its entire extent for the benefit of herself as well as the legal representative of the deceased joint decree-holder unless any decree imposed any condition to the contrary. He also observed that the respondent was placed in a similar position and was entitled to execute the whole decree only under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 15 of the Civil P. C. by virtue of letters of administration. We are in entire agreement with this view. We do not think that there is any difficulty in the execution of those decrees without the grant of letters of administration. The only debt which is to be realised is a debt of Rs. 25 and it appears to be a parole debt. We do not think there is any justification for the administration of the estate. On the other hand, having regard to the circumstances of the case, we are of opinion that this is eminently a fit case in which the parties should be directed to go to a Civil Court for the adjudication of their respective titles. The question raised by the parties involves the trial of a serious question which can be more satisfactorily thrashed out by means of a regular suit. Having regard to the conduct of the respondent in taking no action in the matter since after the death of Muhammad Ali and delaying the filing of the application for letters of administration for nearly 19 months, and the further fact that prior to the filing of this application the respondent had been fighting unsuccessfully to obtain an order of guardianship in his favour and an order for mutation from the Revenue Court, we are by no means certain that the respondent is not really trying to obtain a summary decision on the question of title and avoiding recourse to a Civil Court.

We agree with the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Prosonno Kumari Devi v. Ram Chandra Singha, 17 Ind. Cas. p. 155 (1).

(1) 17 Ind. Cas. 155; 17 C.L.J. 66.

and Srimati Lakshmi Sundari v. Nityananda Dhupi 64 Ind. Cas. p. 61 (2), to the effect that where there is no estate which stands in need of administration, no suggestion that any creditors have to be paid or any debts due to the estate have to be collected, and an application for letters of administration is a transparent device to secure from the Probate Court a decision upon a contested question of title to the estate, there is no occasion for the grant of letters of administration. We hold that the remedy sought by the respondent was misconceived, and that the proper course was to obtain an adjudication of his rights in a regular suit properly framed for the purpose.

Reliance has been placed by the learned Counsel on behalf of the respondent on a decision of the Patna High Court in Babui Bhagwati Kuer v. Bahuris Ramsakhi Kuer and Babui Bhageshwari Kuer v. Bahuriah Bhagwati Kuer, 57 Ind. Cas. p. 583 (3). The case, however, has no bearing upon the present case. All that was held in that case was that letters of administration cannot be granted to a minor and that they may be granted to his legal guardian, provided that the minor is the sole residuary legatee, or a person who would be entitled to the estate of the intestate. In considering the question whether the District Judge was right in granting letters of administration to the Manager of the Court of Wards, it was observed in that case that although the Manager had large powers of management over the estate of the proprietor, there was nothing in the Act that entitled him as such Manager and by virtue of his office to apply for letters of administration to the estate of the deceased in which the disqualified proprietor might have a large interest. In the present case no such question arises, as the guardian has not filed a counter petition for letters of administration being granted to him.

We allow the appeal with costs and set aside the order of the learned District Judge granting letters of administration to the respondent. The appellant will get her costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Order accordingly.

Punjab Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act (IV of 1938), ss. 2, 3, 7 and 12—Determination of validity of Act—Pith and substance—Subject-matter of Act falls within Sch. VII, Provincial Legislative List, item No. 21, Government of India Act, 1935, (25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42) and is intra vires of Provincial Legislature—Government of India Act, 1935, (25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42), ss. 219, 107, Sch. VII, Provincial List, item No. 21—Act found intra vires of Provincial Legislature—Court, if can consider extent to which provision barring Civil Court's jurisdiction would derogate from powers of High Court—Word "land" in item No. 21, includes trees standing thereon—Under s. 197, Statute is to be presumed legal—Interpretation of Statutes—Incidence of Act, does not affect its validity.

The test for determining the scope and validity of legislation is to ascertain the true nature and character of the enactment, that is to say its "pith and substance." The "pith and substance" of the Punjab Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act (IV of 1938), is to empower the Collector to extinguish subsisting mortgages effected before June 8, 1901, subject to the condition of payment of compensation in certain cases. The subject-matter of that Act falls within the expression in item No. 21, "land, that is to say rights in or over land" and consequently the restriction on the jurisdiction and powers of Civil Court, provided by s. 12 of that Act, is also within the authority of the Provincial Legislature. For the same reasons, the impugned Act cannot be said to conflict with the Contract Act in so far as it deals with land other than agricultural. 192 Ind. Cas. 138 (1), relied on. [p. 414, cols. 1 & 2.]

The mere fact that the subject-matter of the impugned Act may also be affected by certain provisions in the Current Legislative List, would not attract the provisions of s. 107, regarding repugnancy. Consequently the Punjab Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act, is intra vires of the Provincial Legislature. 182 Ind. Cas. 161 (3), relied on. [p. 416, col. 1.]

If the Act is intra vires of the Provincial Legislature, it is not for the Courts to consider the extent to which the provision barring the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts would derogate from the powers of the High Court. This is a matter which is within the special competence of His Excellency the Governor under s. 17 (b), Instrument of Instructions. [p. 415, col. 1.]

The expression "land" in item No. 21 of the Provincial Legislative List must be deemed to include trees standing on the land. [ibid.]

Under s. 107, Govt. of India Act there is a presumption in favour of the legality of a statute and the Courts should not declare an Act inconsistent or ultra vires unless the repugnancy to the constitution is clear and beyond doubt. 182 Ind. Cas. 161 (3), relied on. [p. 415, col. 2.]

The incidence of the legislation, cannot affect its validity. [p. 416, col. 2.]

Sale, J.—This suit arises out of a petition presented to the Collector under s. 4, of the Punjab Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act (IV of 1938). The point for determination is the validity of this Act. The facts, so far as they are disclosed in the plaint, are that on February 5, 1897, Dad mortgaged certain land with possession to Dewa Ram for Rs. 1,200. The stipulations were that the interest was to be balanced by the income and the mortgagor could redeem on payment of the principal. On May 25, 1915, a further charge to the extent of Rs. 4,300 was made on the land on the same conditions, in favour of Dewa Ram. Subsequently Dad died. On April 6, 1927, the three sons of Dad and a brother, created additional charge of Rs. 2,000 on the land on the same conditions. The total charge on the land by 1927 stood at Rs. 7,500. It is relevant to mention that the mortgaged land is described in the plaint as containing certain fruit bearing date trees and other barren trees. On January 18, 1940, the three sons and brother of Dad, the original mortgagor, presented an application under s. 4, Punjab Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act, to the Collector for restitution of possession of the mortgaged land. This petition was met by the present suit instituted by the mortgagees in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Muzaffargarh, for a declaration and an injunction to restrain the defendant-mortgagors from prosecuting the petition. The main ground is that the Act in question is ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature but there are further objections that in any case the proceedings under the Act would only apply to the mortgage effected prior to June 8, 1901, and not to the subsequent charges.

The plaintiffs also asked for the issue of a temporary injunction under O. XXXIX, r. 1, Civil P. C., pending the final disposal of the suit. This application was rejected by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge on May 6, 1940; but before any further proceedings were taken by the trial Court an application was presented to this Court for the transfer of the case to this Court for the determination of the important issue regarding the validity of the Act. The suit was accordingly transferred to this Court by order of a learned Judge, and the Punjab Govt. was impleaded as a defendant. The case is now before us as a Full Bench constituted for the decision of the preliminary point regarding the validity of the Punjab Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act, IV of 1938, and this judgment will be confined to a decision of this question.

The Punjab Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act is described as an Act to provide for the restitution of lands on which there is a subsisting mortgage effected prior to June 8, 1901, that is the date on which the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, 1900, came into force. The Act received the assent of His Excellency the Governor on September 1, 1938, and was first published in the Punjab Gazette Extraordinary of September 6, 1938. The commencement of the Act was, by notification in the Punjab Gazette, declared to be May 15, 1939. The important provisions of the Act, for the purposes of considering its validity, are contained in ss. 2, 3, 7 and 12. Under s. 2 the Act is limited to subsisting mortgages effected prior to June 8, 1901. Section 3, contains the definition of the expression "land" which is defined to mean land occupied or let for agricultural purposes or purposes subservient to agriculture or for pasture, and to include such matters as sites of buildings and other structures on the land and all trees standing on such land. Under s. 7 of the Act, power is given to the Collector ("notwithstanding anything contained in any other enactment for the time being in force") to extinguish a mortgage to which the Act applies, subject to the condition that, under certain circumstances, compensation is payable. Section 12 bars the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to entertain any claim to enforce a right under a mortgage declared extinguished under the Act, or to question the validity of any proceedings under the Act. Now it has been laid down that the test for determining the scope and validity of legislation is to ascertain the true nature and character of the enactment, that is to say its "pith and substance." This test is referred to by Suláiman, J. in United Provinces v. Atiqa Begum, (1) at p. 35 :

"Their Lordships of the Privy Council have repeatedly stressed the fact that we must look to the pith and substance of the Act in order to ascertain its true nature and character. As laid down in Russell v. Reg (2) the true nature and character of the legislation in the particular instance under discussion must always be determined, in order to ascertain the class of subject to which it really belongs."

(2) (1882) 7 A C 829; 51 L J P C 77; 46 L T 869.

It seems clear that the "pith and substance" of the impugned Act is to empower the Collector to extinguish subsisting mortgages effected before June 8, 1901, subject to the condition of payment of compensation in certain cases. The validity of this Act is attacked by Mr. Badri Das on behalf of the plaintiffs on the ground that the substance of the Act—in particular the provisions contained in ss. 2, 3 and 12—is covered by Items Nos. 4, 5, 8, 10 and 15 of the "Concurrent Legislative List" (Part I) contained in Sch. VII, framed under s. 100, Govt. of India Act, 1935; and that by reason of ss. 100 and 107, Govt. of India Act, the Act is repugnant to the provisions of certain "existing Indian Laws" and is therefore, void to the extent of the repugnancy. The term "existing Indian Law" is, defined in s. 311, Govt. of India Act, to mean any law passed before the commencement of Part III, Govt. of India Act, and the particular laws referred to by Mr. Badri Das are the Civil P. C., the Lim. Act, the Evi. Act, Contract Act, Punjab Laws Act, all Acts of the Central Legislature, together with certain Regulations, dealing with the procedure for redemption of mortgages, which have been extended to the Punjab, such as, Regulations I of 1798 and 17 1806. In particular, Mr. Badri Das argues that the Act conflicts with the procedure for foreclosure of mortgages laid down in O. XXXIV, Civil P. C.; and he urges that the Provincial Legislature cannot provide a special procedure barring the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts, in regard to such matters as redemption of mortgages, which, prior to the commencement of the Govt. of India Act on April 1, 1937, were within the cognizance of the Civil Courts under s. 9, Civil P. C. As regards the Lim. Act, Mr. Badri Das contends that the Act conflicts with Arts. 134 and 148. As regards the Contract Act, Mr. Badri Das contends that a mortgage is, in one aspect, a contract; and he refers to Item No. 10 of Part I of the Concurrent Legislative List which relates to "contracts . . . but not including contracts relating to agricultural land." Mr. Badri Das also referred to Item No. 8 of the Concurrent Legislative List which deals with transfer of property other than agricultural land, and while conceding that the T. P. Act does not as such apply to the Punjab he has contended that the Courts should have regard to the recognized fact, that principles of the T. P. Act apply to the Punjab.

Finally, Mr. Badri Das contended that since the existence of the High Court is recognized as a statutory necessity by s. 219 et seq of the Govt. of India Act, the Provincial Legislature cannot, by any such enactment, as the one now impugned, bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts and so derogate from the powers of the High Court as to endanger the position which the Court is by the Act designed to fill. This latter argument appears to be outside the scope of the present enquiry. If the Act is intra vires of the Provincial Legislature, it is not for the Courts to consider the extent to which the provision barring the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts would derogate from the powers of the High Court. This is a matter which is within the special competence of His Excellency the Governor under s. 17 (b), Instrument of Instructions. All the Court has to consider is whether the Act is intra vires of the Provincial Legislature. For this purpose, the relevant provision of the Govt. of India Act on which the Advocate-General relies and the applicability of which is admitted by Mr. Badri Das is Item No. 21 of the Provincial Legislative List contained in Sch. VII, Govt. of India Act, read with Item No. 2 of that List. The relevant portion of Item No. 21 is as follows:

"Land, that is to say, rights in or over land, land tenures, including the relation of landlord and tenant and the collection of rents, transfer, alienation and devolution of agricultural land . . ."

Item No. 2 confers on the Provincial Legislature power to legislate regarding the jurisdiction and power of all Courts except the Federal Court, with regard to these matters. The expression "land" as used in Item No. 21 is not defined in the Govt. of India Act and for the definition reference must be made to the English Interpretation Act, 1889, in s. 3 of which it is provided that "the expression 'land' shall include messuages, tenements and hereditaments, houses and buildings of any tenure." The expression "hereditament" in English Law is defined in Byrne's Law Dictionary as "the widest expression for real property of all kinds and is therefore employed in conveyances after the words 'lands' and 'tenements' to include everything of the nature of realty which they do not cover."

There can be no doubt that "trees" which are regarded as immovable property and therefore realty would be covered by the expression "hereditament;" and the expression "land" in Item No. 21 of the Provincial Legislative List therefore must be deemed to include trees standing on the land. Mr. Badri Das contends that although Item No. 21 is applicable the Act is also effected by certain items in the Concurrent Legislative List already mentioned, viz., Items Nos. 4, 5, 8, 10 and 15. His argument in this connexion is two-fold: (1) that to the extent to which the substance of this Act is covered by these items the question of repugnancy of the Act under s. 107 with laws such as the Civil P. C., Lim. Act and Contract Act must be considered, and (2) that in any event, mortgages regarded from one aspect, are contracts, and that under Item No. 10 of the Concurrent Legislative List the Central Legislature has concurrent powers to legislate for contracts of all lands except contracts relating to "agricultural land."

The term "agricultural land" is nowhere defined but he contends that the definition in s. 3 of the impugned Act, including, as it does, pasture and trees standing on land, goes far beyond the ordinary accepted meaning of the term "agricultural land," and that, in so far as the impugned Act covers land which is not agricultural in the ordinary accepted sense, it conflicts with the law of contract. Now, as regards the question of repugnancy under s. 107, Govt. of India Act, it has been repeatedly laid down that there is a presumption in favour of the legality of a statute and the Courts should not declare an Act inconsistent or ultra vires unless the repugnancy to the constitution is clear and beyond doubt. Sir Shah Sulaiman, J. in his judgment in Shyamakant Lal v. Ram-bhajan Singh (3) at p. 200 says:

"When the question is whether a provincial legislation is repugnant to an existing Indian Law, the onus of showing its repugnancy and the extent to which it is repugnant should be on the party attacking its validity. There ought to be a presumption in favour of its validity, and every effort should be made to reconcile them and construe both so as to avoid their being repugnant to each other."

Again on p. 200* of the same judgment the learned Judge in dealing with the suggestion that the Act in question was repugnant to an existing Indian Law, lays down the law as follows:

"Now s. 107 (1) does not mean that a Provincial Law must yield if it is repugnant to any existing Indian Law whatsoever. It will give way (to the extent of repugnancy) only if it is repugnant to an existing Indian Law 'with respect to one of the matters enumerated in the Concurrent Legislative List,' unless the assent of the Governor-General or of His Majesty has been obtained as is referred to in sub-s. (2). If it is with respect to a matter falling within the Provincial Legislative List and not the Concurrent Legislative List, then it would prevail even as against an existing Indian Law."

According to this interpretation, the question for determination is whether the subject-matter of the impugned Act falls within the Provincial Legislative List. If it does, the mere fact that it may also be affected by certain provisions in the Concurrent Legislative List, would not attract the provisions of s. 107, regarding repugnancy. The question of the proper construction of certain items in the Provincial Legislative List is discussed in the judgments of the learned Chief Justice of the Federal Court and Sir Shah Sulaiman, J. in United Provinces v. Atiqa Begam (1). At p. 25* of the judgment the learned Chief Justice particularly deals with Items Nos. 2 and 21 of the Provincial Legislative List; and in regard to the expression "land" in Item No. 21 the learned Chief Justice says:

(3) (1939) 2 F L J 183 (200); 182 Ind. Cas. 161; A I R 1939 F C 74; 1939 O L R 399; 12 R F C 1; 5 B R 756; 20 P L T 473; (1939) M W N 674; (1939) F O R 193; 43 C W N F C 68; (1939) Kar. (F C) 165; 71 O L J 369; (1939) 2 M L J 45 Sup. (F O).

"The general word is amplified and explained by a number of examples or illustrations, some of which would probably on any construction have been held to fall under the more general word, while the inclusion of others might not be so obvious..... I think however that none of the items in the lists is to be read in a narrow or restricted sense, and that each general word should be held to extend to all ancillary or subsidiary matters which can fairly and reasonably be said to be comprehended in it."

Further, in dealing with Item No. 22 "forests" the learned Chief Justice expresses the view that "the power to legislate with respect to forests includes power to legislate with respect not only to afforestation but also to disafforestation"; while in regard to Item No. 24 "fisheries", he considers that the power to legislate includes the power to prohibit fishing altogether in particular places or at particular times. Sir Shah Sulaiman, J. in dealing with Items Nos. 2 and 21 of List II at p. 32* of his judgment points out that the expression "land, that is to say, rights in or over land"

"has a wide scope.....Entry No. 2 of List II includes jurisdiction and powers of all Courts, with respect to any of the matters in that list. Accordingly, entries Nos. 2 and 21 read together would cover any restriction that may be imposed on the jurisdiction and powers of Courts, with respect to land.....As there is no category in List I or List III which is similar to entry No. 21 of List II, the latter must be given a liberal interpretation so as to invest Provincial Legislature with full power to legislate with respect to them, so long as such legislation does not conflict with any other provision. I am not prepared to hold that entry No. 21 must necessarily be confined to substantive provisions and not to procedural law.....On the other hand, legislation, which affects the jurisdiction and powers of Civil or Revenue Courts, would come under entry No. 2.....The result is that if the subject-matter is within entry No. 21, then restriction on jurisdiction and powers of Civil and Revenue Courts with respect to it would also be within the authority of Provincial Legislatures."

Having regard to the liberal interpretation which the learned Judges of the Federal Court hold should be placed on the expression used in Item No. 21 of the Provincial List, it seems clear that the subject-matter of the Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act does fall within the expression used in Item No. 21, "land, that is to say, rights in or over land". If so, it follows that the restriction on the jurisdiction and powers of Civil Courts, provided by s. 12 of the impugned Act, is also within the authority of the Provincial Legislature. For the same reason, we consider there is no force in Mr. Badri Das's more limited contention that the impugned Act conflicts with the Contract Act in so far as it deals with land other than agricultural. His argument is that the extinction of a mortgage is the extinction of a contract; and that because Item No. 10* of the concurrent Legislative List gives the Central Legislature power to legislate regarding contracts other than those relating to agricultural land, the provisions of the impugned Act conflict with this item in so far as the impugned Act defines "land" to include matters which go beyond what is ordinarily understood by the term "agricultural land." It is true that a mortgage is in one aspect a contract relating to land; but having found that the subject-matter of the Act falls within the scope of Item No. 21 of the Provincial List, viz., "Land, that is rights in or over land", we must look for the definition of "land" to the Interpretation Act, 1889; and since land is therein defined as including messuages, tenements and hereditaments, it would follow that the somewhat wide scope given to the expression "land" in s. 3 of the impugned Act does not go beyond the expression "land" as used in Item No. 21 of the Provincial Legislative List.

Reference may be briefly made to two other arguments referred to by Mr. Badri Das in support of his contention that the Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act is invalid. He urges that discrimination is introduced by means of the arbitrary date fixed for the application of the Act, to subsisting mortgages effected prior to June 8, 1901, and that, therefore, the Act is invalid by reason of s. 298, Govt. of India Act. It is clear, however, that there is no discrimination in the Act, inasmuch as no distinction is made in the Act between agriculturists or non-agriculturists or between any class of persons. Mr. Badri Das's argument relates in fact to the incidence of the legislation, a question which cannot affect its validity. There is, therefore, no force in this argument.

He also referred to cl. (1) of s. 299, Govt. of India Act, which lays down that no person shall be deprived of his property in British India save by authority of law. This clause occurs in a section, which, as the marginal note shows, deals with the compulsory acquisition of land and it is not clear whether it is intended to be read in connection with the rest of the section, in which case it would not apply to the present case or whether it is intended to stand by itself. If the latter, the answer to this argument is that the authority for the deprivation is the enactment impugned, and there is no force in this argument unless this enactment is shown to be otherwise ultra vires. This fact the plaintiff has failed to establish. For these reasons I would hold that the Punjab Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act (IV of 1938) is intra vires of the Provincial Legislature. In both these cases I would certify that a substantial question of law, as to the interpretation of the Govt. of India Act, is involved. The suit will now be remitted to the Senior Subordinate Judge, Muzaffargarh, for decision on the merits. The Advocate-General is entitled to his costs in this Court which I would assess at Rs. 500, and this amount will be included in the costs of the suit and will be payable by the plaintiff-mortgagees.

ODUH CHIEF COURT

Second Civil Appeal No. 91 of 1937

April 15, 1941

YORKE AND BENNETT, JJ.

Syed MEHDI HUSAIN—PLAINTIFF—

APPELLANT

Syed MOHAMMAD JAWAD AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58—Mortgage or sale—Deed, construction of—Test—Intention of parties—Surrounding circumstances, if can be considered—Unnecessary details in deed as to rights and liabilities of vendee—Emphasis on vendee being representative of vendor—Inadequacy of price—Period of 15 years given for re-purchase at exact sale price—Parties Muhammadans—These factors show that transaction was mortgage and not sale.

The question whether the sale-deed and "ikrarnama" executed on the same day record an out and out sale with a contract or condition for repurchase or they record a transaction of mortgage is in the first instance one of construction of the deed, but the Court is entitled to take into consideration a certain number of surrounding circumstances, as for example, the circumstances in which the document was executed, the price at which the sale was concluded, the existence or non-existence of bargaining and the like. The crucial test is the intention of the parties. [p. 418, col. 2.]

The test whether the document or documents create the relationship of creditor and debtor, is not a very satisfactory one. It would be difficult to say that even a mortgage by conditional sale creates a "debt", since such a mortgage creates in the mortgagee no right to realise the consideration of the mortgage either as a personal liability or as a liability under the mortgage. [p. 418, col. 2; p. 419, col. 1.]

Reference to unnecessary details of the rights and liabilities of the vendee in the deed, the emphasis on the transferee being a representative of the vendor, the inadequacy of price and the vendor's not gaining any particular advantage by entering into a transaction of sale, go to show that the transaction was not a sale. [p. 422, col. 1.]

Where the parties to the transaction are Muhammadans, there is some amount of presumption in favour of the transaction being a mortgage concealed under the cloak of a sale-deed with a contemporaneous contract for resale. [p. 422, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a period as long as 15 years is given for repurchase at the exact sale price, the probabilities are in favour of mortgage rather than sale. A period of 15 years is a long period within which there may be considerable rise or fall in the value of the property. [p. 422, col. 2.]

S. C. A. against the decree of the Civil Judge of Rae Bareilly, dated November 4, 1936.

Messrs. Hyder Husain and H. H. Zaidi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hakimuddin Siddiqi holding brief of Mr. Naziruddin, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by the plaintiff in a pre-emption suit referred to a Division Bench under the provisions of s. 14 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act on the ground that it involves an important question of law.

The plaintiff Syed Mehdi Husain, a minor under the guardianship of his grand-father Wajid Ali, as mutwalli of a waqf property in village Unchahar, district Rae Bareilly, sued for pre-emption in respect of the sale of certain land, measuring 7 bighas odd in mahal and village Unchahar. The vendee defendants contended that the plaintiff as a mutwalli was not a co-sharer in the mahal. They further contended that in any case the property, in respect of which the plaintiff claimed to be mutwalli of a waqf property, was property in respect of which the executant of the waqf was a mortgagee and not a proprietor. The executant of the waqf was the same Wajid Ali who was the guardian ad litem of the plaintiff. He had on September 29, 1921 executed a deed of waqf-alal-aulad, Ex. 2, by which he reserved the right to sell part of the waqf property and purchase other waqf property with the proceeds. Subsequently in 1927 he sold some portion of the waqf property for Rs. 64,000 and purchased other property. On May 12, 1928, he got this property in village Unchahar under the sale-deed Ex. 3 executed by Saiyid Yusuf Hasan, along with which he himself executed an agreement to resell the property to Saiyid Yusuf Hasan in certain circumstances. This document was Ex. A-1. Subsequently on October 4, 1932 by a deed Ex. 4 Wajid Ali appointed his son Ikbāl Husain and another man Mohammad Wasi as mutwallis. Ikbāl Husain, however, subsequently died and was succeeded by the minor plaintiff Syed Mehdi Husain. It is said that Syed Mehdi Husain's name is entered in the revenue record as mutwalli and as beneficiary of the waqf to the extent of his share in the family property. Other points were raised in the suit which no longer arise.

The learned Munsif held that the plaintiff not having sued as mutwalli but only as a beneficiary under the waqf was not a co-sharer in the mauza and not entitled to maintain the suit. On this point the learned Civil Judge held in appeal that it was not seriously challenged before the Munsif that the plaintiff was mutwalli. It might be technically speaking true that the plaintiff did not sue as mutwalli but as he alleged that he was mutwalli of the property the mere omission in the relief clause that the decree for pre-emption should be given to him as mutwalli would not disentitle a Court from decreeing the plaintiff's claim as mutwalli if he were otherwise entitled to such a decree. In second appeal this point was not of course raised by the appellant but might have been raised on behalf of the respondents. Learned Counsel for the respondents has, however, conceded that he has not got an arguable case on this point.

The only point therefore which is for consideration in this appeal is the second point, namely whether the pre-emptor is mutwalli of property which is in his ownership under an out and out purchase made by the creator of the waqf Wajid Ali or that transaction was only a transaction of mortgage so that the pre-emptor is not as mutwalli owner of the property, and therefore a co-sharer in Mauiza Unchahar and entitled to maintain a suit for pre-emption.

The facts in regard to the acquisition of this property by Wajid Ali are set forth in the document purporting to be a sale deed, Ex. 3, executed by Saiyid Yusuf Hasan vendor on May 12, 1928, and the document Ex. A-1 executed on the same day by Wajid Ali vendee in favour of Saiyid Yusuf Hasan. Put shortly Ex. 3 is framed as an absolute sale deed, by which property previously mortgaged to one Thakur Jadu Nath Singh is transferred to the vendee Wajid Ali, the consideration for the sale being the amount supposed to be due to the prior mortgagee under the mortgage. Exhibit A-1 executed the same day and presented for registration simultaneously with Ex. 3 is a deed of agreement executed by the vendee Wajid Ali undertaking that if within 15 years, time in any fallow season of Jeth the vendor, his heirs and representatives or his successors by paying Rs. 41,000 the consideration money want to have the property transferred to them (there are also provisions for piecemeal repurchase), the declarant, his successors and representatives who may succeed to him in any way as mutwalli will return back the said property without any objection. The costs of the new sale-deed will be borne by the vendor, that is the vendor under the deed of sale Ex. 3 referred to in this undertaking.

The question is whether in the circumstances the sale-deed and ikrarnama record an out and out sale with a contract or condition for repurchase or they record a transaction of mortgage. The question is in the first instance one of construction of the deed, but in view of the rulings on the subject the Court is entitled to take into consideration a certain number of surrounding circumstances, as for example the circumstances in which the document was executed, the price at which the sale was concluded, the existence or non-existence of bargaining and the like. Learned Counsel for the parties have put before us the leading cases on the question of interpretation of such a combination of documents as we have in the present case. The test which has usually been stated in these circumstances as the crucial test is the intention of the parties. Learned Counsel for the appellant in the present case has also sought to suggest that the proper test is whether the document or documents create the relationship of creditor and debtor, that is do they create a debt. We are inclined to think that this latter test is not a very satisfactory one. Even in the case of an usufructuary mortgage it is open to argument whether there is really a debt created, particularly in those cases in which the amount of mesne profits of the property is to be taken in lieu of interest. It has frequently been said that the term "debt" connotes the existence of a right in the creditor to realise the amount of a debt. In a recent Full Bench case of the Lahore High Court, Lachhman Singh v. Natha Singh (I. L. R. 22 Lahore, 71) (1) it has been held that :

"the essence of 'debt' is the liability of the obligor which the obligee is entitled to enforce by action. Where a transaction neither imports the personal liability of the obligor to pay, nor confers on the obligee the right to recover the amount by the coercive machinery of the law, it cannot be called a debt."

Held also,

"That the principal characteristics of a usufructuary mortgage are that there is no personal liability of the mortgagor to pay nor has the mortgagee a right to have the mortgaged property brought to sale. The money secured by a usufructuary mortgage cannot therefore be called a 'debt' either according to the ordinary meaning of the word or the enlarged significance of the term as used in s. 7 (1) of the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act."

The position in the case of a mortgage by conditional sale is very similar, vide the provisions of s. 58 (c) of the T. P. Act defining mortgage by conditional sale as follows :

"Where the mortgagor ostensibly sells the mortgaged property—

On condition that on default of payment of the mortgage money on a certain date the sale shall become absolute, or

On condition that on such payment being made the sale shall become void,

It is obvious that it would be difficult to say that a mortgage by conditional sale creates a "debt", since such a mortgage creates in the mortgagee no right to realise the consideration of the mortgage either as a personal liability or as a liability under the mortgage. This test therefore seems to fail; and indeed it is not one of the tests which emerge from the decisions which have been put before us. We do not propose to go at length into these cases as most of the points in the earlier cases are summarised in two cases, one of the Allahabad High Court and one of this Court.

The decision in Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (I. L. R. 12 All. 387) (2) is rather of negative nature. It was held by their Lordships that "a document purporting to be one of sale, though it is accompanied by a contract reserving to the vendor a right to repurchase the property sold, on repayment of the purchase money within a certain time, is not on that account to be construed as if it were a mortgage."

In this particular case the right to repurchase was to be exercised within 10 years. Their Lordships considered the terms of the document and considered the case to be one of sale with a right to repurchase within the period stipulated.

(1) I. L. R. (1941) Lah. 71; 191 Ind. Cas. 583; 42 P. L. R. 560; A. I. R. 1940 Lah. 401; 13 R. L. 300.

(2) 12 A 387; 17 I. A. 98; 5 Sar. 557 (P. C.).

In Jhanda Singh Wahid-ud-din, (I. L. R. 38 All. 570) (3) the view stated in Bhagwan Sahai's case (2) was affirmed. Their Lordships were of opinion that the intention of the parties which was the test in such a case must be gathered from the language of the document themselves viewed in the light of the surrounding circumstances. They concluded that the transaction was an out and out sale and not a mortgage by conditional sale. This was a case in which there was a right to repurchase with 9 or 10 years stated in an agreement executed a week later than the sale deed in the year 1852, and the vendors instituted a suit for redemption no less than 56 years later. Their Lordships referred to a remark in the English case of Alderson v. White (4) where, it is said by Lord Cranworth,

"I think a Court after a lapse of 30 years ought to require cogent evidence to induce it to hold that an instrument is not what it purports to be."

The case is, of course, easily distinguishable from the present case where the plea that this was a transaction of mortgage is put forward within the period fixed for repurchase and within a comparatively short period of the original deed of sale.

In Bishambhar Nath v. Muhammad Ubaidullah Khan (I. L. R. 45 All. 581) (5) a Bench of the Allahabad High Court restated the proposition that "In deciding whether a given transaction is an out and out sale with a condition for repurchase or a mortgage by conditional sale, it is the intention of the parties at the time of entering into the transaction which must be regarded. That intention must be gathered from the terms of the deed itself and the surrounding circumstances."

The details of the transaction in this case are not in any way parallel to those of the present case, but in the course of the judgment a reference was made to two points which are of some interest in the present case. One of these was the fact that one of the parties was a Muhammadan, about which it was remarked,

"One of the parties being a Muhammadan may, in a doubtful case, lend some additional probability in favour of a document being construed as a mortgage but it does not in any way do away with the rule laid down by the Privy Council that a document is to be construed in accordance with the intention of the parties as evidence by its terms."

Elsewhere it was said

"It has not been suggested that the price paid under the deed was in any way inadequate to the value of the property at the time when the sale was effected."

In Mst. Mumtaz Begam v. Mst. Lachhmi, (A. I. R. 1929 All. 174) (6) certain tests for the determination as to whether a transaction was one of sale or of mortgage were laid down and it was said,

"It can be contended that a transaction was not intended to be a mortgage, when it is found that there was nothing to show that the relation of debtor and creditor continued to exist, there was nothing about interest or its equivalent, that the price was a very fair one for a sale, and that a very long period (five times as great as the period contemplated in the deed) had been allowed to elapse before the party took action."

Some other points have been mentioned in Ram Das Rao v. Brindaban Ram (A. I. R. 1931 All. 113) (7). It is pointed out that

"whether not two transactions are integral parts of the same transaction, connected and interdependent or whether they are disconnected and dissociated is in each case a question of fact which has to be ascertained from the evidence produced in the case and no question of legal presumption arises."

Elsewhere it was said that

"where there is a controversy as to whether the transaction is a sale or a mortgage by conditional sale, the matter has primarily to be determined upon a construction of the document or documents concerned. An absolute sale-deed does not cease to be so merely because the vendor stipulates that he shall have a right to repurchase."

The case law on this subject has been discussed at some length in the judgment of Sen, J., in this particular case. In the body of the judgment in this case also it is remarked,

"It may also be an important factor as to whether the sale consideration represents the actual value of the property."

Reference has also been made to Mst. Gomti v. Meghraj Singh (A. I. R. 1933 All. 443) (8). In this case there was, simultaneously with the sale deed, an agreement executed by the vendee under which the vendor was given a right of repurchase of the property for the sale price at any time after 25 years from the date of the sale. It was said that "the time was not the essence of the contract and that the transaction was one of mortgage by conditional sale, the vendor being entitled to redeem within the maximum period of 60 years but after the expiry of the 25 years period fixed in the agreement."

There are no means of comparing a case of that kind with the present case in which a maximum period for repurchase is fixed instead of a minimum period and the maximum period has not yet expired.

Greater reliance was placed by learned Counsel on a Calcutta case, Mohammad Yusuffe v. Jashodha Kumar Das Purkaista (2 Ind. Cas. 930) (9). In this case the agreement was that if the purchase money was repaid within four years, the purchaser would be bound to give up the property, and it was held that this was a case of sale with a contract for repurchase and not a case of mortgage.

Reliance was also placed for the appellant on Muthuvelu Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Mudaliar (I. L. R. 42 Mad. 407) (10). The head note runs as follows :

"Where in one and the same transaction land is sold absolutely but with a right of repurchase to be exercised before a certain date, the transaction does not necessarily become by virtue of s. 58 of the T. P. Act a mortgage by conditional sale, whatever the intention of the parties might have been."

Learned Counsel referred to a passage on p. 421* in the judgment of Seshagiri Ayyar, J. where he says,

"A party who wishes the document to be understood as being different from what the words suggest should show that the form in which the language is clothed does not express the real intention of the parties and that in substance the parties intended that there should be a transaction different from what the language imports. In other words there must be evidence to show that the parties intended a mortgage although they used expressions which prima facie cannot a sale."

On behalf of the respondents reliance has been placed first on the case referred to by the learned Civil Judge, Mohammad Usman v. Abdul Rahman (A. I. R. 1925 Calcutta 1151) (11), in which stress was laid on the habit of Muhammadans of disguising mortgages as sales and it was held that

"in construing a document between Muhammadans in order to find whether the transaction is a mortgage by conditional sale or an out and out sale, it should be remembered that documents are executed by Muhammadans in which they conceal, or at least try to conceal the real nature of the transaction and attempt to make out that the transaction is an out and out sale, although as a matter of fact the intention of the parties is to create a mortgage."

This is, of course, due to the desire of Muhammadans to avoid any appearance of lending money at interest. Another point referred to in this case was the existence of contrast between the real value of the property and the consideration that passed in money.

Counsel to Narasingherji Gyanagerji v. Panuganti Parthasaradhi (51 I. A. 305) (12). It will be sufficient to refer to the head note which runs as follows :

"Two deeds of the same date were so phrased as to be ostensibly a sale of certain villages with an agreement for a re-sale and re-purchase at the same price at a certain date."

(Two dates 5 and 6 years respectively after the date of sale were stipulated).

"It appeared however that the price named, which was an amount immediately required to prevent a sale under a decree, had been settled without bargaining; it was absurdly low, less even than the property would have realised upon a public sale. A clause in one of the deeds indicated that time was not to be of the essence of the contract for repurchase, and there were other provisions which supported the view that a mortgage was intended: Held, that the transaction was a mortgage by conditional sale, and that the purchasers upon a sale in execution of a decree against the mortgagor had a right to redeem."

These same points are mentioned and a reference made to this decision in a recent case of this Court Fazal Ahmad, Dr. Syed v. Afzul Rahman, Maulvi, (1937 O. W. N. 1236) (13) a case in which reference has been made to many of the cases discussed in this judgment. It is in the light of the above decisions that we proceed to consider the construction of the two deeds in suit. We take first the circumstances in which the sale-deed Ex. 3 was executed. They appear from the document itself. The opening portion of the sale-deed shows that this property had been mortgaged with possession about 14 years earlier on July 25, 1914, for Rs. 37,000 to Thakur Jadu Nath Singh. The mortgage contained three important conditions (1) that the mortgagor had no power to redeem the property until after the expiry of 10 years, (2) that he must redeem it within five years after the expiry of that period, that is within 15 years of the execution of the mortgage, and (3) that in case the mortgagor failed to redeem the property within the prescribed period, it should be entirely foreclosed. The document was in fact an anomalous mortgage. It is to be observed that at the date of execution of Ex. 3, the mortgagor had only about 15 months left in which he must redeem the property. The document goes on to mention that the mortgagee Jadu Nath Singh had been guilty of various acts of high-handedness and the mortgage was redeemable after deduction of certain amounts. The object of the execution of Ex. 3 is said to be to save the mortgagor from the atrocities (high-handedness) of the mortgagee Jadu Nath Singh, and it is said that in order to achieve this result the vendor has made the aforesaid Wajid Ali Sahib ready to purchase the entire property as the trustee of the wagf-alal-aulad. The document goes on to fix the consideration as Rs. 41,000, Rs. 20,500 for each of the two sets of properties mortgaged, the whole of which is left with the vendee for redemption of Jadhu Nath Singh's mortgage with the stipulation that whatever amount shall remain as surplus shall be received by the vendor from the vendee by executing a receipt therefor. The vendor assumes liability in case the vendee has to pay anything in excess of Rs. 40,500 (Rs. 41,000 less Rs. 500 expenses of the sale-deed). Condition 2 of this sale-deed provides that the vendee shall bring a suit for redemption claiming set off respecting trees improperly cut by the mortgagee etc., "and all these proceedings shall be taken in consultation with the vendor." It is possible to interpret this consistently with the document being a sale-deed inasmuch as the vendor is to get the surplus remaining over after redemption but it is otherwise more consistent with the document being a mortgage.

Condition 4 lays down that

"after the execution and completion of this deed the entire property noted in Appendices Nos. 1 and 2 with all the external and internal rights and the customary and ordinary dues and all the zemindari and proprietary profits and all the appertenances and other things connected with the property, the sewai dues and the rent, the cultivated and uncultivated land, waste and banjar land, jungle, tanks, wells, abadi houses of ryots, as well as escheated houses, the personal as well as escheated groves and trees, rights of easement as well as irrigation rights, without the exception of anything or right, have now been transferred in favour of the vendee who has now become the absolute owner in possession of the property in place of me the vendor and he shall be competent to take all proceedings and seek all remedies as a representative of me the vendor."

In this paragraph as in others there is considerable stress laid upon the document being an out and out transfer of the property. It appears to us that in fact the case is over stated and this very paragraph contains indications that the over statement justifies suspicion. In a case of transfer of zemindari property by the owner as vendor to a vendee there is no necessity for all this reference to details, and in fact it is not usual to include so many details. The last sentence of this paragraph is particularly suggestive where the transferor says that "the transferee is to be competent to take all proceedings and seek all remedies as a representative of me the vendor (ba qaim mukami baiya)."

(13) 1937 O. W. N 1236; 172 Ind. Cas. 536; 10 R O 178; A I R 1938 Oudh 57; 1938 O L R 10.

Really a person who has purchased property by a sale-deed is competent to take all proceedings and seek all remedies thereafter in his own right as the owner of the property, and the emphasis on the transferee being a representative of the vendor seems to suggest that the transferee was regarded as being or being expected to be only a temporary transferee.

The document shows no signs of any bargaining between the vendor and the vendee, and it has to be borne in mind that no consideration whatever passed between the parties except the sum of Rs. 500 said to be paid by the vendee for purchase of stamp and registration expenses. Prima facie if this is a sale-deed, the vendor seems to get practically nothing out of it, whereas prior to its execution he was, judging by the facts stated in the deed itself, in a position to institute a suit for redemption against Jadu Nath Singh on payment of a sum considerably less than the original consideration of the mortgage deed, Rs. 37,000. He makes the transfer to Wajid Ali for a purely problematic future sum, the surplus, which will remain after the mortgagee has been paid off. Bearing in mind this fact and the fact that in Ex. A-1, executed simultaneously and held by the Courts below to be inter-connected with Ex. 3, period of 15 years exactly similar to the period of Jadu Nath Singh's mortgage is fixed for repurchase of the property, it seems much more likely that the vendor was seeking by this transaction to exchange one contract for another, the second contract being clearly on easier terms than the first, since it gave the vendor or mortgagor a right to repurchase or redeem the property in two portions, that is in effect of instalments.

Turning to the question of price it has been stated in argument, and this argument has not really been met, that if this was a case of an out and out sale, the price was very inadequate. The price comes to about 16 or 17 times the annual rental. The learned Munsif who tried the case held that a reasonable price would have been 25 or 30 times the annual rental and the purchaser Wajid Ali had in fact himself sold property at 40 times the annual gross rental. The learned Civil Judge has also held that the alleged price of the property was grossly inadequate and this is a finding of fact which is binding upon us in second appeal.

Another point which has to be considered in the present case is that the parties are Muhammadans. There is therefore some amount of presumption in favour of this being a transaction of mortgage concealed under the cloak of a sale deed with a contemporaneous contract for resale. The learned Civil Judge has also pointed to the fact that the parties were on friendly terms and we have noted the remark in the sale-deed that Wajid Ali had been persuaded to purchase the property. The underlying suggestion is that Wajid Ali had been persuaded to help the vendor and it would have been, we think, of little help to the vendor for Wajid Ali to take an out and out transfer of this property.

The learned Civil Judge has further relied on the circumstance that the alleged vendor has a long period up to 15 years within which to pay back the sale price and recover the property. He seems to think that the vendor could also have a claim to repurchase the property after the expiry of the period of 15 years fixed in the deed. We doubt the soundness of this view but we agree that where a period as long as 15 years is given for repurchase at the exact sale price, the probabilities are in favour of mortgage rather than sale. A period of 15 years is a long period within which there may be considerable rise or fall in the value of the property. The general tendency of landed property until the last few years was for it to rise in value, and it would not be very natural for an out and out purchaser of property to be willing to give it up as much as 15 years later at the price which he had paid for it. A case of this kind is to be distinguished from cases in which the period allowed for repurchase is only 3 or 4 years. Moreover such a condition for repurchase must greatly hamper the vendee in his handling of the property which in theory he has purchased out and out, and one would not expect the purchaser to be content to be under such a handicap for so long a period as 15 years.

We are not greatly impressed with some of the points relied upon by the learned Civil Judge as for example his statement that the vendor is entitled as of right to have the property reconveyed to him. The provision for resale of the property in khali fasl Jeth is also consistent both with a transaction of mortgage and a transaction of sale with a condition of repurchase, since that is the most convenient time of the year for effecting such a transfer of ownership.

Lastly the learned Civil Judge has referred to the terms of the deed, with some of which we have dealt already, but we may conveniently refer here to condition 5 which provides that.

"the liability to pay the present revenue and cesses relating to the property sold shall be on the vendee. After the payment of the revenue and the cesses whatever profit shall remain all that shall be appropriated by the vendee and I, the declarant shall have no concern with any portion of the property sold or the income thereof."

Such a provision was entirely unnecessary if this document was a sale-deed and the very fact of its insertion goes quite a considerable way to support the view that the document does not evidence a transaction of sale.

Taking all these points into consideration we have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned Civil Judge that the documents Exs. 3 and A-1 evidence a transaction of mortgage by conditional sale. It is the only point which has been argued before us, and as the appellant has failed on this point, the appeal necessarily fails and is dismissed with costs.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 53 (3), 51—Execution sale—Purchase in good faith prior to adjudication order — Purchase, if can be assailed under s. 51—Person relying on s. 53 (3)—Burden is on him to show that he is covered by it.

Sub-s. 3 of s. 53, Presidency Towns Insol. Act, has this effect that if it can be shown that a purchaser in execution proceedings has purchased in good faith prior to the order of adjudication, his purchase cannot be assailed on grounds based on s. 51, Presidency Towns Insol. Act. If a party seeks to validate an otherwise invalid purchase by relying on sub-s. (3), the burden falls on him of showing that he is covered by it. 178 Ind. Cas. 135 (1), relied on, 157 Ind. Cas. 862 (2), not approved.

Mr. K. P. Khaitan, for the Petitioning Creditor.

Mr. P. C. Ghosh, for the Insolvent.

Mr. A. C. Sarkar, for Harsookdas Balkissendas.

Order.—In this case a creditor's petition for adjudication of the insolvent was presented on August 9, 1938. On March 14, 1939, Lort-Williams, J., who was then insolvency Judge, made a consent order which provided that the debtor should be adjudicated an insolvent, but that the order should not be completed, and should stand vacated if the debtor liquidated the petitioning creditor's claims in certain instalments. The order concluded: "In default of payment of any one instalment within the time allowed, the order will be completed and filed." The debtor failed to make payments as provided by the order and on June 13, 1939, the order was drawn up on the application of the creditor.

It appears that certain judgment-creditors of the insolvent had taken execution proceedings in the Court of the Second Munsif of Hooghly and in the course of those proceedings they had attached certain immovable property in which the insolvent had a share. This property was brought to sale on June 17, 1939, and the plaintiff's son, Ajoy Kumar Sen, was declared the highest bidder for the sum of Rs. 902. The sale has never been confirmed, because before the day fixed for confirmation the Official Assignee initiated proceedings in the execution Court for setting aside the sale. These proceedings are now pending, and I have some doubt whether the Official Assignee has any locus standi in the matter, but that is a point on which I need not express an opinion. One of the creditors who is supported by the petitioning creditor has now applied for an order that the sale of the insolvent's properties affected on July 17 (sic) be declared void, and that the attachment effected by the judgment-creditors may be released, and that the Official Assignee should be directed to take possession of the property and have the same sold in due course of administration. Under s. 17, Presidency Towns Insol. Act

"On the making of an order of adjudication, the property of an insolvent, wherever situated, shall vest in the Official Assignee and become divisible amongst his creditors and thereafter, except as directed by the Act, no creditor, to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable in insolvency, shall during the insolvency proceedings, have any remedy against the property of the insolvent in respect of the debt, or shall continue any suit or other legal proceedings except with the leave of the Court and on such terms as the Court may impose."

Prima facie, therefore, on June 17, 1939, when the insolvent's son was declared the highest bidder, the property which he bought at the sale was no longer the property of the insolvent but had vested in the Official Assignee. Mr. Khaitan, for the petitioning creditors, has submitted that the sale is a nullity because it has never become absolute as contemplated by O. XXI, r. 92 (1), and he has drawn my attention to s. 65, Civil P. C., which provides that the time when the property is sold and not from the time the sale becomes absolute," and he argues that the property does not vest at all until the sale is made absolute, when it vests as from the date on which the purchaser is declared the highest bidder. I express no opinion as to the soundness of this submission, for, in the view that I take it is not necessary to decide that question, and I accordingly assume that there has been an execution sale within the meaning of the Civil P. C. and within the meaning of the Presidency Towns Insol. Act.

"where immovable property is sold in execution of a decree and such sale has become absolute, the property shall be deemed to have vested in the purchaser from

The purchaser relies on s. 53 (3), Presidency Towns Insol. Act. Section 53 is the first of a number of sections from ss. 53 to 57, inclusive, grouped under the heading "Effect of Insolvency on Antecedent Transactions." Sub-section (1) provides that where execution of a decree has issued against the property of a debtor, no person shall be entitled to the benefit of execution against the Official Assignee, except in respect of assets realized in the course of execution by sale or otherwise before the date of the order of adjudication, and before he had notice of the presentation of any insolvency petition by or against the debtor. Mr. Ghose, argues, and I think rightly argues, that that does not really throw much light upon the validity of execution sales in cases where the judgment-debtor becomes insolvent, because the sub-section seems to assume that execution has been effective and it merely makes provision as to the destination of the fruits of such execution. The sub-section on which Mr. Ghose relies is sub-s. (3), which is as follows :

"A person who in good faith purchases the property of a debtor under a sale in execution shall in all cases acquire a good title to it against the Official Assignee."

Mr. Sircar for the applicant has argued that that sub-section does not apply to sales taking place subsequent to adjudication, because, when property is purchased or purports to be purchased after adjudication, it is no longer the property of a debtor but the property of an insolvent, and he has referred to various sections in the Act, from the language of which he draws the conclusion that when the Act mentions a debtor it intends thereby to indicate a person, who, although possibly insolvent in the popular sense of not being able to meet his financial obligations, has not yet been adjudicated. There is certainly a good deal of force in that argument, because in sections such as ss. 13, 14 and 15 the word "debtor" clearly contemplates a person who has not yet had an adjudication order made against him. On the other hand s. 17 which deals with the state of things prevailing after the order of adjudication refers not to the debtor but to the insolvent. Mr. Sircar's view has also some authority in its favour, because this point was directly discussed by the Madras High Court in Mallikarjuna Rao v. Official Receiver, Kistna (1), where the learned Judges came to the conclusion that the sub-section which I am considering can only refer to cases of execution sales held before adjudication, and cannot, operate in cases of sales held after adjudication, their reasons being that the sub-section comes in a portion of the Act which deals with the effect of insolvency on antecedent transactions, and by insolvency is meant adjudication. They also were of opinion that after adjudication the property vested in the Official Assignee, and was no longer the judgment-debtor's property available for execution. Mockett, J., deals at some length with the distinction between "debtor" and "insolvent" to which I have referred. The point there was directly in issue, and in my opinion the case has more relevancy than Dinesh Chandra v. Jahanali Biswas (2), in which there are observations which are not reconcilable with the Madras authority.

I am therefore disposed to hold that sub-s. 3 of s. 53 has this effect that if it can be shown that a purchaser in execution proceedings has purchased in good faith prior to the order of adjudication, his purchase cannot be assailed on grounds based on s. 51, Presidency Towns Insol. Act, which has the effect of antedating the insolvency in various circumstances which it is not necessary to discuss. However be that as it may, I am of opinion that on the facts sub-s. (3) affords no protection to the purchaser. It appears to me that if a party seeks to validate an otherwise invalid purchase by relying on sub-s. (3) the burden falls on him of showing that he is covered by it. In this case the parties being father and son, one is entitled to draw the strongest inference that the purchaser was well aware of his father's circumstances when he made the purchase. He admits that he knew that his father was in financial difficulties, and he must be taken to have known that his father had committed an act of insolvency by permitting the attachment of his property in execution of a decree to subsist. It would need the most cogent evidence on his part to convince me that he was not either perfectly well aware that insolvency proceedings were pending against his father, or at any rate that he did not deliberately shut

In these circumstances I hold that the purchase was not in good faith, and I think there is every reason to suppose that it was made in his father's interest, though possibly it would not be strictly accurate to describe the transaction as a benami transaction. In these circumstances the application succeeds. There will be an order in terms of the notice of motion. The applicant will add the costs to his claim.

Civil Reference No. 13 of 1940

YORKE AND BENNETT, JJ.

SURJAN SINGH—APPLICANT

MASHAL SINGH—OPPOSITE PARTY

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 1, s. 7 (ix)—U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXVII of 1934), ss. 12, 23—Application for redemption—Decree on payment of amount due under mortgage and other deeds of further charge executed by mortgagor—Appeal contesting liability under deeds of charge—Valuation of subject-matter of appeal—Court-fee payable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 35—Special costs—Point unnecessarily contested and time of Court and Crown Counsel wasted—Special costs may be allowed.

Where on an application under s. 12, U. P. Agri. Relief Act, for the redemption of a mortgage the Court passes a decree for redemption on payment of the amount due under the mortgage set up in the application and also under certain deeds of further charge executed by the mortgagor and an appeal has been preferred by the applicant against the decree contesting his liability for the payment of dues under the deeds of further charge, the value of the subject-matter of the appeal is the difference between the amount decreed by the trial Court and the amount for which the appellant admits his liability, and the appellant is liable to pay ad valorem court-fee on the amount of difference under Art. 1, Sch. I, Court Fees Act.

Where a point as to the court-fees has been quite unnecessarily and gratuitously contested and a considerable amount of the time of the Court and of Counsel for the Crown wasted on a very petty matter, special costs may be allowed under s. 35 of the Civil P. C.

C. Ref. made by the Chief Inspector of Stamps and Govt. Officer, U. P. at Allahabad.

Mr. K. N. Tandon for the Applicant.

Mr. H. K. Ghose, The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the Chief Inspector of Stamps, U. P., under the provisions of s. 6-B (1) of the Court Fees Act as modified up to date by the United Provinces Court Fees (Amendment) Act, 1938.

The reference has arisen in the following circumstances :

One Surjan Singh filed an application under the provisions of s. 12 of the Agri. Relief Act for redemption of a mortgage on payment of Rs. 10 or whatever amount might be fixed by a Court. Among the defences taken was that there were two deeds of further charge executed by the mortgagors still subsisting which must be paid off before the applicant should obtain a decree for redemption. The Assistant Collector who decided the case held that these deeds had been executed and constituted deeds of further charge. He gave a decree for redemption on payment within one month of a sum of Rs. 2,121-5-6 made up of Rs. 271 due under the first usufructuary mortgage and Rs. 901-8 and Rs. 948-13-6 due under the two deeds of further charge dated June 5, 1879, and June 13, 1882.

Against this decree the applicant filed an appeal which was worded in the most peculiar fashion. He said that he was appealing against the two alleged deeds of further charge and was therefore paying a court-fee of Rs. 12-12 on the principal amount of these two deeds, namely, Rs. 100 and Rs. 64-5 total Rs. 164-5. His chief contention in the grounds of appeal was that the trial Court had erred in holding that these deeds of further charge and that the appellant was not entitled to redeem the property without paying the entire amount under these two deeds. He prayed that the appeal be allowed with costs and justice done. The learned Judge should undoubtedly have called upon the appellant to amend his prayer, and had he done so, it would at once have become clear that what the appellant was asking for was that the decree of the trial Court should be varied in this way that the claim for redemption should be decreed on payment of a sum of Rs. 271 only instead of the sum of Rs. 2,121-5-6 found by the trial Court.

The learned District Judge had to consider on March 29, 1940, the report of the Inspector of Stamps and he decided that the appellant was liable to pay court-fee on Rs. 485-5 in appeal. It is not apparent how the learned District Judge arrived at this figure but the point is not important. The Court proceeded subsequently on August 14, to decide the appeal, the difference between the court-fee due of Rs. 164-5 and that due on Rs. 485-5 having been made good by the appellant. Thereafter the reference made by the Chief Inspector of Stamps was received in this Court and has now come up for decision.

On behalf of the Chief Inspector and in support of the reference the learned Assistant Govt. Advocate has pointed to the decision of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Anand Gir v. Ram Nazar Chaube (1937 A. L. J. R., 1173)(1). In that case a mortgagor made an application under s. 12 of the Agri. Relief Act for the redemption of his mortgage on payment of a sum of Rs. 375. The Assistant Collector, on an inquiry made under the provisions of the Act, decided that the amount payable was Rs. 1,101 and directed the deposit of the balance within 15 days. It was pleaded on an appeal to the District Judge that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem on payment of Rs. 375 only. A court-fee of annas 12 was paid on the memorandum of appeal, regarding it presumably as an appeal from an order. It was held by the Bench that the memorandum of appeal does not come within the meaning of Art. 11 of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act, and therefore it must come within the provisions of Art. 1 of the First Schedule and consequently the court-fee had to be calculated ad valorem. It was held further that the value of the subject-matter of the appeal is the difference between Rs. 101 and Rs. 375.

The learned Assistant Govt. Advocate also referred to several other cases but in the main he very rightly bases his case on the Court Fees Act itself. Article 2-B of Sch. I, of the Court Fees Act provides that on a memorandum of appeal filed under s. 23, of the United Prov. Agri. Relief Act, 1934, the proper fee is the same fee as would be leviable on a memorandum of appeal under Art. 1. Article 1 provides that on a memorandum of appeal, not otherwise provided for in this Act, presented to any Civil Court an ad valorem court-fee is to be paid on the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute and graded scale is provided according to the amount or value of the subject-matter. There cannot be the least doubt that in the present case the subject-matter in dispute is the difference between the sum of Rs. 2,121-5-6 and the sum of Rs. 271.

Learned Counsel for the appellant Surjan Singh has sought to argue that he is not in this appeal raising any question as to the amount which has been decreed on the basis of these two deeds of further charge, but he is contesting, he says, his liability under these two deeds and he contends therefore that the proper court-fee is that which would be paid in a suit for redemption falling under the provisions of s. 7 (ix) of the Court Fees Act. He has relied in support of this contention on a case of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, Ram Phal v. Deputy Commissioner, Bahraich, for Payagpur Estate (12 O. C., 130)(2). That was a case in which A had executed an usufructuary mortgage of his property. After A's death his widow B executed several deeds of further charge. On the death of B the reversionary heirs brought the present suit to redeem the original mortgage. The Court of first instance held the plaintiff liable for payment of the sum due on two of the deeds of further charge also. The plaintiff appealed on the ground that he was not liable to redeem the two deeds of further charge. He valued his appeal at the amount due on the original mortgage and paid court-fee thereon. It was held by Mr. Chamier, J. C. and Mr. Tudball, A. J. C., that the court-fee paid being the same as that paid on the plaint which entitled him to an adjudication on his claim and there being no dispute as to the amount due on the subsequent deeds, the court-fee paid was sufficient.

Learned Counsel, however, seems to have forgotten that Mr. Chamier himself sitting with Mr. Evans to decide the case of Basudeo Ban (Mahant) v. Sri Krishan Gir (13 O. C., 62) (3), remarked about the case of Ram Phal (the names of which were given incorrectly as Jawahir Singh v. Rajendra Bahadur, though the reference was otherwise correct) :

"My notes of that case do not show that any authorities were cited by Counsel and it seems that we dealt with the case as if the question was not covered by authority. After hearing further arguments and considering the authorities to which our attention has been directed I am of opinion that that case should not be followed. It is contrary to the current of authority both in this Court and in the Allahabad High Court and is likely to cause confusion."

We find no force in the argument put forward by learned Counsel for the appellant Surjan Singh that he was seeking only to get the finding about these two deeds of further charge set aside. What he was seeking was a reduction of the amount on payment of which he could redeem the property from Rs. 2,121-5-6 to Rs. 271. As the Chief Inspector has very rightly said he was challenging the amount of Rs. 1,850-5-6 and that was the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute, and he was bound to pay ad valorem court-fee under the provisions of Art. 1 of Sch. I on that amount.

We accordingly accept the reference and make a declaration under the provisions of s. 6-B (2) of the Court Fees Act that the proper court-fee has not been paid on the memorandum of appeal, in Civil Appeal No. 53 of 1939 of the Court of the District Judge. Hardoi, in re: Surjan v. Mashal Singh and that the amount of deficiency is Rs. 130-14-0 being the difference between a court-fee of Rs. 170 payable on Rs. 1,850-5-6 and Rs. 39-2-0 actually paid.

We think that the Govt. is entitled to the costs of this reference. The amount of costs ordinarily taxable for the fee of Counsel is only Rs. 4-14-0 at most but as the point has been quite unnecessary and gratuitously contested and a considerable amount of the time of the Court and of Counsel for the Crown wasted on a very petty matter, we allow special costs of Rs. 50 under s. 35 of the Civil P. C.

s. Order accordingly.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—U. P. Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act (XVIII of 1939)—U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act (IV of 1937)—Judgment-debtor executing bond in favour of decree-holder in consideration of latter refraining from executing his decree for arrears of rent, before passing of U. P. Acts of 1937 and 1939—Consideration is lawful—Subsequent passing of those acts does not make it unlawful—U. P. Act (XVIII of 1939), if applies to suit on contract in Civil Court—U. P. Acts of 1937 and 1939, are not connected with arrears irrecoverable at law.

Where a judgment-debtor has executed a bond in favour of the decree-holder before the passing of the U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act (IV of 1937) and U. P. Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act (XVIII of 1939), in consideration for the decree-holder refraining from execution of his decree for arrears of rent which he could otherwise have lawfully taken out. There is nothing unlawful within the meaning of s. 23, Contract Act, in the consideration or object of that agreement and it cannot be affected by subsequent legislation barring a suit in the Revenue Court for recovery of arrears of rent.

The intention of the Legislature in enacting U. P. Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act, was to remit arrears of rent which had accrued prior to Rabi 1344, by barring their recovery in the Revenue Courts. The provisions of the Act are, therefore, inapplicable to a suit on a contract in a Civil Court unless they can be indirectly invoked by means of some other provision of the law.

The U. P. Acts IV of 1937 and XVIII of 1939, are not concerned with arrears of rent which are irrecoverable at law.

C. R. against an order of the Small Cause Court, Etawah, dated February 27, 1940.

Mr. S. N. Seth, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. L. Chaturvedi, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is a plaintiff's revision under s. 25, Small Cause Courts Act, from a decree dismissing her suit. The suit was for recovery of a sum of money on a bond dated July 4, 1934 which had been executed by the opposite party in favour of the applicant. The applicant had obtained a decree for arrears of rent against the opposite party, which the latter was apparently unable to pay; and by agreement between the parties a bond was executed under the terms of which the opposite party agreed to pay the decretal amount within four years in eight instalments. Four of these instalments were duly paid, but the applicant was compelled to institute a suit for recovery of the remaining four instalments. The suit had been dismissed by the Court below. The view of the learned Judge is that by the subsequent passing of Acts IV of 1937 and XVIII of 1939 the consideration for the bond has failed, the intention of the Legislature being that all rents prior to Rabi 1344 should be remitted.

Section 2 of Act IV of 1937 provided inter alia that all suits for recovery of arrears of rent which had accrued prior to Rabi 1344, instituted while the aforesaid section was in force, should be stayed for such period as the section remained in force. Section 8 of Act XVIII of 1939 enacts inter alia that all suits for recovery of arrears of rent which had been stayed under the provisions of Act IV of 1937 shall be dismissed. The last mentioned Act received the assent of the Governor on January 30, 1940 and the suit out of which this revision arises was instituted on January 24, 1940 while Act IV of 1937 was in force. Act IV of 1937 is entitled "U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act" and Act XVIII of 1939 is entitled "U. P. Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act," and both these Acts relate to suits and proceedings in the Revenue Courts. The intention of the Legislature in enacting Act XVIII of 1939 was to remit arrears of rent which had accrued prior to Rabi 1344 by barring their recovery in the Revenue Courts. The provisions of the Act are therefore inapplicable to a suit on a contract in a Civil Court unless they can be indirectly invoked by means of some other provision of the law. Learned Counsel for the applicant relies on s. 23, Contract Act, which provides that "the consideration or object of an agreement is lawful unless" inter alia "it is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law."

The contract was entered into, as I have already said, on July 4, 1934, several years before these two Acts were passed, and it cannot be said that the object or consideration of the agreement was at that time of such a nature as would defeat the provisions of any law. The applicant was perfectly at liberty to execute his decree in the Revenue Court in 1934; but, in lieu of doing so, he allowed the original contract to be novated by a bond, which provided for payment by eight instalments over a period of four years. The decree thus became unenforceable, a fresh contract having taken its place. Under this contract the opposite party executed a bond in consideration for the applicant refraining from execution of his decree, which he could otherwise have lawfully taken out. There was nothing unlawful within the meaning of s. 23, Contract Act, in the consideration or object of that agreement and I do not see how it can possibly be affected by subsequent legislation barring a suit in the Revenue Court for recovery of arrears of rent. Moreover, if the contract had not been novated in 1934, an application for execution would ordinarily have been barred by limitation by September 21, 1937, the date on which Act IV of 1937 came into force; and the Acts of 1937 and 1939 are not concerned with arrears of rent which are irrecoverable at law. In my judgment the view taken by the learned Judge is incorrect. I accordingly allow this application and set aside the decree of the Court below and I decree the suit with costs in both Courts.

Regis. Act is not exempted from registration. 136 Ind. Cas. 54 (3), referred to. [p. 430, col. 1.]

In the case of a consent decree the parties themselves decide the issues in dispute between them in the litigation in which that decree is made and they are estopped from subsequently challenging the decision at which they arrived. [p. 430, col. 2.]

The presumption mentioned in s. 114 (d), Evi. Act is a permissive presumption. A Court of fact cannot be compelled to raise the presumption mentioned in that section in favour of either party. [p. 431, col. 1.]

In 1914, a Padhan of certain estate granted a lease of certain land to one G. In the following year G settled plot No. 1618 with the father of the defendants by means of a registered patta and in 1925 the defendants' father executed a kabuliyat in respect of plot No. 1618 in favour of the Receiver who was then in possession of the estate. In 1929, the plaintiff who was the proprietor of the estate sued the defendants for possession of this plot alleging that neither the Padhan nor the Receiver had any right to settle the land. The suit was compromised on August 23, 1930. It was agreed that the defendants should retain possession not only of plot No. 1618 but also of the other two plots on the terms mentioned in a kabuliyat executed by the defendants in favour of the plaintiff on August 19, 1930. This kabuliyat evidenced the grant of the land for a term of 20 years but was not registered. In 1931, the plaintiff sued G to eject him from the land leased to him in 1914 including plot No. 1618. The suit was eventually dismissed by the High Court on the ground of limitation. In the meanwhile, however, in 1934 and 1935, the plaintiff had obtained rent decrees against the defendants on the basis of the kabuliyat of 1930. As a result of the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit, G served a notice on the defendants calling upon them to take a fresh settlement of plot No. 1618 from him or to quit this plot. In 1936, the defendants were recorded as tenants under G in the Record of Rights. In 1937 the plaintiff sued the defendants for rent of plot No. 1618 and other two plots:

Held, (i) that the kabuliyat of 1930 was not by itself sufficient to create a valid lease as there was no corresponding patta executed by the plaintiff. 136 Ind. Cas. 54 (3), relied on. [p. 430, col. 1.]

(ii) that the compromise of 1930 did not constitute a valid lease but even if it constituted a lease it was rendered inadmissible in evidence by s. 49, Regis. Act for the purpose of proving the lease for creating any interest under it as it was not registered; [p. 430, col. 2.]

(iii) that as the defendants compromised the suit of 1929 by accepting a fresh settlement from the plaintiff it may be safely assumed that they accepted the position that the settlements of 1915 and 1925 did not confer upon them any right to retain the land as against the plaintiff; but the question whether the compromise in which that suit ended constituted a valid lease in favour of the defendants was not and could not be the subject-matter of decision in the litigation of 1929 either by the Court or by the parties themselves, and did not operate as res judicata on the question which arose in this present litigation, namely, whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the plaintiff and the defendants; [p. 430, col. 2; p. 431, col. 1.]

(iv) that the rent decrees of 1934 and 1935 did not preclude the defendants from alleging that the relationship of landlord and tenants did not exist between the plaintiff and themselves. [p. 431, col. 1.]

A. from a decision of the Special Subordinate Judge of Chaibassa, dated February 24, 1940.

Messrs. B. C. De and Ravaneshwar Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Narendra Nath Roy, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from concurrent decisions of the Courts below dismissing his suit for rent of revisional survey plots Nos. 1618, 1618/1953 and 1621 for the years 1342 to 1344. The material facts are that this land falls within the Dalbhum estate of which the plaintiff is the present proprietor. In 1914, a Padhan of the estate granted a lease of certain land to one Gaya Prasad. In the following year Gaya Prasad settled plot No. 1618 with the father of the defendants by means of a registered patta and in 1925 the defendants' father executed a kabuliyat in respect plot No. 1618 in favour of the Receiver who was then in possession of the Dalbhum estate. In 1929, the plaintiff sued the defendants for possession of this plot alleging that neither the Padhan nor the Receiver had any right to settle the land. The suit was compromised on August 23, 1930. It was agreed that the defendants should retain possession not only of plot No. 1618 but also of the other two plots whose numbers I have given above, on the terms mentioned in a kabuliyat executed by the defendants in favour of the plaintiff on August 19, 1930. This kabuliyat evidenced the grant of the land for a term of 20 years. In 1931, the plaintiff sued Gaya Prasad to eject him from the land leased to him in 1914 including plot No. 1618. The suit was eventually dismissed by this Court on July 15, 1935, on the ground that it was barred by limitation. In the meanwhile, however, in March, 1934, and February, 1935, the plaintiff had obtained rent decrees against the defendants on the basis of the kabuliyat of 1930. As a result of the decision of this Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit, Gaya Prasad served a notice on the defendants calling upon them to take a fresh settlement of plot No. 1618 from him or to quit this plot, in 1938, the defendants were recorded as tenants under Gaya Prasad in the Record of Rights. The present suit was instituted in 1937. The Courts below have held that the plaintiff is not entitled to the rent of plot No. 1618 as the defendants had been evicted therefrom by title paramount. As the kabuliyat of 1930 provided a consolidated rent for all the three plots covered by it the Courts below have not allowed the plaintiff rent for the other two plots either.

The first question that falls for consideration is whether the defendants are estopped from denying the plaintiff's title to plot No. 1618 by reason of the provisions of s. 116 of the Evi. Act. That section debars a tenant of immovable property, during the continuance of the tenancy, from denying that the landlord had title to the demised property at the beginning of the tenancy. If the tenancy is still continuing the estoppel must operate provided that a valid tenancy was created in 1930. The first question to be considered, therefore, is whether the relationship of landlord and tenant alleged to exist between the plaintiff and the defendants has been terminated by eviction of the defendants by title paramount. The Courts below have taken the view that in the circumstances that have happened, namely, the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit against Gaya Prasad, the defendants have in law been evicted from plot No. 1618. The Courts below have relied on the decision in Alaga Pillai v. Ramaswami Thevan (1), in which it was held that eviction, for the purpose which I am considering need not be by actual dispossession of the tenant; but if the true owner is armed with a legal process for eviction which cannot be lawfully resisted the threat to put him out of possession amounts in law to eviction even though the tenant is not actually put out of possession. In that case it is to be observed, however, that the true owner had armed himself with the necessary notice under s. 7 of the Mad. Land Encroachment Act, 1905, in the face of which notice the tenant could not have lawfully resisted eviction. The case, therefore, cannot be relied upon for deciding the question which arises in the present appeal. The next case relied upon is Ram Chandra Chatterji v. Promotha Nath Chatterji (2), in which it was held that it is not necessary for the tenant actually to go out of possession for the purpose of being evicted by title paramount, if, upon a claim being made by the owner of the paramount title, the tenant attorns to him or enters into another arrangement for holding under him. In the present case, the only evidence that the defendants attorned to Gaya Prasad or entered into any new arrangement for holding under him, subsequent to the compromise of 1930, is that the survey authorities have made an entry in the Record of Rights that the defendants are holding plot No. 1618 under Gaya Prasad. It is, I think arguable that the entry in the Record of Rights raises a presumption that the defendants are holding under Gaya Prasad since the date of the entry in 1936. But as the defendants have not averred that they have attorned to Gaya

Prasad, or entered into any new arrangement with him since 1930, it may be considered doubtful whether the entry in the Record of Rights can be relied on for this purpose. I propose, therefore, to discuss the second question which arises in this case, namely, whether there has been a valid lease by the plaintiff to the defendants in consequence of the kabuliyat or compromise of 1930. In view of the decision of this Court in Sachindra Mohan Ghose v. Ramjash Agarwala (3), it is quite clear that the kabuliyat of August 19, 1930, is not by itself sufficient to create a valid lease as there was no corresponding patta executed by the plaintiff.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant, however, that the compromise entered into by the parties in 1930 constitutes a valid lease and that by reason of the provisions of s. 17 (2) (vi) of the Regis. Act this compromise did not require registration. I am unable to accept this contention. Under s. 107 of the T. P. Act a lease for a term of years can be created only by a written document. Section 17 (1) of the Regis. Act requires that certain documents shall be registered. These documents are divided into five groups enumerated in cls. (a) to (e) of s. 17 (1). Clause (d) refers to leases of immovable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent. It is clear, therefore, that a lease for 20 years requires registration. Sub-s. (2) of s. 17, however, provides certain exceptions. Among those exceptions is that mentioned in cl. (vi) namely, any decree or order of a Court. The exceptions mentioned in sub-s. (2), however, apply only to the classes of documents mentioned in cls. (b) and (c) of s. 17 (1) and do not apply to leases which are mentioned in cl. (d) of s. 17 (1). If it is necessary to refer to any authority at all on this point it is sufficient to refer to Sachindra Mohan Ghose v. Ramjash Agarwala (3), where it was held that all decrees and orders are not excluded from compulsory registration by reason of the provisions of s. 17 (2) (vi) but only those are excluded which partake of the character of documents mentioned in cls. (b) and (c) of sub-s. (1) and that, therefore, a decree embodying a compromise purporting to grant a lease within the meaning of cls. (d) of sub-s. (1) is not exempted from registration. Fazl Ali, J. who delivered the judgment in that case referred to the attempts which had been made from time to time to bring leases created by compromise within cl. (vi) of s. 17 (2) and observes,

"It appears to me, therefore, that it is now too late to contend that a decree, even though it operates to create a lease, does not require registration under s. 17 of the Regis. Act."

I must hold, therefore, that if the compromise of 1930 constituted a lease it is rendered inadmissible in evidence by s. 49 of the Regis. Act for the purpose of proving the lease or creating any interest under it.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellant, that even if this be so, the compromise operates as res judicata between the plaintiff and the defendants as to the relationship of landlord and tenant. Cases were referred to in which it has been held that although, in the case of a consent decree, nothing is decided by the Court so as to attract the provisions of s. 11 of the Civil P. C., yet such a decree operates as an estoppel to the same extent as a decision of the Court does in a contested litigation. This proposition is of course not disputed. It may be conceded that in the case of a consent decree the parties themselves decide the issues in dispute between them in the litigation in which that decree is made and that they are estopped from subsequently challenging the decision at which they arrived. Applying that principle to the present case the position is that the question on which the parties were at issue in the suit of 1929 was whether the defendants in that suit were entitled to retain possession of plot No. 1618 by reason of the settlement of it with them by the Padhan in 1915 or by the Receiver in 1925. As the defendants compromised that suit by accepting a fresh settlement from the plaintiff it may be safely assumed that they accepted the position that the settlements of 1915 and 1925 did not confer upon them any right to retain the land as against the plaintiff; but the question whether the compromise in which that suit ended constituted a valid lease in favour of the defendants was not and could not be the subject matter of decision in the litigation of 1929 either by the Court or by the parties themselves. Much stress, however, was laid on the decision in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Atteendranath Das (4). The head-note in that case is as follows:

"A decree passed by consent is as effective a bar to a subsequent suit as one passed on contest, not only with reference to the conclusions arrived at in the previous suit, but also with regard to every step in the process of reasoning on which the said conclusions are founded. By 'every step in the process of reasoning' is meant the findings on the essential facts on which the judgment or the ultimate conclusions are founded."

(3) A I R 1932 Pat. 97; 136 Ind. Cas. 54; 12 P L T 871; 11 Pat. 98; Ind. Rul. (1932) Pat. 54.

As I have already indicated the conclusion which must be taken to have been arrived at in the litigation of 1929 is that the defendants were not entitled to retain possession of plot 1618 by virtue of the settlements of 1915 and 1925. Neither the kabuliyat of 1930 nor the compromise of that year can be described as a step in the process of reasoning by which this conclusion was reached. In my view, therefore the kabuliyat of 1930 did not constitute a valid lease in favour of the defendants, the compromise of the year is not admissible for the purpose of proving a lease to the defendants, and does not operate as res judicata on the question which arises in this litigation, namely, whether the relationship of landlord and tenant exists between the plaintiff and the defendants.

The learned Advocate for the plaintiff-appellant relies on the rent decrees of 1934 and 1935 as constituting res judicata on the relationship of landlord and tenants between the plaintiff and the defendants. He referred to the decisions in Hiranmoy Kumar Shaha v. Ramjan Ali Diwan (5) Raj Kumar Boy v. Alimuddin (6) and Muhammad Gauhar Ali v. Samiruddin Sheikh (7). The effect of these decisions is that a decree in a suit for rent is conclusive between the parties, that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed at the time that the decree was passed and that by reason of the presumption mentioned in s. 114 (d) of the Evi. Act it may be presumed that that relationship continued until it is shown by evidence that it discontinued. The presumption mentioned in s. 114 (d) is a permissive presumption. A Court of fact cannot be compelled to raise the presumption mentioned in that section in favour of either party, and in the present case the Courts below have not raised the presumption in favour of the plaintiff. Furthermore, the entry in the Record of Rights of 1936 showing the defendants as tenants under Gaya Prasad is a piece of evidence pointing to the contrary conclusion. I, therefore, hold that the rent decrees of 1934 and 1935 do not preclude the defendants from alleging that the relationship of landlord and tenants does not now exist between the plaintiff and themselves.

(6) 17 C W N 627; 16 Ind. Cas. 911.

(7) 12 C W N 32.

In the result my conclusion is that the suit has been rightly decided by the Courts below and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 53—Watan property—Whether property inherited by son—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 21—Admission by party in pleading in one suit—Whether binding on him in other suit.

Watan property is not to be regarded as property inherited by the son, so as to expose it to liability to execution under s. 53, Civil P. C. 151 Ind. Cas. 151 (1), 151 Ind. Cas. 207 (2) and Jaggivandas v. Imdad Ali (3), relied on.

A party is not bound by an admission in his pleading except for the purposes of the suit in which the pleading is delivered. It frequently happens that a party is prepared in a particular suit to deal with the case on a particular ground and to make an admission, but that admission is not binding in any other suit, and certainly not for all time.

Messrs. J. C. Shah (in No. 204) and R. A. Jahagirdar, The Govt. Pleader (in No. 275), for the Appellant.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, The Govt. Pleader (in No. 204), for the Respondent.

Messrs. K. R. Bengeri, H. C. Coyajee and J. C. Shah (in No. 275), for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2, respectively.

Beaumont, C. J.—These are two cross-appeals against an order made by the First Class Subordinate Judge of Dharwar. An order was made by the Privy Council in certain litigation that costs should be paid by the defendants, who were the Secretary of State for India, and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in this suit, or their predecessors. The Secretary of State for India ultimately paid those costs in full, and then he filed this suit to recover contribution from his co-defendants, and a decree was passed on November 26, 1934, directing contribution. In the case of defendant No. 3, it had been stated by an amendment of the plaint that the original defendant had died, and his son, defendant No. 3, was held to be liable to the extent of the property he got inherited from his father.

The Secretary of State for India then took out the present darkhast in order to execute the decree against the three defendants. The contention of all the defendants was that the lands sought to be attached were watan lands, and that they could not be attached by virtue of the protection afforded under s. 13, Watan Act.

As against defendant No. 1, the learned Judge held, in view of certain admissions made by that defendant in the witness-box, that the lands which were sought to be attached were not watan lands. In the case of the other two defendants, he held, basing his decision on the Record of Rights, that the lands were nadgirki watan lands. I am not quite sure whether he merely meant to hold that the lands of defendant No. 1 were not shown on the Record of Rights as nadgirki watan lands, or whether he meant to hold that the admission of defendant No. 1 would rebut the presumption arising from the entry in the Record of Rights that they were nadgirki watan lands. I am rather disposed to think that there is no distinction between the lands held by defendant No. 1 and the lands held by defendants Nos. 2 and 3. However, having held that the lands of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were watan lands, it was then necessary to establish that they had been assigned as remuneration for services under s. 23, Watan Act, because, unless they had been so assigned, the protection afforded by s. 13 does not arise.

There is really no evidence on the record to show that any of these lands had been assigned under s. 23 as reward for services. The learned Judge, in the case of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, held that Govt. were bound by an admission in their written statement filed in the original suit of 1913 in which the costs were incurred, and that by that admission Govt. had acknowledged that the lands had been assigned as reward for services; but the learned Judge's view on that point is clearly wrong. A party is not bound by an admission in his pleading except for the purposes of the suit in which the pleading is delivered. It frequently happens that a party is prepared in a particular suit to deal with the case on a particular ground and to make an admission, but that admission is not binding in any other suit, and certainly not for all time. Govt. may have known much less about the position in 1913 than they know now. If they had pleaded erroneously in the suit of 1913 and had discovered the error in time, they could have amended the pleading, and it would be a strange thing to hold that, after the suit had been disposed of, and the chance to amend the pleading had gone, Govt. were bound for all time by their admission. In my opinion there is no evidence on record that the lands of any of the defendants had been assigned by the Collector under s. 23, Watan Act and that, therefore, the protection afforded by s. 13 came into operation.

But, in the case of defendant No. 3, there is a separate defence. As I have pointed out, the decree sought to be executed provides that he is liable to the extent of the property he got inherited from his father, and of course, the executing Court is bound by the decree. Therefore if he inherited this watan property from his father, that property is liable. But on the authority of the cases, to which the learned trial Judge referred, viz. Vithaldas v. Shrinivasrao (1), Vishvanath v. Keshavbhat (2), and Jaggivandas v. Imdad Ali (3), it is, I think, established that a son does not inherit watan property from his father at any rate to the extent of making that property liable for the father's debts. As was pointed out by this Court in Vithaldas v. Shrinivasrao (1), to hold that watan property was liable for the father's debts, like other property of a Hindu father, would really be to go behind the prohibition contained in s. 5, Watan Act, which prevents a watandar from alienating or mortgaging watan property beyond the term of his own life. The learned Govt. Pleader seeks to distinguish the cases of Vithaldas v. Shrinivasrao (1) and Vishvanath v. Keshavbhat (2), on the ground that the decrees in these cases were ordinary money decrees against the father, whereas here there is an express provision that the decree may be executed against the property of the father inherited by the son; but that does not really carry the matter any further, because in my view the effect of the decisions of this Court is to show that watan property is not to be regarded as property inherited by the son, so as to expose it to liability to execution under s. 53, Civil P. C. Whether it can be regarded as inherited for other purposes, it is not necessary for us to consider, I think therefore that the learned Judge's decision was right as to defendant No. 3.

In the case of defendant No. 1, I think that his decision was also right, although I base my opinion on different grounds from those which appealed to the learned Judge. We are told that defendant No. 1 has died since the date of the decree appealed from and that his widow has been brought on record. Of course, a question may arise in execution how far the property can be attached as against the widow of defendant No. 1, but we are not concerned with that. The appeal of defendant No. 1 must be dismissed, because the decree only dealt with his liability during his lifetime. The result will therefore be that the appeal of defendant No. 1 will be dismissed with costs, and the appeal of Govt. First Appeal No. 275, will be allowed with costs as against defendant No. 2 but, dismissed with costs as against defendant No. 3 in proportion to the claims of defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 20—Stamped and signed paper delivered to person—Power of such person to complete it in favour of any person—Promissory note—Stamped and signed paper delivered by defendant to a person—Suit by plaintiff on hand note—Defendant producing receipt executed by such person—Question whether hand note was completed in favour of plaintiff at date of receipt is one of fact.

Section 20 of the Negotiable Instruments Act gives general authority to a person to whom a stamped and signed paper is delivered to convert it into a negotiable instrument payable to any specified person and accordingly it is open to a person receiving a blank inchoate instrument to complete it in favour of any person besides himself. 186 Ind. Cas. 809 (1), referred to.

A hand-note is certainly a negotiable document, but if it is found as a fact that it was never negotiated that would alter the situation. Where the defendant had delivered a stamped and signed paper to a person, the question as to whether at the time when the payment was made by the defendant under a receipt purported to have been executed by such person, the hand note had already been completed in favour of the plaintiff who has brought a suit on the hand note, is a question of fact.

C. R. from an order of the Small Cause Court Judge of Darbhanga, dated March 6, 1940.

Mr. Rati Kant Chaudhury, for the Petitioner.

Mr. R. P. Jaruhar, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application under s. 25 of the Small Cause Court Act impug-

ing the judgment and decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of Darbhanga dismissing a suit brought by the petitioner for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 265 odd on the basis of a hand note said to have been executed on Katick 12, 1334 Fasli by the opposite party in his favour. The defence in the suit was that the hand note in question had been executed not in favour of the plaintiff, but in favour of his relation Ram Bahadur Jha and that it had been satisfied by the payment of a sum of Rs. 250 to Ram Bahadur Jha in Fagun 1346. The learned Small Cause Court Judge after considering the evidence came to the conclusion that the defendants had not taken any loan under the hand note in suit from the plaintiff, but they had taken a loan from Ram Bahadur Jha and the loan had been satisfied as alleged by the defendants. The learned Judge in discussing the evidence referred to certain minute discrepancies which, if they had stood alone, would not have been considered by me to be sufficient to warrant the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit. Again, the finding of the learned Small Cause Court Judge that the hand note in question had not been executed in favour of the plaintiff but that certain blank papers containing the signature and the thumb impression of the defendants had been made over to Ram Bahadur Jha was also not sufficient to dispose of the suit because as was pointed out in Hriday Singh v. Kailash Singh (1), s. 20 of the Negotiable Instruments Act gives general authority to a person to whom a stamped and signed paper is delivered to convert it into a negotiable instrument payable to any specified person and accordingly it is open to a person receiving a blank inchoate instrument to complete it in favour of any person besides himself. The principle underlying this decision is that the authority of a person to whom a stamped and signed paper is delivered to complete it in favour of another person cannot be challenged when the defendant himself chooses to send the instrument into the world in a form showing that the document is a hand note. But the matter does not rest there. In the present case the defendants produced a receipt (Ex. A) which purported to have been granted by Ram Bahadur Jha to them in satisfaction of a loan under a hand note. It is recited in this document that the sum had been received in full payment of the principal and interest on the basis of a hand note bearing the same date as the hand note in suit. It is further recited that as the hand note was missing Ram Bahadur Jha had to grant the receipt in order to protect the defendants. The learned Small Cause Court Judge has found as a fact that the receipt was granted in discharge of the hand note in suit which had been given to Ram Bahadur Jha in an incomplete form. This finding cannot in the state of the evidence on the record be said to be one which the Court was not entitled to arrive at. In my opinion this finding concludes the matter and I am unable in revision to hold that it is not correct.

It may be stated that Mr. Choudhury placed great reliance on the following observations made by Agarwala, J., in the decision to which reference has been made :—

"The defendant in the present suit also pleaded that he had made certain payments to Shamnandan Prasad Singh in respect of the amount for which he is now sued. In a suit by the payee of a hand note against the drawer the defence that payments have been made to some one who is not the payee cannot be taken into consideration. See s. 78, Negotiable Instruments Act."

In my opinion these observations do not apply to this case on the findings arrived at by the learned Small Cause Court Judge. In this case the view taken by the learned Judge seems to have been that the hand note never changed hands and that it always remained the hand note of Ram Bahadur Jha. A hand note is certainly a negotiable document, but if it is found as a fact that it was never negotiated that would alter the situation. The question as to whether at the time when the payment was made under Ex. A the hand note had already been completed in favour of the plaintiff is a question of fact and in the absence of any finding on the point I do not think that the decision to which reference has been made can be of any help to the plaintiff. In these circumstances the application fails and is dismissed. In the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs.

KANDREGULA NARASIAH—

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V. of 1908), s. 15—Suit triable both by Village Court and District Munsif—S. 15 does not apply to such suit—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 4—Suit triable both by Village Munsif and District Munsif—Limitation expiring during vacation of latter Court and suit filed on first opening day—Former Court open during latter's vacation—Suit, if within time—Madras Village Courts Act (I of 1889), ss. 13, 20.

The District Munsif's Court is regulated by the provisions of the Civil P. C. The Court of the Village Munsif is not. The procedure of the Village Courts is very special and decidedly of comprehensive character. However, although the provisions of the Lim. Act will apply to suits under the Village Courts Act, (s. 20) there is no provision applying the Civil P. C. to such suits. Hence where a suit is triable both by the Village Court and the District Munsif s. 15, Civil P. C., has no application in such a case and the suit can be instituted in any of those Courts. 31 Ind. Cas. 59 (1), referred to.

The Court ought not to imply that a litigant should be deprived of his right to go to a normal Court subject to normal procedure because a Court of a very special nature, the village Court, happened to be open to him. To take away the right given by the Lim. Act requires, some more substantial basis than implication.

Where, therefore, a suit which is triable by both by the Village Munsif and the District Munsif and the limitation for which has expired during long vacation of District Munsif's Court, is instituted in that Court on the opening day of that Court, the suit is within limitation under s. 4, Lim. Act. It is not barred by limitation merely because the Village Munsif's Court was open during vacation of the District Munsif's Court and the suit could have been instituted there, because, prima facie the plaintiff is entitled to sue in the District Munsif's Court and there is no compulsion to go to the Village Munsif's Court.

C. R. P. under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887 praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Ramachandrapur in S. C. S. No. 162 of 1936.

Mr. M. Bapiraju, for the Petitioner.

Mr. M. S. Ramachandra Rao, for the Respondent.

Order.—A short point is raised in this petition on which there is no authority whatever. The plaintiff petitioner sued the defendant on a balance of a promissory note for Rs. 20. The promissory note is dated July 5, 1927, renewed by payment on June 13, 1930 and again on June 12, 1933, so that it would become barred on June 12, 1936. The District Munsif's Court of Ramachandrapur was closed for the long vacation from May 9, 1936 to June 19, 1936. The 20th was a penultimate Saturday and the 21st was a Sunday and so the petitioner filed the suit on June 22, 1936. It is not contended that under ordinary circumstances the suit would not be within time; but the point was taken before the learned District Munsif that this was a suit which is cognizable by a village Court under s. 13, of the Mad. Village Courts Act. That is so. It is therefore, argued that this suit could have been filed in the Court of the Village Munsif which was open during the vacation of the Court of the District Munsif and that it became barred on June 12, 1936, and any period subsequent thereto is not available to the plaintiff. The District Munsif took the view that the plea of limitation on which the defendant relied before him was well founded. He rested that finding on the fact that normally the suit ought to have been filed in the Village Court and simply because the suit is barred by time the plaintiff cannot take advantage of the concurrent jurisdiction of this Court to try suits which are primarily triable by Village Courts. Before me reliance has been placed by both sides on s. 20 (A) of the Mad. Village Courts Act which states that if a suit which is triable by Village Court is instituted in the Court of a District Munsif, he may, unless sufficient reasons exist to the contrary, transfer it to the Village Court. I may also refer to sub-s. (2). It is argued that the spirit of the act is that suits of this value should in the first place be tried under the Village Courts Act. There are of course two great differences between the two tribunals. The District Munsif's Court is regulated by the provisions of the Civil P. C. The Court of the Village Munsif is not. The latter view seems to me to be the effect of the decision in Augustus Brothers v. Fernandez (1). If that is so I think it is right not to apply s. 15, Civil P. C. to a suit of this sort. Section 15, Civil P. C. says "Every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it" and I think that must refer to Courts subject to Code. The procedure of the Village Courts is very special and decidedly of comprehensive character. I notice, however, that although the provisions of the Indian Lim. Act will apply to suits under the Village Courts Act (s. 20) there is no provision applying the Civil P. C. to such suits.

The point which I have to decide appears to have behind it no authority—that I have already indicated—and I must, therefore, decide the question as a matter of first impression after hearing the interesting arguments of learned Counsel on either side. In the absence of authority I do not consider that the period allowed by s. 4 of the Lim. Act was intended to be cut down. I do not think that I ought to imply that a litigant should be deprived of his right to go to a normal Court subject to normal procedure because a Court of a very special nature the Village Court, happened to be open to him. To take away the right given by the Lim.

Act requires, I think, some more substantial basis than implication. Prima facie the plaintiff is entitled to sue in the District Munsif's Court. There is no compulsion to go to the Village Munsif's Court, prima facie owing to the long vacation of the District Munsif's Court and the dates of the promissory note the plaintiff was entitled under s. 4 of the Lim. Act to wait until June 22, before filing the suit. In the absence of authority I see no reason why that right should be curtailed.

The result is in my view this petition should be allowed with costs in this Court; but in the lower Court each side will bear its own costs. The matter will go back for decision by the District Munsif. It will be open to the defendant to raise any point other than the point that the plaintiff had agreed to give up his claim which has already been decided. The defendant indicates that he will rely upon the terms of the Mad. Agri. Relief Act.

FELU DOME AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS
Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), ss. 208, 213, 258—Decree obtained against some tenants of holding only—Order of sale of holding in execution is void—S. 208 does not authorise such sale—S. 213, applicability of, where sale is challenged on ground of being void for want of jurisdiction in executing Court—Decree effective only against part of tenancy interest—Sale of holding in execution is nullity—Suit by tenant not impleaded in rent suit for declaration of title to land is not barred by s. 258—Sale under s. 208 entirely without jurisdiction—Effect—Practice—Suit for declaration of plaintiff's title to land sold in execution of rent decree to which he was not made party, against auction-purchaser—It cannot be dismissed merely because some of persons having interest in holding were not impleaded—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 12—Applicability to suit for declaration that plaintiff's interest is not affected by sale where sale is nullity.

Section 208, Chota Nag. Ten. Act does not authorise the sale of a holding in execution of a decree obtained against some only of the tenants of the holding and an order directing the sale of the holding in execution of such a decree is void and without jurisdiction. 142 Ind. Cas. 781 (3) and 148 Ind. Cas. 168 (2) (4), relied on.

Section 213, does not apply where the sale is challenged not on the ground of any irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it but on the ground that it is void for want of jurisdiction in the executing Court. No application is needed to set aside a null sale. When a decree is effective against only a part of the tenancy interest, a sale held in execution of it is entirely without jurisdiction and does not affect the interest of any of the judgment-debtors. Where one of the tenants of a holding is not impleaded in the suit for rent, a part of the tenancy interest is not represented in the suit and the decree obtained in the suit does not affect the interest of the tenant not impleaded and the sale held in execution of that decree is a nullity. A suit brought by such tenant for declaration of his title to the land is not, therefore, barred by s. 258. 148 Ind. Cas. 168 (2) (4), referred to.

Where a sale under s. 208 is entirely without jurisdiction it does not affect the interest of any of the judgment-debtors even though the sale of their interest under s. 210 (b) might be valid. 148 Ind. Cas. 168 (2) (4), followed.

Where one of the tenants who was not impleaded in a suit for rent of the holding, brings a suit subsequent to the sale of the holding in execution, against the auction-purchaser, for declaration of his title to the land, so far as the plaintiff and the auction-purchaser are concerned, the suit cannot be defeated merely on the ground that some persons who might possibly have an interest in the holding are not made parties though the decision is not binding against such persons.

Where a sale held in execution of a rent decree was valid Art. 12 Limi. Act applies but if the sale is a nullity there is no occasion to set it aside and a suit for a mere declaration that the plaintiffs' interests are not affected by it, is not governed by Art. 12. Moti Lal v. Karab-ul-din (1), relied on, 113 Ind. Cas. 681 (2), referred to.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad, dated January 17, 1940.

Mr. N. N. Roy, for the Appellant.

Mr. U. N. Banerji, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal is by defendant No. 1 and arises out of a suit relating to land which belonged to the ancestor of the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants. At a private partition it was allotted to the grandfather of the plaintiffs. In the Record of Rights published in 1925, it was recorded in the names of the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants. The landlord, defendant No. 2, sued for the rent of the holding impleading all the persons whose names were recorded in the Record of Rights, except plaintiff No. 2, and obtained a decree for Rs. 37-4. In execution of this decree the holding was put up for sale and was purchased by the appellant for Rs. 45 on July 31, 1934. Plaintiff No. 2 then applied to set aside the sale. The application purported to be under s. 213 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act and was rejected. The present suit was instituted by the plaintiffs on September 10, 1937, for a declaration of their title to the land and confirmation of possession on the ground that the decree and sale in execution of it were null and void as plaintiff No. 2 was not impleaded in the suit. It has been found that the appellant, the auction-purchaser at the execution sale, obtained delivery of possession.

The plaintiffs have, therefore, been given the declaration which they sought and decree for recovery of possession, the appropriate court-fees having been paid on the plaint.

The first question that arises is whether the plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the suit is governed by Art. 12 of the Lim. Act and is, therefore, barred. That Article applies inter alia to a suit to set aside a sale in pursuance of a decree or order of a Collector or other officer of revenue, and provides a period of limitation of one year from the date of the confirmation of the sale. If the sale was a valid sale, there is no doubt that this article applies and the suit is barred by limitation; but if the sale is a nullity there is no occasion to set it aside and a suit for a mere declaration that the plaintiffs' interests are not affected by it, is not governed by Art. 12: see Moti Lal v. Karab-ul-Din (1). Reference is made to the observations by Ross, J. to the contrary in Raje Baldeo Das Birla v. Lal Nilmaninath Sahi Deo (2), Fazl Ali, J. does not appear to agree with these observations and they were unnecessary for the purpose of deciding that case. As the matter is governed by the decision of the Privy Council the suit must be held to be within time if the sale was a nullity. It was also contended that the present suit, if decreed, affects the order for sale passed by the Deputy Commissioner under s. 208 (1) in execution of the decree and that as s. 208, falls in Chap. XVI, s. 258, is a bar to the suit. Section 208, does not authorise the sale of a holding in execution of a decree obtained against some only of the tenants of the holding and an order directing the sale of the holding in execution of such a decree is void: see the decisions in Jagdishwar Dayal Singh v. Pathak Dwarka Singh (3), and Raja Sri Sri Jyoti Prasad Singh Deo Bahadur v. Tara Sankar Chatterji (4).

The next contention is that as plaintiff No. 2 applied to set aside the sale under s. 213, and his application was rejected, a bar to the maintainability of the suit is created by the operation of s. 258. So far as it is material to the present case, that section provides that :

"No suit shall be entertained in any Court to vary, modify or set aside, either directly or indirectly, any decision, order or decree of any Deputy Commissioner or Revenue Officer in any suit, application, or proceeding under Chap. XVI, of the Act, except on the ground of fraud or want of jurisdiction, and that every such decision, order or decree shall have the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties and, subject to the provisions of the Act relating to appeal, shall be final."

If the decision of the Deputy Commissioner on the application of plaintiff No. 2 was a decision under s. 213, (which falls within Chap. XVI), the present suit was clearly barred and since the decision has the effect of a decree of a Civil Court it would be conclusive between the parties; but s. 213, merely relates to an application to the Deputy Commissioner to set aside an execution sale on the ground of material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it. The section does not apply where the sale is challenged not on the ground of any irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it but on the ground that it is void for want of jurisdiction in the executing Court. No application is needed to set aside a null sale. It has been held in Raja Sri Sri Jyoti Prasad Singh Deo Bahadur v. Tara Sankar Chatterji (4), that when a decree is effective against only a part of the tenancy interest a sale held in execution of it is entirely without jurisdiction and does not affect the interest of any of the judgment-debtors. In the present case as plaintiff No. 2 was not impleaded in the suit for rent a part of the tenancy interest was not represented in the suit and the decree did not affect the interest of plaintiff No. 2. Accordingly, the sale held in execution of that decree was a nullity.

The next contention on behalf of the appellant is that at least the right title and interest of the tenants other than plaintiff No. 2 passed by the execution sale. In Raja Sri Sri Jyoti Prasad Singh Deo Bahadur v. Tara Sankar Chatterji (4), it was held that where a sale under s. 208, is entirely without jurisdiction it does not affect the interest of any of the judgment-debtors even though the sale of their interest under s. 210 (b) might be valid.

The last contention on behalf of the appellant was that some of the tenants who were impleaded as defendants in the rent suit have not joined in the present suit and the suit is, therefore, bad for misjoinder of parties. The Courts below have held that the holding now belongs to the plaintiffs exclusively. That decision, of course, is not binding against persons who are not parties to the present litigation. So far as the plaintiff iffs and the auction-purchaser are concerned however, the suit cannot be defeated merely on the ground that some persons who might possibly have an interest in the holding are not parties.

In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 151—Decree-holder to prove that decree cannot be satisfied against movable property of judgment-debtor—Nature of proof—Burden, when shifts—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 101, 106.

It is for the decree-holder to show in the first instance under s. 151, Oudh Rent Act that satisfaction of the decree cannot be obtained against the movable property of the judgment-debtor but very little evidence is required to shift the burden on to the judgment-debtor. Whether a judgment-debtor has or has not movable property from which a decree may be satisfied is a matter specially within his own knowledge, and if the decree-holder shows that there is reason to think that he has no such property, and files an affidavit to that effect; it is for the judgment-debtor to prove that he has such property. Ex. D. A. against the order of the District Judge of Rae Bareilly, dated December 23, 1937.

Rai Bahadur H. K. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sri Ram holding brief of Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second execution of decree appeal against the judgment and decree dated December 23, 1937, of the learned District Judge of Rae Bareilly dismissing an appeal against an order passed by an Assistant Collector of the First Class of Partabgarh, dated July 20, 1937.

The history of the case dates back to March 10, 1932, when the Court of Wards Dhingwas Estate obtained a decree for arrears of rent against Mst. Shahzad Kuar and Mst. Dilraj Kuar. Application for execution of this decree was made three times, namely, in July 1932, in October, 1933, and lastly on October 31, 1934. The first application was for execution by rateable distribution and some amount was obtained. The second application was for attachment of immovable property and the judgment-debtors paid Rs. 40. The last application was for sale of the under-proprietary rights. A sum of about Rs. 333 was then due.

An application was made by the judgment-debtors in January, 1935, for appointment of a Receiver and this application was dismissed.

March 22, 1935, was fixed for sale of the immovable property. On that date, however, an objection was preferred by the judgment-debtors. This was under s. 151, of the Oudh Rent Act. Under this section no process in execution of a decree for money shall issue against a judgment-debtor's immovable property, other than for attachment of that property, unless satisfaction of the decree cannot be obtained against his movable property. It may be noted that there had been no previous suggestion by the judgment-debtors that they had any movable property from which the decree might be satisfied.

This objection was disallowed by the executing Court. The judgment-debtors appealed to the District Judge who dismissed their appeal. They then appealed to the Chief Court and this appeal was allowed. The judgment of the learned Judge of this Court who heard the appeal shows that it was first argued that the provisions of s. 152 of the Oudh Rent Act were independent of the provisions of s. 151. This contention was not accepted. The learned Judge also held that the decree-holder was not entitled to sell the judgment-debtors' rights, that is, under proprietary rights, without at least trying to obtain satisfaction of the decree against their movable property, and that the Courts were not justified in overruling the judgment-debtors' objection to that effect.

It was also argued that the principle of res judicata applied because the judgment-debtors had failed to put in an objection under s. 151 of the Oudh Rent Act prior to March 22, 1935. It was held that the principle of res judicata would not apply in the absence of any order or decision of a Court on a point in issue. The question whether the decree-holder could proceed against the judgment-debtors' under-proprietary rights was never raised, much less decided. The case was accordingly sent back to the executing Court to proceed according to law.

It appears from this order that the case was sent back to the executing Court to consider the objection of March 22, 1935, on the merits.

An affidavit was then filed by the decree-holder to the effect that the judgment-debtors had no movable property.

The order of the Assistant Collector dated July 20, 1937, shows that it was admitted by the Govt. Pleader in his Court that fresh process for the attachment of movable property could not be legally issued. This was in view of the provisions of s. 145 of the Oudh Rent Act, more than three years having elapsed since the decree. The Govt. Pleader contended, however, that the immovable property under attachment could be sold if the decree-holder satisfied the Court that the judgment-debtors had no movable property which could satisfy the decree. The Assistant Collector then referred to the provisions of s. 151 and observed that it appeared to be imperative that process for the attachment and sale of the movable property should be issued in the first instance, the immovable property being liable to be sold only when the movable property has not been able to satisfy the decree. Until process is issued for the attachment of movable property and no such property has been obtained it could not be held with certainty that the judgment-debtors have no movable property. There was no evidence before him to show that the judgment debtors had not got enough movable property to satisfy the decree. As it was too late to issue fresh process for the attachment of any movable property, the execution application was dismissed; that is, I understand, what the Assistant Collector meant when he said that the suit was dismissed.

The learned District Judge upheld this order, observing that it was the duty of the decree-holder to be on the look out when he made his application for execution to see that the provisions of s. 151 were complied with. It was for the decree-holder to satisfy the Court that there was no movable property with the judgment-debtors which could satisfy the decretal amount, and this could not be done unless the movable property was brought to the notice of the Court and attached. The District Judge considered the argument that the condition laid down under s. 151 was satisfied by the production of the affidavit, but observed that the Assistant Collector had already taken this fact into consideration because he had said that there was no evidence to hold that the judgment-debtors had not got movable property, and an affidavit by itself was not sufficient to prove the decree-holder's assertion.

It appears, therefore, that the principal question for consideration is whether the lower Courts rightly imposed the burden of showing that there was no movable property from which the decree could be satisfied on the decree-holder, and in holding that this burden had not been discharged.

Learned Counsel for the respondents referred to a decision of the Board of Revenue Babu Suraj Narain Singh v. Sheo Baran Pande, (Selected Decisions No. 12 of 1892), in which it was held that before execution against immovable property can be had the decree-holder must either take out execution against both person and movable property of the judgment-debtor or prove to the satisfaction of the Court that it would be useless to do so.

It may be conceded that it is for the decree-holder to show in the first instance under s. 151 that satisfaction of the decree cannot be obtained against the movable property, but in my opinion very little evidence is required to shift the burden on to the judgment-debtor. Under s. 101 of the Indian Evi. Act whoever desires any Court to give judgments as to any legal right or liability dependent on the existence of facts which he asserts must prove that those facts exist: and under s. 106 when any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that fact is upon him. It cannot be doubted that whether a judgment-debtor has or has not movable property from which a decree may be satisfied is a matter specially within his own knowledge, and if the decree-holder shows that there is reason to think that he has no such property, and files an affidavit to that effect, I consider that it is for the judgment-debtor to prove that he has such property. In the present case the judgment-debtors did not state in their application what property they had, nor did they ask for any enquiry to be made.

Learned Counsel for the respondents objected that the affidavit filed by the decree-holder was irregular since it had not been filed under O. XIX, r. 1 or 2 of the Civil P. C. It appears to me, however, that it may be regarded as an affidavit filed to rebut the application made by the judgment-debtors on March 22, 1935, the affidavit being required in view of the order passed by this Court on July 17, 1936. Under r. 2 of O. XIX, the Court at the instance of either party may, upon an affidavit, order the attendance for cross-examination of the deponent. No application for examination of the decree-holder was made by the judgment-debtors, nor did they file any counter affidavit: nor had any affidavit been filed by them with their objection of March 22, 1935.

The circumstances of the earlier execution proceedings certainly suggest that the judgment-debtors had at that time no movable property (apart from that from which partial satisfaction of the decree was obtained). In the two previous applications no suggestion had been made by the judgment-debtors that they could satisfy the decree from movable property except to the small extent mentioned, and it may be argued that this raises a presumption that they possessed no such movable property. It is also significant that they did not raise this objection until more than three years had elapsed since the passing of the decree. This and the way in which the objection was made suggest to my mind that actually they had no movable property from which the decree might be satisfied, and that they were merely trying to take advantage of the fact that more than three years had elapsed.

In my judgment the affidavit of the decree-holder considered with the previous history of the case was sufficient to shift the burden of proof from the decree-holder to the judgment-debtors, and, therefore, the Courts below were not justified in holding that the application of the decree-holder for execution against the immovable property must fail because they had failed to prove that the judgment-debtors had not got movable property.

I do not consider that the judgment-debtors should be allowed to escape liability by putting forward for the first time more than three years after the decree an objection under s. 151 of a vague nature which was not supported either by an affidavit or by an offer to produce evidence of the existence of movable property.

I accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the order of the lower Courts and direct that proceedings in execution against the immovable property shall now proceed on the application of October 31, 1934. The decree-holder is entitled to his costs in this Court and in the Courts below.

Burmese Buddhist Law—Widow or widower is proper person to administer estate and is entitled to letters of administration.

It may be laid down as a general rule that the widow or widower is the proper person to administer the estate. The widow or widower usually has possession of the whole of the estate at the time of the death of the other spouse, and is in most cases entitled to the whole or a large part of it. Though it would be rash to lay down an absolute rule that in no circumstances should letters of administration be granted to any other person, it would require very special reasons to justify such a grant. Ne Win v. Ma Aung Gale (1), relied on.

F. As. against the decree of the District Court, Pyapon, in C. R. Nos. 18, 17 and 26 of 1933.

Mr. E Maung (1), for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. K. Basu and Ba Maung, and E. Hay, for Respondents Nos. 1, and 2, 3, 4 respectively.

Sharpe, J.—These four appeals, which have been heard together, represent the latest stage in the protracted and complicated litigation which has followed upon the death, on June 27, 1933, of a Burmese Buddhist woman named Daw Tok. These appeals arise out of three applications for the grant of administration of her estate, which has been valued by the various applicants at something between two and three and a half lakhs of rupees. The first application, in point of time, is that filed by Ba Han on July 4, 1933; he is admittedly a nephew of the deceased (being her sister's child), but his claim to be her keittima adopted son, upon which his whole case rests is contested by his two rival claimants. The second application was that of Tun Yin, filed on July 17, 1933; he claims to be the surviving husband of the deceased, a claim which is contested by applicant No. 3 (whom I am about to mention) but which is admitted by Ba Han, who, however alleges that Tun Yin is not a fit and proper person to administer the deceased's estate. The third application was filed on November 6, 1933 by Ma Hla Nyun, a niece of the deceased (being her brother's child); she alleges that she is the keittima adopted daughter of the deceased a claim which is contested both by Ba Han and Tun Yin. Ma Aye Myint and Maung Hla Maung, sister and brother, respectively, of Ma Hla Nyun have also been made parties to this litigation, but neither of them has taken any active part in it. All three applications, which were filed in the District Court of Pyapon, were made under s. 218, Succession Act, which provides that such a grant as that now applied for may be made "to any person who, according to the rules for the distribution of the estate applicable in the case of such deceased (the section deals with Buddhist inter alia and I have already mentioned that the deceased in the present case was a Buddhist) would be entitled to the whole or any part of such deceased's estate."

In Ne Win v. Ma Aung Gale (1), a Bench of the late Chief Court of Lower Burma held that having regard to the main feature of the Burmese Buddhist Law respecting the ownership of property by married couples, and the devolution of such property on the death of one of them, it may be laid down as a general rule that the widow or widower is the proper person to administer the estate. It is unnecessary for me here to discuss the law in regard to the devolution of the estate of a Burmese Buddhist married couple upon the death of one of the spouses. It is enough for me to say that I respectfully agree with the general rule laid down in Ne Win v. Ma Aung Gale (1) and which I have stated above and I will content myself with quoting one sentence from the judgment of Irwin, J., in that case:

"The widow or widower usually has possession of the whole of the estate at the time of the death of the other spouse, and is in most cases entitled to the whole or a large part of it. It would be rash to lay down an absolute rule that in no circumstances should letters of administration be granted to any other person, but I am strongly of opinion that it would require very special reasons to justify such a grant."

It will thus be seen that, if Tun Yin establishes his marriage to Daw Tok, he ought to have the grant unless there are "very special reasons" to the contrary; and if he does obtain the grant, questions concerning the status of Ba Han and/or Ma Hla Nyun need not be investigated. It is conceded that, if Tun Yin was Daw Tok's husband at the time of her death, he is entitled to what is by far the greater part of the estate, notwithstanding the fact, if it be the fact, that both Ba Han and Ma Hla Nyun were Daw Tok's keittima adopted children. For these reasons I shall deal with Tun Yin's case first. Ba Han admits that Tun Yin was Daw Tok's husband, but Ma Hla Myun does not. Two questions therefore arise: was Tun Yin Daw Tok's husband at the time of her death? If so, are there any "very special reasons" to justify us in refusing his application? In my judgment the burden of proving his marriage with the deceased lies upon Tun Yin, but the burden of proving facts upon which to base a finding of "very special reason" for refusing him a grant lies upon the person alleging that Tun Yin ought not to have a grant, that is to say that the burden of proof on the second question (if it arises) is upon Ba Han. [After discussing certain evidence his Lordship concluded as follows.] On the first part of the case, I find that Tun Yin was Daw Tok's husband at the time of her death, and on the second part of the case I find no evidence to justify me in saying that there are "very special reasons" for rejecting Tun Yin's application. In my judgment, therefore Tun Yin's application for the grant of administration of his late wife's estate should be allowed, on payment of the requisite court-fees and on furnishing security to the satisfaction of the District Court within such time as may be allowed by it. I think therefore that Tun Yin's appeal (that is to say, Civil First Appeal No. 183 of 1935) must be allowed with costs both here and below. In regard to the costs in this Court, I think that there should be an Advocate's fee of twelve gold mohurs for the first day of the hearing before us; and Advocate's fee of ten gold mohurs for each of the following three further full days of the hearing before us namely December 15, 19 and 20; and an Advocate's fee of five gold mohurs for each of the other two days of the hearing namely December 14 and 21, when there were no afternoon sittings of the Court. All the costs (including the Advocate's fee) to be paid by Ba Han and Ma Hla Nyun in the proportions of two-fifths by Ba Han and three-fifths by Ma Hla Nyun.

I must now say a word about the other three appeals before us. Applications for grant of administration are intended to be disposed of comparatively quickly, without deciding who is and who is not entitled to share in the estate of the deceased person, and so that the estate may be speedily wound up. Here a most lamentable state of affairs is disclosed. Tun Yin himself commenced giving evidence in September 1934 and continued doing so till July 1935, during which time he was the only witness under examination. It is now over six and a half years since Daw Tok died, and only now is her estate to be administered. Having decided Tun Yin's case in the way in which I have done, it is unnecessary for me to go into the question of status (with consequent right to inherit) in regard to Ba Han and Ma Hla Nyun, unless or until Tun Yin fails to pay the necessary fees or furnish security.

Mosely, J.—I agree with the judgment of my learned brother. We are ordinarily reluctant to interfere with decisions of learned District Judges on simple questions of fact, considering the advantage that the District Court has in having witnesses before it and forming an estimation of their credibility and seeing their demeanour; but there is no doubt that in the present case the District Judge had no warrant whatever for his finding that "there can be no doubt that a fair quantity of jewellery was left in the possession of Tun Yin," and for the finding, on which the case rested, that Tun Yin had in his possession the emerald ring in particular. The whole matter boiled down to the evidence of Maung Ba Hla, and as my learned brother has shown, that evidence did not show that the emerald ring was returned to Daw Tok before her death.

D. Order accordingly.

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), ss. 46, 47, 6, 4—Persons protected under ss. 46 and 47—Person holding immediately under raiyat, if protected—Under-raiyat, if raiyat—S. 60, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), applicability to case.

Sections 46, 47, Chota Nag. Ten. Act, are intended to protect the rights of a raiya only. The definition of "raiya" in s. 6 is wide enough to include an under-raiya: but cl. (2) of s. 6 makes the position clear. A person shall not be deemed to be a raiya, unless he holds land either immediately under a proprietor or immediately under a tenure-holder or immediately under a Mundari khunt-kattidar. Where a person does not claim to hold the land under a proprietor or a tenure-holder or a Mundari khunt kattidar, he cannot be held to be a raiya in the sense in which the expression has been used in the Chota Nagpur Ten. Act though he may be an under-raiya. There are only three classes of *raiya*s mentioned in this section, and these are occupancy *raiya*s, non-occupancy *raiya*s and *raiya*s having khunt-katti rights. Under-*raiya*s, on the other hand are tenants, holding whether immediate or mediately, under-*raiya*s.

Where the money decree-holder is not trying to sell the occupancy right in the lands but merely trying to sell the shop or house and such right, title and interest as the judgment-debtor who is not a raiya has in the land in question, such interest cannot be said to be protected under s. 47. There is nothing in s. 60, Civil P. C. to prevent the sale of such judgment-debtor's interest in the land in dispute. The shop or house which has been erected by him certainly belongs to him, and he has undoubtedly a disposing power over the profits of the land which he may exercise for his own benefit. The case, therefore, comes within the category of those properties which can be sold under the provisions of s. 60 of the Civil P. C.

Messrs. S. C. Mazumdar and P. N. Sanjayal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. N. Banerji and R. K. Ghosh, for the Respondent.

Fazi Ali, J.—It seems to me that both the Courts below have missed the real point which arises in this case. What that point is will appear from the following brief statement of the facts which have given rise to this appeal.

The appellant has obtained a money decree against the respondent, and he seeks to attach and sell the interest of the respondent in certain property. The property in question consists of survey plot No. 3 and portions of plots Nos. 4 and 6 with a house standing on them. These plots are entered in the raiyyati khatian in the names of Purusottam Mahto and Madhu Mahto who are admittedly settled raiyyats. In the year 1904 one Rajani Kanta Banerji took settlement of some homestead lands including the lands in question from the father of Purusottam Mahto and Madhu Mahto by a patta (Ex. C) for the purpose of building houses upon them. During the Survey and Settlement operations Rajani Kanta Banerji was entered as under-raiyyat with occupancy rights under the settled raiyyats. The appellant afterwards took oral settlement of the disputed lands from Rajani Kanta Banerji and constructed a house on them. It is stated by the Munsif in his judgment that the respondent-judgment-debtor had taken settlement from Rajani Kanta Banerji for purely residential purposes, and from his previous deposition in the money suit it appears that he has built a pakka house on it and shops are held in that house. The question which arose in the Courts below was whether the house or shop and the interest which the respondent has in the disputed land are liable to be sold in execution of the money decree. What was contended on behalf of the judgment-debtor in the Courts below was that this property was not liable to be sold under the provisions of ss. 46 and 47 of the Chota Nagpur Ten. Act. Section 46 imposes restriction on the transfer of their rights by raiyyats, and s. 47, provides that "no decree or order shall be passed by any Court for the sale of the right of a raiyyat in his holding or any portion thereof nor shall any such right be sold in execution of any decree or order."

Now, for the purpose of deciding this case, both the Courts below seem to have assumed that the respondent has acquired the same status as Rajani Kanta, and they have entered into an elaborate discussion as to the status of Rajani Kanta. The Munsif held that Rajani Kanta was not a raiyyat inasmuch as the lease, which he took from the original raiyyats of the disputed land, was for building purposes. On this view he has held that the respondent also has no raiyyati interest in the disputed land, and his interest is liable to be sold in execution of the decree.

The learned Subordinate Judge, who heard the appeal from the judgment of the Munsif, has taken a contrary view. In his opinion Rajani Kanta was a raiyyat, and he has come to the conclusion that though the Chota Nagpur Ten. Act was passed in 1908 ss. 46 and 47 of the Act show that those provisions of the Act were intended to have retrospective effect as regards transactions before 1903. He points out that as Rajani Kanta obtained his lease after 1903 ss. 46 and 47 are applicable to his interest. He has tried to show that Rajani Kanta was an agriculturist, and he has also referred to s. 78 of the Chota Nagpur Ten. Act for the purpose of showing that the interest or Rajani Kanta cannot be proceeded against under ss. 46 and 47 of the Chota Nagpur Ten. Act.

Now, the point which, in my opinion, arises in this case is not what status Rajani Kanta had in the disputed lands but what status the judgment-debtor has in regard to this land. It is common ground that Rajani Kanta had taken his lease for building purposes and it has been pointed out to us that he has been alienating portions of the land covered by his lease from time to time. These facts prima facie seem to support the conclusion arrived at by the Munsif that Rajani Kanta cannot be said to be a raiyyat; but as I have already stated, the point to be decided in this appeal is whether the respondent is protected by ss. 46 and 47 of the Chota Nagpur Ten. Act. Now, even a casual reading of these sections will show that they are intended to protect the rights of a raiyyat only. The first question to be considered, therefore, is whether the respondent is a raiyyat. Section 6 of the Chota Nagpur Ten. Act states that "a 'raiyyat' means primarily a person who has acquired a right to hold land for the purpose of cultivating it by himself, or by members of his family, or by hired servants, or with the aid of partners; and includes the successors-in-interest of persons who have acquired such a right, but does not include a Mundari khunt-kattidar."

This definition seems to be wide enough to include an under-raiyyat; but cl. (2) of s. 6 makes the position clear. It is stated in that clause that a person shall not be deemed to be a raiyyat, unless he holds land either immediately under a proprietor or immediately under a tenure-holder or immediately under a Mundari khunt-kattidar. As the respondent does not claim to hold the land under a proprietor or a tenure-holder or a Mundari khunt-kattidar, he cannot be held to be a raiyat in the sense in which the expression has been used in the Chota Nagpur Ten. Act. It is argued that he is at least an under-raiyat and that an under-raiyat also must be regarded as a raiyat. But a reference to s. 4 of the Act shows that though an under-raiyat may be a tenant he is not raiyat. There are only three classes of a raiyats mentioned in this section, and these are occupancy raiyats, non-occupancy raiyats and raiyats having khunt hatti rights. Under-raiyats, on the other hand, are described as tenants holding, whether immediate or mediately, under raiyats. Therefore, whether the respondent be an under-raiyat or not, he is not a raiyat, and, therefore, he cannot claim the benefit of either s. 46 or s. 47 of the Chota Nagpur Ten. Act.

It was contended on behalf of the respondent that even though he may not be a raiyat, yet inasmuch as the appellant is seeking to sell portions of a holding, is entitled to object to the sale on the ground that the Court cannot sell what it is expressly forbidden to sell under s. 47 of the Chota Nagpur Ten. Act; but in my opinion, this is not the correct way of approaching the case. The appellant is not trying to sell the occupancy right in the lands. He is merely trying to sell the shop or house and such right, title and interest as the respondent has in the land in question. I do not see how such interest can be said to be protected under s. 47.

It was also contended on behalf of the respondent that the interest of the respondent cannot be sold under s. 60 of the Civil P. C. It was urged that the respondent not being a raiyat can be ejected from the land by his landlord at any moment, and that s. 60, does not contemplate that such a precarious right as the respondent has in the land is capable of being sold. I do not, however, find anything in s. 60 to prevent the sale of the respondent's interest in the land in dispute. The shop or house which has been erected by the respondent certainly belongs to him, and he has undoubtedly a disposing power over the profits of the land which he may exercise for his own benefit. The case, therefore, comes within the category of those properties which can be sold under the provisions of s. 60 of the Civil P. C.

In my opinion, the learned District Judge was wrong in holding that the interest of the judgment-debtor-respondent cannot be sold, and I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the order of the learned District Judge and restore the order of the Munsif. The appellant will be entitled to his costs in this Court and in the Courts below.

Harries, C. J.—I agree.

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX,

MADRAS—RESPONDENT

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 6 (vi), (iv)—Assessee carrying on extensive business in Ayurvedic medicines and also maintaining a dramatic troupe—Troupe giving performances at assessee's business premises at different places—Prices for admission charged—Profits arising from troupe performances held income from 'other sources', within meaning of s. 6 (vi).

The assessee carried on an extensive business in the manufacture and sale of Ayurvedic medicines at Kottakkal, Palghat and Calicut, where he owned premises in which he sold medicines. One of his other activities was the maintaining of a dramatic troupe which gave public performances in the Malabar District, Cochin and Travancore at certain seasons of the year. At each place, adjoining the premises used by him for the sale of his medicines was a hall in which the assessee's dramatic troupe also gave performances. At all the performances prices for admission were charged.

Held, that the assessee maintained the troupe on a commercial basis, and whether he did so for the purpose of advertising his Ayurvedic medicines was not material. The maintenance of the troupe was not a hobby but a possible source of income and the profits arising therefrom were income from "other sources" within the meaning of s. 6 (vi), Income Tax Act, even if it could not be classified as income from a business under s. 6 (iv).

Messrs. D. A. Krishna Variar and Ravi Varma, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Ayyangar, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—The assessee is an Ayurvedic physician. He carries on an extensive business in the manufacture and sale of Ayurvedic medicines at Kottakkal, Palghat and Calicut. In addition to the income which he derives from the manufacture and sale of medicines and from the practice of his profession, he derives income from property and "sundry other sources." One of his other activities is the maintaining of a dramatic troupe which gives public performances in the Malabar District, Cochin and Travancore at certain seasons of the year. At Kottakkal, Palghat and Calicut the assessee is the owner of premises in which he sells his medicines. At each place, adjoining the premises used by him for the sale of his Ayurvedic medicines, is a hall in which the assessee's dramatic troupe also gives performances. At all the performances prices for admission are charged. For the year 1937-38, the assessee returned an income of Rs. 18,061-4-11 and sought to deduct a sum of Rs. 3,475 as loss incurred by him in that year in the maintenance of the dramatic troupe. The Income-tax Officer refused to allow the deduction. The ground for refusal was that the maintenance of this dramatic troupe really amounted to a hobby of the assessee and therefore could not be classified as a business. This order of the Income-tax Officer was confirmed by the Commissioner on appeal. The assessee then asked the Commissioner to state a case on the ground that the refusal to allow the deduction involved a question of law. The Commissioner rejected the application, and in consequence the assessee applied to this Court for an order compelling the Commissioner to make a reference. This Court agreed with the assessee that a point of law was involved and accordingly directed the Commissioner to make a reference on the following question :

"Is there material to support the finding that the assessee's dramatic troupe is maintained by him as a hobby and not as a business or as a source of income?"

The Commissioner has now made the reference. The assessee has maintained this dramatic troupe for many years, and in the statement of the case made by the Commissioner the profits and losses for the years from 1922-23 to 1933-34 are set out. In 1922-23 there was a profit of Rs. 997 and in 1928-29 a profit of Rs. 1,820. It is common ground that when these profits were made the income-tax authorities assessed them to income-tax. In the other years mentioned there were losses and upto and including the year 1934-35 the income-tax authorities allowed deductions for the losses when assessing the assessee to income-tax. It is difficult to see how they could do otherwise seeing that they had insisted on taxing the assessee when he had made profits. The Income-tax Officer, Palghat, who made the assessment for the year 1935-36 however decided that the assessee should not be allowed to deduct the loss of Rs. 3,475 which admittedly he had suffered in that year in this connection.

The only ground that the Income-tax Officer advanced for disallowing this loss was that the dramatic troupe was a hobby and therefore could not become "a source" of income. That was his opinion, and as already indicated it was concurred in by the Commissioner.

The Commissioner has given two reasons in support of his decision. He says that the motive behind the formation of the dramatic troupe was philanthropic and not commercial because in a prospectus issued by the assessee it was said that the object of the founding of the troupe was to stage Malayalam dramas on reformed lines and to utilise the proceeds arising out of such performances for rendering free medical aid at the assessee's Vaidyasala. The second reason was that the assessee would never have persevered with such a losing concern unless he looked upon it as a hobby unconnected with his business activities. In opposing the finding that he was merely indulging in a hobby the assessee stated that he seldom attended the performances and therefore the maintenance of the troupe could not be regarded as a hobby. The Commissioner has taken some pains to show that this statement is not true, but it is difficult to see what bearing this statement has on the question, whether true or false.

It is manifest that the assessee maintains this troupe on a commercial basis, whether he does so far the purpose of advertising his Ayurvedic medicines matters not. If this troupe earns a profit, as it has done in two of the years mentioned in the statement of the case, the profit would obviously be income from "other sources" within the meaning of s. 6 (vi), even if it could not be classified as income from a business under s. 6 (iv). In 1929-30 the profit made was taxed under "other sources." We are not prepared to accept the reasons advanced by the Commissioner in support of the theory that there is here a hobby and not a possible source of income. In fact, we have no hesitation in holding that there was no material on the record to support the finding that the assessee's dramatic troupe is maintained by him as a hobby. It may not be a "business," but it certainly must be classified as a source, or possible source of income. The question referred will be answered in the negative and as the assessee has succeeded, he is entitled to his costs, which we fix at Rs. 250. He is also entitled to the refund of his deposit of Rs. 100.

Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 4—Suit for declaration that certain trust in respect of certain villages was public and not private trust—Valuation for purposes of jurisdiction is market value of property.

Section 4 of the Suits Valuation Act leaves no room whatever for the idea of a notional value. [p. 446, col. 1.]

In a suit for declaration that a trust created by a certain person in respect of certain villages was a public trust and not a private trust, the title to the villages is affected by the relief sought and, therefore, the suit falls within the mischief of s. 4 of the Suits Valuation Act, and the valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction is the market value of the property itself and not any arbitrary valuation. Krishna v. Raman (1), referred to.

Judgment.—By our order of March 21, 1941, we held that the question raised by application on behalf of the respondents, No. 135 of 1941, should be decided as a preliminary question in view of the fact that it would affect the question whether the record should be printed or not. The question raised in this application is in regard to the valuation of the present suit for the purposes of jurisdiction. The suit was originally filed as regular suit No. 160 of 1938 in the Court of the Munsif, Biswan, Sitapur, and the prayer was that a declaration be granted that the trust created by Thakur Fateh Singh on December 4, 1899 by his will in respect of villages Ulra and Dafra with the hamlets thereof is a public trust and not a private trust. The plaintiffs in instituting this suit valued it for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 500. The suit was one falling within the purview of Art. 17 of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act and for purposes of the court-fee was stamped with a court-fee of Rs. 15. In the trial Court the defendant (father of the present respondents) objected to this arbitrary valuation of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction, and after considering the matter the Munsif on January 14, 1939, held that for purposes of jurisdiction the suit was incorrectly valued and was beyond his jurisdiction. He took the view that for the purposes of jurisdiction the suit was to be valued, according to the value of the subject-matter which according to Govt. rules would be 30 times the land revenue of the villages in suit, and would therefore amount to about Rs. 47,610, the land revenue being Rs. 1,587. The plaint was returned to the plaintiffs for presentation in the Court having jurisdiction to entertain the suit and the plaintiffs presented their plaint in the Court of the Civil Judge, Sitapur, but again failed to give it a valuation for purposes of jurisdiction other than an arbitrary valuation. This time they selected the figure of Rs. 5,200. The defendants took an objection to the valuation of the suit and an issue was framed and decided by the learned Civil Judge who held that the proper valuation for purposes of jurisdiction was not Rs. 5,200 but Rs. 47,610, being 30 times the land revenue of the property in suit.

The plaintiffs' suit was dismissed and the plaintiffs have come to this Court in first civil appeal and they have again valued their appeal for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 5,200. The effect of this is that only a type-written record will be prepared and no appeal will lie from the decision of this Court as of right to their Lordships of the Privy Council.

Learned Counsel for the respondents has put forward two main contentions. The first is that the appellants are bound by the decision of the Munsif who returned the plaint to them, since they have never appealed against that decision. Secondly he had urged that it is not open to the plaintiffs-appellants to put an arbitrary valuation on the appeal for purposes of jurisdiction. As regards the first point we are not impressed with the contention that there is any question of res judicata about the matter. All that the Munsif could decide was that the suit was not within his jurisdiction. He was not entitled to arrive at any finding which would be binding on the Civil Judge in this matter. In the Court of the Civil Judge the decision of the Munsif on this point could not in any circumstance operate as res judicata nor was it so treated.

On the other hand on the merits the matter appears to us to be entirely free from doubt, and learned Counsel for the appellant has not put forward any argument which seems to have any force at all. He admits that for purposes of jurisdiction this suit falls within the mischief of s. 4 of the Suits Valuation Act (Act VII of 1887) as modified up to date by U. P. Act VII of 1939. Section 4 of the Act provides that.

"suits mentioned in paras. IV (a), IVA, IVB, V, VA, VB, VI, VIA, VIII and X (d) of s. 7 and Arts. 17, 18 and 19 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, 1870, as in force for the time being in the United Provinces, shall be valued for the purposes of jurisdiction at the market value of the property involved in or affected by or the title to which is affected by the relief sought or at the amount involved in or affected by or the title to which is affected by the relief sought, and such value shall in the case of land be deemed to be the value as determinable in accordance with the rules framed under s. 3."

(It is those rules of course which lay down that the valuation shall be 30 times the land revenue). Learned Counsel has made a vain attempt to introduce into s. 4 the idea of a notional value which is to be found in the Court Fees Act in certain cases. Section 4 of the Suits Valuation Act, however leaves no room whatever for the idea of a notional value. In the present case the sole question for decision is whether the title a trustee of the two villages in suit vests in the public or in private persons, that is whether they are the subject of a public trust or a private trust. The position then is that the title to these villages is affected by the relief sought and therefore the valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction is the market value of the property itself. Learned Counsel might possibly have put forward the argument that the valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction was to be sought for under the second head, that is with reference to the amount involved in or affected by or the title to which is affected by the relief sought, but he has done nothing of the kind. He has merely sought to show that it is impossible to give anything but an arbitrary value to the relief of a declaration that property is the subject of a public trust and not of a private trust. That argument, however, is entirely irrelevant and it was doubtless to obviate arguments of this kind that s. 4 of the Suits Valuation Act was amended and worded as it now stands.

Learned Counsel sought to rely on Krishna v. Raman, (I. L. R. 11 Madras, 266) (1). In that case their Lordships of the Madras High Court, after referring to a case in which it was held that a suit to remove a karnavan is not a suit to recover tarwad property and to be valued as such, but is a suit which asks for a relief that is incapable of valuation, and that the value put upon it by the parties was the one to be adopted, went on to say,

"These decisions (that is, this and the one previously referred to) proceed on the view that possession is always in the tarwad and that the subject-matter of the suit is not the land but an interest in it, namely, the right to management which is not capable of valuation. But it does follow that a District Munsif has jurisdiction over every suit for the removal of a karnavan though the tarwad property to be managed is very considerable in value. The right of management must, from the nature of things, rise in value in proportion to the value of the property to be managed. It is not, therefore, unreasonable to take into consideration the value of the property and to see that the value put by the parties on the right of management for the purpose of jurisdiction is bona fide and, if bona fide, to adopt it as the value of the subject-matter for purposes of jurisdiction. The Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that, because the subject-matter is incapable of precise valuation, the District Munsif had necessarily jurisdiction over the suit."

This case is, if anything, helpful to the respondents and not to the appellants. It was decided as far back as 1887 and the question which was then in doubt as to the proper jurisdictional valuation of such a suit is exactly the question which has been set at rest by the enactment of s. 4 of the Suits Valuation Act in its present form.

We have no doubt that the appeal has been incorrectly valued at Rs. 5,200 for purposes of jurisdiction. The proper valuation is Rs. 47,610 being 30 times the land revenue. We allow the application and direct that the appellants shall within one week from this date amend their petition of appeal in accordance with this order. Should they fail to do so, the appeal will be put up for orders of dismissal.

Contract—Specific performance—Suit for—Contract by vendors to sell land—One of them minor—Vendee going into possession and retaining it for long time without repudiating contract—Purchase price not paid—Suit by vendors for specific performance—Minor becoming major then—Suit held maintainable—Right to repudiate held waived.

A, B and C who were brothers and members of joint Hindu family agreed to sell a piece of land to vendee. C was minor. A and B signed the contract and A also signed as manager of the family and guardian of C. Vendee went into possession and remained in possession for a long time enjoying the rents and profits of the land without paying the purchase price. Vendors sued for specific performance of the contract. C had by then, reached majority.

Held, that the vendee having remained in possession of the land without repudiating the contract must be deemed to have waived the right to repudiate it on the ground that one of the vendors was a minor when the contract was executed. The vendors were entitled to maintain the suit. Hoggart v. Scott (1) and Salisbury v. Hatcher (2), relied on.

L. P. A. preferred under clause 15 of the Letters Patent to the High Court against the decree of the Honourable Mr. Justice Venkataramana Rao in S. A. No. 726 of 1935 preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam in A. S. No. 27 of 1935 (O. S. No. 272 of 1933 District Munsif's Court, Gudivada).

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Appellant.
Mr. P. Satyanarayana Rao, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—The appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of a contract for sale of land tried in the Court of the District Munsif of Gudivada. The respondents were the plaintiffs. On August 4, 1930, by a contract in writing the respondents agreed to sell three quarters of an acre of land in Kistna District at the price of Rs. 1,095. The respondents are brothers and are members of an undivided family. The third respondent was a minor at the time the contract was entered into. The contract was signed by the major brothers and by the first respondent as the manager of the family and as the guardian of the minor.

The appellant went into possession immediately after the execution of the contract and admittedly he has remained in possession and had enjoyed the rents and profits ever since. The suit for specific performance was filed on August 4, 1933. The appellant, although he was in possession and was treating the land as his own, set up the defence that the suit for specific performance would not lie as one of the vendors was a minor. His attitude under the circumstances can only be described as that of a very dishonest person. At the time of the institution of the suit the minor member of the vendor family had reached majority. The District Munsif granted the respondents a decree, but on appeal the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam held that the major brothers alone were entitled to sue for specific performance. Accordingly, he limited the decree to 2-3rds of the land on payment of two-thirds of the purchase consideration. The appellant then appealed to this Court and the first and second respondents filed a memorandum of cross-objections. The appeal was heard by Venkatarama Rao, J., who restored the decree of the District Munsif, but gave a certificate permitting of this Letter Patent Appeal.

In holding that the respondents were entitled to maintain a suit for specific performance the learned Judge relied on the decisions in Hoggart v. Scott (1) and Salisbury v. Hatcher (2). In the first of these cases it was held that a plaintiff in a bill for the specific performance of a contract was entitled to a decree if, at the time of the hearing, he would shew a good title, although he had not a good title at the time of the contract.

Leach, M. R. observed :—

"The defendant, if he had thought fit, might have declined the contract as soon as he discovered that the plaintiffs had no title; as he was not bound to wait until they had acquired a title; but, he now having taken that course, it is enough that at the hearing a good title can be made."

In Salisbury v. Hatcher (2) Knight Bruce, V. C. said :—

"In case of specific performance the want of mutuality is a consideration generally material, but it is contrary to principle and authority to say that perfect mutuality is required in order to call a Court of Equity into action. There are cases in which plaintiffs have had a decree for specific performance against defendants, who, when the bill was filed, were not in a condition to enforce specific performance in their own favour. Where no legal invalidity affects the contract, the enforcement of it in this Court is matter of judicial discretion."

In that case the purchaser not having rejected the purchase as soon as he had ascertained the real interest of the vendor and the vendor latter having acquired a perfect title a decree for specific performance was passed.

As Venkataramana Rao, J., has pointed out the fact that the appellant remained in possession of the land and did not repudiate the contract the right to repudiate must be deemed to have been waived. There is nothing in the law of India which prevents the application of the principle applied in Hoggart v. Scott (1) and Salisbury v. Hatcher (2) and I consider that those principles have direct application here. It would indeed be regrettable if the Court could not give to the respondents the relief they ask against the injustice which they have suffered at the hands of the appellant. At no stage has he repudiated the contract but he has refused

Will—Construction—“Satyadhikari Oh Dokholikar” and “Satyaban Oh Dokholikar Purusannukromah”, meaning of—Principles of construction.

Where a clause or a word in a will is susceptible of two meanings it must be interpreted according to that sense to which the law will give effect. Bhooban Mohini Debya v. Hurrish Chunder (5), relied on. [p. 450, col. 2.]

According to a will by a Hindu, the testator's grandson R was to become with previous arrangement (made in some previous will) ‘Shatyadhikari Oh Dokholikar’ (of the disputed property). If at the time of his death he were to leave no male child then R's uterine brother S and on his death his eldest son was to become ‘Shatyaban Oh Dokholikar Purusannukromah.’ If two aforesaid grandsons and or any male child of their family (bangsha) be not in existence then the testator's existing son P or his eldest son was to become ‘Satyaban Oh Dokholikar’ none of the testator's heirs was given power to transfer.

Held, that the words “Shatyadhikari Oh Dokholikar” were not used to convey all the interest possessed by the testator. He must have used the word to confer some interest which was less than his own interest. The estate was given to R simply without express words of inheritance. It would in the absence of a conflicting context carry by Hindu Law an estate of inheritance. The estate given to R was therefore was not an English estate tail male. [p. 449, col. 2.]

Held, also that the word “purusannukromah” meant “generation after generation.” S therefore got an estate of general inheritance and the prohibition against alienation of this estate was void in law. [p. 450, col. 2.]

Mr. Atul Chandra Gupta, Dr. Radhakibinod Pal, Messrs. Apurbadhan Mukherjee and Bijan Behari Mitter, for the Respondents.

Nasim Ali, J.—The subject-matter of dispute in the suit out of which this second appeal arises is that portion of the 3 bighas 2 cottas of land with the structures and buildings thereon mentioned in para. 12 of the last will (dated July 11, 1879), in Bengali language of Babu Joy Kissen Mukherjee, a wealthy zamindar of Uttarpara which does not appertain to the Uttarpara Public Library. The following genealogy shows the relationship of the parties in this suit to Babu Joy Kissen :

JOY KISSAN MUKHERJEE

died in 1888

On June 14, 1928, defendant No. 2 granted in favour of defendant No. 1 a lease of the disputed property for 15 years. The material portions of the last will of Babu Joy

Kissen are paras. 12 and 16 of the will. Paragraph 12 of the will may be divided into four clauses: Clause 1—Rashbehari Mukhopadhyay, in accordance with previous arrangement (made in some previous will) will become "Shatyadhikari Oh Dokholikar" (of the disputed property). Clause 2—God forbid, if at the time of his death he leaves no male child then his uterine brother Shib Narayan Mukhopadhyay and on his death his eldest son "pursuannukromah" will become "Shatyaban Oh Dokholikar". Clause 3—God forbid, if my two aforesaid grandsons (Rashbehari and Shib Narayan) or any male child of their family (bangsha) be not in existence then my existing son Peary Mohan Mukhopadhyay or his eldest son shall become Satayaban Oh Dokholikar and shall continue as such. Clause 4—But, none of my heirs shall have power to transfer.

"Paragráph 16—If anyone among my heirs or their descendants will get dances, amusements or music, etc., held on the occasion of any marriage, sradh or pūja ceremony or hold any conference in the rooms on the floor above the said Library, no one shall be entitled to raise any objection thereto. All shall have equal rights in these matters."

The questions for determination in this appeal are whether on a true construction of the last will of Joy Kissen (1) the heirs of Joy Kissen or their families have the right to hold nach (dances), tamasa (amusements), gan (music), etc., on the occasions of marriage, sradh or pūja, etc., or any baitak (conference) in the baitakkhana (the floor above the library) in the manner specified in para. 16 of Joy Kissen's last will; (2) defendant No. 1 has got only a life interest in the disputed property; (3) the lease of the disputed properties granted by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2, on June 14, 1928, or any other alienation of the disputed property by defendant No. 1 will be operative after the death of defendant No. 1. The Courts below have answered the second question in affirmative and the third question in the negative. So far as the first question is concerned, the finding of the trial Judge is that the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 3, 5 to 7 and defendant No. 9 have no such right of enjoyment but the other defendants have. A declaration to this effect was embodied in the decree passed by him. The Additional District Judge, however, deleted from the decree of the trial Court that portion of the declaration which was in favour of defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 8 as he was of opinion that these defendants did not join in the suit as plaintiffs and did not also pay the requisite court-fees for such relief though at the same time he observed that the trial Judge was justified in making observation in his judgment that defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 8 had such rights of enjoyment.

Hence this second appeal by defendants

Nos. 1 and 2. The plaintiffs and the other defendants have filed no cross-objections. The first contention on behalf of the appellants in this appeal is that the District Judge having found that defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 8 are not entitled in this suit to a declaration in their favour to the effect that they have got right of enjoyment of the baitakkhana as specified in cl. 16 of the will and that he having directed the deletion of this declaration from the decree of the trial Judge he should have also deleted the observations of the trial Judge in his judgment in connection with this matter from the judgment of the trial Judge. I accept this contention as this position was not controverted by defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 8. The second question relates to the quantity of interest of defendant No. 1 in the disputed property under the terms of Joy Kissen's last will. The decision on this question depends on the true construction of para. 12 of the will. It appears from other parts of the will (e. g., paras. 2, 3, 6, 10 and 17) that wherever the testator intended to bequeath his whole interest he used the word "paibin" (shall get). He did not use this word in para. 12. The words "Shatyadhikari Oh Dokholikar" in cl. 1 of para. 12, therefore, were not used by him to convey all the interest possessed by him. He must have used the word to confer some interest which is less than his own interest.

"There is no rule that the first recipient must take all the interest possessed by the testator for limited interests are common enough: Kristormoney Dossee v. Norendra Krishna Bahadoor (1) at p. 39."

What then is the nature of this limited interest? Clause 2 lays down that on the death of Rashbehari without a male issue the property would go to Shib Narayan or his eldest son. The contention of the plaintiffs that the limited interest given to Rashbehari by the clause is an English tail male. The argument in support of this contention is this. Clause 1 should not be construed independently of the subsequent clauses. The words "God forbid if at the time of his death he leaves no male child" in cl. 2 and the words "if there be no male child of their (two grandsons) families" in cl. 3 by implication lay down the course of succession and limit it to the male issues of Rashbehari in succession. Clause 4 forbids alienation. The combined effect of these provisions is that the estate created in favour of Rashbehari is an English estate tail male. I am unable to accept this contention for the following reasons:

(1) 16 I. A 29 (39); 16 C 383; 5 Sar. 285; 13 Ind. Jur. 90 (P. C.).

The estate was given to Rashbehari simply without express words of inheritance. It would in the absence of a conflicting context carry by Hindu Law an estate of inheritance. Tagore case (Ganendro Mohun Tagore v. Jutendro Mohun Tagore) (2), at p. 65. There are no express words in any of the four clauses prescribing the course of succession to the estate given to Rashbehari or limiting it to the male line as was the case in Kumar Tarakeswar Roy v. Kumar Shoshi Shikholeswar (3). The words in cls. 2 and 3 relied on by the plaintiffs by implication do not prescribe the course of succession. They occur in clauses where the testator was not prescribing the course of succession but was laying down the contingencies on the happening of which the property would go to other persons. The construction proposed by the plaintiffs would create an English estate tail male which was prohibited by the decision in Tagore case (2). It must be assumed that when the testator was making his will seven years later he must have had regard to the effect which the law of the country had attached to a disposition similar to an English estate tail male: Sreemuty Soorjémoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (4), at p. 550. There being no conflicting context to cut down the estate of general inheritance created in favour of Rashbehari the words in cl. 4 forbidding alienation must be rejected as being repugnant or rather as an attempt to take away the right of transfer which the law attaches to the estate which the testator has sufficiently shown his intention to create though he has added a qualification which the law does not recognize: Tagore case (2), at p. 65. I therefore hold that the estate given to Rashbehari is not an English estate tail male.

The testator has not stated expressly the time when the uncertain event specified in cl. 2 is to occur. In view of the provisions contained in s. 111, Succession Act, 1865, it may be contended that this time is the time of the death of the testator and the gift to Shib Narayan did not at all take effect. I express, however, no opinion on this question as it is an admitted fact in this case that after the happening of the contingency mentioned in cl. 2, Shib Narayan entered into possession of the disputed property to the exclusion of Rashbehari's daughter. What was then the nature of Shib Narayan's interest in the disputed property? In cl. 2 the testator has added the word 'purusanukromah' to the words 'Shatyaban Oh Dokholikar' while describing the nature of the interest given to Shib Narayan or his eldest son. The object of adding the word 'purusanukromah' was to prescribe expressly the course of succession to the estate created in favour of Shib Narayan or his eldest son. This word has not acquired any technical meaning. It is used in two senses: (1) from male to male and (2) from generation to generation. If the word was used by the testator in the first sense he would be creating an estate of inheritance which will be hit by the decision in the Tagore case (2). If he used the word in the second sense an estate of inheritance which would be valid in law. The contention of the plaintiffs is that the second construction would be inconsistent with the words "if any male child of their (two grandsons') family be not in existence" in cl. 3 and the words forbidding alienation in cl. 4 while the first construction would not.

This argument assumes that the aforesaid words in cl. 3 lay down the course of succession. There is no foundation however for such assumption as the testator has already prescribed the course of succession by the word 'purusanukromah' in cl. 2. In cl. 3 he was simply stating that on the death of his two grandsons or the failure of the male child of their family (at the time of his death the time of the occurrence of this uncertain event not being stated either expressly or by implication) the property would go to Peary Mohan or his eldest son. Where a clause or a word is susceptible of two meanings it must be interpreted according to that sense to which the law will give effect s. 71, Succession Act of 1865; Bhooban Mohini Debya v. Hurriish Chunder (5) at p. 147. If the word 'purusanukromah' be interpreted in the second sense it would not be inconsistent with the provisions contained in cl. 3. The law will give effect to this disposition as creating an absolute estate of general inheritance in favour of Shib Narayan and the words in cl. 4 prohibiting alienation would be rejected as repugnant to this estate. I see no reason, therefore, why I should not interpret the word "purusanukromah" as meaning "generation after generation." I accordingly hold that Shib Narayan got an estate of general inheritance and that the prohibition against alienation of this estate is void in law. The contingency mentioned in cl. 3 has not happened. Shib Narayan, therefore, acquired an absolute interest in the disputed property by Joy Kissen's will. After his death this interest has devolved on defendant No. 1 by inheritance. The Courts below were, therefore, wrong in holding that the defendant No. 1 has got only a life-interest in the disputed property. In view of my decision on the second question, the third question must be answered in the affirmative, i. e., in favour of the appellants. The result, therefore, is that this appeal succeeds. The judgments and decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the suit is dismissed with cost throughout to defendants No. 1 and 2.

Narsing Rau, J.—The main source of the difficulty in this case is the expression “purusanukromah” in para. 12 of the will. It is a Bengali expression though derived from Sanskrit, and the interpretation put upon it by the learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit and the learned Additional District Judge who heard the first appeal—both of them officers whose mother-tongue is Bengali—is entitled to great weight. The Subordinate Judge, after referring to the English translation of paras. 12 to 16 of the will given in the plaint and to the fact that the defendants challenge the correctness of the translation, proceeds to give his own translation of the relevant portion of para. 12 of the will thus:

“Within this land of 3 bighas 2 kottas I have built a two-storeyed pucca building, in the lower storey of which a public library has been established and a baitthakkhana in the upper storey My eldest son Haramohan who was malik of this building having died, his son Rashbehari has become the owner and possessor (Sattwadhikari O Dakhalkar) thereof according to previous arrangement; in case Rashbehari dies without male issue, then his brother Shib Narayan and on his death his eldest son will become owner and possessor thereof, generation after generation In the absence of male issue in their line my son Peary Mohan or his eldest son will become the owner and possessor thereof and none of my heirs shall have any right to alienate the aforesaid land and building.”

Thus the Subordinate Judge's rendering of “purusanukrame” is ‘generation after generation.’ He repeats this rendering in another part of the judgment; but in stating his conclusion, after considering certain other clauses of the will, he says that the testator has used the word “purushanukrame” in its “plain sense of succession by heirs male only of the body of the donees.” The Additional District Judge's translation of this part of para. 12 of the will runs:

“Upon the death of my eldest son Haramohan Mukhopadhaya, who was the malik of the said land and structure, his son Rashbehari Mukhopadhaya has become owner and occupant of the same. God forbid, if at the time of his death he does not leave behind any son, then his brother Shib Narayan Mukhopadhaya and in his absence his eldest son will become owner and occupant in the male line. God forbid, if my aforesaid two grandsons or any male descendant in their line does not survive, then my diving son Peary Mohan Mukhopadhaya or his eldest son will become owner and occupant and will continue to be so, but none of my heirs or anybody else is vested with any power to abolish the library from the lower storey or to transfer the aforesaid land and pucca structures.”

Thus the Additional District Judge's rendering of “purushanukrame” is in the male line. But in the very next sentence he says:

“All controversies have been centred round the words ‘Sattwaban O dakhalkar,’ ‘Purushanukrame’ and ‘Uttaradhikai’ (owner and possessor, for generation and heir).”

Here, therefore, his rendering of the word “purushanukrame” is for generations. In a later part of the judgment he states that the words ‘putra-pautradikrame,’ ‘purushanukrame,’ &c, “are very catching at first sight and they are often taken to imply estates of inheritance.” He repeats this observation on the next page. Still later he says that the undisputed case of both parties was, inter alia, that if Rashbehari died without leaving any male issue, then the property would pass to Shib Narayan and in his absence to his eldest son from generation to generation in the male line. (This translation is no longer undisputed.) Again in a succeeding passage he says:

“The expressions ‘Sattwadhikari’ ‘Sattwaban O Dakhalkar,’ and ‘Purushanukrame’ are often used in testamentary dispositions and gifts where an absolute estate of inheritance is intended in favour of the legatee or donee.”

Further down he says, speaking of the testator:

“He first stated that the property belonged to his eldest son Haramohan and that he having died, passed to his eldest son Rashbehari. The next provision was that if Rashbehari died leaving (sic) any male issue it would pass to the testator's second grandson Sibnarain or in his absence to his eldest son from generation to generation.”

His final conclusion, however, after considering certain other clauses of the will is put thus:

“So there can remain no doubt about the fact that the expression “purushanukrame” in this particular case was not used in the sense including the females also, but was totally exclusive of them.”

It is not easy to gather from these judgments what the Courts below considered to be the meaning of the expression “purushanukrame” standing by itself and apart from the other clauses of the will. The general effect of the judgments appears to be this: The plain or primary sense of the expression is in the male line, but it has also acquired in Bengali documents, a secondary meaning, generation after generation, and is often used to convey an absolute estate of general inheritance; but having regard to the other clauses of the will, it appears that in this particular provision the testator has used the word in its plain or primary sense of in the male line. In Wilson's Glossary (1855) the expression "purushanukrame" is translated as "by or in course of succession in the direct or male line." Our attention has also been invited to certain Bengali dictionaries, but as the definitions in those dictionaries repeat the word "purush" which is the source of the ambiguity, meaning either "man" or "generation" they do not seem to be of much assistance.

The net result is that the plain or primary sense of the expression is in the male line, (as stated in Wilson's Glossary and by the Subordinate Judge in his conclusion and as appears from the Additional District Judge's translation of para. 12), but that the expression is often used in Bengali documents in a more general sense to mean generation after generation and to convey an absolute estate of general inheritance (as stated more than once by the Additional District Judge in the judgment and as appears also from the Subordinate Judge's translation of para. 12).

The question now is: In which of these two senses has it been used in this particular provision? On this point, both the Courts below have found that it has been used in the plain or primary sense and not in the more general sense. The main argument on behalf of the appellants before us is this: Even assuming that the expression is ambiguous, s. 84, Succession Act, 1925, which by virtue of s. 57 and Sch. III to the Act, applies to all wills made by Hindus after September 1, 1870 and which therefore applies to the present will, requires that where a clause is susceptible of two meanings according to one of which it has some effect and according to the other of which it can have none, the former shall be preferred. If "purushanukrame" is interpreted as meaning in the male line the effect would be to create an estate in tail male. Such an estate cannot be created by a Hindu testator, so that this interpretation completely destroys the effect of the words, an estate of special inheritance is created, only to be instantly avoided as repugnant to Hindu Law. On the other hand, if the expression is given the more general meaning of which it is capable, namely generation after generation, and is construed as conveying an absolute estate of general inheritance, the clause will have effect according to its tenor subject to any other valid provision of the will. In these circumstances, the Court ought not to adopt the former construction and create an intestacy when another construction not leading to an intestacy is possible.

In my view, this argument must succeed. We have here an expression which is equally capable, when standing by itself in a Bengali document, of meaning either in the male line of succession or generation after generation. Is there anything in the context which compels us to adopt the former meaning and create an intestacy?

The provisions of the will relied upon for this purpose by the trial Court are: First, that in case Rashbehari leaves no male issue at the time of his death, the property is to go to his brother Sibnarain or his eldest son. Secondly, that in case Rashbehari and Sibnarain and their male descendants are not in existence, the property is to go to Peary Mohan or to his eldest son. Thirdly, that none of the testator's heirs or successors shall have any right to alienate the property. And fourthly, that the testator's heirs and the members of their families would all have a right to use the baithakkhana for dances, etc. in connection with any marriage etc. The first three clauses are taken from para. 12 of the will and the fourth from para. 16. It is said that these clauses clearly show that the testator's intention was not to give an absolute estate either to Rashbehari or to Sibnarain or Sibnarain's son Abani.

The argument is hardly convincing. Undoubtedly the testator meant to qualify his gift in certain ways: but this does not show that he did not intend to give an absolute estate subject to those qualifications. In fact, we may look upon the several clauses as so many provisos or exceptions to the disposition indicated in the previous part of the will. Let us, however, examine the clauses more closely. The first clause restricts the estate given to Rashbehari and has no direct bearing on the interpretation of the expression "purushanukrame" which occurs in the will only in connection with the estate given to Sibnarain and his eldest son. The clause, may, however, have an indirect bearing on the question, as showing the character of the estate given to Rashbehari and as suggesting by analogy the nature of the gift to those coming after him. From this point of view it is relevant to observe that the gift to Rashbehari was not of an estate descending entirely in the male line. For example, if Rashbehari had died leaving a son and that son had predeceased Shibnarain leaving a daughter, there would have been nothing in the will to prevent the daughter inheriting. For, Rashbehari's son would have excluded Sibnarain, and upon that son's death, the estate would have passed to his daughter, because the presence of Sibnarain would have excluded Peary Mohan or Peary Mohan's eldest son. It is thus clear that the estate given by the will to Rashbehari was not an estate restricted to the male line of succession. It may be noticed further that it by any combination of events the estate had passed to Peary Mohan's eldest son under the relevant clause of the will, the estate in his hands would have been an absolute one and would not have descended only to his male heirs, there being no such restriction in the will. Briefly, therefore, the estate given by the will was not, necessarily and always, an estate descending only to male holders whether in Rashbehari's line or in Peary Mohan's line. There is, therefore, no ground for crediting the testator with an intention to restrict the estate male holders in Sibnarain's line alone, and as we shall see presently he has not in fact done so. Let us now turn to the second clause which, literally translated, runs :

"God forbid, if my aforesaid two grandsons or the male descendants of their families are not in existence, then my existing son Peary Mohan Mukhopadhaya or his eldest son will become and remain owner and possessor."

It may be mentioned here that Rashbehari, Sibnarain, Peary Mohan and Peary Mohan's eldest son Rajendra were all in existence at date of the will and Sibnarain's eldest son Abani (defendant-appellant No. 1) had either been born or was en ventre sa mere; they were all in existence at the date of the testator's death. Now the clause in question merely says : "If my aforesaid two grandsons, etc., are not in existence" without mentioning any point of time. The testator could not have meant that if the contingency happened at any time, however remote, the estate was to go over to Peary Mohan or his eldest son, for Peary Mohan or his eldest son could not live for ever so as to be able to take the estate whenever the contingency happened. The testator had obviously some point of time in mind, although he has not mentioned it in the will. In these circumstances, we may well presume that the point of time intended was the date of the testator's death, and such a construction, besides being in consonance with the principle of s. 124, Succession Act, 1925 (which is one of the sections applicable to Hindu wills made after September 1, 1870), would accord quite well with the other provisions of the will. The testator first makes a gift to Rashbehari ; he then provides that if Rashbehari should die without leaving any sons, the estate is to go over to Sibnarain or his eldest son. He then sees that he has made no provision for the contingency of Rashbehari and Sibnarain and their male descendants, all predeceasing himself (the testator). He therefore makes the provision new under consideration. This is at least one possible reading of the will. On this view all that the clause provides or implies is that one or other of certain male holders shall take the estate upon the testator's death, but it imposes no restriction upon the nature of the estate in that holder's hands, once he has taken it. In other words, he takes the whole of the testator's estate without qualification. On the other hand, even if we presume no particular point of time for the happening of the contingency upon which the estate was to pass to Peary Mohan or his eldest son except, of course, that the contingency must happen during the lifetime of Peary Mohan or his son, the clause being otherwise meaningless—the words of the clause do not warrant the assumption of a gift of an estate in tail male. For suppose, as has actually happened, Rashbehari died without leaving a son and thereafter Sibnarain died leaving a son who survives both Peary Mohan and Peary Mohan's eldest son. Suppose later Sibnarain's son leaves a daughter, how can she be excluded from the succession by this clause ? Peary Mohan and his eldest son both being dead the gift to either of them can no longer take effect so that the clause cannot operate to exclude Sibnarain's son's daughter in the case put.

As regards the clause restraining alienation, it is well known that such a clause often occurs in Indian wills even where the testator has by a previous disposition given, in unambiguous terms, an absolute estate. The mere presence of such a clause is therefore no indication that an absolute gift was not intended by the previous disposition. The clause is, of course, of no legal effect. The clause giving a right of use of the baithak-khana to all the heirs of the testator and the members of their families on certain special occasions appears to be no more inconsistent with an absolute gift than with an estate in tail male. It follows therefore that none of the clauses relied upon are sufficient to negative the construction of the expression "puru-shanukrame" as meaning generation after generation and as conveying an absolute gift subject to any other valid provisions of the will. It has been contended on behalf of the respondents that in certain other paragraphs of the will, where the testator was beyond controversy making an absolute gift, he has not used the expression "purushanukrame." It may be that in view of the qualifications or restrictions which he was inserting in the will in respect of the baithakkhana, he desired to emphasize the fact that subject to those qualifications or restrictions the estate was to be enjoyed generation after generation. There is nothing in the will which compels us first to cut down the estate to an estate in tail male and then to say in consequence that such an estate, being repugnant to Hindu Law, must be further cut down to a series of life estates, with a resulting intestacy in respect of the remainder. I agree that the appeal must be allowed as directed by my learned brother.

NAGPUR HIGH COURT

First Appeals Nos. 6-B and 5-B of 1934

January 4, 1937

STONE, C. J. AND NIYOGI, J.

SHRIRAM—APPELLANT

versus

Mst. BANYA BAI alias GODAVARI—
RESPONDENT

Berar Inam Rules, 1859, rr. 5 (2), 3 — Inams—Succession—Certificate silent as to rule of devolution—Personal law, applicability—Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895), s. 3—Enfranchisement of inam—Burden of proof—Husband of deceased incumbent, if can come in as heir—Devolution—Grantee's co-sharer's lineal descendants becoming extinct—Escheat to Crown—Reversion to representatives of original grantee—Despandia allowance, when inam—Succession thereto—Dastaki, what is—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 33—Person acquiescing in decree appealed from, whether entitled to benefit of O. XLI, r. 33.

Where the inam is a Crown grant it will be governed by s. 3, Crown Grants Act which excludes the application of the personal law. If there is any ambiguity in the inam certificate or if the inam certificate is silent as to the rule of devolution the question will have to be resolved in accordance with the Inam Rules of 1859. In matters not expressly mentioned in the sanad or certificate or other documents evidencing the special terms of the grant in the particular case, devolution and the incidents of an inam estate in Berar are regulated by the Berar Inam Rules of 1859. 88 Ind. Cas. 347 (1), relied on. [p. 455, col. 2.]

Whether or not a particular inam estate has been enfranchised is a question of fact in each case, the burden of proving which rests on the party who asserts it. 36 Ind. Cas. 518 (2), relied on.

A widow of an inam grantee is a member of his family whereas a husband of a woman born in grantee's family is not a member of that family. The grant is made for the benefit of the grantee's family and cannot be enjoyed by any one who is outside that family. [p. 456, col. 1.]

If the share which is assigned to a co-sharer in the inam certificate is regarded as a distinct and independent grant, it will no doubt escheat to Govt. on extinction of the co-sharer's line. But where it is covered by a major grant, it does not escheat to the Crown but merges in the major grant of which it was a part and reverts to the representatives of the original (major) grantee.

Deshpandia allowance in Berar is an inam and is governed by the Inam Rules and succession thereto is prescribed by r. 5-(2). 75 Ind. Cas. 932 (5), relied on.

Under r. 32 of the Rules framed under s. 14 of the Pensions Act, 1872, (Act XXIII of 1871), as applied to Berar, the cash allowance payable to Deshmukhs and Deshpandias in commutation of their emoluments as expargana officials is paid to the person whose name has been recorded as dastaki. Under r. 36 of the aforesaid rules the dastaki is bound to distribute the allowance among all persons who are entitled to any share in it. These allowances are intended for the maintenance of the grantees and their descendants. [p. 458, col. 2.]

Order XLI, r. 33, Civil P. C., confers discretionary power on the Court. That power cannot be exercised in favour of a person who acquiesced in the lower Court's decree passed against him by payment of the decretal amount and bound himself not to appeal from the decree. [ibid.]

F. As. from the decree of the Court of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Daryapur, dated September 30, 1933.

Mr. T. L. Sheode, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. R. Bobde, and A. V. Khare, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal and First Appeal No. 5-B of 1934 arise respectively out of two suits, Civil Suit No. 107 of 1930 and Civil Suit No. 21 of 1931. The first suit was instituted by the appellant Shriram son of Deorao to recover possession of some fields at Itbarpur with mesne profits for three years 1927-28, 1928-29 and 1929-30 against the respondent's husband Maruti. The second suit was instituted by the aforesaid Maruti against the appellant Shriram and one Udhao to recover possession of five fields at Nandura with mesne profits for three years and also for a share of Lawajama (cash allowances paid by the Govt. to Deshpandes who were prior to the British Govt. hereditary officers) for 11 years. The respondent succeeded in both the suits and these two appeals have been preferred by Shriram.

The villages Peth Itbarpur and Nandura were granted on Palampat tenure by the British Govt. in 1867 to Ganpatrao Narayan and Khusalrao Bajinath and the grant was confirmed by an inam certificate delivered to the grantees on June 3, 1875. These two individuals were heads of two different families which had already separated before 1867. Shriram the appellant is now the head of Khusal Bajinath's family (the junior branch of the quondum joint family) and is the inam certificate holder. In Khusal's family there were four branches of which branch No. 3 was represented by Dhondu at the time of the grant in 1867. In the inam certificate of 1875 he is shown as a co-sharer holding 1/24th share of the whole inam. It is common ground that Dhondu's share was comprised in the eight-anna share granted to Khusal, the head of the junior branch. The dispute relates to the lands comprised in Dhondu's share. Dhondu died in 1888 survived by a daughter named Bani who died on November 5, 1918, without issue. She had been married to Maruti, who subsequent to her death married Bani the respondent. Maruti having died during the pendency of this litigation, is now represented by his widow Mst Bani alias Godavari. Dhondu's share devolved on his daughter Mst. Bani, Maruti's first wife. On his death Maruti took possession of the fields at Itbarpur and Shriram took possession of five fields at Nandura and Udhao of the rest. Shriram is the son of Deorao who was Khusal's daughter's son. Deorao, his father, was adopted by Khusal as his son. The contention as to the validity of his adoption was raised but later waived by reason of the fact that even without the adoption he, being the lineal descendant of Khusal, would be his heir. Shriram was recognised as the lawful heir of Khusal under the Inam Rules and was granted the inam certificate.

Shriram founded his claim on his being the head of the Khusal's branch of the family and a certificate holder. He alleged that Bani, the daughter of Dhondu, the recorded co-sharer in the inam certificate was only entitled to maintenance and that as her right did not devolve on her husband, Maruti, the lands comprised in her share reverted to him as the representative of the original grantee of the inam and also as head of the family who was the inam certificate holder. Maruti contended that under the Hindu Law which was applicable to the parties he had succeeded to the share of Bani, his wife, and that even if the inam r. 5 (2) governed the succession he was Bani's lineal heir. His contention prevailed in the lower Court which held that Dhondu's share after it vested in Bani became her stridhan which would pass as such to her husband as the next heir under the Hindu Law. It also held that even if inam r. 5 (2) applied to this case Maruti was the direct lineal of his wife.

The view taken by the lower Court that Maruti was the direct lineal heir of his wife is not supported by the learned Counsel for the respondent in this Court. He, however, sought to justify the lower Court's decree on other grounds, namely, (1) that the devolution of the property in question is not governed by Berar Inam Rules, 1859, (2) that even if the rules applied the case will be governed by r. 3, and not by rr. 5 (2) and (3) that irrespective of the question whether or not Maruti had title the plaintiff Shriram himself had no title to the property and consequently his suit should be dismissed.

As to the first ground it is urged that the inam certificate itself does not impose any limitation on succession. The inam certificate in col. 20 says that the grant was to be continued or fixed share to claimants, their descendants and co-sharers in perpetuity deducting Abkari. The argument is that the word "descendants" relates only to "claimants" and not to "co-sharer", and on this interpretation it is contended that the grant made to Dhondu was absolute and not trammelled by any conditions in respect of devolution. If this interpretation prevails, the result would be that a part of the grant will remain subject to the inam rules and another part will not be governed by the inam rules. An anomalous result like this would not have been contemplated by the grantor. As the grant is one and, so far as the grantor is concerned, indivisible, the whole as well as every part of it must continue to be governed, either by the inam rules or by the personal law of the parties. As the inam is a Crown grant, it will be governed by s. 3 of the Crown Grants Act (Act XV of 1895) which excludes the application of the personal law. If there is any ambiguity in the inam certificate or if the inam certificate is silent as to the rule of devolution the question will have to be resolved in accordance with the Inam Rules of 1859. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mir Subhan Ali v Imami Begum (1) ruled that in matters not expressly mentioned in the sanad or certificate or other documents evidencing the special terms of the grant in the particular case, devolution and the incidents of an inam estate in Berar are regulated by the Inam Rules of 1859.

Then it is urged that the inam had already been enfranchised when it was granted. Whether or not a particular inam estate has been enfranchised is a question of fact in each case, the burden of proving which rests on the party who asserts it: See Krishnaji v. Nilkanth (2). In the present case the respondent did not even raise the plea in the lower Court that the inam was enfranchised.

An argument is sought to be erected on the basis of a decision reported in Abdul Latif v. Mansinghrao (3). That was a case of inam which before the settlement was not subject to any quit rent but thereafter was made liable to pay a quit rent under r. 5. In this case it appears from Ex. D-11 that the Govt. demand of the villages was Rs. 1,239 before settlement, and that was the quit rent imposed at the settlement. It would further appear from that document that the grantees were put in a very favourable position inasmuch as the new arrangement left to the grantees a clear surplus of Rs. 490-2-0 in place of Rs. 251-6-3 which before the settlement they had been required to pay to the Govt.

As to the second ground, we are unable to see how the inam in question can be brought under r. 3. It is common ground that the grantees of the inam were the Deshpandes of the Pergana Daryapur and that the grant made in their favour by former Govts. for service which were being rendered by them in revenue department, was confirmed and continued in their favour although the services were discontinued. The inams so granted in lieu of lands or money stipends commonly called hugs and russums of offices, such as Deshmukh, Deshpandias, and others, the service of which has either been dispensed with or otherwise discontinued, are by r. 5 (2) directed to be disposed of according to cl. (2) of r. 5, if they are hereditary in their terms. In view of the history of the grant, r. 3 of the inam rules can have no application. The personal Jagirs regulated by r. 3 are thereby made subject to a legacy duty or succession fee. It is not alleged in this case that any legacy duty or succession fee was ever charged when the grant devolved on any heir. Even on the assumption that r. 3 applies, there is nothing in it to justify the view that a husband of a deceased incumbent is entitled to come in as heir. An ingenious argument is put forward that if a widow can succeed to her husband, there is no reason why a widow cannot succeed to his wife. The argument is specious but not sound because a widow of an inam grantee is a member of his family whereas a husband of a woman born in grantee's family is not a member of that family. The grant is made for the benefit of the grantee's family and cannot be enjoyed by any one who is outside that family, Maruti, therefore, could not come in as heir under either r. 5 or

r. 3 of the inam rules. Rule 3 is invoked for the reason that there had been adoptions in this family, and that adoptions are permitted by r. 3, whereas they are not permitted by r. 5. It has already been pointed that this inam is governed by r. 6, and although cl. 5 of that rule provides for special sanction of the Govt. before the right of adoption is admitted, that right was conceded later in 1863, as will appear from the foot note appended to that clause.

There appears to be no question that the devolution of the inam is regulated by r. 5 (2) and the learned Counsel for the respondent concedes that if that rule applies Maruti could not be the heir of his widow. Finding that he has no legs to stand on, he seeks to attack Shriram's title relying on Sahebrao v. Jaiwantrao (4). Much stress is laid on that case as a conclusive authority sustaining the respondent's claim and demolishing the appellant's, but on analysis of the facts of that case it would appear that its resemblance to this case is but superficial. That was a dispute between the certificate holder and a co-sharer and not, as here, between a certificate holder and a trespasser. Their Lordships indeed held in that case that the term "co-sharer" found in the inam certificate implies ownership and not a mere right to receive maintenance. The certificate holder's suit was dismissed on the ground that he and the ancestors of the co-sharer defendant, had already become separate by a partition before the inam was confirmed by the British Govt. and that the inam was continued in their favour according to their then existing and ascertained shares. The dispute pertained to Sonaji's 1/4 share which having been included in Yadoji's 8 annas share was taken by Yadoji's adopted son, Jaiwantrao, to the exclusion of Sahebrao who held the other 8 annas share. Their Lordships of the Privy Council did not decide the question whether Jaiwantrao was legally entitled to Sonaji's share. That question which was left undetermined in that case directly arises for decision in the present case where Shriram (appellant) stands in the position of Jaiwantrao and Ganesh Narayan (not a party to this suit) in that of Sahebrao. In the present case Dhondu's line, like Sonaji's line in the Privy Council case, became extinct and the legal consequences arising therefrom have to be examined to see which of the two contestants here is entitled to Dhondu's share.

Reference to the following pedigrees will serve to elucidate the situation :

SENIOR BRANCH = 0-8-0

JUNIOR BRANCH = 0-8-0

It will be apparent from the two pedigrees that the two branches are quite independent and that Dhondu was a member of the junior branch.

Now, in view of the Inam Rule 5-(2) which is made applicable by Rule 6 (2) which governs the inam under consideration, Dhondu's share could devolve only on Dhondu's lineal descendants. The question is : if the ownership of Dhondu's share becomes vacant consequent on failure of Dhondu's lineal descendants, who will be entitled to it ?

On behalf of the respondent it is contended that

(i) Dhondu's share would be regulated by the rule of succession prescribed by Hindu Law; either it will pass to Maruti, the husband of Dhondu's daughter Bani, or it will go to Dhondu's next reversioners.

(ii) The share would escheat to the Crown, the grantor of the inam.

But there is a third alternative which is contended for by the appellant but not conceded by the respondent; it is that it would merge in the grant made to Khushal and would therefore revert to the representative of Khushal to whom the inam was primarily granted by the Crown.

The first alternative must be summarily ruled out as it involves negation of the inam rules. It must therefore be held that neither Maruti's nor Dhondu's reversioners have any claim to Dhondu's share.

The second alternative merits serious consideration. Rule 5 (2) of the Inam Rules runs as follows :

"If the present incumbent is a descendant of the original grantee, the inam will be continued to him hereditarily, subject to the following conditions ;

First—Successions limited to direct lineal heirs and undivided brothers.

Second—The inam escheats to Govt. on failure of such heirs."

If the share which is assigned to Dhondu in the inam certificate (Ex. P-1) is regarded as a distinct and independent grant, it will no doubt escheat to Govt. but the terms of the inam certificate do not bear that construction. It purports to grant the two villages Nandura and Itbarpur to Ganpat Narayan and Khusal Bajinath and specifies certain persons, including Dhondhu Wasudeb, as co-sharers. The grant to co-sharers of the shares of which they were then in possession was covered by the grant made to Ganpat and Khusal. The minor was therefore comprised in the major grant. The grantor intended primarily to grant the villages to Ganpat and Khusal for the maintenance of the grantees and their descendants and but for the existence of some collaterals at the time of the grant, the grant would have benefited the grantees alone. That the names of co-sharers were not entered in column 1 but in column 23 indicates that the grant of the inam was substantially made for the benefit of the grantees named in column 1. It must also be observed that in column 1 the shares of the grantees are not specified in fractions as they would be had the intention been to grant the villages minus the shares recorded in column 23. These considerations warrant the construction that the grant of the villages to those mentioned in column 1 comprised the shares specified in column 23. This construction is fortified by the fact that Govt. did not claim Dhondhu's share by escheat. The inam certificate (Ex. P-1) only bears a note that Dhondhu's line has become extinct and that Dhondhu's name has been struck off. The result of this entry is as if the share had never been granted to Dhondhu.

Now if the Crown as the grantor does not claim Dhondhu's share by escheat and Dhondhu's name has been struck off the inam certificate, it must logically follow that it would merge in the grant to Khusal and revert to Khusal's representatives, as it was carved out of Khusal's grant. At this stage, a question may well arise whether this merger of Dhondhu's share would enure for the benefit of all the surviving sub-branches of the junior branch represented by Khusal or of Khusal's representative alone. But that question and the subsidiary question of maintenance of those who were in receipt of maintenance out of Dhondhu's share do not directly call for decision and have not been debated at the bar. We therefore think it is unnecessary to pronounce our opinion on them.

The learned Counsel for the respondent spared no angle of attack in his vigorous contest of the appellant's claim. It is contended that although the respondent was a trespasser the appellant could not succeed merely on the averment that he was Khusal's representative and a certificate holder but that it was imperative on him to set forth the particular capacity vis-a-vis Dhondhu, in which he asserted his right to possession of Dhondhu's share, viz. whether he was Dhondhu's co-owner or reversioner. There is no substance in the contention which involves a misconception of the nature of the plaintiff's claim. The appellant did not sue either as a co-owner or a reversioner of Dhondhu but he sued on the basis that Dhondhu's share merged in the grant to Khusal whose representative he was. That is a perfectly clear, intelligible and valid claim and it must succeed.

That disposes of First Appeal No. 6-B of 1934, and consequently also First Appeal No. 5-B of 1934. It has been held that Maruti had neither title nor right to possession of the fields comprised in Dhondhu's share; much less would he be entitled to get any share out of Lawajama, that is cash allowance, received by Shriram as the dastaki (holder of Pension Payment Order). Under r. 32 of the rules framed under s. 14 of the Pensions Act, 1872, (Act XXIII of 1871) as applied to Berar, the cash allowance payable to Deshmukhs and Deshpandias in commutation of their emoluments as ex-pargana officials is paid to the person whose name has been recorded as dastaki. It is admitted that Shriram was the dastaki. Under r. 36 of the aforesaid rules the dastaki is bound to distribute the allowance among all persons who are entitled to any share in it. These allowances are intended for the maintenance of the grantees and their descendants. Maruti was not entitled to any share as he was not a descendant of the grantee. It was held by the Judicial Commissioner's Court in Chandrabhaga v. Ganesh Kesheo (5) approving of a ruling of the Financial Commissioner that Deshpandia allowance in Berar is an inam and is governed by the Inam Rules and succession thereto is prescribed by r. (5)2. We have heard nothing against the correctness of the view taken in that case.

It is urged on behalf of Udhao who is respondent No. 2 in First Appeal No. 5-B of 1934 that under O. XLI, r. 33, Civil P. C. the benefit of the decision of this appeal should be given to him. Order XLI, r. 33 Civil P. C. confers discretionary power on the Court. That power cannot be exercised in his favour in view of his admission that he acquiesced in the lower Court's decree passed against him by payment of the decretal amount and binding himself not to appeal from the decree.

The result is that both appeals succeed. The appellant's (Shriram's suit is decreed with costs in both Courts. The parties agreed in the lower Court on June 22, 1932 that the mesne profits claimed for three years amounted to Rs. 1,200. The decree will include the lands described in the plaint, and also Rs. 1,200 as mesne profit. The respondent's suit, namely, Civil Suit No. 21 of 1931, stands dismissed as against the appellant only with costs in both Courts.

RESPONDENTS

Landlord and tenant—Permanent tenancy — Proof of— Recital in mortgage-deed by tenant that tenancy was permanent — Admissibility — Value of, against landlord—Tenant mortgaging land—He must show that landlord was aware of and acquiesced in the transaction, in order to create inference of permanent tenancy—Inference of permanent tenancy, if can be drawn from mere non-evicting of heirs of tenant—Death of original tenant — Landlord subsequently passing receipts for rent not in names of his heirs but in name of original tenant—Whether shows that landlord wanted to prevent heirs from acquiring permanent rights in land—Mere fact that small portion of land was settled for building house and that house was erected, whether shows that tenancy was intended to be permanent — Failure to demand enhanced rent—Inference as to permanent tenancy — Adverse possession—Notice by landlord to quit disobeyed by tenant — Landlord not taking further steps to evict but accepting rent for more than 12 years—Subsequent suit by landlord for ejectment—Tenant cannot plead that he has acquired right of possession of property by adverse possession—Practice — Non-joinder of parties — Suit cannot be dismissed.

A recital in a mortgage-deed executed by the tenant that the rent payable for the land was fixed permanently is in admissible in evidence in a suit by the landlord for ejectment of the tenant and even if it is admissible it cannot have any weight as against the landlord. [p. 460, col. 1.]

In order, to create an inference that the landlord had made a permanent settlement of the land, it is incumbent on the tenants to show, not merely that the successors of the original tenant and persons who were ready to lend money to them had proceeded on the assumption that the original tenant had permanent rights in the land, but that the landlord, had been aware of and acquiesced in these transactions. The mere fact that the successors of the original tenant had mortgaged the land and the mortgage-deed recited that the land was permanently settled and the mortgagee had purchased the land in execution of the mortgage-deed is not sufficient to prove the permanent tenancy when there is no evidence to show that the landlord had recognised the mortgagee as his tenant after the mortgagee had purchased an interest in the property in execution of his mortgage decree. [ibid.]

Landlord may refrain for one reason or another from evicting the heirs of their tenants and no inference as to the permanency of a particular tenancy can be drawn from such conduct on their part. 85 Ind. Cas. 103 (1), relied on. [p. 460, col. 2.]

Where the landlord of a holding is a lawyer, his conduct in taking care to see that receipts for rent were granted to the original tenant's sons and grandsons; not in their own names, but in the name of the original tenant is, of greater significance and suggests that, while reluctant to evict the original tenant's sons he did not admit that they had and was anxious to prevent their acquiring permanent rights in the land. [ibid.]

The mere fact that the land settled with the original tenant was a very small parcel of land, and, very probably, it was intended from the beginning that he should build a house for himself on it and that a house was constructed would not of itself create any strong likelihood that the tenancy was intended to be a permanent one. [ibid.]

From the mere failure on the part of the landlord to demand enhanced rent no inference can be drawn that the tenancy was a permanent one.

If a landlord serves a notice to quit on a tenant and, instead of taking further steps to evict him when the notice is disobeyed, accepts rent from him for a period of more than twelve years, the tenant cannot, if the landlord subsequently institutes an ejectment suit, take the plea that he has acquired a right to remain in occupation of the property by adverse possession. 150 Ind. Cas. 555 (4), relied on. [p. 461, col. 1.]

A suit cannot be dismissed in toto on the mere ground of non-joinder of parties. [p. 461, col. 2.]

Mr. S. C. Mazumdar, for the Appellants in both.

Mr. Girijanandan Prasad for Mr. Ch. Mathura Prasad, for the Respondents in No. 304, only.

Judgment.—These two appeals, which have been heard together, arise out of appellate decrees of the District Judge of Manbhum, dismissing suits in which it was sought to evict the defendants from certain land which was originally settled with their grandfather, one Bisu Keot, some sixty years or so ago. Bisu Keot constructed a house on this land, and, subsequently, his two sons Debakar Keot and Rakhal Keot seem to have partitioned the house between them. For that reason, apparently, two suits were instituted, one against the son of Debakar Keot and the other against the sons of Rakhal Keot. The proprietor of the land in suit was Rai Bahadur R. C. Sinha who, it is said, was at one time the Govt. Pleader at Purulia. In 1924 the Rai Bahadur sold this and other land to the plaintiffs.

The question that arises in each of the appeals is whether or not the Courts below were correct in drawing from the circumstances, which were proved, the inference that the tenancy of Bisu Keot was a permanent tenancy and his grandsons were not liable to be evicted. In one of the suits reliance was placed on the circumstance that Debakar Keot had mortgaged his interest in the property and that in due course this mortgage had been sued upon and a decree obtained. This was in 1905. The mortgaged property was sold in execution of the decree, and, in 1911, was reconveyed by the decree-holder who had purchased it himself, to Rajani Keotani, the wife of Debakar Keot. Later, in 1913, Debakar Keot mortgaged his interest in the property again, and, in 1924, the mortgagee assigned his right under the mortgage to a third person. There is a recital in one of these mortgage deeds that the rent payable for the land in suit was fixed permanently. Clearly, however, this was not, strictly speaking, admissible in evidence at all, and, if it had been, could not have been of any weight as against the landlord. The learned District Judge observed that there was no reason to suppose that the litigation which ended in the mortgage decree passed in 1905 was collusive. That may very well be so. It may be that Debakar Keot, and the persons who advanced money to him on the security of his interest in the property, believed that he and his brother Rakhal Keot had permanent rights in it. In order, however, to create an inference that the landlord had made a permanent settlement of the land, it was incumbent on the defendants to show, not merely that the sons of Bisu Keot and persons who were ready to lend money to them had proceeded on the assumption that Bisu Keot had permanent rights in the land, but that the landlord, had been aware of and acquiesced in these transactions. No evidence was, however forthcoming to show that the landlord had recognised the mortgagee as his tenant after the mortgagee had purchased an interest in the property in execution of his mortgage decree. The learned District Judge ought, I think, to have been the more chary about drawing the inference which he did from the behaviour of Debakar Keot in mortgaging his interest in the property, as it was in evidence that the landlord had not recognised the sons and grandsons of the original tenant, Bisu Keot. Receipts for rent apparently continued to be issued in the name of Bisu long after Bisu died. It is contended that, if the landlord had not recognized Bisu's heirs as having any rights in the land he would have taken steps to evict them and would not have permitted them, as he did, to continue for many years in possession. As, however, was pointed out by Chakravarty, J., in Abdul Hakim Khan Chowdhury v. Elahi Baksha Saha (1), landlords may refrain for one reason or another from evicting the heirs of their tenants and no inference as to the permanency of a particular tenancy can be drawn from such conduct on their part. To my mind, when it is remembered that the landlord of this particular holding was a lawyer, his conduct in taking care to see that receipts for rent were granted to Bisu's sons and grandsons, not in their own names, but in the name of Bisu, is, of greater significance and suggests that, while reluctant to evict Bisu's sons he did not admit that they had and was anxious to prevent their acquiring, permanent rights in the land. Another circumstance, on which the Courts below relied was that Bisu Keot had erected a house on the land which was settled with him. In this connection the learned District Judge relied on Shaikh Dargahan v. Hafiz Mohammad (2). The question, however, that arose in that case was whether the circumstance that the buildings standing on certain land were kachcha and not pakka raised a presumption that the land had not been settled permanently. That question was answered in the negative. The decision has no real application to the facts of the present case. The land settled with Bisu Keot was a very small parcel of land, and, very probably, it was intended from the beginning that he should build a house for himself on it. The mere fact that this was so and that a house was constructed would not of itself create any strong likelihood that the tenancy was intended to be a permanent one. The house does not appear to be of any great value and, although a portion of it is made of bricks it is not clear when this portion was constructed. An attempt to evict the defendants was made as early as 1922 and it is by no means impossible that certain alterations were made to the house then with a view to creating a defence in the ejectment suit which was threatened. Thirdly, the learned District Judge relied on the circumstance that the rent payable for the land was a very low one, namely, four annas a year and that, although the land was situated in the town of Purulia and land values there were rising, no attempt had ever been made by the landlord to enhance it. In this connection the lower Appellate Court referred to Bireswar Mookherji v. Troilokhya Das (3). That was a case in which land in Howrah had been let out for building purposes and, although the value of land there had been rising quite abnormally for some considerable time prior to the institution of the suit, no demand had ever been made for the payment of enhanced rent. It is not clear to me that the circumstances in this case are at all parallel. It may perhaps be that the value of the land in suit has appreciated since Bisu Keot entered into occupation of it, but there does not appear to be any evidence on the record to show that over any considerable period there has been a marked and progressive rise in the value of land in this locality. In any event, failure on the part of the landlord to demand enhanced rent would have to be set against the fact that he contemplated evicting the tenant in 1922, that he did not acquiesce in any of the alienations and that he refused to recognize the heirs of Bisu Keot. In my view the proper inference to be drawn from the circumstances, taken as a whole, is that the tenancy was not a permanent one.

On behalf of the respondents in Second Appeal No. 304 of 1940 it was suggested that they had acquired a right to hold the land in suit permanently on a rent of four annas by adverse possession. This plea was not, however, taken in the Courts below and there is clearly no substance in it. As I said at the outset, there was no very good reason why two suits instead of one were brought. The defendants in both suits are joint tenants, the landlord, it appears, never having recognized the sub-division of the property or accepted rent from each set of defendants separately. The mere fact therefore, that the defendants in the suit out of which Second Appeal No. 304 of 1940 arises may not themselves have paid rent since 1922 when a notice to quit was served on them, is of no importance. The rent has admittedly been paid by some of the joint tenants. If a landlord serves a notice to quit on a tenant and, instead of taking further steps to evict him when the notice is disobeyed, accepts rent from him for a period of more than twelve years, the tenant cannot, if he subsequently institutes an ejectment suit, take the plea that he has acquired a right to remain in occupation of the property by adverse possession. (vide Datto Shivram v. Babasaheb Malhar) (4). Second Appeal No. 304 of 1940 will be allowed to this extent that it will be declared that the defendants are liable to be evicted. As, however, it was not proved that a proper notice to quit had been duly served, it will be necessary for the plaintiffs to institute another suit. The suit out of which Second Appeal No. 303 of 1940 arises was dismissed not only on the merits but also on the ground of non-joinder of parties. The person, who it was said, ought to have been joined in that suit was Bhim Keot who was a defendant in the other suit. The suit ought clearly not to have been dismissed in toto on such a ground. Second Appeal No. 303 of 1940 will be allowed and the suit will be decreed. The appellants are entitled to recover costs throughout except that in this Court I would not allow any hearing fee as there was no contest except by the guardian ad litem of the minor respondents in one of the two appeals.

Order accordingly.

DAVIS, C. J. AND TYABJI, J.

MULCHAND CHANDUMAL AND ANOTHER

—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 AND 2—

APPELLANTS

HARKISHINDAS PARMANAND AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS NOS. 1-4 AND DEFENDANT
No. 3—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Point that suit instituted under section was not validly instituted as it was not instituted by all those to whom consent was given, when can be raised for first time in appeal—Applicability of s. 92 whether depends upon whether defendants had or had not objected to form of suit—Consent to institute suit given to certain individuals—Suit instituted by some of them only, whether validly instituted—“Two or more persons”, meaning explained—Practice—Pleadings—Plaint returned for presentation to proper Court—Subsequent representation to same Court—Plaint re-admitted without giving old number—True copies of written statement of old plaint put on record—No objection by plaintiff—They held must be taken to have admitted these as pleadings of defendant.

If the facts are in dispute, the point that the suit was not instituted by all those to whom consent was given to institute the suit by the Collector under s. 92 read with s. 93, Civil P. C., and therefore was not validly instituted, should not be allowed for the first time in appeal. But where there is no dispute about the facts the point can be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal. [p. 462, col. 2.]

The applicability of s. 92, Civil P. C., does not depend upon whether the defendants had or had not taken objection to the form of the suit. The form of the suit is laid down by law. The Legislature requires that if a suit of this kind is to be instituted it must be instituted in a particular way, and it is not open either to the plaintiffs or to the defendants, as it were, to contract themselves out of this section and to say in effect "we do not mind if the law in this matter is or is not observed." [p. 464, col. 1.]

Where consent has been given to two or more persons, only some of those persons, even if they are more than two, cannot institute the suit. A condition precedent to the valid institution of the suits is the fulfilment of the conditions of the consent which has been given. The section does not do contemplate that some of those persons should institute a suit as plaintiffs while others who, after consent is given, have changed their minds, should be joined as defendants. 174 Ind. Cas. 870 (1), explained. 124 Ind. Cas. 220 (3), relied on.

The phrase in s. 92, Civil P. C., "two or more persons" means, two or more individuals who are named or so described in the consent that they can be identified.

The plaint was at first returned to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court and was then re-presented to the same Court when it was re-admitted without giving to the suit on re-admission the same number as was given to the proceeding in the old suit, when the written statement already filed by the defendants in the first suit would automatically have become part of the record of the proceedings in the second. However, true copies of the defendants' written statement in the first proceedings were put upon the record in these proceedings, and neither plaintiff nor the defendant objected: [p. 462, col. 2.]

Held, that it must be taken that they accepted these true copies of these written statements as the pleadings of the defendants in the case.

F. A. against the judgment and decree of the First Class Sub-Judge, Hyderabad, dated July 7, 1938.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Appellants.

Mr. Fatehchand Assudomal, for the Respondents.

Davis, C. J.—This is an appeal against the judgment of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Hyderabad who decreed the plaintiffs' suit under s. 92, Civil P. C., praying for the removal of the two defendants by name Mulchand and Hassomal from the position of trustees of a public charitable trust for the benefit of the panchayat of the Hindu Punjabis of the Darya caste of Hyderabad, and certain others, beneficiaries in the trust, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from alienating, interfering or damaging the trust property. It appears from the outset that there was some doubt as to the Court in which this suit should be instituted. For instance, the learned Judge points out that there was on the record no written statement of the defendants, for the plaint was at first returned to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court and was then represented to the same Court when it was re-admitted without giving to the suit on re-admission the same number as was given to the proceedings in the old suit when the written statement already filed by the defendants in the first suit would automatically have become part of the record of the proceedings in the second. However, true copies of the defendants' written statement in the first proceedings were put upon the record in these proceedings, and neither plaintiff nor the defendant objected. Therefore it must be taken that they accepted these true copies of these written statements as the pleadings of the defendants in the case.

There appears however to have been a more serious irregularity in the institution of the suit to which objection was taken in the memorandum of appeal but to which no objection was taken by the defendants in the suit in the trial Court, and it is urged before us by the learned Advocate for the respondents that the defendants should not be allowed in appeal to take this point for the first time, this point being, that the suit was not instituted by all those to whom consent was given to institute the suit by the Collector under s. 92 read with s. 93, Civil P. C. Were the facts in any way in dispute, we might have said that though s. 92 is clearly to be strictly construed, we have before us, raised for the first time in an appeal, a mixed question of law and fact, that this was a case on facts of which the other side should have had due notice and time to meet, and that we would not allow such a case to be raised in appeal for the first time. But there is no dispute about the facts in this case. It is not disputed that a petition to the Collector to give his consent under s. 92, Civil P. C., to the institution of this suit was made by five persons, and that as, after consent was given, one of the five persons was unwilling to be a party to the institution of the suit, he was joined as a party as defendant No. 3. But we do not think that when s. 92, Civil P. C., permits consent to be given to certain individuals, to institute a suit relating to a matter of public concern, that the section contemplates that some of those persons should institute a suit as plaintiffs while others who, after consent is given, have changed their minds, should be joined as defendants.

Reference has been made in arguments before us to a case of the Privy Council reported in Ali Begam v. Badra-ul-Islam Alikhan (1), and it was urged on behalf of the respondents, who are the plaintiffs, that according to this judgment, the absence of one plaintiff from the record as a plaintiff does not matter if he is upon the record as a defendant. It is true that in the Privy Council case one of the persons to whom consent was given for the institution of the suit, and who was joined as a plaintiff in the institution of the suit, was in the appeal joined as a respondent. But the meaning and effect of their Lordships' judgment, as we read it, is not that the plaintiff to whom consent among others was given to institute a suit and who changed his mind thereafter should be joined as a defendant, but only that provided the suit was properly instituted, what happened thereafter was not affected by the provisions of s. 92, Civil P. C. Their Lordships say (p. 754*):

"Where the consent in writing of the Advocate-General or Collector has been given to a suit by three persons as plaintiffs the suit cannot validly be instituted by two only. The suit as instituted must conform to the consent. On the other hand, if the three persons join as plaintiffs and two of them die pending suit, the suit does not become defective or incompetent: Anand Rao v. Ramdas Daduram (2). There is no provision whatever in the Court for recourse being had to the Advocate-General or Collector during the course of a suit or of any proceedings in appeal. As sub-s. (2) of s. 92 sufficiently shows, the consent in writing is a condition of the valid institution of a suit and has no reference to any other stage. When once validly instituted it is a representative suit subject to all the incidents affecting suits in general and representative suits in particular."

We do not think that the judgment can be read as an authority for the argument that s. 92, Civil P. C., should not be strictly construed, conferring as it does upon certain individuals certain rights which they would not otherwise possess. We may also refer to a case reported in Pitchayya v. Venkatakrishnamacharlu (3) where it is laid down that "a suit under s. 92, Civil P. C., must be instituted by all those who obtain sanction; if not, it is invalid and the defect cannot be cured by impleading such of those who have not joined as plaintiffs, as defendants to the cause."

The Judges in that case referred to two other Madras cases, Bagavannarayana v. Perumallacharyulu (4) and Venkatesha Maia v. Ramayya Hegade (5). The learned Judges in that case refer to "sanction," but reference to s. 92, Civil P. C., itself will show that what is to be given is not sanction but consent, the word "sanction" being used in a different sense in s. 93, Civil P. C. But this makes no difference to the judgment in that case. In that case the learned Judges pointed out how necessary it is that s. 92, Civil P. C., should be strictly interpreted, for the consent given by the Advocate-General or by the Collector is a consent given after a consideration of the many factors involved in the proper granting of a consent, and one most important factor must be the character and position of those who apply for the consent to institute what is really a representative suit relating to a matter of public interest and importance. The object of requiring consent for the institution of the suit is, as the learned Judges pointed out, not only to safeguard the rights of the public, but also to safeguard the rights of the institution and the trustees. The suit being a representative one, it is necessary to see that persons who come forward are persons having an interest in the trust properties and persons who can safely be trusted with the conduct of the suit. Even though the public are technically parties, still the plaintiffs who file the suit have very large powers in the shaping and the conduct of the suit. As a matter of general experience such suits will be left by those whom the plaintiffs represent to the plaintiffs themselves. Further, the consent required by s. 92, Civil P. C., is a protection to the trustees and the institution. It prevents the trustees being involved in litigation and expense for reasons of enmity or by persons of no substance. If, as the learned Judges pointed out, two out of three persons, to whom consent was given, could file a suit, the third person may well be just that substantial person whose presence induced the Advocate-General or the Collector to give the necessary consent.

It is true that in this case the defendants themselves did not object to the fact that one of those to whom consent was given would not join as a plaintiff to the suit, for this fact was stated in the plaint, and to the paragraph in which this fact was stated the defendants took no objection. We do not think the applicability of s. 92, Civil P. C., depends upon whether the defendants had or had not taken objection to the form of the suit. The form of the suit is laid down by law. The Legislature requires that if a suit of this kind is to be instituted it must be instituted in a particular way, and we do not think it is open either to the plaintiffs or to the defendants, as it were, to contract themselves out of this section and to say in effect "we do not mind if the law in this matter is or is not observed." While it is true that the purpose of the section is to protect the trustees from vexatious suits, it is also to protect the interests of the public. The interests of the public are quite as important as the interests of the trustees, and the interests of the public should be protected in the manner the Legislature has by s. 92, Civil P. C., provided. We do not think therefore that s. 92, Civil P. C., can be construed loosely that where consent has been given to two or more persons, only some of those persons, even if they are more than two, may institute this suit. A condition precedent to the valid institution of the suits is the fulfilment of the conditions of the consent which has been given.

In this case the consent given by the Collector, as it stands, might be construed loosely as consent given to Bhai Harkishindas Parmanand, Mukhi of the Punjabi Pan-chayat and others who should join with him as plaintiff. But the order of the Collector makes it clear that when he gave his consent to the institution of the suit by Bhai Harkishindas Parmanand and others in the form of an endorsement upon the petition, those others must be the other petitioners who were joined with Harkishindas Parmanand in asking for consent. The order of the Collector cannot be construed to mean that consent is granted to Bhai Harkishindas Parmanand and any others whom he might like to join with him; and the phrase in s. 92, Civil P. C., "two or more persons" means, we think, two or more individuals who are named or so described in the consent that they can be identified. We do not suppose that the Collector ever contemplated that the words of his order should be read apart from the petition to which it relates and in response to which it was made. That petition was made by Bhai Harkishindas Parmanand and four others, who signed the petition as parties to it, one of whom was defendant No. 3 and Bhai Harkishindas Parmanand and those others should have instituted the suit. They did not do so, but one of them Bhai Khiomal Motumal desired to take no part in the institution of the suit after consent was given by the Collector to him, among others, and he was therefore joined as defendant. We do not think therefore that this suit was validly instituted, and we think that the appeal must be allowed on this ground, and the suit of the plaintiffs should be dismissed. We think that as the point comes before us as a point of law, it is open to us in first appeal to consider it. It is the duty of Courts to conform strictly with the provisions of s. 92, Civil P. C. As however the point was raised for the first time in appeal, we think we should make no orders as to costs. We accordingly allow the appeal but make no order as to costs.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 42 of 1939

April 28, 1941

HARRIES, C. J. AND FAZL ALI, J.

KANIRAM GANPAT RAI—ASSESSEE—
PETITIONER*versus*COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BIHAR AND ORISSA—OPPOSITE PARTY

Income-tax — Estoppel — Income-tax Authorities coming to conclusion in previous year that certain debts had not become bad—If can come to conclusion in next accounting year that those debts had become bad long before—Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 66 (3)—Finding of fact—Question whether debt is bad is a question of fact.

Where income-tax officials have, after enquiry, proceeded to assess the assessee on a certain basis, though they may be entitled to reopen the enquiry, they cannot arbitrarily change the assessment simply on the ground that the succeeding officer does not agree with the preceding officer's finding. But if he wants to do so, there should be facts which would entitle him to do it. If fresh facts come to light which on an investigation would entitle the Income-tax Officer to come to a different conclusion from that of his predecessor he is entitled to reopen the question. The Commissioner of Income-tax is justified under the law to disallow the claim of the assessee in respect of the alleged bad debts on the ground that these debts had become bad long before the accounting year, though previous to the accounting year the claim was disallowed on the ground that it was premature and that the debts had not become bad till then, provided fresh materials and facts come to the knowledge of the Income-tax Authorities on the second occasion. 126 Ind. Cas. 273 (1), followed.

Whether the debt had become bad long before is a question of fact, and the High Court cannot in reference disturb the finding where there was evidence in support of the finding.

Misc. Judi. Case by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, dated October 10, 1939.

Messrs. S. K. Majumdar and Vishnudeva Narain, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. M. Gupta, for the Opposite Party.
Harries, C. J.—This is a reference made by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, under s. 66 (3), Indian Income Tax Act.

To appreciate the points involved, it will be necessary shortly to set out the facts of the case:—

For the assessment year 1935-36 the assessee claimed that a large number of debts had become bad and that he was entitled to write off the same. Amongst these debts were: (1) Rs. 159-6-0 said to be due to the assessee from Raja Ram Khora; (2) a sum of Rs. 1,524 said to be due from Ramjatan Ram; and (3) Rs. 1,220 said to be due from Charitar Ram of Ramkunda. The Income-tax authorities rejected the assessee's contention that these debts had become bad in the accounting year. They found that the debts had long before become bad and the claim should have been made very much earlier.

It appears that the assessee made a similar claim in respect of these three debts for the year 1934-35. On that occasion the Income-tax Officer disallowed the claim on the ground that the debts had become bad long before that accounting year. On appeal the Assistant Commissioner, though upholding the decision of the Income-tax Officer, disagreed with the grounds for such opinion. He disallowed the claim to write off these debts in the year in question not on the ground that they had become bad long before but on the ground that the claim was premature, that is that the debts had not become bad. The learned Commissioner upheld the view of the Assistant Commissioner, and, therefore, we find that in the year 1934-35 the Income-tax authorities had come to the conclusion that these three debts were not bad and that a claim that an allowance should be made in respect of them in that accounting year was premature. In the following year we find the Income-tax authorities coming to an entirely different conclusion and holding that these debts had become bad long before the accounting year 1935-36, and, therefore, no allowance could be made in respect of them in that accounting year. Having regard to these conflicting findings of the Income-tax authorities, this Court directed the Commissioner to state a case upon the following question:

"Was the Commissioner of Income-tax justified under the law to disallow the claim of the petitioner in respect of the alleged bad debts due from Raja Ramkhora, Ramjatan Ram and Charitar Ram of Ramkunda (items Nos. 18, 20 and 21 of his judgment) on the ground that these debts had become bad long before the accounting year, though previous to the accounting year the claim was disallowed on the ground that it was premature and that the debts had not become bad till then."

In the case stated by the Commissioner the relevant portion of the various orders of the officers concerned are set out, and the Commissioner expresses the view that as there is no bar by way of res judicata in income-tax proceedings it was open to the authorities in 1935-36 to come to a conclusion contrary to the conclusion arrived at in 1934-35.

It is conceded that the principle of res judicata does not apply in income-tax proceedings; but it is said that in such proceedings an Income-tax Officer should not differ from a previous decision on the same matter unless new facts have been placed before him. Reliance was placed by Mr. Majumdar, who has argued this case very fully, upon the case of T. M. M. Sankaralinga Nadar v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras (1), in which a Full Bench laid down that though an Income-tax Officer is not bound by the rule of res judicata or estoppel by record, yet he can re-open the matter of assessment only if fresh facts come to light, which, on investigation, would entitle the officer to come to a conclusion different from that of his predecessor. At p. 434* their Lordships observed:—

"The next question is whether even assuming that the matter is not res judicata, it would not create an estoppel by record against the income-tax officials.

In this connection the argument of Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyangar is that even treating the income-tax officials as a quasi-judicial body and not a Court, the principles of natural justice and expediency ought to prevent Income-tax Officers from going back on their previous decisions. Reference has been made to the passage in Halsbury's Laws of England which I have already quoted.

It seems to us that where income-tax officials have, after enquiry, proceeded to assess the assessee on a certain basis, though they may be entitled to reopen the enquiry, they cannot arbitrarily change the assessment simply on the ground that the succeeding officer does not agree with the preceding officer's finding. The position is just like the position of any two parties who have proceeded on a certain basis in their relations. It may be open to one party to reopen the matter. But if he wants to do so, there should be facts which would entitle him to do it. If fresh facts come to light which on an investigation would entitle the Income-tax Officer to come to a different conclusion from that of his predecessor he is entitled to reopen the question. But if there are no fresh facts, it is difficult to see how he can arbitrarily go behind the finding of his predecessor. The same principles of natural justice or judicial dealing, which Courts impose upon Income-tax Officers, would prevent them capriciously setting aside the orders of their predecessors based on enquiry."

That the Income-tax authorities in the year 1935-36 differed from the authorities in the previous year is clear as in 1934-35 it had been held that the debts had not yet become bad, whereas in 1935-36 it was held that they had become bad long before that accounting year. Following the principles laid down in the Madras Full Bench decision, with which I respectfully agree, it is necessary to consider whether the Income-tax authorities in 1935-36 had any fresh facts before them which would permit them to come to a different conclusion from their predecessors.

It would appear as if the assessee's claims with regard to these three debts do not seem to have been seriously pressed. For the year 1935-36 the Assistant Commissioner said so in so many words and disallowed the claim. The Commissioner was not satisfied that the claim with regard to these three debts was abandoned and called for a report from the Assistant Commissioner, and that report also makes it clear that it was not strenuously urged that these debts were not old and bad a long time before. In any event, the Commissioner on the second occasion went into the matter thoroughly. The assessee appeared before him with his Advocate. The assessee submitted notes of accounts to the Commissioner, and he took each item separately and came to the conclusion that each of the three debts in question was old and had become bad many years before the assessee first made the claim. There can be no doubt that on this last occasion the Commissioner's inquiry was a thorough one conducted in the presence of the assessee and his lawyer, and his finding is based on material supplied to him at that hearing by the assessee or his lawyer. There is nothing to show that these materials were before the authorities on the previous occasion. That the point was not free from difficulty appears to be clear. On the first occasion the Income-tax Officer had held that the debts had long since become bad, whereas his superiors, the Assistant Commissioner and the Commissioner had come to a different view. It is, therefore, not strange that when the matter is further investigated and fresh material produced the Assistant Commissioner and the Commissioner on the second occasion should have come to a different conclusion from that of their predecessors. As there were fresh materials on this second occasion, it cannot be said as a matter of law that the Income-tax authorities were not entitled to come to a different conclusion. Whether the debt had become bad long before is a question of fact, and as there was evidence to support it this Court cannot disturb the finding. In my judgment the finding of the Income-tax authorities upon this point in their assessment for the year 1935-36 is not vitiated by any illegality, and I would answer the question submitted in the affirmative. In all the circumstances, I would make no order as to costs beyond permitting the Commissioner to retain the sum of Rs. 100 which has been deposited by the assessee.

Fazl Ali, J.—I agree.

D,

Order accordingly.

PESHAWAR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT

Civil Revision No. 427 of 1939

January 23, 1941

ALMOND, J. C. AND MIR AHMAD, J.

Mst. KUNTI DEVI—DEFENDANT

—PETITIONER

L. BHOLA RAM—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 1—Suit for restitution of conjugal rights, if can be referred to arbitration.

The question whether a person should be given a decree for restitution of conjugal rights against his wife is a matter in difference between the husband and wife in suits for restitution of conjugal rights and there is no legal bar in Sch. II, Civil P. C., to its being referred to arbitration. Hence, there is nothing to prevent a reference of the whole suit for restitution of conjugal rights to arbitration and to a decree being passed in accordance with the award.

[Case-law discussed.]

C. R. from an order of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Peshawar, dated October 28, 1939.

Mr. Wazir Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. C. Kapur, for the Respondent.

Mir Ahmad, J.—In this case Bhola Ram respondent sued, Mst. Kunti Devi, the petitioner, for restitution of conjugal rights. The marriage was not denied but certain circumstances were pleaded as a bar to the grant of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. The parties appointed R. S. Pandit Mool Chand as an arbitrator. The arbitrator gave his award to the effect that the plaintiff should be given a decree subject to certain conditions. The trial Judge passed a decree in accordance with the award. Mst. Kunti Devi has come up on revision to this Court. The learned Counsel for the petitioner has raised the point that a suit for restitution of conjugal rights could not be referred to arbitration. He quoted Hira v. Dina (1), (a Division Bench ruling), Kala- batu v. Prabhdial (2), (a Single Judge ruling), Faiz Ali v. Ashraf Khatun (3), (a Single Judge ruling), Malka v. Sardar (4), (a Single Judge ruling) and Nathu v. Sarnun (5), (a Single Judge ruling). Counsel for the respondent quoted Rup Narain v. Nandrani (6), (a Division Bench ruling). As an interesting question of law was involved, the case was placed before a Bench of this Court. In the case reported in Hira v. Dina (1), the point which really persuaded the Judges to set aside the reference was that the parties were minors and that the Court had not given a sanction under O. XXXII, r. 7, Civil P. C., for reference to arbitration. A general remark was, however, made that the Court was not competent to delegate to the arbitrators the question whether or not a claim for custody of a wife should be decreed, such question, especially when either party is a minor, being entirely one for the discretion of the Court. Their Lordships remarked :

"This is a function which cannot be delegated to arbitrators, and the present case therefore was particularly one in which it was not for the benefit of the minor that the adjudication of the case should be entrusted to a tribunal not subject to ordinary rules of procedure, and whose decisions are final."

The head-note of the case reported in Kalabatu v. Prabhdial (2), which was decided by a Single Judge is to the following effect :

"It is entirely within the discretion of the Court to grant or refuse a decree for restitution of conjugal rights but the Court cannot delegate the decision of the entire suit to arbitrators, although it is open to it to refer any particular matter to arbitration. Where therefore in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the Munsif delegated the entire suit to persons appointed by parties as their arbitrators :

Held, that the Court could not delegate its function to arbitrators and the case should be tried on its merits."

The discussion is very short and Hira v. Dina (1), has been relied upon. In Faiz Ali v. Ashraf Khatun (3), the head note runs thus :

"In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights the question as to the validity of a marriage can be referred to arbitration."

The principle enunciated is the ipse dixit of the Judge. Kalabatu v. Prabhdial (2), was distinguished. In Malka v. Sardar (4), the head note is in the following terms :

"A criminal complaint cannot be referred to arbitration and therefore the award following it cannot be made a rule of a Civil Court. The question of restitution of conjugal rights cannot be referred to arbitration as that matter must be decided by the Court itself."

It was during the inquiry under s. 202, Criminal P. C., of a criminal complaint instituted by the husband against the wife that a reference to arbitration was made and the reference was set aside, because a criminal complaint could not be referred to arbitration. The other general remark was therefore only by way of obiter. The Judge who decided Nathu v. Sarnun (5), did not give his own reasons and depended on Hira v. Dina (1) and Malka v. Sardar (4), in laying down that a suit for restitution of conjugal rights could not be referred to arbitration. In Rup Narain v. Nandrani (6), the view taken was that a suit for restitution of conjugal rights may be referred to arbitration but the Judge may not accept the award in the matter of the exercise of discretion in granting the decree. The head-note is to the following effect :

"Although it is entirely within the discretion of the Civil Court to grant or refuse to grant a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, a suit for conjugal rights can be referred to arbitration as such suits come within the purview of para. 1, Sch. II. The function of the Court to grant or refuse to grant a decree for restitution of conjugal rights is not delegated to arbitrators when such a suit is referred to the decision of arbitrators under the provisions of Sch. II. The Court has ample powers to remit the award for reconsideration to the arbitrators or to refuse to make the award a decree of the Court. Even if it be deemed that to some extent the discretionary powers of the Civil Court to grant or refuse to grant a decree for restitution of conjugal rights have been taken away from it, when such a suit is referred to arbitration, in the absence of any provision to that effect, it comes within the purview of para. 1, Sch. II."

Now para. 1 of Sch. II, Civil P. C., runs thus :

"(1) Where in any suit all the parties interested agree that any matter in difference between them shall be referred to arbitration, they may, at any time before judgment is pronounced, apply to the Court for an order of reference."

There is no restriction in this paragraph as to the matter which can be referred to arbitration. Every matter in dispute could be so referred, and the subsequent paragraphs lay down the procedure which the Court as a supervising authority has to adopt. Under para. 16, the Court has to proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award if the award is not open to any of the objections laid down in the previous paragraphs of the schedule. The question whether a person should be given a decree for restitution of conjugal rights against his wife is a matter in difference between the husband and wife in suits for restitution of conjugal rights and there seems to be no legal bar in Sch. II, Civil P. C., to its being referred to arbitration. We have given the gist of the rulings referred to. The learned Judges of the Lahore High Court have not applied themselves to this aspect of the matter at all. The Judges of the Oudh Court have, however, pointed out that the statute does not debar such reference to arbitration. In our opinion, there is nothing in the statute to prevent a reference of the whole suit for restitution of conjugal rights to arbitration and to a decree being passed in accordance with the award. We therefore hold that the reference in this case is legal. There is no ground for interference in the decree of the lower Court otherwise. The petition is dismissed with costs.

THE LAHERIA SARAI CENTRAL Co-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.

Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act (VI of 1935), ss. 24-A, 24-A (3)—Scheme sanctioned—Creditor of bank subsequently obtaining decree—He cannot execute decree but must obtain satisfaction of his dues in manner provided by scheme—Order of District Judge on appeal from Registrar's order sanctioning scheme—No question of jurisdiction involved—Order of District Judge is final.

A composition arrived at in pursuance of the provisions of a statute such as the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act does not stand on the same footing as a private agreement. Where a person who is a party to the scheme, obtains subsequently a decree against the bank, the decree is not executable and the decree-holder must obtain satisfaction of his dues only in the manner provided in the scheme.

Where no point of jurisdiction arises an order of the District Judge on appeal from the Registrar's order sanctioning the arrangement is under s. 24-A (3) final.

Misc. A. and C. R. from the order of the District Judge of Darbhanga, dated September 22, 1939.

Sir M. N. Mukherji and Messrs. R. K. Choudhury and A. C. Roy, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. N. Mitter and Ajit Kumar Mitter, for the Respondents.

Rowland, J.—This miscellaneous appeal and application in civil revision have been heard together. The appellant who is also the applicant, was the plaintiff in a money suit. She had deposited Rs. 2,500 with the defendant bank. The bank is a registered society under the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act. She brought her suit on August 10, 1937 claiming the principal and interest and future interest. The claim at the date of suit was laid at Rs. 3,494-9-6. Substantially except for a trifling difference in the figures, the claim was admitted by the bank. During the pendency of the suit the bank which had stopped payment proposed to the Registrar of Co-operative Societies an arrangement for composition with its creditors. A meeting of creditors was convened and held and a scheme was adopted which the Registrar approved on June 1, 1938. The amount of the appellant's dues was settled at Rs. 3,483 and the terms provided for deferred payment and reduced interest. The plaintiff, however, continued with her suit and obtained a decree on August 23, 1938 for a sum of Rs. 3,649 to carry future interest at 6 per cent. On September 14, 1938 she commenced execution for the sum then due said to be Rs. 4,183 and prayed the Court to bring to sale the bank's buildings and certain furniture. The bank objected that in face of the composition effected under the Co-operative Societies Act, the decree was not executable and the lady must obtain satisfaction of her dues only in the manner provided for in the scheme. The Munsif on April 29, 1939 allowed this objection and held that the execution could not proceed. This decision was affirmed on September 22, 1939 by the District Judge. It is from this decision that the second appeal is presented. The application in civil revision arises out of the composition scheme itself. The order of the Registrar approving the scheme on June 1, 1938 was taken in appeal to the District Judge who dismissed the appeal on July 11, 1939 and it is against that order of dismissal that this application is presented.

It has been argued in support of the appeal that the scheme is an arrangement by way of compromise or agreement between the parties which the judgment-debtor attempted to set up in the executing Court as a bar to the execution of the decree and the first suggestion made is that such an adjustment comes within O. XXI, r. 2 of the Civil P. C. and the Court ought not to take any notice of it as it has not been certified to the Court in accordance with O. XXI, r. 2. Alternatively it is said that the agreement or composition having been effected before the decree in the suit was passed might be regarded as an agreement coming within O. XXIII, r. 3 and in that case the defendant ought to have put it forward in the suit itself so that the Court might have passed a modified decree in accordance with the agreement arrived at. Failing this the decree must prevail. We have been shown cases in which agreements between private parties whether come to during the pendency of a suit or after the passing of a decree with the object of restraining the decree-holder from executing the decree or from executing his decree for the full amount are not to be given effected to by the executing Courts; for instance, in Butchaia Chetti v. Tayar Rao Naidu (1), it was observed that it would be dangerous to allow a decree itself to be attacked in execution. But before acting on this principle we have to see whether a composition arrived at in pursuance of the provisions of a statute such as the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act stands on the same footing as a private agreement. The answer to that question seems to be in the negative. Section 24-A of the Act reproduces with only verbal modifications the provisions of s. 153 of the Indian Companies Act 1913 in the form in which that section stood before the Amending Act of 1936, and Sir M. N. Mukheji in a very ingenious and interesting argument has contended that we ought to look to the decided cases on s. 153 of the Companies Act and apply the law in accordance with the decisions of the Calcutta High Court bearing on the interpretation of that section. He admits that it has been held that where a meeting of creditors has resolved to accept a certain scheme, that scheme is binding on all creditors of that class; but it is argued here that a creditor who has obtained a decree for the realization of his debt is not a creditor of the same class as a depositor who has not sued or obtained such a decree. Conflicting opinions have been expressed in the Calcutta High Court on this point. The most recent case, which we are shown is that in Rajshahi Banking Corporation v. Surabala Debi (2), where it was held that a depositor who holds a decree and a depositor who does not hold a decree are not creditors of the same class. That decision however even assuming it to be correct is of little advantage to the appellant, because the appellant's decree was not in existence on the date when the meeting of creditors was held or on the date when the Registrar gave his approval to the composition arrived at. According to the Calcutta decisions themselves it seems to me that the plaintiff or decree-holder must be held to have been at the date of the composition a creditor of the same class as any other fixed depositor. The principle applicable in such a case arising under the Indian Companies Act was worked out in Raghubar Dayal v. The Bank of Upper India, Ltd. 32 Ind. 451 (3) of which the decision in India is reported in Raghubar Dayal v. The Bank of Upper India, Ltd. 32 Ind. Cas. 451 (3) and the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in appeal is reported at Raghubar Dayal v. The Bank of Upper India, Ltd. (4). It was clearly held that the plaintiff's decree having been granted to him after the meeting at which the resolution and the scheme had been agreed to, the plaintiff was bound by the scheme. If we had felt inclined to accede to Sir Manmatha Nath Mukherji's contention, had the matter been res integra, nevertheless it would hardly be open for us to do so in view of the decision of this High Court in Buxar Central Co-operative Bank Ltd. v. Akhourri Bindhyachal Prasad Singh (5), in which a Division Bench of this Court considered a case which appears to be on all fours with the one before us and overruling the decision of the Court below which had ordered execution to proceed, allowed the appeal and held that execution was clearly barred. It has been pointed out to us that in Raghubar Dayal's case (3), the High Court had allowed the decree-holder to execute his decree to the extent of the costs awarded to him in the suit, while holding that he could not execute it for the amount of his deposit itself, and it is suggested that we should follow that precedent and permit the decree-holder to execute his decree for the costs of the suit. The propriety of that portion of the order of the High Court did not come under the consideration of their Lordships of the Privy Council and we do not know what opinion their Lordships would have taken regarding it had it been in controversy.

It seems to us that there are some difficulties in the way of permitting the decree to be executed piecemeal or in part or in saying that without amendment of the decree it can be treated as a decree for a different amount from that named in the decree itself or as a decree for two debts of different classes, and the safer course appears to be to follow the decision of this High Court which I have just cited and to say no more than this that the scheme adopted and accepted is a bar to the execution sought by the decree-holder. This is sufficient to dispose of the miscellaneous appeal.

As regards the civil revision, we are asked to hold that the proceedings at the meeting of the creditors were irregular so that the scheme is invalid. Two or three grounds for so holding have been argued before us but I do not think it necessary to enter into them because the proper place for agitating those grounds was before the District Judge. They were in fact raised before him and he considered and negatived them. No point of jurisdiction arises and s. 24-A (3) is very definite that the order of the District Judge on appeal from the Registrar's order sanctioning the arrangement shall be final.

I would therefore dismiss the appeal as well as the application in revision with costs. Hearing-fee in the civil revision two gold mohurs.

Shearer, J.—I agree.

D. Appeal dismissed.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908 as amended in 1936), ss. 3 (2), 181, 77, 3 (10)—Lands admitted to be kambattam within Mokhasa village—Village, if "estate" within meaning of Act before amendment—Land-holder possessing private land within estate selling kudivaram right—Landlord must be deemed to have converted land into ryoti land—Additional terms, if alter nature of transaction or whether void—Instrument held converted kambattam land into ryoti land—Additional terms stipulating for payment of fixed rent, interest on rent arrears, making rent first charge on land and entitling land-holder to trees standing on land at date of contract, held not inconsistent with ryoti tenure—Deed—Construction—Rule of—Part, when to be rejected—Intention—Duty of Court.

Where the lands are admitted to be kambattam lands within a Mokhasa village, it follows that the village was an "estate" within the meaning of the Mad. Estates Land Act, even before the amendment in 1936. [p. 471, col. 1.]

Where a landholder possesses private lands within an "estate" and sells the kudivaram right in those lands but retains the melwaram right he must be deemed to have converted the lands into ryoti lands, and additional terms will not alter the nature of the transaction. The additional terms will stand, provided that they are not inconsistent with what the statute states shall apply to ryoti tenure. To the extent that the additional terms are inconsistent with ryoti tenure they must be regarded as being void. 60 Ind. Cas. 15 (1), not approved. [p. 472, col. 2.]

The khat executed by the vendee embodying the terms of the contract, after reciting that the land-holder had agreed to sell to him the kudivaram right in the lands for Rs. 33,492 and that they had received the purchase consideration, proceeded: You have hereby sold to us all the rights possessed by you in the said lands, excepting the melwaram rights thereto. Therefore, in the matter of our enjoying the said lands henceforth from son to grandson and so on in succession with powers of alienation by way of gift, exchange, sale, etc., you or your heirs shall never raise dispute either with us or with our heirs. Then followed the other terms relating to the sale, stipulating for the payment of a fixed rent and for the payment of interest at ten annas per cent. per mensem on arrears of rent. The cist payable to the land-holder was to be a first charge on the land, and the land-holder was to be entitled to the trees standing on the land at the time of the contract, but trees grown after that date were to belong to the vendees:

Held per Full Bench (Krishnaswamy Ayyangar, J., contra).—That the document read as whole operated to convert the kambattam lands into ryoti lands and that the additional terms were not inconsistent with ryoti tenure.

Per Krishnaswamy Ayyangar, J.—In construction of a deed the question is obviously one of intention to be deduced or inferred from a consideration of the entire deed, bringing into action every part of it and rejecting none, unless the expressions are contradictory and incapable of being reconciled, or there is a repugnancy which calls for the rejection of one part in order to more effectually to carry into effect the real intention of the parties gatherable from the part retained. Rejection should be the last resort, after every means to reconcile are exhausted. The Court should rather lean towards a construction which would give a meaning and effect to every one of the clauses in a deed than towards one which would result in a nullification of anyone or more of them in the end. *Gyoo Gwyn v. L. P. A. against the judgment of Mr. Justice Wadsworth, reported in 188 Ind. Cas. 312.

Mr. V. Rangachari, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Kameswara Rao, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—The appellants are the mokhasadars of a village falling within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam. On October 7, 1920 they sold to respondent No. 1 the kudivaram right in their kambattam, or home farm lands, on conditions to which I shall refer in some detail presently. On March 31, 1934 the appellants filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam for the recovery of the rent due by the sale of the lands. It was contended by the respondents that by the deed of October 7, 1920 the appellants had converted the lands from kambattam into ryoti lands and consequently the Revenue Court, not the Civil Court, had jurisdiction. Before the Subordinate Judge the appellants admitted that the village was an "estate" within the meaning of the Mad. Estates Land Act, 1908, as amended in 1936, but they averred that the village was not an estate within the meaning of the Act as it stood at the time of the contract with respondent No. 1, and an issue was framed on the question. It is however impossible for the appellants to maintain this contention. By admitting that the lands in suit are kambattam lands within a mokhasa village it follows that the village was an "estate" within the meaning of the Mad. Estates Land Act, even before the amendment in 1936, and the appeal must proceed on this basis. The Subordinate Judge upheld the respondents' contention that there had been a conversion and dismissed the suit. On appeal to this Court, Wadsworth, J., concurred in these decisions and this appeal is from his judgment.

Section 181, Mad. Estates Land Act, before the amendment of the Act, stated that nothing in ss. 6, 8, 10, 11, 12, 19 and 46 should confer a right of occupancy in, or should apply in any way to, a land-holder's private land. Then followed a proviso to the effect that nothing contained in the section should prevent a land-holder from converting his private land into ryoti land. Until private land was converted into ryoti land the land-holder could deal with it as he liked and that is still the position, although the wording of the section has been altered. Section 19 has throughout been to the effect that except as provided in the Act, the relations between a land-holder and a tenant of his private land are not regulated by the Act. There was nothing in the Act as it stood before 1936, nor is there anything in it now, which prevents a land-holder from leasing his private land on whatever terms he may think fit, but, of course, if he leases on terms which imply a conversion of the land into ryoti land all the provisions of the Act with regard to ryoti land will apply and will overrule any provisions in the lease which are in conflict with the provisions of the Act. I may here mention that apart from s. 181 the amended Act is on all fours with the measure as it stood before 1936 so far as this case is concerned.

In Devi Garu v. Yellappa Rama Naidu (1), a Division Bench of this Court had to consider the terms of a conversion of private land into ryoti land and the judgment appears to go to the length of saying that the terms of a conversion can be enforced even if they are inconsistent with ryoti tenure. It was observed that s. 181 contemplated a conversion from home farm land into ryoti land, but that the Legislature had not made any special provision with regard to the terms on which the conversion might be made. It was on this line of reasoning that the Court held that the contract between the parties was enforceable. In my opinion this is going much too far. When there is a conversion of private land into ryoti land the terms of the contract which are not inconsistent with ryoti tenure can be enforced, but once the conversion has taken place the tenant has all the rights given to a ryot by the Act, and if the rent fixed is unfair the remedies contemplated by the Act are open to him. The sole question in this case is whether the instrument of October 7, 1920 operated to convert the appellants' kambattam lands into ryoti lands. The khat executed by vendee embodying the terms of the contract, after reciting that the appellants had agreed to sell to him the kudivaram right in the lands for Rs. 33,492 and that they had received the purchase consideration proceeds:

"You have hereby sold to us all the rights possessed by you, in the said lands excepting the melwar rights thereto. Therefore, in the matter of our enjoying the said lands henceforth from son to grandson and so on in succession with powers of alienation by way of gift, exchange, sale, etc, you or your heirs shall never raise dispute either with us or with our heirs."

Then follow the other terms relating to the sale and these are set out in clauses numbered 1 to 10. It is only necessary to refer to cls. 1, 2, 3 and 9, as the others have not been referred to in argument and obviously have no bearing on the question under discussion. Clause 1 stipulates for the payment of a fixed rent and cl. 2, for the payment of interest at ten annas per cent, per mensem on arrears of rent. Clause 3, provides that the cist payable to the land-holder shall be a first charge on the land, and cl. 9 states that the appellants shall be entitled to the trees standing on the land at the time of the contract, but trees grown after that date shall belong to respondent No. 1. It is suggested that these terms are inconsistent with ryoti tenure and therefore the document cannot be read as converting the land into ryoti land, but only as a special contract relating to private land. The document must be read as a whole in order to gauge its effect and when this is done I consider that it must be held that there has been a conversion.

The main characteristic of ryoti tenure is the permanent vesting in the tenant of the kudivaram right and the permanent retention of the melwaram right by the land-holder. That is the position here. By virtue of the contract the kudivaram right was transferred absolutely to respondent No. 1 and he obtained permanent rights of occupancy on the terms set out in the contract. It is conceded by the learned Advocate for the appellants that if the document had stopped at the sale of the kudivaram right there would have been a conversion within the meaning of s. 181. I can see nothing in cls. 1, 2, 3 and 9 which alter the position. If the document had stopped merely with the sale of the kudivaram right it would still have been necessary to fix the rent payable to the appellants as the possessors of the melwaram right, and the fact that the rent was fixed in the contract without contemplation of any change in the rate does not alter the position. The land-holder and the tenant may agree on a permanent rent, but if they do this it does not take away the right of the tenant to sue or apply for a reduction of the rent if the lands have been converted into ryoti lands. Section 187 (1) (c) says so. Nor is the provision with regard to the payment of interest inconsistent with ryoti tenure. The payment of interest on arrears of rent is expressly provided for in the Act. Under s. 61 an arrear of rent shall bear simple interest at the rate of one half per cent. per mensem from the date on which the arrear fell due until it is liquidated. Therefore cl. 2 of the additional terms is in full accord with the Act, except that the rate is higher. Again this contingency is expressly provided for. Sub-s. (2) of s. 187 says that nothing in any contract between a land-holder and a ryot made after the passing of the Act shall affect the provisions of s. 61 relating to interest payable on arrears of rent so as to increase the amount payable. The only comment that the learned Advocate for the appellants has to make on cl. 3 is that the cist payable to the appellants is made a first charge on the lands only and not on the lands and produce which the Act would allow. The freeing of the charge on the produce is however a concession to the tenant and there is nothing in the Act which prevents a land-holder making a concession to his tenant. The appellants receive no help from cl. 9. The trees belonged to the appellants and without this clause would have passed to respondent No. 1. The Act does not prohibit a tenant conceding to the land-holder the right to the trees on the land, and on a conversion of private lands into ryoti lands the parties can contract as they please so far as the trees are concerned.

In my opinion, where a land-holder possesses private lands within an "estate" and sells the kudivaram right in those lands but retains the melwaram right he must be deemed to have converted the lands into ryoti lands, and additional terms will not alter the nature of the transaction. The additional terms will stand, provided that they are not inconsistent with what the statute states shall apply to ryoti tenure. To the extent that the additional terms are inconsistent with ryoti tenure they must be regarded as being void. The arguments which has been advanced that this interferes with the right of the land-holder to contract freely with regard to his private lands seems to me to be beside the question. The land-holder does not need to enter into a contract which will have the effect of converting his private lands into ryoti lands, but if he does contract and the tenure which he creates amounts to ryoti tenure he must accept all the consequences of his action. The appellants here could have sold the lands in suit to respondent No. 1 absolutely or they could have leased them at any rent they might have agreed upon without separating the kudivaram right from the melwaram right, but as they chose to separate the kudivaram right from the melwaram right and grant a permanent right of occupancy on the basis of the payment of rent relative to the melwaram right they must, in my judgment, be deemed to have converted the lands in the ryoti lands. For these reasons I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Venkataramana Rao, J.—I agree.

Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—With much reluctance, I feel myself obliged to differ from the opinion expressed by my learned colleagues. The question with which we are faced in this case relates to the true construction of a khat or counterpart of a lease, embodying the terms of a contract entered into between the appellants and the respondents on October 7, 1920. By that contract, the appellants, who owned a parcel of private land in an estate belonging to them, sold to the respondents, the kudivaram interest alone in it retaining the melwaram interest for themselves. There are in the deed certain other terms and conditions to some of which a reference is necessary for a correct decision, but there can be no doubt that the dominant object in the mind of the parties was to convey to the respondents the kudivaram right in the land. This is not indeed disputed, but what is disputed is, whether there has been a conversion effected by the instrument of what was admittedly the appellant's private land into ryoti land so as to confer on the respondents those rights and privileges which are recognized by the Mad. Estates Land Act, 1908, as inhering in a ryot holding ryoti land in an estate.

That the legal incidents which appertain to private land in an estate essentially differ from those annexed to ryoti land is too plain for argument; in fact it is a matter of concession. The differences are fundamental, the Act drawing a sharp distinction between the two classes of land. Private land is to borrow a word from the English Law of real property, the free-hold of the land-holder over which he has absolute unrestricted dominion. He can deal with it in any manner, he likes, enter into any kind of contract he chooses and create any form of tenure in it he pleases. Section 19 of the Act preserves to him an unfettered freedom of contract as regards this class of land, a privilege not recognized in respect of any other class of land within the estate. It declares in explicit terms that the relations between a land-holder and a tenant—and be it noted, not a ryot—of his private land are not to be regarded as regulated by the provisions of the Act. Language cannot be plainer. Even the name "ryot" is here avoided when referring to the person who cultivates the private land, and the colourless term tenant seems deliberately to be adopted. The only way by which the land-holder can make those provisions applicable, is by converting his private land into ryoti land and conferring occupancy right in the land so converted. Such a course was permitted by s. 181 as it stood before the amendment made by Act VIII of 1934. The section ran as follows :

"Nothing in ss. 6, 8, 10, 11, 12, 19 and 46 shall confer a right of occupancy in or shall apply in any way to a land-holder's private land :

Provided that nothing contained in this section shall prevent a land-holder from converting his private land into ryoti land."

"Of the sections enumerated here all except s. 19 relate to the acquisition or transfer of occupancy rights, or to the limitations subject to which these rights are to be enjoyed in lands other than private lands. Section 19, as already seen, was enacted to preserve the rights of the land-holder in the latter category of land. Reading s. 181 together with its proviso the meaning is clear that the land-holder could if he choose convert his private land into ryoti land with a view to confer occupancy right in it, and could also confer such a right. It was the same meaning that has been made plainer by the amendment introduced into the section in 1934. The effect of the amendment is not to make a change in the law, but only to make the meaning more explicit than before, and this was not denied at the bar during the arguments. The section as now amended enacts that :

"A land-holder shall be at liberty to convert his private land into ryoti land and confer occupancy right in land so converted."

On a literal interpretation, two steps or processes seem to be necessary before the tenant can claim the rights and privileges of a ryot, in land which was originally private land; first a conversion from the one class to the other and second the grant of occupancy right in the land after conversion. The amended section which may well be regarded as merely declaratory of the law as it was before the amendment thus appears to warrant the view that the mere grant of occupancy right in private land does not by itself suffice to alter its character unless it is preceded by an act of conversion. There is no objection, however, to the conversion and the grant being made by one and the same instrument provided the intention is made sufficiently clear. The real question then is not whether permanent rights of occupancy have been granted by the khat which of course it does, but whether the land-holder had also fulfilled what appears to me to be a necessary condition precedent, namely the conversion of his private land into ryoti land. It is necessary in my view to keep the two things separate in order to avoid falling into a possible error. On a question of this kind, there is no presumption one way or the other and it therefore lies on the party who sets up a case of conversion to make it out. If he wholly fails or only succeeds to the extent of creating a doubt, he derives no benefit out of it, and must fail. The question is obviously one of intention to be deduced or inferred from a consideration of the entire deed, bringing into action every part of it and rejecting none, unless the expressions are contradictory, and incapable of being reconciled, or there is a repugnancy which calls for the rejection of one part in order the more effectually to carry into effect the real intention of the parties gatherable from the part retained. The rule is thus stated by Kelly, C. B. in Gyoo Gywn v. Neath Canal Navigation Co. (2), at p. 215 :

"The result of all the authorities is that when a Court of Law can clearly collect from the language within the four corners of a deed, or instrument in writing, the real intentions of the parties, they are bound to give effect to it by supplying anything necessarily to be inferred from the terms used and by rejecting as superfluous whatever is repugnant to the intention, so discerned."

Rejection should be the last resort, after every means to reconcile are exhausted. There is ample authority also for the proposition that the Court should rather lean towards a construction which would give a meaning and effect to every one of the clauses in a deed than towards one which would result in a nullification of anyone or more of them in the end. These are some of the principles of general application which I should bear in mind in approaching the construction of a written instrument. It is to be observed at the outset that in the deed in question there are no doubtful words or ambiguous expressions, no terms of technical import and no repugnant clauses. The language is plain, and the meaning is clear; and the intention behind each one of the clauses whether taken separately or in combination is easily gathered and creates no difficulty. Nor have I any doubt that the parties intended to make all of them equally operative, and binding so that their future relations may wholly be governed by them. We should hesitate to accept a construction which will result in that intention being abrogated in whole or in part. I readily grant that a necessity for such a course may arise in the class of cases envisaged by Kay, J. in Pawsey v. Armstrong (3), at p. 705 where he observed :

"The truth is that there are certain legal relations which are entered into by agreeing to certain conditions, and when those conditions are agreed to, it is quite idle for people to superadd, or to attempt to superadd, a stipulation that the necessary legal consequences of those conditions shall not follow from the arrangement."

Such a stipulation may have to be ignored but not before fully satisfying ourselves that the necessary conditions are made out for the excision. An illustration of this principle is to be found in the case where the relationship of partners must be held established by law between persons who have agreed to share the profits of a business carried on by all or any of them acting for all in spite of the superimposition of a contrary term in the articles. The proposition however can have no application except in a case where all and not some only of the conditions requisite for constituting the relationship are present. If the conditions fall short or are of a character, which indicates a different relationship, the proposition cannot apply. I am quite unable to agree that the governing consideration lies in the fact that the land-holder has in the case on hand parted with the kudivaram right in the land retaining with himself the melvaram interest only. Had the expression kudivaram been declared by statute to connote ryoti tenure or if I could persuade myself that it is a technical word, a term of art, having the same legal import. I should readily assent to the proposition. That however is not the case. It is quite clear that the word has been used in the Act (e. g. s. 3 (2) (d)), in a non-technical sense to denote the kind of tenure held by a tenant who has a permanent right of occupancy. In its literal sense the word kudivaram only means the cultivator's share of the produce, the word melvaram meaning the land-holder's share: Suryanarayana v. Patanna (4) and Venkata Sastrulu v. Devi Seetharamudu (5), at p. 171. It is customary however to speak of the ownership of land in this province as being composed of the kudivaram and the melvaram interest, or as the ownership of both warams. By a process akin to a metonymic user, the expression kudivaram interest is frequently employed to denote the species of interest which a tenant has in the land in his permanent occupancy, whether that land lies in an estate or outside it. This being the ordinary, popular sense, it must be taken that the word was used in this sense in the document. What is important to remember in this connection is that kudivaram interest and ryoti tenure are not convertible terms having the same legal significance.

When we speak of ryoti land or ryoti tenure, the picture that is called up to our mind is the picture of that peculiar species of cultivable land in an estate, defined in the Act, to which, and to the holding of which, an entire body of mostly new and special rules have been annexed by force of the estate. Among the incidents which since the Act, attach to this species of land, the most important no doubt is the permanency of the tenure and the fixity of the rent, guaranteed to the tenant under stringent safeguards, subject however, to certain conditions to which it is unnecessary to refer for the present purpose. But the other incidents, whatever their relative importance, do exist, and should not be ignored when seeking to obtain a knowledge of the true measure and the real nature of that right. To put it in a simple form, kudivaram is only a part though a major part of the whole. But 15 annas do not make a rupee, nor 19 shillings a pound. To say so is not arithmetic. Neither is it in my opinion law and yet this is in substance the argument of the respondents. With all respect therefore, I am unable to assent to the proposition that the conveyance of that species of right known as the kudivaram interest amounts to the creation of a ryoti tenure in the land conveyed. To examine the matter still further, it is to be observed that this document came into existence more than twelve years after the passing of the Mad. Estates Land Act. The expressions, ryoti and ryoti land which were newly coined by the Act, to replace the words "tenant" and his "interest" in the holding, in order probably to emphasize the permanent character of that interest, had by the time of the deed become quite familiar to all, and yet it is somewhat strange, that these words have been studiously, as I think, avoided in the conveyance. It was in fact suggested that the deed was drawn up with a knowledge of the decision reported in Devi Garu v. Yellappa Rama Naidu (1). If in these circumstances the parties had really bargained for a conversion of the private land into ryoti land, it is not a little remarkable that language well known to denote that meaning should not have been employed instead of another, and at all events, a less decisive expression. There is, it may be observed, no suggestion of any overreaching by the one party over the other in this case.

Apart from any such narrow consideration, when one comes to look at the entire document, it becomes, in my opinion, very difficult to resist the conclusion that the land-holder was not here seeking to convert his private land into ryoti land. I have earlier in this judgment endeavoured to recapitulate the rules which have to be brought to bear on this question. One of those rules is that the intention of the parties is to be collected from the whole of the document, not ignoring any part. If, on this principle, the conditions of the contract, contained in "the particulars of the remaining terms relating to the sale" as described in the instrument are considered, there are at least two which definitely militate against the theory of a conversion. Clauses 1 and 4 of these particulars taken together have the effect of fixing a permanent immutable rent payable year after year by the lessees, irrespective of the failure of, or a diminution in the yield, from whatever causes due. Clause 2 again provides that arrears of rent should carry interest at the rate of ten annas per cent. instead of at the rate of eight annas fixed by s. 61. These two terms which were specifically agreed to and undoubtedly intended to be operative, annex to the tenure created by the deed incidents which are not only foreign to a ryoti tenure under the Act, but materially opposed to it. Remembering that it is open to the land-holder to create any kind of derivative tenure not opposed to the general principles of law, I find it difficult, nay impossible to attribute to him an intention to bring into being one tenure, when the very terms of the contract clearly point to the parties having had in mind a different one, with different incidents. It is not for the Court to evaluate the terms for the purpose of accepting some and rejecting other. On the contrary, every rule of law and every rule of equity would seem to prohibit its so doing.

That there is a fundamental divergence between the terms of the contract in question here and the incidents annexed to a ryoti tenure under the Act, will appear plainly from a perusal of s. 187. A ryot's right to sue, or apply for a reduction of the rent on the grounds stated in cls. (a) and (b) of sub-s. (1) of s. 38 or sub-s. (3) of s. 32, or on the ground mentioned in cl. (c) of sub-s. (1) of s. 38 is by s. 187 (1) preserved as an inviolable privilege not to be destroyed or overridden by any contract to the contrary whether made before or after the Act.

Similar in effect is s. 187 (2) in so far as the rate of interest fixed by s. 61 is sought to be enhanced. With these inconsistent provisions contained in the deed before us, I consider that it is not open to the Court to infer that it was the appellant's intention to convert his private land into ryoti land. The other clauses in the deed are indecisive and I agree that they do not materially affect the construction. What presses on my mind is that it is not correct for a Court to infer a tenure by taking into account some only of the terms of the contract ignoring others, when it is possible, and I think it permissible to give effect to all the terms by treating it as a special contract and one not entered into for the purpose of impressing a ryoti tenure on the land comprised in the khat.

I may add a word about the decision reported in Devi Garu v. Yellappa Rama Naidu (1). That was a case where a ryoti tenure had been either expressly created by contract, or admitted to have been so created on the pleadings, and, the question arose whether terms and conditions repugnant to such a tenure should be recognized. The Court held that the conditions were valid and enforceable. The ground of the decision is to be found in the concluding sentences in the judgment where the learned Judges say that the Legislature has not made any special provision as regards the terms on which a conversion may be made, and that in the absence of such a provision, the contract of the parties on the basis of which the conversion was made, should prevail. If the learned Judges here meant to lay it down, that there is no objection in law to the superimposition by contract of terms alien to a ryoti tenure; after once creating such a tenure, I must with great respect, dissent from that view, which I think is a view which runs counter to the rule stated by Kay, J. The position here is however different. The question is not as to the validity of terms added which detract from the quality of a tenure created and intended to be created but whether there has been an effectual creation of the tenure itself. For the reasons explained, I regret, I am unable to share the opinion of my learned colleagues. I consider that the appeal should be allowed with costs throughout.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 295, 379, 144, 143, 425—Hut on agricultural land, if could be turned, without knowledge of landlord into mosque—Saying of prayers—Whether gives any sacred character to such hut—Pulling down of such hut by persons other than landlord—Offence, if falls under s. 295—Conviction under ss. 420-144—Charge under s. 379 referring to individual accused—No finding that any of accused individually took away materials—Conviction held cannot be sustained—Criminal trial—Revision—Sentence—Altering finding but maintaining sentence—Powers of Court.

The use of a hut on an agricultural land, without the permission of the landlord, as a public mosque with the azan or public call to prayers is entirely unwarranted; and if, the hut is not a mosque but a particular community were only attempting to convert it into one, it is clearly not "a place of worship" under the law. Where none of the members of the community was in a position validly to make the implied dedication a mere fact of saying azan does not make it a public mosque. The hut cannot also be regarded as "any object held sacred by any class of persons" within the meaning of s. 295. Nothing of religious reverence, no sacred character, could attach to the hut apart from its attempted conversion into a mosque as this attempt itself is contrary to law; to allow any sacred character to the hut would be to enable the community under the guise of religion to vest the shed as a public mosque in the religious body for whose observance it was to be used, to the detriment of the landlords, who had only settled the land with the tenant for agricultural purposes. Where the azan or public call to prayers is found to have begun only about a year before, the landlords do not lose by prescription their right to eject the tenant for the attempted perversion or misuse of the land, rendering it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. Though this would not entitle others some of whom are amongst the landlords of the village, to take the law into their hands, yet their destruction of the hut does not constitute an offence under s. 295. The conviction under this section is bad in law. [p. 478, cols. 1 & 2.]

That the hut standing on this land, though it was destroyed, was not a mosque properly so called does not mean the failure of the charges under ss. 144 and 143. Where the common object of destroying the mosque makes no reference to s. 295, and the destruction of the hut, even if it was not a mosque, clearly amounts in the circumstances to mischief as defined in s. 425, I. P. C., it follows that the unlawful assembly must be taken to have had the common object of committing mischief in respect of the hut. The conviction under ss. 144 or 143, as the case may be is proper. [p. 478, col. 2.]

Where the charges under s. 379 did not refer to the common object of the unlawful assembly. But the charges of theft were intended by the Magistrate to refer to the acts of individual accused apart from their doings as members of the unlawful assembly and there was no finding that any of the accused individually took away any of the materials of the hut, the conviction under s. 379 against the accused cannot be sustained. [ibid.]

A Court of Revision has the power of the Court of Appeal to "alter the finding maintaining the sentences or with or without altering the finding, reduce the sentence", and, therefore, to pass sentences under ss. 143 and 144 in a case, while setting aside the convictions under ss. 295 and 379, provided the sentences do not exceed those passed by the lower Appellate Court. Cr. R. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Darbhanga, dated August 30, 1940.

Messrs. Hareshwar Pd. Sinha and P. Jha, for the Petitioners.

The Govt. Pleader, for the Crown.

Order.—The 12 petitioners, along with 3 other men who were acquitted on appeal by the Additional Sessions Judge, were convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Madhubani of an offence under s. 295, I. P. C. in that they destroyed a place of worship, to wit, the mosque of the Kunjras of Belhwar, "with the intention or with the knowledge that you would thereby insult the religion of the Kunjras in particular and of the Musalmans in general." They were also convicted under s. 379, I. P. C. of theft of the materials of the mosque, and further, of being members of an unlawful assembly with the common object of destroying the mosque, 9 of them under s. 143 and the remaining 6 (who were armed with bhalas) under s. 144, I. P. C. The Magistrate sentenced them all to six months' imprisonment under s. 295 and to one month's imprisonment under s. 379, I. P. C. the two sentences to run consecutively, and passed no separate sentence under ss. 144 and 143. On appeal the Additional Sessions Judge acquitted 3 of the 15 men (including one alleged to be armed with a bhala) and reduced the sentence on the remaining 12 to three months' rigorous imprisonment under s. 295 and further made the sentence of one month's imprisonment under s. 379, concurrent with it.

According to the prosecution, the structure destroyed had been erected as a mosque ten years before the occurrence, and Abdul Waheed, P. W. No. 5, who had been married to the sister of Kari Kunjra, P. W. No. 2, came to the village about a year before the occurrence as a maulvi or tutor for the children of the Kunjras and started a madrasa in the mosque and also began to call the azan there. The Magistrate was not prepared to believe that the structure was used as a mosque since the very day of its construction, but found that there was "some sort of structure existing since long" which apparently on the maulavi's azan "came to be regarded by the Kunjras as a mosque" and was thus "to all intents and purposes" a mosque. The learned Additional Sessions Judge definitely rejected the prosecution claim that the structure was a mosque: according to the defence it was only a dilapidated cattle-shed. The learned Judge below considered it "quite clear, under the circumstances, that the hut in question was not a mosque, but was attempted to be converted into such, after the maulvi was appointed to teach the Kunjra boys."

It is quite obvious, under the circumstances, he said further,

"that the hut in question was not a mosque and that only recently the Kunjras took to saying prayers and calling azan there, that the Hindus rightly or wrongly became apprehensive that the hut might be converted into a mosque, and cow-sacrifice resorted to in the village. This appears to me to be the reason, which led to the recent outburst of temper on the part of the Hindus, who took into their heads to do away with the structure."

He nevertheless upheld the conviction of the petitioners under s. 295

"because no particular period is required by law to establish an object as one of religious reverence and the house in question was held sacred by the Kunjra community from the time they began to say prayers and call azan there."

It has been urged on behalf of the petitioners that s. 295, can have no application to the case if, as the learned Judge has found, the hut was not a mosque.

"A mosque becomes consecrated for public worship either by delivery to a mutwalli, or on the declaration of the waqif that he has constituted it into a musjid, or on the performance of prayers therein...with azan and ikamat."

see Adam Sheikh v. Isha Sheikh (1)—and every Muhammadan has the legal right to enter a mosque so consecrated, and perform his devotions there according to his own tenets so long as the form of worship is in accord with the recognised rules of Muhammadan Ecclesiastical Law (per Mahmood, J. in Queen Empress v. Ramzan (2)). But the subject-matter of a dedication under the Muhammadan Law must be the lawful property of the waqif, or the waqf will not be valid (Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Volume I, pp. 201-02). In the present case the old hut stood on the belagan land of Buchi Mian, P. W. No. 6, one of the Kunjra cultivators of the village. It is admitted by Dukha Mian, P. W. No. 1 the Kunjra who lodged the first information in the case, that before the building of the mosque the Kunjras used to say their nemaz in their houses and that at that time there was a khalihan on this belagan plot. It is not pretended that the landlord's permission was taken for erecting any public mosque on the plot, and Buchi Kunjra's tenancy being agricultural, the use of the plot for the purpose of a public mosque would be so inconsistent with the purpose for which the land was let as to render the tenant liable to be ejected from the whole of his holding, as was held by Karamat Hussain, J. in Allah Dia v. Munshi Sada Nand, 8 Ind. Cas. 732 (3), see also Basa Mal v. Ghayas-ud-din (4) and Sawan v. Mehr Din, 45 Ind. Cas. 963 (5). This aspect of the matter seems to have escaped notices in the lower Courts. The use of the hut as a public mosque with the azan or public call to prayers was entirely unwarranted; and if, as the learned Judge below has found, the hut was not a mosque but the Kunjras were only attempting to convert it into one, it was clearly not "a place of worship" under the law. It is also not pretended that the landlord knew anything about the alleged use of the shed for private prayers; in the pre-maulavi days and while the point of the prosecution story is that the azan made it a public mosque, it is clear that none of the Kunjras was in a position validly to make the implied dedication. The question, therefore, arises whether the hut can be regarded as "any object held sacred by any class of persons" within the meaning of s. 295. The learned Judge took it to be "an object of religious reverence", "held sacred by the Kunjra community from the time they began to say their prayers and call the azan there." It is, however, just as obvious that nothing of religious reverence, no sacred character, could attach to the hut apart from its attempted conversion into a mosque as that this attempt itself was contrary to law: to allow any sacred character to the hut would be to enable Buchi Kunjra under the guise of religion to vest the shed as a public mosque in the religious body for whose observance it was to be used, as it was put in Basa Mal's case (4), to the detriment of the landlords, who had only settled the land with him for agricultural purposes. As the azan or public call to prayers is found to have begun only about a year before the occurrence, the landlords had not lost by prescription their right to eject Buchi for the attempted perversion or misuse of the land, fendering it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. This would not entitle the petitioners, some of whom are amongst the landlords of the village, to take the law into their hands, but I am now considering whether their destruction of the hut constitutes an offence under s. 295. In my opinion, it does not. The conviction under this section must therefore be set aside as bad in law.

It has also been urged that the conviction of the petitioners under s. 379 is bad in law because there is no finding by either of the Courts below as to any of the individual petitioners taking away the materials of the mosque. The charges under s. 379, did not refer to the common object of the unlawful assembly, which was moreover stated to be merely the destruction of the mosque and not also the theft of its materials. The charges under s. 295, show that the intention underlying the destruction was insulting the religion of the Kunjras etc. but not theft. It is, therefore, clear that the charges of theft were intended by the Magistrate to refer to the acts of individual accused apart from their doings as members of the unlawful assembly. There is, however, no findings that any of the accused individually took away any of the materials of the hut. The learned Govt. Pleader, has, therefore, not been able to support the conviction under s. 379. This conviction must accordingly be also set aside.

The petitioners were, as already stated, further convicted, 5 of them under s. 144 and the rest under s. 143, I. P. C. The common object of the unlawful assembly was stated in the charges to be "destroying the mosque of the Kunjras"...standing on the belagan last of Buchi Kunjra. That the hut standing on this land, though it was destroyed, was not a mosque properly so called does not mean the failure of these charges. According to the defence the structure was a cattle-shed; and Buchi Kunjra's right to have it on the belagan land has not been questioned. Its attempted conversion into a mosque did not, as I have already said, entitle the accused to take the law into their own hands and go in a body to destroy it. But the common object of destroying the mosque made no reference to s. 295, and the destruction of the hut, even if it was not a mosque, clearly amounted in the circumstances to mischief as defined in s. 425, I. P. C. It follows that the unlawful assembly must be taken to have had the common object of committing mischief in respect of the hut. The conviction of the petitioners under s. 144 or 143, as the case may be, must, therefore, remain. The lower Courts did not pass any sentence upon the petitioners under these sections because of the sentences passed under ss. 295 and 379. As the convictions under these latter sections have been found to be untenable, it becomes necessary to pass sentences under s. 144 or 143. A Court of Revision has the power of the Court of Appeal to "alter the finding maintaining the sentences, or with or without altering the finding, reduce the sentence", and therefore to pass sentences under ss. 143 and 144 in this case, while setting aside the convictions under ss. 295 and 379, provided the sentences do not exceed those passed by the lower Appellate Court. No violence was offered to any of the Kunjras, and the structure described by the prosecution as a mosque does not seem to have had even one pucca wall. The Kunjras had also no right whatsoever to attempt to convert the shed into a public mosque. Taking all the circumstances into account, I consider that it will be sufficient in the ends of justice if in upholding the convictions under s. 144 or 143, I sentence the petitioners to rigorous imprisonment for the period already suffered by them together with fines of Rs. 50 each under s. 144 and Rs. 25 each under s. 143, as the case may be with one month's rigorous imprisonment in default. Ordered accordingly.

(3) 8 Ind. Cas. 732.

Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act (III of 1913), s. 7—Certificate sale—Accounts opened in name of co-sharers—Quota of arrears dues paid—Certificate sale of entire estate for arrears—Liability—Certificate against dead person—Effect on interest of legal representatives—S. 29, applicability—Section assumes that certificate was in proper order—Bar of suit contemplated by s. 46—Question between auction-purchaser and representatives of certificate debtor—No bar.

Where separate accounts had been opened in the name of plaintiffs-co-sharers on November 7, 1933, their share is liable for the cess for the January and March kist of 1933, even though they had paid their quota, when the certificate proceedings had been started to realise the dues from all the co-sharers who were then alive not only for their quota but also on account of the quota of the other co-sharers who were in default. The payment by the plaintiffs of their quota does not do away with the liability of the entire estate to pay the arrears which were due from the whole estate. [p. 480, col. 2.]

The entire proceedings based upon the certificate issued against a dead person are wholly inoperative to affect the heirs of the deceased. It is open to the Certificate Officer under s. 11 to amend the certificate by addition, omission or substitution of the name of the certificate-debtor. In the absence of such amendment the heirs are wholly unaffected by the certificate sale. [p. 481, col. 2.]

• Section 29, Public Demands Recovery Act, assumes that the certificate was a proper certificate where the certificate issued in the name of a dead person was never altered and no substitution was made by bringing in the names of the legal representative upon the record. Section 29 has no application. The heirs without bringing a suit to set aside sale can bring a suit for declaration that the sale does not affect their interest. [p. 482, col. 1.]

Where the question is between the auction-purchaser and the representatives of the certificate debtor and not between the certificate holder and the certificate debtor or their representatives s. 46 has no application. [ibid.]

The concurrent findings of the Courts below that the sale in the certificate proceedings was not vitiated by fraud is a finding of fact and binds the High Court in second appeal. [p. 480, cols. 1 & 2.]

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Third Court, Gaya, dated May 29, 1939.

Messrs. Rai T. N. Sahai and K. N. Varma, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. Jafar Imam, H. R. Kazimi and Sarjoo Prasad, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—These two appeals are by the plaintiffs and arise out of one suit instituted by them for a declaration that a certain sale held on April 16, 1934, for recovery of arrears of cess did not affect their interest in village Ekamba, and for recovery of possession of that share.

The facts necessary for understanding the questions raised may be shortly stated.

The plaintiffs' case is that they have title to the extent of 6 annas, 10 dams and odd in village Ekamba, Tauzi No. 6918, and in order to safeguard their interest, due to the deliberate default of the other co-sharers, they applied to the Collector on June 26, 1933, to open a separate account for them. On September 16, 1933, the office reported to the Deputy Collector that there was an arrear of Rs. 11-8-6 on account of cess and asked the applicants to pay their share; and on October 17, 1933, the applicants did not pay the entire arrears but only the amount due on account of cess for their shares. That being done on November 7, 1933, the Deputy Collector ordered that a separate account should be opened in the name of the applicants. These separate accounts were to take effect from January 1934. In the meantime the estate was in arrears on account of cess due for the kist of January and March 1933. Thereupon a certificate proceeding was started on August 24, 1933, in order to recover the arrears from all the co-sharers including the plaintiff-iffs without serving notices in a proper manner as required by the Public Demand Recovery Act and without complying with some of its provisions the sale was held in April, 1934. The plaintiffs having come to know of the sale instituted the present suit on April 14, 1936, challenging the entire sale as fraudulent. They further assailed the validity of the sale on the ground that Gulfam and Qoraisa Bibi having died before the service of the notice under s. 7 of the Act their shares remained unaffected by the sale, and lastly, that the share of Zinoor Ahmad Khan, plaintiff No. 4, was wholly unaffected by the sale.

The trial Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs have been unable to establish their allegations of fraud, but he held that Gulfam died on July 4, 1928, and Qoraisa Bibi died on September 24, 1933, and that their shares remained wholly unaffected by the sale. He also granted relief to the plaintiff No. 4 on the ground that he was no party to the certificate proceedings and fixed his share at 18 dams, 12 krants and odd. In the result he held that the shares of Gulfam, Qoraisa Bibi and plaintiff No. 4, that is to say, 5 dams, 8 krants and odd as recorded in serial No. 8, 1 anna 2 dams and odd as recorded in serial No. 11 and 18 dams, 12 krants and odd as recorded in serial No. 12 of Register D, amounting in all to 2 annas, 6 dams and odd, were not affected by the sale. He accordingly ordered that the plaintiffs were entitled to take possession of these shares—the amount of mesne profits to be determined in subsequent proceedings.

Against this decision passed on April 12, 1938, both the parties by preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge. Those appeals were disposed of by Maulavi Mohammad Ibrahim on May 29, 1939. He affirmed the findings of the learned Munsif on the question of fraud and as to the non-validity of the sale with regard to the shares of Bibi Qoraisa and Gulfam, but he reversed the decision of the learned Munsif as to the non-validity of the sale with regard to the share of the plaintiff No. 4 and held that Zinoor Ahmad Khan had no interest in the shares but that Jaunser Mohammad Khan who was so described in Register D and also in the certificate proceedings was co-sharer of this 5 annas and 2 dams share. Against this decree the two appeals have been preferred by the plaintiffs.

The learned Advocate for the appellants could not seriously challenge the concurrent findings of the Courts below that the sale in the certificate proceedings was not vitiated by fraud. That finding is a finding of fact and binds this Court.

But he strenuously argued that after the separate accounts had been opened on November 7, 1933, on realising from the plaintiffs their quota of the arrears of cess due from this estate for the kist of January and March, 1933, the certificate proceedings which were started on August 24, 1933, must be held to be without jurisdiction so far as the shares of the plaintiffs were concerned. But the fallacy in the argument is that the certificate proceedings had been started to realise the dues from all the co-sharers who were then alive not only for their quota but also on account of the quota of the other co-sharers who were in default. It is true that the plaintiffs paid their own quota but that did not do away with the liability of the entire estate to pay the arrears which were due from the whole estate. In the order bearing No. 16 dated February 19, 1935, in the certificate proceeding in question I find that this question was raised before the certificate officer when he was asked to set aside the sale on account of the shares of some of the co-sharers, but the certificate officer correctly rejected the application on the ground that as a separate account was opened on November 7, 1933, and the demand was for the cess for January and March kist of 1933, the applicants were liable for these kists even though they had paid their quota. For these reasons I overrule the first contention.

It was next argued that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the share of plaintiff No. 4 was affected by the sale. The trial Court found as a fact that this plaintiff has got a share entered in serial No. 12 of Register D and that in the original certificate, in the notices under s. 7 and r. 25 and in the sale proclamation Zinoor Ahmad Khan is not shown as a party; on the other hand Jaunser Ahmad Khan is shown as a party. No evidence was adduced before the learned Munsif to show that Jaunser and Zinoor was one and the same person. He, therefore, held that the share of plaintiff No. 4 was not affected by the sale certificate and then, as I have already stated, he found his share to be 18 dams, 12 krants and odd and not 5 annas and 2 dams. The learned Appellate Court, however, observes that "the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 6 are Nisar Mohammad Khan, Siraz Mohammad Khan, Anwar Ahmad Khan, Zinoor Ahmad Khan and Zainul-ab-din Khan as sons and Mst. Biban Bibi as daughter of Yiar Mohammad Khan. They are holders of 5 annas 2 dams and odd share.

In the certificate (Ex. 19) the holders of these 5 annas 2 dams and odd share have been mentioned. They are the same as in the plaint except that instead of Zinoor Ahmad Khan, Jaunsar Mohammad Khan was written. It is urged by the side of the plaintiffs that Jaunsar Mohammad Khan is not a co-sharer of 5 annas 2 dams share; the contesting defendants on the other hand urge that Jaunsar Mohammad Khan... is the real co-sharer and not Zinoor Ahmad Khan. In the Register D I do not find the name of Zinoor Ahmad Khan but in that register Jaunsar Mohammad Khan is written as co-sharer of this 5 annas 2 dams share. Certificate is thus in accordance with the Register D."

He accordingly held that the holders of this 5 annas and 2 dams share were all parties to the certificate proceeding and, therefore, the sale in respect of this share was ordered to stand. The learned Subordinate Judge appears to have made a mistake. I have examined the certified copy of Register D regarding this share. Item No. 8 distinctly mentions the name of the proprietor as Babu Gulfam Ahmad Khan-minor, and in the third column his father's name is put down as Zinoor Ahmad Khan. Again in Item No. 12 the entry in column 2 is Nisar Mohammad Khan, Siraz Mohammad Khan, Anwar Ahmad Khan, Zinoor Ahmad Khan, Zainul-ab-din Khan and Mst. Biban Bibi. I do not find any name as Jaunsar Ahmad Khan. It is true that the first 'o' after Zinn may be read as 's' but it appears that the copyist was trying to write Zannur Ahmad Khan. Whatever doubts there may be on this point are removed by the entry in column 3 where the parentage of Gulfam is shown as Zanoor Ahmad Khan.

For these reasons I set aside the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point and restore the decision of the learned Munsif and hold that the share of plaintiff No. 4 was also unaffected by the certificate sale of April 1934. This disposes of the two appeals so far as the plaintiffs are concerned.

But the defendants have also filed a cross-appeal or cross-objection and Mr. Jafar Imam appearing on their behalf argues that the Courts below should not have granted any relief regarding the shares of Gulfam and Qoraisa Bibi also. He also argues generally that the whole suit was not maintainable by reason of s. 46 of the Act when it has been found that there was no fraud in the certificate proceedings or in the conduct of the sale.

To take up the case of Gulfam first. Gulfam was a minor who died on July 4, 1928 leaving his father Zinnoor Ahmad Khan, plaintiff No. 4, and his mother, Hakim Bibi, plaintiff No. 8 as his heirs. The extent of his share was 5 dams and odd which is not in dispute. It is clear, therefore that when the certificate was issued on August 4, 1933 it was issued against a dead person. It is common ground that no order for substitution of his heirs has ever been passed in this certificate proceeding. It is alleged that as one of the heirs of Gulfam, namely his father, plaintiff No. 4, was himself a party to the proceedings in his own right the proceedings however irregular they may be, cannot be held to be not binding upon his estate which has been so represented. By s. 52 it is provided that where a certificate debtor dies before the certificate has been fully satisfied, the certificate officer may, after serving upon the legal representative of the deceased a notice in the prescribed form, proceed to execute the certificate against such legal representative; and the provisions of this Act shall apply as if such legal representative were the certificate debtor and as if such notice were a notice under s. 7. This section has no application to the present case because the original certificate was issued against a person who was dead. It is not a case where the certificate-debtor died after the issue of the certificate and before the certificate was fully satisfied. It seems to me, therefore, that the entire proceedings based upon the certificate so issued against a dead person are wholly inoperative to affect the heirs of Gulfam. It was open to the Certificate Officer under s. 11 to amend the certificate by addition, omission or substitution of the name of the certificate-debtor, but he never did so. The proviso to that section provides that when an amendment is made a fresh notice shall be issued as provided in s. 7. For these reasons I agree with the Courts below that the heirs of Gulfam are wholly unaffected by the certificate sale. It may also be observed here that the father was no party to the certificate proceedings because I have already held, in agreement with the learned Munsif, that Zinnoor Ahmad was not a party to the certificate proceedings but one Jaunsar Ahmad Khan.

With regard to the case of Qoraisa Bibi the facts are that a certificate was properly issued against her. She died on September 24, 1933 leaving her father, her mother, her husband, plaintiff No. 2, and her daughter, a minor, who is plaintiff No. 7 as her heirs. By s. 52 the Certificate Officer was empowered to serve upon these legal representatives of Qoraisa Bibi a notice which would be deemed as a notice under s. 7. No such notice was ever served although the peon had reported that Qoraisa Bibi had died on September 24, 1933, in his service report. As already stated plaintiff No. 7 was one of the heirs and was a minor on that date. Therefore, the Certificate Officer ought to have proceeded under s. 50, namely that he should have appointed a proper person to represent the minor daughter, but no such thing was done. The result, therefore, was that three of the heirs of Qoraisa Bibi, namely her father, her mother and her daughter were never upon the record. But it is argued that as her husband, plaintiff No. 2, was upon the record in his own capacity the representation of the heirs of Qoraisa Bibi was complete. No notice, however, was issued against the plaintiff No. 2 that he was to be proceeded against as the heir of Qoraisa Bibi. For these reasons I am unable to agree with the learned Counsel for the respondents that the share of Qoraisa Bibi was at all affected by the certificate sale.

It was then argued that the proper remedy of the heirs was to proceed under s. 29 by applying to have the sales set aside on the ground of non-service of notice or for any other irregularity. But that section assumes that the certificate was a proper certificate. Here the certificate was never altered and no substitution was made by bringing in the names of the legal representatives upon the record. Moreover under that section the Certificate Officer has power to set aside the sale on the ground that notice was not served under s. 7 or on the ground of other material irregularities. But here the plaintiffs do not want that the sale should be set aside. All they want is that in the events that have happened the sale should be held not to affect their interest.

It was then argued that s. 46 was a complete bar for the trial of this question which was a question that arose between the certificate holder and the certificate debtor or their representatives and relating to the making, execution, discharge or satisfaction of a certificate duly filed under this Act. But the question here is between the auction-purchaser and the representatives of the certificate debtor and not between the certificate holder and the certificate debtor or their representatives.

For these reasons I hold that the sale held did not affect the share of Gulfam and of Qoraisa Bibi and that the judgments of the Courts below are correct.

In the result the appeal of the plaintiffs is allowed to the extent of the share of plaintiff No. 4; in other respects the appeal is dismissed. The cross-appeal of the respondents is also dismissed. In the circumstances there will be no order for costs of this Court.

II, r. 2—Leave to file fresh suit can not be granted on its dismissal—Previous suit by wife for divorce—No alternative plea for declaration that she is not wife—Subsequent suit for such declaration, if barred—O. II, r. 2 does not apply to joining of different causes of action in same action—Burmese Buddhist Law—Marriage—Law of divorce.

A Judge cannot give leave to a plaintiff to file a fresh suit upon the dismissal of an earlier suit but only upon its withdrawal. 91 Ind. Cas. 280 (1), relied on, [p. 483, col. 2.]

It cannot be said that a person petitioning the Court for a divorce as a husband or wife ought to add an alternative plea asking for a declaration that he or she is not a husband or wife at all, because the marriage has long ago ceased to exist. The matters are so dissimilar that their union not only might but must certainly lead to confusion. Consequently the failure of the wife in earlier suit for divorce to raise alternative plea for declaration that her marriage has ceased to exist will not bar a subsequent suit for such declaration. [p. 484, col. 1.]

Order II, r. 2, Civil P. C., is not directed to the inclusion in one and the same action of different causes of action even though they arise from the same transactions. 26 Ind. Cas. 228 (5), relied on, [ibid.]

A husband who believes his wife to be guilty of adultery may obtain her admission of guilt and the dissolution of marriage may take place by mutual consent on the footing that the husband retains the hnazon property. If he cannot do this and a separation ensues by reason of his own desertion, then he has three years in which to bring a suit for a decree of divorce, but if by reason of their differences his wife has deserted him, he has only one year. In the suit for a decree of divorce he may, if he can, prove the factum of adultery, but unless he does so the dissolution of marriage becomes effective at the expiration of one or other of these periods whichever may apply. He is no longer a husband and he cannot "prove the adultery" in a suit for divorce brought by him. Nor can he bring a suit for a declaration that the dissolution of the marriage tie was effected in circumstances that his former wife has been guilty of adultery. And, if he cannot bring a suit of this kind, he cannot raise a defence of this kind in a suit brought against him. [p. 485, col. 2; p. 486, col. 1.]

F. A. against the decree of the High Court, in C. R. S. No. 140 of 1938, dated April 24, 1940.

Mr. U Ze Ya, for the Appellant.

Mr. U Maung Maung for Mr. U E Maung, for the Respondent.

Roberts, C. J.—This suit (Civil Regular No. 140 of 1938) was brought by the respondent against the appellant to whom she had been married, and was for a declaration that the status of husband and wife had ceased to exist between them on January 20, 1935, owing to the husband's alleged desertion three years prior to that date, followed by absence of communication between the parties, and the failure of the defendant to maintain the plaintiff; or alternatively that the marital tie was severed on January 20, 1932, on the wife's desertion one year before that date: the plaintiff also prayed for an order directing accounts to be taken of the property of the marriage and for possession of her lawful share. The respondent had filed an earlier suit (Civil Regular No. 51 of 1937) on the footing that she was at the date of filing it a married woman. In that suit she asked for a decree of divorce on the ground of cruelty and the cruelty alleged was the bringing of a false charge of adultery against her by her husband, and turning her out of the house. The husband pleaded in his written statement that the plaintiff was no longer a married woman, he admitted that they had parted on January 21, 1931, and had lived separately ever since. If the separation amounted to desertion on the part of the wife the marital tie would be severed one year later; if it were desertion on the part of the husband it would be severed three years after he refused to take her back on January 20, 1932, and, it is contended on the part of the appellant, that if the separation was in consequence of the wife's adultery it would sever the marriage tie at once. At all events, the point taken by the defence in the first suit was that the plaintiff was not the defendant's wife at the time of bringing her action.

At the trial the wife sought leave to amend her pleading; she wanted to bring an action for a declaration that the marriage was no longer subsisting. Leave to do this was refused her, the learned Judge pointing out that she was seeking to substitute a new and entirely different cause of action against the defendant. The wife thereupon offered no evidence in support of her suit for divorce and it was dismissed because she did not choose to pursue it on the unamended plaint. It is not quite right to say, as we were asked to do, that it was dismissed on the footing that the marriage had already been dissolved. There was no finding to that effect; it was dismissed for want of prosecution. The learned Judge was asked to give leave to the plaintiff under O. XXIII, to file a fresh suit. He stated that if it was necessary for him to give leave (which he doubted) he would do so. It seems that no authorities on this point were cited to him, but a trial Judge cannot give leave to a plaintiff to file a fresh suit upon the dismissal of an earlier suit but only upon its withdrawal. The plaintiff here did not withdraw her suit, but it was dismissed. And having had it dismissed she could not bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action: Fateh Singh v. Jagannath Baksh Singh (1). There was however nothing to prevent her bringing a suit against the same person on a different cause of action provided the provisions of s. 11, Civil P. C., were not infringed. Broadly stated, the rule in s. 11, is a simple one. When a matter has been directly and substantially in issue in one suit and has been heard and finally decided by the Court, the parties to that litigation cannot get the matter tried again in a subsequent suit but are bound by the final judgment. The parties to the litigation who are bound include their representatives in interest or persons claiming under them. Parties to former litigation are not, however, bound, when in a subsequent suit they are suing in a different capacity. And, in a subsequent suit, a decree can only be pleaded as res judicata when the Judge by whom it was made had jurisdiction to try and to decide the subsequent suit itself. These qualifications, however, do not apply to the appeal before us. I only mention them lest it should be thought that the broad statement of the rule is exhaustive.

If, therefore, the matter in dispute in the present suit was directly and substantially in issue in the former suit, and was heard and finally decided by the Court, the doctrine of res judicata would apply. The learned Advocate for the appellant contends that it was directly and substantially in issue. He says that it falls under Expl. IV, to s. 11, because it was matter which "might and ought to have been made ground of attack" in the former suit and must therefore be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in that suit. In Denobundhoo Chowdhry v. Kristomonee Dossee (2), a father had conveyed some land to his daughter as stridhan. After the daughter's death, her mother brought a suit to recover the property saying that the gift deed was a forgery; it was held that the deed was genuine and the suit was dismissed. The mother then brought a second suit claiming the land as her daughter's heiress and it was held that the second suit was barred. Kemp, J. observed (at p. 173*) that the mother had to make out a title to possession and the title she set up in the second suit was one which she could and should have set up in the first suit, as the father and daughter were already dead; she had not changed her cause of action. In Gudappa v. Tirkappa (3), the plaintiffs had first sued the defendant as surviving members of a joint family; their suit was dismissed. They then brought a second suit claiming to be entitled as reversioners on the death of the widow of the former owner. Jenkins, C. J., in considering Expl. IV, to s. 11 said they ought to have made this second contention a ground of attack in the former suit and remarked (at p. 193†):

"Where matters are so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion the construction of the word 'ought' would become important; in this case the matters was the same."

These very words were evidently taken from the judgment of Lord Morris, in Kameshwar Pershad v. Rajkumari Ruttan Koer (4), at p. 85. But how can it be said that a person petitioning the Court for a divorce as a husband or wife ought to add an alternative plea asking for a declaration that he or she is not a husband or wife at all, because the marriage has long ago ceased to exist? These matter appear to me to be so dissimilar that their union not only might but must certainly lead to confusion. The causes of action, which a married woman brings for divorce, and which a woman no longer married brings for a declaration that the marriage has long ago ceased to subsist, are surely inconsistent and ought not to be brought together. And again, not only are the causes of action incongruous but the date at which partition must be reckoned if the plaintiff were successful would be different. A reference to O. II, r. 2, makes it clear that a plaintiff must include the whole of the claim which he is entitled to make in respect of his cause of action, and that he cannot afterwards sue for a relief in respect of the same cause of action which he has omitted to claim. The rule is not directed to the inclusion in one and the same action of different causes of action even though they arise from the same transactions: see Saminatha Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (5). In that case the first action was on two promissory notes, so long as they were outstanding there could not be right of action by the plaintiff except upon them. This action having been dismissed on the ground that there had been material alterations in the notes plaintiff then claimed upon an award under which the promissory notes were given; it was held that it was impossible to say that this claim was the same cause of action as the claim upon the notes and ought to have been included in the prior action.

The conclusion at which I have arrived is that the present suit by the appellant was not barred by s. 11, Civil P. C., or by the provisions of O. II, r. 2, and the matter now in dispute cannot be deemed to be res judicata. In the present suit, the appellant pleaded that the marriage was dissolved owing to the plaintiff's adultery, and the question arises whether a husband can at this stage raise any such plea—it is contended by the respondent that a husband can only aver and prove the adultery of his wife in an action brought by him for divorce on the ground of her adultery. It seems necessary to enquire what may happen under Burmese Buddhist Law when a husband suspects that his wife is guilty of adultery. First, of course, he may disregard his suspicions; or, nonetheless entertaining the conviction that she is guilty he may condone the offence. That aspect of the matter does not arise here. Secondly, he may ask in the Courts for a decree of divorce; that does not arise here either. Thirdly, he may succeed in getting a divorce by mutual consent; the wife, whilst not admitting her guilt, may agree to this; and I am disposed to think, though it is unnecessary for me to decide, that she might whilst either admitting or denying her guilt submit to her dismissal on the footing that her husband was to retain the hnapazon property in the circumstances of the case. But, fourthly, it is contended that the husband may put her away. The following passage of Manugye Chap. XII (43 has been cited):

"Concerning putting away a woman who does not conform to the habits of her class, but addicts herself to low habits, it is thus said: If a woman, without regard to the credit of her family takes a paramour, or without the knowledge of her husband steals, or conceals his property, it is not said the husband shall only cease connubial intercourse with her; her habits are bad; she has certainly no regard to the honour of her family. For this reason, let him take all the property, and have a right to put her away."

Shortly stated, this lays down that if the wife takes a paramour the husband may put her away and retain the hnapazon property. We have been urged that this is Buddhist Law and there is no law which, in a matter of this kind, can abridge or alter it. I have the greatest sympathy with this contention, and if it were capable of application I should have no hesitation in applying it. But who is to decide whether the wife has taken a paramour or not? As I have remarked, her submission to being "put away" on this ground may conclude the matter. But in many cases she may not, and in the present case she does not at all, admit her guilt; here there was no divorce by mutual consent on the footing of admitted adultery. I cannot think that the husband can be judge in his own cause in such a matter. One can imagine a husband who had no ground for suspicion at all but a desire to rid himself of his wife for some quite different reason, turning out his wife and invoking this provision of the law as though he had only to make a charge which everyone knew was groundless in order to (justify his action; or it is possible to think of a jealous husband who has had quite groundless fears as to his wife's fidelity "putting her away" under this provision; is he, although she is quite guiltless, to be allowed to retain all the hnazon property? The appellant's Advocate, with wisdom, has not pretended that a wife may be cast adrift in this way upon a baseless charge.

It would not suffice to try and interpret the provision in Manugye by saying that if the husband had reasonable grounds for believing the wife to be guilty he could put her away under this section. For one thing the laws of Menoo do not say that at all; for another, it would be impossible to hold that a divorce took place on one day because the husband mistakenly and on reasonable grounds believed his wife to be guilty of misconduct, and that his discovery of his error amounted to a remarriage of the parties. Much might have happened in the meantime. This drives me to the conclusion that although the provision cited is good law it certainly does not mean that a husband who merely suspects his wife of adultery can put her away. He can only put her away without her consent if in the words of Manugye "she takes a paramour"; nobody can ever know whether she has done so or not till it is proved in a Court of Justice. Therefore, when I remarked at an early stage in this judgment that it was contended on the part of the appellant that if the separation was in consequence of the wife's adultery it would sever the marriage tie at once, I had in mind that it would be difficult to show in any particular case that the separation took place because the wife had in fact committed adultery unless proof were given in a Court of Justice of this fact; although it might be easy to show that separation took place because the husband thought, or said he thought, that his wife had committed adultery. This being, as I understand it, the law, we are obliged to consider the husband's position according to it. If he does not disregard his suspicions, or condone the offence, or obtain a divorce by mutual consent, he has to decide whether he will put his wife away or whether he will resort to the Courts to prove his wife's adultery and thus obtain a decree of divorce.

It is clear that if he puts his wife away in circumstances which do not, through lack of proof of the factum of adultery, entitle him to retain the hnazon property the marriage nevertheless becomes dissolved by efflux of time owing to the separation. In such a case the desertion must be that of the husband and at the expiration of three years the marital bond is severed. At any time before the expiration of that period the husband may ask the Court for a decree of divorce, and will obtain it if he can prove adultery; but if he does not choose to come to Court with such a prayer within three years his right to tender such proof is at an end, for he ceases to be a husband. He has then chosen not to bring his petition within the period of coverture, and it is plainly too late to do so afterwards. In Ma Dun Mai v Maung San Tun (6), a Bench decision, Dunkley, J. said (at p. 234*);

"In the present case, the husband not having brought an action for divorce against the appellant on account of her adultery, the marriage was brought to an end by the appellant's desertion and not by her adultery, and therefore the rights of the appellant and her deceased husband's heirs to the joint property of the marriage must be decided in accordance with the law for the division of that property on the marriage becoming dissolved by desertion," and at a later stage of his judgment he remarked:

"In my opinion even if there is an allegation of adultery against the wife, the joint property must be divided on the footing that the marriage has been dissolved by desertion, unless the husband has proved the adultery in a suit for divorce brought by him."

We have been asked to direct that this decision may be considered by a Full Bench of not less than three Judges, but I respectfully agree with what the learned Judge there stated. A husband who believes his wife to be guilty of adultery may obtain her admission of guilt and the dissolution of marriage may take place by mutual consent (6) 1938 Rang. 229; 177 Ind. Cas. 492; A I R 1938 Rang. 168; 11 R Rang. 132.

on the footing that the husband retain the hnapazon property. If he cannot do this and a separation ensues by reason of his own desertion, then he has three years in which to bring a suit for a decree of divorce, but if by reason of their difference his wife has deserted him, he only has one year. In the suit for a decree of divorce he may, if he can, prove the factum of adultery, but unless he does so the dissolution of marriage becomes effective at the expiration of one or other of these periods whichever may apply. He is no longer a husband and he cannot "prove the adultery in a suit for divorce brought by him." Nor, in my judgment, can he bring a suit for a declaration that the dissolution of the marriage tie was effected in circumstances that his former wife has been guilty of adultery. Accepting the authority cited as good law, the time has gone by for that. To hold otherwise would be to permit the disputed question of the wife's adultery to be examined into many years after the marriage had been dissolved and when the husband had omitted to seek to put an end to coverture by proving the truth of his suspicions in a Court of Justice. And, if he cannot bring a suit of this kind, it seems to me to follow that he cannot raise a defence of this kind in a suit brought against him.

Some attempt has been made to show, as against the respondent, that one Maung Hla Tin was convicted of adultery with the appellant's wife in 1922. The respondent had no opportunity of showing that she had not committed adultery with him, and these proceedings are not relevant to any issue between the present parties. As, in the Court below, the admission was made on behalf of the wife that she would accept the view that her conduct amounted to her own desertion, the learned trial Judge was in my respectful opinion, right in considering that the marriage became dissolved on January 21, 1933. The learned trial Judge remitted the case to the Deputy Registrar for amendment of pleadings in order that issue might be framed on which a decision could be reached as to share to which the plaintiff was entitled. The appeal against his decisions in all these matters must be dismissed and the appellant must pay the costs, Advocate's fee in this Court 25 gold mohurs.

Mosely, J.—I agree. Manugye, Chap. XII, para. 43 at p. 358 has been quoted for the appellant. It is to be noted that para. 3 at p. 345 is much less uncompromising. It says that if the wife really has a paramour and admits that she has or goes with him, the husband may take possession of all the property. In my opinion Maung Tok v. Ma Kin (7) is still good law, and unaffected by the decision here or by Ma Dun Mai v. Maung San Tun (6), Maung Tok v. Ma Kin (7) was a case where the wife eloped when the husband was suffering from an illness from which he did not recover. The husband, of course, could not sue for divorce. It was, therefore, following s. 276, of the Attathankepa and Manugye, Chap. XII, paras. 3 and 43 in a suit between the wife and an heir of the husband, that the wife had forfeited all interest in the husband's property by her misconduct.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 144, 145—Order, under s. 144, if can be passed against surety—Allowance ordered by Court to be paid to parties out of suit property must be deemed to have been paid on condition of their being refunded by party ultimately proving unsuccessful—Application for mesne profits—Claim to set-off not put in trial Court cannot be raised in appeal—Words "place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such a decree," construction—Possession of Receiver is possession of party ultimately declared successful—Plaintiff succeeding in Court of first instance in suit for possession—Defendant's appeal to High Court—Appointment of Receiver—High Court allowing appeal—Defendant getting possession from Receiver—High Court's decree reversed by Privy Council—Receiver's possession—Plaintiff held entitled to restitution and mesne profits.

Per Burn and Stodart, J.J.—In proceedings under s. 144, Civil P. C., no order for restitution can be made against sureties. There is of course no objection to the sureties being made parties in such proceedings, as they are vitally interested in the amount that may be found due by way of restitution. If the principal is found liable to pay anything to the applicant by way of restitution, it will be for the applicant to enforce that order against the sureties by proceedings under s. 145, Civil P. C., and the liability of the sureties can only be determined in such proceedings. 55 Ind. Cas. 550 (2), referred to. [p. 488, col. 2; p. 489, col. 1.]

No interim order of the Court could operate to give away the revenues of the estate absolutely to one of the contesting parties. The allowances paid pendente lite must be deemed to have been paid on condition that they should be refunded by the party who ultimately proves unsuccessful. Mallikarjuna Prasada Naidu v. Durga Prasad Naidu (10), relied on. [p. 499, col. 2.]

Even in case of an impartible estate the widow of an undivided co-parcener is prima facie entitled to maintenance. 60 Ind. Cas. 534 (12), 150 Ind. Cas. 545 (13) and 189 Ind. Cas. 123 (14), relied on, 47 Ind. Cas. 354 (11), referred to.

Per Stodart, J.—When in an application for mesne profits under s. 144 the opposite party fails to put forth the claim for set-off, he cannot be allowed to raise this plea for the first time in appeal.

An order for the payment of mesne profits to the person who would have been in possession but for the decree which has been reversed is in the words of s. 144, an order which is properly consequential on such "reversal." [p. 497, col. 1.]

Per Wadsworth, J.—There are three ways possible in interpreting the words "place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such a decree," occurring in s. 144, Civil P. C. The words might mean that the parties are to be put in the position they would have occupied had the right decree been passed instead of the wrong decree; or, secondly, they may mean that the parties are to be put in the position that they would have occupied had no decree at all been passed; or the words may mean simply that the parties are to be put in the position which they would have occupied had it not been that a wrong decree had been passed. The last interpretation is the correct one. There is nothing in the words of s. 144 to justify the conclusion that it was the intention of the Code to give to the person claiming restitution and better position than that which he occupied at the time when the wrong decree was passed and this is what has to be inferred if he has to be put in the position which he would have occupied had the right decree been passed. The correct procedure is to take the position as it stood immediately before the wrong decree, to find out what would be the position of the ultimately successful party as on that date, having regard to the fact that the proceedings terminated and to award to the successful party restitution in the shape of any profits wrongfully received under the erroneous decree or as a direct consequence thereof. [p. 507, col. 2.]

Per Wadsworth and Stodart, J.J., Burn, J., contra.—The possession of a Receiver pendente lite must be deemed to be the possession of the party who is ultimately declared successful.

Plaintiff's suit for possession was decreed. The defendant went in appeal to the High Court. A Receiver was appointed by the Court during the pendency of the appeal. High Court allowed the appeal and the defendant took over possession from the Receiver. In the meantime the plaintiff went in appeal to the Privy Council who reversed the decree of the High Court and restored the decree of the Court of first instance. In the application by the plaintiff under s. 144, Civil P. C.:

Held, per Wadsworth and Stodart, J.J., Burn, J., contra.—(1) that the Receiver's possession must be deemed to be the possession of the plaintiff who must be deemed to have been dispossessed when the defendant took over possession from him in pursuance of the erroneous decree of the High Court and hence the plaintiff was entitled to possession and mesne profits during the period he was out of possession by way of restitution under s. 144. 108 Ind. Cas. 89 (3), relied on.

[Case-law distinguished.]

(2) that the fact that the plaintiff was refused a decree for mesne profits by the Court of the first instance and the High Court did not deprive him of his right to claim the same under s. 144 from his opponent after his dispossession by the latter in consequence of High Court's decree which was subsequently reversed. 104 Ind. Cas. 768 (17), explained and distinguished.

A. against an order of the Sub-Judge, Berhampore, dated February 24, 1936.

Mr. B. Jagannadha Dass, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. V. Ramanarasu, for the Respondents.

Burn, J.—This is an appeal from an order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Berhampore in an application for restitution under s. 144, Civil P. C. The applicant before the learned Subordinate Judge was the plaintiff in O. S. No. 46 of 1920 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Berhampore. He sued to recover the estate of Chinnakimedi alleging that he was the son of the last holder of the estate, Brojo Kishore Deo. The defendant Kunja Bihari Deo was the grandson of the plaintiff's grandfather's younger brother. The suit was subsequently transferred to the Additional Subordinate Judge of Ganjam and tried as O. S. No. 10 of 1922. On December 20, 1922, the suit was decreed in favour of the plaintiff in so far as possession of the estate and certain movable properties was concerned. But the plaintiff's claim for mesne profits both before and after suit till date of delivery was disallowed, the learned Subordinate Judge stating in his judgment that,

"no issues were framed in the matter of past and future profits and the question relating to the profits must therefore be deemed to have been given up."

Both the plaintiff and the defendant appealed to the High Court, the defendant from the Subordinate Judge's decree awarding the possession to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff from the Subordinate Judge's decree refusing him mesne profits. These appeals were numbered 25 and 261 of 1923. Pending disposal of the appeals a Receiver was appointed in 1923. He took possession on some date in 1923, (the date does not appear from the papers printed on behalf of either party in this appeal and it is not important for the purposes of this appeal).

The judgment of the High Court was pronounced on March 30, 1928, allowing the defendant's Appeal No. 25 of 1923 and dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs in both Courts. Consequently, the plaintiff's Appeal No. 261 of 1923 for mesne profits was dismissed with costs. The plaintiff applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against both these decrees, and pending disposal of his appeal, he prayed that the Receiver who had been appointed in 1923 might be continued until the appeal to the Privy Council should be disposed of. The main ground upon which that application was based was that the respondent was a woman incapable of managing the estate, that she was in the hands of one Raghunatha Padhi, and that if she was put in possession, she would alienate and wrongfully dispose of the income. It is to be noticed here that during the pendency of the appeals in the High Court, the defendant Kunja Bihari Deo died in December 1925; and his widow had been brought on record as his legal representative. The High Court in its order of August 17, 1928, held that the plaintiff would be amply protected if the respondent was prevented by an injunction from alienating any of the properties of the estate without the consent or sanction of the Subordinate Judge of Berhampore and if she were also required to give security to the extent of Rs. 60,000 for any loss that she might cause to the estate and might be accountable for if eventually the petitioner should succeed in his appeals to the Privy Council. This amount of security was subsequently reduced to Rs. 41,000. Security for that amount was furnished by April 1929; and in that month the Receiver handed over possession of the estate with the small balance of cash then in his hands, and with all the records pertaining to the estate to the respondent.

The appellant was successful in his appeal from the decree of the High Court in A. S. No. 25 of 1923. The judgment of the Privy Council was pronounced on November 1, 1932, and is reported at p. 1 of 64 M. L. J. Ananga Bhima Deo v. Suseela Mala Patta Mahadevi (1). The judgment of the Privy Council shows that the decree of the High Court dated March 30, 1928, was set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge dated December 20, 1922, restored. The respondent, i. e., the defendant, was ordered to pay costs of the appellant both in the High Court and before the Privy Council. The actual order in Council has not been printed in these proceedings by either party. It would appear that the plaintiff did not pursue his appeal to the Privy Council from the decree of the High Court in A. S. No. 261 of 1923 in which his claim for mesne profits was disallowed. The plaintiff executed the decree of the Sub-Court, restored by the order in Council, and got possession of the estate in execution proceedings on March 10, 1933.

On August 10, 1933, the plaintiff put in his application for restitution quoting ss. 144, 145 and 151, Civil P. C. He named as respondents in his application not only Kunja Bihari Deo's widow and legal representative, but also one Raghunatha Padhi Mahasayo alleged to be her agent, and nine other persons, sureties, who had executed the security bonds in pursuance of the orders of the High Court in 1929. The plaintiff claimed that counter-petitioner No. 1, (whom it will be convenient to call the defendant), should be ordered to restore one lakh of rupees or such sum as the Court might find due from her on account of the moneys drawn by her as allowances from the estate funds between 1922 and 1928. His second prayer was that both the defendant and her agent, counter-petitioner No. 2, should be ordered to restore the sum of Rs. 1,50,000 representing the amount wrongly appropriated by them during the period commencing with April 2, 1929, and ending with December 13, 1932. A further prayer was that all the records and accounts taken from the Receiver might be directed to be delivered to the plaintiff and a fourth prayer was that the sureties, counter-petitioners Nos. 2 to 11 might be ordered to pay the plaintiff the sums covered by their security bonds.

In this appeal, we are not concerned with the first and the third prayers, since they were not pressed on behalf of the plaintiff before the learned Subordinate Judge, and learned Counsel for the plaintiff has not attempted to press them before us. With regard to the fourth prayer, it is quite clear that in proceedings under s. 144, no order for restitution can be made against sureties: vide Raghubar Singh v. Jai Indra Bhahadur Singh (2). There is of course no objection to the sureties being made parties in such proceedings, as they are vitally interested in the amount that may be found due by way of restitution. In the present appeal as my learned brother has said, we have been invited to say whether the security bonds can be enforced against the sureties in respect of mesne profits. In my opinion, this question does not arise, and although learned Counsel for the sureties had addressed us on this point, I, with respect, decline to deal with it. If the defendant is found liable to pay anything to the plaintiff by way of restitution, it will be for the plaintiff to enforce that order against the sureties by proceedings under s. 145, Civil P. C., and the liability of the sureties can only be determined in such proceedings.

In my view, therefore, we are only concerned in this appeal with the second of the prayers put forward by the plaintiff. Now with regard to this, the grounds of the plaintiff's claim were somewhat obscurely stated in the affidavit sworn to by the plaintiff's agent. He alleged that during the time when the estate was in the hands of the Receiver the defendant had drawn several amounts out of the estate funds from the Receiver under the orders of the High Court, as allowances for maintenance and other purposes. He said that these sums amounted to about one lakh of rupees. He also alleged that counter-petitioner No. 2 (defendant's agent) had collected "during the period," (but what period is not indicated), not less than $5\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs of rupees, and that there ought to have been a net surplus of at least $1\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs of rupees, after meeting all reasonable charges such as establishment, etc. Counter-petitioner No. 2, he said, had drawn Rs. 12,000 from the estate funds as a gratuity for managing the estate in addition to his monthly salary of Rs. 500. He alleged also that the sureties had drawn from the estate a substantial portion of the amounts for which they had given security. His claim therefore was that he was entitled by way of restitution to the amount of at least $2\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs of rupees, out of which more than $1\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs was to be made good by counter-petitioner No. 2 jointly with counter-petitioner No. 1.

The learned Subordinate Judge overruled the objection made on behalf of the defendant and the other respondents, that no restitution could be awarded under s. 144, Civil P. C. in this case. He held that s. 144 would authorize him to direct the defendant to restore the surplus profits of the estate for the period from April 2, 1929 to December 13, 1932. But he considered that in so far as the defendant was concerned, she had not drawn from the funds of the estate for herself more than she was authorized to draw by the orders of this High Court. But the learned Subordinate Judge held that the payment of Rs. 12,000 made by the defendant to the second counter petitioner, her agent, as compensation for the loss of his practice at the bar during the period of his service under her, was not justifiable. He held therefore that the defendant and the second counter petitioner were liable to make good that amount to the plaintiff. The rest of the plaintiff's claim the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed. The plaintiff has preferred this appeal from the order dismissing his claim. The defendant and the second counter petitioner have appealed from the order directing them to restore Rs. 12,000, but we are not concerned with that appeal, since it was preferred after the District of Ganjam was transferred to the Province of Orissa and it is now pending, we understand, before the High Court of Patna.

Before us, learned Counsel for the appellant has argued two items together amounting to about Rs. 1,30,000. Item No. 1 is Rs. 65,577-1-5 appropriated by the defendant out of the profits of the estate after she received possession of it from the Receiver. The defendants claim to this was based upon an order of the High Court passed by Krishnan, J. on April 11, 1923 by which the Receiver was directed to pay Rs. 1,500 per mensem each to the plaintiff and the defendant. There were subsequent changes in the orders passed by this Court but they do not seem to be material. At the time in April 1929, when the defendant took possession from the Receiver, this allowance was in arrears to the extent of Rs. 65,577-1-5, and the defendants claim is that she was entitled to pay herself this sum out of the profits of the estate as they accrued during the period she was in possession. The other item is Rs. 64,500, the amount taken by the defendant out of the profits of the estate during the period between April 1, 1929 and the beginning of November 1932, at the rate of Rs. 1,500 per mensem. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the defendants' action in paying herself Rs. 65,500 on account of arrears cannot be said to be wrongful, and that she was justified in paying herself at the rate of Rs. 1,500 per mensem during the period this estate was in her possession. The contention of the learned Counsel for the plaintiff is that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong on both these points.

In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge was partly right and partly wrong. He was wrong, I consider, in holding that s. 144, Civil P. C. had any application to this case, but he was right, I think in holding that even if it had, the plaintiff could not recover any portion of either of the two sums now in dispute. The plaintiff, I think, entirely misconceived his remedy. After the judgment of the Privy Council declaring him to be entitled to possession of the estate, he had, in my view, cause of action for a suit for mesne profits for any period within the bar of limitation. But he had no ground for applying for mesne profits in the guise of restitution. The doctrine of restitution under s. 144 is simple. I may quote from Sir Dinshaw Mulla's commentary on s. 144—(considering the matter from the point of view of the party to whom restitution is due):

"The word 'restitution' in this section means restoring to a party, on the variation or reversal of a decree, what has been lost to him in execution of the decree or directly in consequence of that decree. The section does not apply unless the property was lost in execution of the decree or directly in consequence of that decree" and again, (looking at the matter from the point of view of the party who has to make restitution)

"the doctrine of restitution contemplates the case where property has been received by a decree-holder in execution of a decree, and the decree or part thereof is subsequently varied or reversed on appeal by the judgment-debtor."

In the present case, the decree, the reversal of which has given rise to the plaintiff's claim, is the decree passed by the High Court in A. S. No. 25 of 1923. As I have already said, neither party has filed the decree before us, but from the judgment, it would seem that it was merely a decree dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs in both the Courts. If so, there is nothing in the decree affecting the question of possession of the estate. It cannot be said that the decree of the High Court directed that possession of the estate should be taken from the plaintiff and given to the defendant. The plaintiff never had possession of the estate until he got it in execution of the Order in Council in 1933. The reversal of the High Court's decree by the judgment of the Privy Council therefore has nothing, in my opinion, to do with the question of possession of this estate and nothing to do consequently with mesne profits. The Privy Council's judgment, as I have already said, was that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be restored, the decree of the High Court being set aside. It seems to me that learned Counsel for the defendant is on firm ground when he says that in so far as the High Court's decree is concerned all the restitution that could be made to the plaintiff upon its reversal was effected by the Order in Council.

Before the High Court's decree was passed, the position was that the plaintiff had in his favour a decree of the Subordinate Judge that he should be put in possession. That decree was set aside by the High Court, and the position then was that the plaintiff had no decree in his favour. When the High Court's decree was set aside by the Privy Council and the Subordinate Judge's decree restored, the plaintiff thereby came back to the position in which he had been before the High Court's decree was passed. The contention of learned Counsel for the plaintiff is that when the estate was put in possession of a Receiver in 1923, the Court was taking possession of this estate for the benefit of the true owner, and that therefore the possession of the Receiver must be deemed to have been the possession of the true owner. The true owner has now been declared by the Privy Council to be the plaintiff. Therefore, when the Receiver was in possession, he was in possession on behalf of the plaintiff; this is equivalent to saying that plaintiff was in possession and when the defendant took possession in 1929, she was dispossessing the plaintiff. Learned Counsel for the plaintiff relies upon the case reported in Bisheshwar Pratap v. Chandreshwar Prasad (3). There the learned Chief Justice has said:

"Where disputes arise between claimants as to possession of immovable property and the property is placed in the hands of a Receiver by the Court before the determination of the question of title the Court takes possession through its Receiver on behalf of the party who may ultimately establish his title and from the moment the title is determined the possession must be deemed to have been the possession of the lawful owner whose title has been established."

The learned Judge goes on to refer to the judgment of Mukerjee, J. in Dwijendra Narain v. Joges Chandra (4). In considering that case, it is, I think, necessary to bear in mind that that was a case in which a dispute under s. 145, Criminal P. C., arose with regard to possession of certain properties. The Magistrate held that nobody was in actual possession and attached the properties under s. 146, Criminal P. C., and a Receiver was then appointed by the Criminal Court pending decision of dispute between the parties. In the trial Court the plaintiffs got a decree for possession in their favour and in execution of the decree were put in possession. When that decree passed by a Sub-Judge was reversed by the High Court it was held that the defendants could apply for possession by way of restitution under s. 144. I can see no difficulty in applying the principle of restitution in that case, but I do not see that has any bearing on the facts of this case. The important point about that case is that the plaintiffs in the suit got a decree for possession which they executed, and which was afterwards reversed on appeal. Therefore fully in accord with what I have to be the doctrine of restitution, on the reversal of the decree in their favour, they should be compelled under the decree to give up what they had got in possession of that decree. Nothing of that kind is to be found in the case with which I am now dealing as I have already said. The defendant in this case did not get from the High Court a decree for possession. What she got from the High Court was a decree setting aside the Subordinate Judge's decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff. As soon as the Subordinate Judge's decree was set aside, it followed that the Receiver who had been appointed during the pendency of the appeal, could no longer be left in charge of the property.

The High Court had decided that the defendant was the proper owner, and consequently the Receiver's appointment had to come to an end. When it came to an end, the only person to whom he could be directed to hand over possession was the person declared by the High Court to be the rightful owner, namely the defendant. It is quite impossible, in my opinion, to say that delivery of possession was made to the defendant in pursuance of, or in execution of, or directly in consequence of the decree of the High Court. It is quite impossible, I think, to argue that the decree of the High Court was in any manner fulfilled or carried out or obeyed by the delivery of the property to the defendant. The only executable part of the High Court's decree, as I imagine, must have been a direction that the plaintiff must pay the defendant's costs. The portion of the decree which said that the Subordinate Judge's decree was set aside was not a provision which could be put in execution at all. It is therefore not, in my opinion, possible to say that the defendant got possession from the Receiver in pursuance of or in execution of or directly in consequence of the High Court's decree. Delivery of possession by the Receiver to the defendant was a consequence of the High Court's decree, no doubt, but it was an indirect consequence and not a direct consequence. I have not been able to find—and learned Counsel for the appellant has not cited—any case in which restitution in the shape of possession or mesne profits has been ordered where the decree reversed had not given possession. For these reasons, I think the plaintiff entirely misconceived his remedy, that his remedy lay in a suit for accounts and mesne profits and not in an application by way of restitution. Further, if I am wrong with regard to this point, I nevertheless think that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the plaintiff could not recover from the defendant any portion of the Rs. 1,30,000 which has been the subject of argument before us. Supposing that s. 144, can be applied, then the duty of the Court as set out in s. 144, is to "cause such restitution to be made as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed."

Now that, in my opinion, means that the plaintiff is entitled to ask the Court to put him and the defendant back into the positions which they occupied immediately before the High Court's decree was passed. That position was a position in which the Receiver was in possession and under orders of the High Court was making payments of Rs. 1,500 per mensem both to the plaintiff and to the defendant so far as the funds available allowed. What would have been the position, but for the decree of the High Court? It seems clear to me that but for the decree of the High Court, the position would have continued to be the same. The High Court's decree was passed, as I have already said, on March 30, 1928. If the High Court's decree had not been passed on March 30, 1928, the appeal would still have been pending, and it would have continued to be pending until the High Court passed some decree or other.

The plaintiff's claim, in my opinion, amounts to this; that he is entitled to be "restored" to the position which he would have occupied if the High Court's decree passed on March 30, 1928, had been in his favour. Now no doubt, if the High Court on March 30, 1928, had dismissed the defendant's appeal and confirmed the Subordinate Judge's decree, the Receiver would then have been directed to deliver possession to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff would thereafter have enjoined the profits of the estate. But, it seems to me, there is a great difference between the claim to be put in the position which the plaintiff would have occupied if the High Court's decree had been in his favour, and the claim to be put in the same position that he would have occupied if the High Court's decree had never been passed. Section 144, Civil P. C., authorizes the latter proceeding but not the former. If the High Court's decree had not been passed and if the appeal had gone on pending, the Receiver would have gone on making payments both to the plaintiff and the defendant, and it would have been quite within his authority to pay out to the defendant, when the funds of the estate allowed, the arrears due to her to the extent of Rs. 65,500 and the periodical payments of Rs. 1,500 per mensem during the whole period of his Receivership. I therefore consider that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in holding that the plaintiff cannot recover by way of restitution any portion of the sum of Rs. 1,30,000.

We heard a long argument on the question whether the defendant is entitled to maintenance out of the estate. Learned Counsel for the appellant contends—and I think rightly—that this question was not properly raised in the pleadings before the learned Subordinate Judge. It is an interesting question but it is one on which any remarks that we can make must be obiter, and I therefore respectfully excuse myself from making any pronouncement on the question whether defendant is or is not entitled to maintenance out of this estate. The question, in my view, can only be properly tried in other proceedings. The plaintiff could have recovered from the defendant by way of restitution the amount of the costs awarded to her by the High Court's decree in A. S. No. 25 of 1923, if she had executed against him the High Court's decree for costs, but there was no allegation on this point in the affidavit of the plaintiff's agent, and as I have already noticed, the decree of the High Court has not been produced before us. No argument was addressed to us on this subject by learned Counsel for the appellant. I agree with my learned brother that the allowances ordered to be paid to the defendant during the pendency of the appeal cannot be considered as giving the defendant an absolute right to those sums irrespective of the result of the litigation. They were explicitly orders of a temporary nature, and the sums drawn by the defendant would, in my opinion, be sums for which the defendant would be accountable in the event of the plaintiff's success in his appeal to the Privy Council. In my view the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Stodart, J.—This appeal arises on an application made under s. 144, Civil P. C., to the Subordinate Judge. Ganjam by the plaintiff in O. S. No. 10 of 1922 on the file of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Ganjam. Plaintiff filed that suit in 1920 in the Subordinate Judge's Court for the possession of the Zemindari of Chinnakkimedi against the then Zemindar Kunji Behari

Deo. In December 1922 the learned Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in plaintiff's favour. Kunji Behari filed an appeal in Court and obtained stay of execution. He was not allowed to remain in possession. A Receiver appointed by the Court placed in the possession of the estate by order made by Krishnan, J.—(as he then was) on April 11, 1923. Kunji Behari Deo died in December 1925, before his appeal came on for hearing, and his widow, the present defendant, was brought on the record as his representative-in-interest and she continued the appeal. The appeal was decided on March 30, 1928, in the defendant's favour. Plaintiff filed a further appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and applied for stay of execution in this Court. Stay was refused, but defendant was directed to furnish security for Rs. 60,000 (afterwards reduced to Rs. 41,000) before taking possession of the estate. She was not able to find the required security till April 2, 1929, when the estate was delivered to her by the Receiver.

Plaintiff's appeal in the Privy Council was decided on November 1, 1932. The appellate decree of this Court was reversed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge was restored. Plaintiff was given possession of the estate on March 10, 1933. In the application now under appeal plaintiff prayed that the defendant be made to restore to him the profits of the estate which she had received from April 2, 1929, when the Receiver handed over possession to her up to December 13, 1932. He also prayed for the restitution of certain sums which the defendant, and before her, her husband, had been paid during the time when the Receiver was in charge, and which were made payable to the defendant by the aforesaid order of this Court. Plaintiff did not press his claim under the latter head however, so that the only amount with which we are now concerned is the amount of the profits enjoyed by the defendant during the time she was actually in possession of the estate under the appellate decree of this Court, namely from April 2, 1929, to December 13, 1932, on which latter date she was appointed Receiver under the Court pending delivery to the plaintiff. The other respondents to this appeal are the persons who in 1929 furnished security on behalf of the defendant. It is conceded now by the plaintiff that sureties cannot be made liable under s. 144. It is only when the principal is adjudged liable to pay an ascertained sum that proceedings can be taken against the sureties under s. 145.

One of the sureties, respondent No. 2, has in the order now under appeal been declared liable on his bond for Rs. 12,000 and directed to pay that amount to the plaintiff. But that order is not before us in this appeal since respondent No. 2 has appealed against it in the High Court of Judicature at Patna to which Court jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit was transferred on April 1, 1936. The sureties, all of whom have been impleaded in this appeal, have invited us to determine once for all whether their bonds make them liable for the profits of the estate enjoyed by the defendant while she was in possession of it. Agreeing with my learned brother I do not think that question is properly before us. The amount of the profits is not now in dispute. The defendant has filed an abstract statement which I would like to be read as part of this judgment showing the aggregates of expenditure under different heads during her tenure of the estate. The balance is Rs. 1,30,476. This includes a sum of Rs. 11,212 shown by the defendant as expenditure which sum was not actually spent and to which I shall have occasion to refer later. It is now agreed that the sum claimed by the plaintiff is Rs. 1,30,476 as found in this statement of account. This is the actual surplus remaining after all expenditure has been incurred. The learned Subordinate Judge held that under s. 144 the plaintiff in the circumstances of this case could not recover these profits. Hence this appeal.

In the course of the appeal the defendant has claimed that even if she is liable under s. 144 to restore the profits of the estate nevertheless out of those profits she is entitled to retain the major portion on two separate and distinct grounds, namely (a) as the aggregate of sums directed to be paid to her by certain orders of this Court, (b) as the amount which she would otherwise be entitled to receive as maintenance from the revenues of the estate as the widow of an undivided co-parcener of the Zamindar. The amount claimed by the defendant is very nearly Rs. 1,30,476 on either computation. Thus there are three questions for our decision in this appeal, namely: I. Is the lower Court wrong in holding that the profits enjoyed by the defendant are not in the circumstances of this case liable to be restored to the plaintiff under s. 144; II. Even if they are, is the defendant entitled to retain the major portion of them under the orders passed by this Court; III. Or as maintenance.

In order to understand the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge it is necessary to explain what the orders of this Court were. The first is the order passed by Krishnan, J., (as he then was) on April 11, 1923 when he placed the estate in the custody of a Receiver. That order has not been printed and we have to gather its import from references made to it in subsequent orders of this Court. The matter then before Krishnan, J., was the motion of the defendant for stay of delivery of possession to the plaintiff pending defendant's appeal in this Court. It is sufficient for the present purpose to state that Krishnan, J. directed that the estate be put in the hands of a Receiver—which was forthwith done—and that out of the surplus revenues of the estate the Receiver should pay to each party for their maintenance and for the expenses of the litigation a sum of Rs. 1,500 a month. Subsequently, at some date in 1924, on the Receiver reporting that the surplus revenues of the estate were not sufficient to enable him to pay those allowances, Krishnan, J. directed that whatever surplus there was after meeting the necessary expenditure, should be divided equally between the parties. This second order is not now before us either. Now, in April 1929, when the Receiver handed over the estate to the defendant there were very substantial arrears of this allowance due to both parties. I shall have occasion later to refer to the arrears due to the plaintiff and how they were dealt with. The arrears due to the defendant were about Rs. 65,000. The Receiver had less than Rs. 11,000 in his hands and of this he paid Rs. 10,000 to the plaintiff a few days before handing over the estate to the defendant. Learned Counsel are agreed that that was the state of affairs in April 1929.

The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is to the following effect. In proceedings in restitution under s. 144, what the Court has to do is to put the parties in the position they occupied at the time of the decree which has been reversed, in the present case, at the time of the appellate decree of this Court. At that time a Receiver was in possession of the estate. The position of the parties, if the Receiver is regarded as being in possession, and if there had been no appellate decree of this Court, was that he owed the defendant Rs. 65,000 as arrears to allowance and that he had to go on paying her further allowance up to the date of the Privy Council decree. These sums, both the arrears and the current allowance would have to be paid to defendant out of the revenues of the estate realized by the Receiver after the date of the appellate decree and up to the date of the Privy Council decree. And it so happens that the aggregate of the sums which would have been payable to the defendant on this hypothesis is very nearly equal to Rs. 1,30,476, the amount of the surplus profits which defendant actually enjoyed. To take this money away from her would be to change her position for the worse, a thing which in the opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be done under s. 144. In my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge's finding cannot be supported on the grounds stated by him. His reasoning is fallacious. Section 144 is:

"Where and in so far as a decree is varied or reversed, the Court of first instance shall on the application of any party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise, cause such restitution to be made as will as far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed, and for this purpose the Court may make any orders, including orders for the refund of costs and for the payment of mesne profits which are properly consequential on such variation or reversal."

The position of the parties according to the learned Subordinate Judge but for the appellate decree of this Court would be that a Receiver would be in possession of the estate and would continue in possession. But clearly if the appellate decree had not been passed on the date it was passed, the Receiver could in no imaginable circumstances have been continued in possession. If that decree had not been passed there was nothing whatever to prevent the plaintiff entering on the estate. It would have been the plaintiff therefore who would have enjoyed the surplus profits of the estate from the date of the appellate decree and he was under no liability—so far as the subject-matter of the suit was concerned—to pay defendant anything, whether by way of arrears of allowances or as current allowances. The fact remains that during her tenure of the estate the defendant received and enjoyed the profits which but for the appellate decree of this Court the plaintiff would have enjoyed.

A digression must be made here to correct a mistake made by the learned Subordinate Judge which may have influenced his mind in arriving at the above conclusion. Interpreting a certain order dated November 20, 1928, made by this Court (Ex. 6) after the appellate decree was passed but before the estate was handed over to the defendant, he construed it as containing a direction by this Court to the Receiver to pay to the defendant the arrears of allowance due to her under Krishnan, J.'s order of April 1923, and which according to the learned Subordinate Judge amounted to Rs. 65,577. But Ex. 6 has nothing to do with the arrears of allowance due to the defendant or the payment of those arrears. On the contrary, it relates to the arrears due to the plaintiff. It was passed on C. M. P. No. 4146 presented by the plaintiff and C. M. P. No. 4834 presented by the defendant. Plaintiff prayed amongst other things that the Receiver be directed to pay him the arrears of allowance computed at Rs. 1,500 a month as ordered by Krishnan, J. in 1923 instead of at Rs. 1,000 which was the rate adopted in a previous order of this Court dated August 17, 1928. Defendant prayed that on the contrary arrears due to the plaintiff should be computed at Rs. 500 a month only. The order of this Court was that there were no grounds to vary the original order of 1923, awarding an allowance to the plaintiff at the rate of Rs. 1,500 a month. No question arose then or could arise on those petitions, of the arrears payable to the defendant, who by that time had become entitled to be in possession of the estate and so entitled to the revenues out of which such arrears could be paid.

I now come to the grounds on which the learned Subordinate Judge's finding is sought to be supported by learned Counsel for the defendant. His first argument is that if the plaintiff is put back in the position he would have occupied but for the decree which has been reversed, he would be merely in the position of a successful plaintiff who has still to execute his decree. His second argument is that under s. 144, a party cannot be put in possession of that of which he was never dispossessed. These arguments are both based on the fact that the plaintiff was not actually in possession on the date of the appellate decree but a Receiver was in possession. But, in my opinion, and in this my learned brother differs from me, a complete answer to these arguments is furnished by the principle that the possession of a Receiver pendente lite must be deemed to be the possession of the party who is ultimately declared successful. Here the plaintiff had succeeded in the Court of first instance. He was then declared to be entitled to immediate possession of the estate. He applied to the Court to be put into possession. That application was stayed. Nevertheless the defendant was not allowed to remain in possession. A Receiver was appointed and put in charge of the estate. But the estate is a profit yielding concern and the Receiver had strictly to account for the profits. On whose behalf did he hold these profits? The answer, must be, in my opinion, on behalf of the party ultimately declared successful. And if he had to account for the profits to that person he should be deemed to have held the estate on behalf of that person. Virtually therefore when the defendant took over the estate from the Receiver she dispossessed the plaintiff. And if the appellate decree had not been passed then at the date of that decree the order of the Court dated April 11, 1923 staying plaintiff's application for delivery of possession would have become automatically discharged and the Receiver would forthwith have put the plaintiff into possession. In my view, the effect of the decree which has been reversed was to dispossess the plaintiff. On the reversal of that decree plaintiff is entitled under s. 144 to restitution of the estate and of the profits which accrued during the time he was out of possession.

The rule that the possession by a Receiver must be deemed to be the possession of the person who is ultimately declared entitled, is illustrated by the procedure adopted in suits for immovable property which at the time of filing the suit is in the custody of a Receiver—for example a Receiver put in possession by a Magistrate under s. 146, Criminal P. C. In such a case, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to sue for a declaration of his title. He need not pray for delivery of possession and what is more important he need not pay the very much greater stamp duty leviable on a suit for possession. If he succeeds the Receiver delivers the estate to him. That the same is the case when the estate is in the custody of a Receiver appointed by the Court is explained in Bisheshwar Pratap v. Chandreshwar Prasad (3). That case arose on an application for restitution under s. 144, Civil P. C., and is, I think, very much in point here. The property there in question was called the Sarsund Estate. It consisted of four separate items. The last undisputed owner died in 1908 and on his death there was a scramble for possession. The Magistrate apprehending a breach of the peace over Items Nos. 2 and 3 and not being able to decide who was in possession attached these two items and put a Receiver in charge of them. In 1911 one of the claimants, Asharfi Singh, who had possession of Item No. 4, sued the other claimants for possession of Items Nos. 1 and 2 and the Court in 1915 put Item No. 1 also in custody of a Receiver. Asharfi's suit was dismissed in 1919. But the Receiver remained in possession until December 13, 1920. He was discharged on that day but re-appointed on the following day in a suit which had been filed by another set of claimants numbered as 112 of 1920. Thus, up to the date of the filing of O. S. No. 112 of 1920, Asharfi Singh had not been in possession of Items Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and they were in the possession of Receivers and remained in such possession till the suit was decided.

The defendants in O. S. No. 112 of 1920, were Asharfi Singh and a certain rival claimant Chandreshwar who had agreed to adjust their claims inter se one giving up his claim to Items Nos. 1 and 2, the other giving up his claim to Items Nos. 3 and 4. The position at the time that suit was filed was that Items Nos. 1, 2 and 3 were in the possession of Receivers and Item No. 4 was in the possession of Asharfi. The plaintiffs being a third set of claimants succeeded in the suit and were given a decree for possession and on February 27, 1923 possession of Items Nos. 1, 2 and 3 was taken on their behalf by the Court of Wards to whom the Receiver handed over Items Nos. 1, 2 and 3. Asharfi and Chandreshwar, the unsuccessful defendants, filed appeals to the High Court which reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and declared the title of Asharfi and Chandreshwar in priority to the plaintiffs. The High Court did not however make any decree for delivery of possession to the defendants. At the time of the High Court decree the defendants were, in respect of Items Nos. 1, 2 and 3 persons who had never had actual possession but who had been declared to be entitled; a position similar to that occupied by the plaintiff in this case at the time of the decree of the Privy Council.

The defendants Asharfi and Chandreshwar not having a decree for delivery of possession applied in the Court of first instance for restitution of the property under s. 144. The Subordinate Judge held: (1) that as the trial Court's decree had been set aside by the High Court the applicants were entitled to be restored to the position they would have occupied but for such decree; (2) that strictly speaking restitution in such a case would mean replacing the property in the hands of the Receivers; (3) but that as the possession of the Receivers was the possession of the Court for the benefit of the person entitled, the applicants were entitled to possession by way of restitution. The plaintiffs then appealed to the High Court whose decision is contained in the case cited. It was urged in the High Court as it is urged here that restitution could not be made to a party who was not in possession before. The Court, held, (per Dawson-Miller, C. J.):

"Where disputes arise between claimants as to possession of immovable property and the property is placed in the hands of a Receiver by the Court pending the determination of the question of title, the Court takes possession through its Receiver on behalf of the party who may ultimately establish his title and from the moment the title is determined the possession must be deemed to have been the possession of the lawful owner whose title has been established. Nor do I think it makes any difference whether the property is attached by the Magistrate under the provisions of the Criminal P. C., or placed in the possession of a Receiver appointed by the Civil Court."

Pausing here for a moment, I observe, that the position of the plaintiff in this case at the time the Receiver was appointed was more than that of a mere claimant. He was in a better position than Asharfi and Chandreshwar were, in the Patna case Bisheshwar Pratap v. Chandreshwar Prasad (3). For, he was a successful claimant with a decree for possession already made in his favour. Continuing, Dawson-Miller, C. J., said that in his opinion the law in the subject had been correctly stated by Mookerjee, J., in two cases in the Calcutta High Court in 1924 and 1916* respectively; and he quotes from those two cases certain observations of Mookerjee, J., as follows:

"When the Court has appointed a Receiver and the Receiver is in possession his possession is the possession of the Court, and the possession of the Court by its Receiver is the possession of all parties to the action according to their titles..... The property passes into legal custody as the Receiver is in the position of stake-holder and such custody is for the benefit of the true owner."

Brajendra Kishore v. Abdul Razac (5), is an authority for the proposition that when property is attached under s. 146, Criminal P. C., it passes into legal custody and during the continuance of the attachment such custody is for the benefit of the true owner. If the true owner was in fact in possession when the attachment was effected, his possession in the eye of the law is not interrupted. If on the other hand the wrongdoer was in possession at the time the attachment took place, the effect of the attachment is to interrupt his possession and from the moment of attachment the possession of the rightful owner is revived in the eye of the law..... If during attachment the seisin or legal possession is in the true owner the attachment does not amount to either dispossession of the owner or discontinuance of his possession."

If the facts of the present case are interpreted in the light of the rule laid down in the foregoing judgment of Mookerjee, J., namely that the effect of the attachment interrupts the possession of the wrongdoer and in the eye of the law revives the possession of the rightful owner then the position is as follows: Brojo Kishore, father of the plaintiff, was the zamindar till his death in 1906. Plaintiff should have succeeded him, (5) 31 Ind. Cas. 242; A I R 1916 Cal. 751; 22 C L J 283; 20 C W N 481.

but his title remained in abeyance for reasons which need not now be stated. Brojo Kishore was succeeded by Purushottama, elder son of his first cousin and senior representative of the junior line, and on Purushottama's death in 1915 he was succeeded by Kunji Bihari Deo, the original defendant in this suit. And Kunji Bihari Deo was the person in possession in April 1923, when the estate was placed in the possession of the Receiver. As has now been settled by the decision of the Judicial Committee, the possession of the estate from 1907 to 1923 first by Purushottama, and afterwards by Kunji Behari Deo, was wrongful. The effect of the appointment of the Receiver therefore was to interrupt that possession and at the same time, in the eye of the law to revive the possession of Brojo Kishore's representative-in-interest, namely the plaintiff. Again in Bisheshwar Pratap v. Chandreshwar Prasad (3) a question of limitation was raised by the appellants. Their argument was based on the following propositions. The last male owner died in 1908. Chandreshwar had never been in possession—which was true—and had never filed a suit to substantiate his title. On the other hand Bisheshwar, one of the appellants' claimed to have entered into possession in 1908 and adding on to the period of his possession, the possession of the Receivers appointed in 1908 and 1915 he had prescribed for title. Dawson-Miller, C. J., on this part of the case said:

"It is clear that they (the appellants) cannot set up a title by adverse possession over 12 years, for whatever possession they may have had in the beginning, assuming it can be proved, came to an end when the Receiver was appointed of the properties in Schs. II and III in 1908, and of those in Sch. I in 1915..... And if I am right in holding that the possession of the Receiver in a case like the present is to be deemed the possession of the rightful owner then Chandreshwar has not lost his title by omitting to bring a suit within 12 years of the death of Mulukrapi Kuer" and in the same case on this point, Mullick, J. said:

"Even if Bisheshwar can prove that he got possession in 1908, the subsequent entry of Mr. Stevens, the Receiver appointed in 1908, by the Magistrate and of Mr. Moore, the Receiver appointed by the Civil Court in 1911, put an end to the illegal possession of Bisheshwar and restored the possession of the true owner Chandreshwar."

Following the authority of this case and, with respect, adopting the reasoning of the learned Judges who decided it, I hold that the effect of the appellate decree of this Court, by which the Receiver's possession of the estate was determined, was to dispossess the plaintiff, since in the eye of the law the possession of the Receiver was the possession of the plaintiff. The contention of learned Counsel for the defendant that under s. 144 the plaintiff can only be put back to the position of a successful plaintiff who has obtained a decree but has not executed it is not in my opinion sound. Nor is there substance in his contention that the plaintiff cannot be put in possession of that of which he has never been dispossessed. For plaintiff was in the eye of the law dispossessed when the Receiver handed over the estate to the defendant. Asharfi and Chandreshwar in the Patna case Bisheshwar Pratap v. Chandreshwar Prasad (3) had never actually been in possession. That case it will be observed was a stronger case than the present case: for the subject-matter of the application there was the corpus of the estate actual possession of which had not been decreed to the applicants. Here the subject-matter of the application is the surplus profits of the estate which accrued during the time when the plaintiff was out of possession. If it had been necessary, the plaintiff could have recovered the corpus of the estate under s. 144. And the Court while making an order for its restoration could have made an order for the payment to him of the profits appropriated by the wrongful owner during the latter's possession of the estate under the decree which has been reversed. An order for the payment of mesne profits to the person who would have been in possession but for the decree which has been reversed is in my opinion in the words of s. 144, "an order which is properly consequential on such reversal." I do not think that the cases are in point, which have been cited by learned Counsel for the respondent in support of his position that under s. 144 a person cannot be restored to possession of that of which he was never dispossessed. The property now in question consists of mesne profits which prima facie could never have been in plaintiff's possession. The cases cited refer to specific items of property.

In Baikuntha Nath v. Prosanna Moyee Debi (6) the property claimed consisted of cash and ornaments contained in an iron safe and in the possession of Prosannamoyi Debi, sister of one Mondakini, deceased. Baikuntha applied for letters of administration to the estate of the deceased and was opposed in the Court of the District Judge by Prosannamoyi who set up a will in her favour. The District Judge granted the letters, but on appeal to the High Court, they were revoked and probate of the will was granted to Prosannamoyi. Baikuntha preferred an appeal to the Judicial Committee which succeeded. When the matter was pending in the District Court a Commissioner had been appointed to take an inventory of the property and Prosannamoyi prevented him from opening the safe, contending that some of its contents were her own, apart from the effect of the will. The District Judge ordered the safe to be kept under seal in a separate room and the key retained by the Commissioner. When the appeal of Prosannamoyi succeeded in the High Court the Commissioner removed the seals. After the Privy Council decree Baikuntha applied to the District Judge under s. 144 for an order against Prosannamoyi to restore to him the contents of the iron safe. The District Judge held that by his order that the safe be sealed and kept in a separate room he did not intend that it should be taken out of Prosannamoyi's possession and that as a Probate Court he had no power to take property out of a person's possession. Further he held that his order, passed after the appellate decree, directing that the seals be removed did not amount to an order restoring possession of the safe and its contents to Prosannamoyi. In other words he held that Prosannamoyi's possession of the safe and its contents had not been interrupted and he rejected the claim of the administrator that she had got possession of the safe from the Court in consequence of the High Court's decree and so must be made to return it when that decree was reversed. It is clear that in that case the proper remedy of the administrator was to sue for possession of the property in question if he thought he could prove that it was part of the estate of the deceased. In confirming the District Judge's order the Court (Chatterjee and Panton, JJ.) observed:

"The Probate Court could not direct the properties to be made over to the appellant by way of restitution, because they had never been in his possession nor taken out of his possession."

That observation clearly relates to the facts of that particular case. The administrator under his letters of administration did not become entitled to possession of any property but only to bring in such property as he could prove to have been the property of the deceased. He had never got possession of the iron safe and its contents. The Commissioner had never got possession of it as the property of the deceased. Restitution could only be made in such a case of property which the administrator had reduced to possession under his letters as belonging to the estate of the deceased and which had been taken from him as a result of the decree which had been reversed. In Niadar Mal v. Ratan Lal (7), the property was a debt due by two partners to the custodian of enemy property who was no party to the suit. The suit was for dissolution of partnership. In the Court of first instance it was decreed that the debt aforesaid was payable by one partner only. He paid the whole debt to the custodian. On an appeal filed by him, it was declared that the debt was payable by both partners in equal shares. The appellant then claimed under s. 144 from his ex-partner half of the amount of the debt. It was held that s. 144 did not apply to the facts of the case. Appellant had not paid his partner's share of the debt to the custodian in execution of the decree which had been reversed nor in consequence of that decree. Nor was his partner in possession of any property which had been taken out of appellant's possession by any decree or order of a Court. That was a clear case where the appellant's proper remedy was by a suit for contribution.

In Banarsi Prasad v. Harikishun Radhe Kishun (8), the property was five bales of cotton. These were part of a larger quantity, namely 18 bales, which plaintiff sued to recover from the defendant on the ground that they belonged to himself. Plaintiff's suit was dismissed and he appealed. Pending his appeal eight bales were attached by one of defendant's creditors who by way of compromise accepted and took away five bales. Plaintiff's appeal succeeded. He then applied for restitution of the five bales aforesaid which had legally passed into the hands of a third party. The Court (per Fazl Ali, J.) held that s. 144 did not apply to the facts of the case. It was observed that :

"Section 144 is meant to apply ordinarily to the class of cases where a person having obtained a decree executes it and recovers some money or property from the judgment-debtor and then the decree is reversed which necessitates the restitution of the property or money which the judgment-debtor had to part with at the instance of the Court."

The last argument of learned Counsel for the respondent on this part of the case is that the plaintiff having in this suit asked for and failure to obtain a decree for future mesne profits cannot now claim them by way of restitution under s. 144. It is true that the plaintiff in his suit prayed for future mesne profits. In the Court of first instance this prayer was refused. And when defendants appealed against the substantive part of the decree plaintiff filed a cross-appeal, A. S. No. 261, against the trial Court's order denying his future mesne profits. This cross-appeal naturally failed. And it does not appear that in his appeal to the Judicial Committee the plaintiff renewed his prayer for future mesne profits. But the answer to this contention of learned Counsel for the defendant is, in my opinion, that the profits which the plaintiff claims now in this application under s. 144 are not the same as the profits which he would have got if he had been given a decree for future mesne profits. Future mesne profits could have been awarded for the period extending from the date of the plaint to the date when the plaintiff recovered possession of the estate. But, as a result of my finding on the first part of learned Counsel's argument, plaintiff's possession in the eye of the law began when the Receiver was put in possession which was on or about April 11, 1923. The profits accruing during the Receiver's tenure of the estate would be the plaintiff's apart from any decree that he might have obtained for future mesne profits. The profits now claimed are for a period long after the plaintiff in this sense obtained possession. They are for the period subsequent to the appellate decree of this Court which caused the plaintiff to be dispossessed.

In my opinion, a plaintiff who has been refused a decree for mesne profits but who subsequently gets into possession is not debarred from claiming under s. 144, profits which accrued to his opponent after the latter had as the result of a successful appeal dispossessed the plaintiff. That in my view is the position of the plaintiff in this case. It will not be right to say that he is merely in the position of one who has got a decree for possession without future mesne profits. His position is better than that. He has got a decree for possession and has reduced the estate to possession. His present claim for profits is based on his deprivation of the estate by the force of the appellate decree. The decree of the Court of first instance worked itself out when the Receiver was placed in possession of the estate. The plaintiff acquired new rights when under the appellate decree the Receiver's possession which was plaintiff's possession was determined and the defendant was placed in possession of the estate. Lastly, on the question of restitution generally and the meaning of s. 144, there is a passage in a recent case decided by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court (Harris and Misra, JJ.), with which, with respect, I concur and which I think may with advantage be quoted. See Badrudin Khan v. Mahyar Khan (9), at p. 108.

"The doctrine of restitution contemplates a case where property has been recovered by the decree-holder under his decree and the decree is subsequently reversed wholly or partly in other proceedings. In such cases the law raises an obligation on the party who has received the benefit of the erroneous judgment to make restitution to the other party for what he has lost. The use of the words 'damages, compensation and mesne profits' in the section indicates that the possession obtained under an erroneous decree, subsequently reversed, is wrongful possession and on the reversal of the decree the judgment-debtor would be entitled not only to the possession of the property taken from him but also to mesne profits during the period he was kept out of possession."

Two more points only remain for our decision. It is contended now on behalf of the defendant that even if the plaintiff is entitled to recover this Rs. 1,30,476 from her as the surplus profits of the estate nevertheless she is entitled to retain for herself a sum which is very nearly equal to Rs. 1,30,476 either: (I) as allowance payable to her under orders of this Court, or (II) as maintenance at the rate of Rs. 1,500 a month which, she claims, would be payable to her as the widow of an undivided co-parcener of the Zamindar.

First as to the allowances. The orders of this Court on which the defendant relies are first the orders made by Krishnan, J. in 1923 and 1924; and secondly the orders made in 1928 and 1929 after the defendant had succeeded on appeal and before the estate was handed over to her. It will be remembered that when Krishnan, J. placed the estate in the custody of the Receiver he directed that each of the parties should be paid for maintenance and for the expenses of the litigation, a sum of Rs. 1,500 a month; and that Rs. 65,577 (as found by the lower Court) out of the allowances due to the defendant remained unpaid at the time (April 2, 1929), the Receiver handed over the estate to her. Defendant's case is that out of the revenues of the estate accruing to her after she came into possession of it, she paid herself this sum and is now entitled to retain it. Further she claims that for the 43 months during which she was in possession under the appellate decree she was entitled to appropriate to herself a monthly allowance at the same rate and this amounts to Rs. 64,500; these two amounts being added together come to Rs. 1,30,077 which is very nearly equal to the amount of Rs. 1,30,476 of the surplus profits of the estate. In considering this part of the defendant's case we have to ascertain what the orders of this Court are relating to these allowances. And we have to decide what the effect of those orders is. Do they mean that the parties were to keep whatever was paid to them as allowances irrespective of the ultimate result of the litigation? Or do they mean that the allowances were only provisional payments and were bound to be refunded by that one of the parties who was finally unsuccessful?

As regards the Rs. 64,500 which the defendant claims to be entitled to appropriate as allowances accruing due, during the period she was in possession of the estate, there are, of course no orders of this Court sanctioning any such appropriation. The allowance was payable under Krishnan, J.'s order during the pendency of the defendant's appeal to this Court and the effect of that order was spent when the appeal was decided. Then when this Court directed the defendant to be put in possession in 1929, she was put in possession as rightful owner entitled to all the revenues of the estate and there would have been no point in making an order that she was entitled to take so much a month out of those revenues as an allowance for herself. We are left therefore with the Rs. 65,577 (accepting the lower Court's figure) which represented arrears of the allowance accruing due to the defendant during the pendency of her appeal and remaining unpaid when she entered on the estate. Was the defendant entitled to appropriate this sum out of the revenues of the estate which accrued to her after she entered in possession and even if she was, is she not now bound to refund it to the plaintiff? Learned Counsel for the plaintiff contends that no interim order of the Court could operate to give away the revenues of the estate absolutely to one of the contesting parties, but that allowances paid pendente lite must be deemed to have been paid on condition that they should be refunded by the party who ultimately proves unsuccessful. He contends that even if this sum of Rs. 65,577 had been paid to defendant by the Receiver before he handed over charge to the defendant, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover it. I think that he is right.

In Challapalle Zemindari case (Mallikarjuna Prasada Naidu v. Durga Prasada Naidu) (10) there is an observation of the Judicial Committee referring to allowances paid to a claimant pendente lite. That was a suit for maintenance by a younger brother against the Zamindar in possession. It was urged on behalf of the defendant before the Judicial Committee that the plaintiff could not recover arrears of maintenance accruing prior to suit because he had never demanded maintenance. As against this it was pointed out that he was, prior to the maintenance suit, prosecuting another suit against the Zamindar for partition of the estate. The Privy Council observed by way of explaining the absence of a demand for maintenance, that

"so long as that action, i. e., the partition suit was pending, the plaintiff could not well claim maintenance except as a provisional means of support pending the appeal to Her Majesty in Council."

This observation appears to support the contention put forward by plaintiff's Counsel that sums awarded to a litigant as maintenance pendente lite are awarded on the implied understanding that they are to be refunded if the party is ultimately unsuccessful. It would be anomalous in my opinion if a Court could award to a suitor money to be paid out of the revenues of the very property which he is suing to recover, otherwise than on condition that the money would have to be refunded if he fails in his suit. That would be to give him part of the very relief which he claims before there is any judicial decision that he is entitled to that relief. I think therefore that Krishnan, J.'s order of 1923 did not operate to give defendant an absolute title to the sums directed to be paid to her for maintenance and for the expenses of the litigation.

We have next to see whether in any of the orders of this Court authority was in fact given to the defendant to appropriate Rs. 65,577 out of the revenues of the estate which accrued to her after she entered into possession, and to retain it as her own property on account of arrears of allowance due to her for the period when, pending her appeal to this Court, she was out of possession. Krishnan, J.'s orders of 1923 and 1924 are as I have said not before us. Learned Counsel on both sides have been content to rely, for the import of those orders, on references made to them in the orders passed by this Court after defendants' appeal was decided on March 30, 1928 and before defendant entered possession into of the estate on April 2, 1929. It is necessary therefore to explain what these latter orders were. After the appellate decree was made, the plaintiff applied for stay of execution pending his appeal to the Judicial Committee and for a continuance of the Receiver appointed by Krishnan, J. in 1923. That application was dismissed in the order Ex. A, dated August 17, 1928. In Ex. A no reference is made to the arrears of allowances due to the defendant. The plaintiff's arrears of allowance amounting to Rs. 45,000 were dealt with however. The Receiver was directed to pay them up to the date of his handing over possession. The Receiver was still in possession pending defendant's taking delivery and pending disposal of plaintiff's petition that defendant be not given delivery but that the Receiver should be continued.

The next order is Ex. 6, dated November 20, 1928 to which we have already referred, in which the rate at which the arrears payable to plaintiff were to be computed was directed to be Rs. 1,500 a month not Rs. 1,000 a month as had been inadvertently stated in the previous order Ex. A. On that occasion no motion was made by the defendant regarding her own arrears. The last order is Ex. C, dated March 20, 1929. In this order the question of allowances and arrear allowances is discussed in full. There were three petitions before the Court. One was by the plaintiff praying for a direction to the Receiver to pay him the arrears of allowance, as already ordered, and that the Receiver be not discharged until he did so—which was obviously only a device to prevent the defendant from getting into possession, since the Receiver had not nearly enough funds in hand to pay plaintiff's arrears—they amounted to Rs. 45,000 and would have had to continue in possession in order to realize the necessary sum from the rents of the estate. The second motion was by the defendant praying that the Receiver be directed to disburse to her the arrears of allowance due to her as he had already been directed to do in the case of the plaintiff; and in the alternative if he had not enough funds—which everybody knew to be the case, for he had less than Rs. 11,000 in his hands—then to direct him to divide whatever he had, equally between the parties.

The third petition was by the defendant praying that the order of the Court passed on November 20, 1928 (Ex. 6) should be reviewed and amended by reducing the rate at which the arrears due to plaintiff were directed by that order to be calculated. The order of the Court Ex. B was that the arrears due to the plaintiff under Mr.

Krishnan's order were Rs. 45,000 as on September 1, 1928; that he was to be paid Rs. 500 per month as from that date; that the arrears of Rs. 45,000 were to be paid to him in annual instalments on July 1 of every year; that the Receiver however might pay him the instalment for 1929, namely Rs. 10,000 out of the money in his hands, and if he did not, then the respondent (who was about to take possession of the estate and did take possession a fortnight later) must pay it, and if the money was not paid as directed that this order could be executed and also the parties would be at liberty to apply for directions. No definite direction was made on the petition of this respondent praying that the arrears of allowance due to her should be paid by the Receiver or that he should divide the funds in his hands between herself and the plaintiff. The relevant portions of Ex. B in which these directions were made are as follows:

"These applications relate to the arrears of maintenance at Rs. 1,500 a month ordered to be paid both to the plaintiff and defendant by Krishnan, J., on April 11, 1923. An appeal by the defendant was then pending in the High Court and a Receiver was in possession of the estate. On February 11, 1924, the Subordinate Judge reported that the allowances could not be paid having regard to the collections of the estate, the payment of peishcash and other necessary charges. On February 22, 1924, Krishnan, J., varied his order by saying that whatever net amount remained available after paying peishcash, the establishment charges and the Receiver's remuneration should be divided equally between the plaintiff and the defendant, subject, I take it, to the maximum of Rs. 1,500 allowed to each On August 17, 1928, we directed that the defendant do take possession of the estate on giving security for Rs. 60,000 and we also directed Rs. 500 a month to be given to the plaintiff for maintenance, Rs. 250 without security and the remaining Rs. 250 on his giving security to return the amount if called upon after the disposal of the Privy Council appeal. As we were under the impression that security would be given by the defendant within a short period we said that till the security was given and the Receiver discharged, the position was to be treated as if the old order of things continued, and Rs. 1,500 a month should be given to the plaintiff for maintenance. (Then dealing with the question of the arrears of allowance). The plaintiff wants to treat the income for this year and the money in the Imperial Bank as the assets out of which his arrears should be paid; and he wants payment. For the defendant, it is contended by the learned Advocate-General that, so far as the arrears of maintenance are concerned, both his client and the plaintiff are entitled equally to Rs. 1,500 a month, and that any sum in Court would not be available entirely to the plaintiff to discharge his arrears. Another contention is put forward, that there can be no question of arrears in this case, for all that the plaintiff is entitled to is a half of the available net income till the Receiver is discharged, and if on any account there is no possibility of being paid..... he must suffer the consequences, and cannot claim any payment..... We are unable to accede to the argument of the learned Advocate-General that no arrears of maintenance are really payable at all and that the plaintiff must take the consequences if the Receiver is discharged. If that view had been pressed we would not have discharged the Receiver. We think Krishnan, J.'s order is clear that each party was to get Rs. 1,500 a month but as it was reported that the Receiver had not sufficient funds to pay this amount, the net income after meeting the necessary expenses was directed to be divided between the parties. We think that, if in any year assets had been available to pay the maintenance due and a balance remained, such balance should have been claimed by the parties to pay the arrears. Mr. T. Rangachariar says that while Krishnan, J.'s order limited the necessary expenses to the payment of peishcash, Receiver's remuneration and the establishment charges, the Receiver paid off debts due by the estate to the extent of Rs. 1,00,000 the benefit of which amount the plaintiff would have got if it had not been paid and that now the defendant gets it. We have no doubt that the order of Krishnan, J., must be so construed that Rs. 1,500 is payable to each party and that as there were not sufficient funds they should share the balance after payment of kist etc., and that when funds were available they could enforce the claim for Rs. 1,500 and get paid. We think that so far as the defendant is concerned she is also entitled to payment of these sums and we cannot treat the amount in Court or the assets as entirely attributable to the plaintiff.....

We expected that security would be furnished within about two months from the date of our order (August 17, 1928). We now find that matters are still pending. If matters are thus pending it is difficult to make any order as regards the arrears. We think in view of the circumstances that the best solution will be to direct that the security now tendered, Rs. 41,000 to be accepted as sufficient and to reduce the security already ordered to this amount so that there should be no difficulty in the defendant taking possession of the estate. (I note that defendant actually took possession a fortnight after this order.)

As regards the payment of arrears due to the plaintiff the sum due to him is Rs. 45,000. The same consideration which guided Krishnan, J., in directing the available assets to be divided between the parties will govern us also in making any provision for the payment of arrears: and we think that, if Rs. 10,000 is paid every year to the plaintiff out of the income, it would be sufficient protection. It will on the one hand give the plaintiff funds to carry on the litigation and maintain himself..... and on the other it will not unduly cripple the estate which the defendant will have to manage. Our order, therefore, is etc. The Receiver is at liberty to pay the Rs. 10,000 to be paid this year. If he does not pay, the defendant will have to pay."

Now in this order there is no direction as I have said that defendant should irrespective of the result of the plaintiff's appeal take absolutely out of the future profits of the estate a sum equal to the arrears due to her as allowance for the period prior to her entry on the estate. And there is no direction that during her occupation of the estate and pending plaintiff's appeal any part of the profits should be earmarked as a personal allowance of the defendant. The learned Judges knew that if plaintiff succeeded the defendant would have to account for the profits. In fact, they directed that defendant should file accounts annually of income and expenditure. If they had thought that defendant was entitled to any part of the profits, other than in her character of rightful owner, they would have said so. Learned Counsel relies on one sentence in this order:

"We think that so far as the defendant is concerned she is also entitled to payment of these sums and we cannot treat the amount in Court, or the assets, as entirely attributable to the plaintiff."

But this sentence must, I think, be construed with reference to the facts. There was between Rs. 10,000 and Rs. 11,000 in Court. Plaintiff to whom Rs. 45,000 was due on account of arrears of allowance had prayed that the whole of this sum and the income for the current year should be treated as the assets out of which his arrears should be paid. This was another way of praying that the Receiver should be continued, a prayer which the Judges had already refused in their order Ex. A. The Advocate-General appearing for the defendant had pointed out that under Krishnan, J.'s order the money in Court, though it fell far short of the arrears of allowance due to the parties, should be divided between the parties. The sentence just quoted appears to relate to this argument. "We cannot treat the amount in Court or the assets as entirely attributable to the plaintiff." And the order of the Judges about this amount was that out of it Rs. 10,000 might be paid to plaintiff by the Receiver before he handed over the estate to the defendant. If not it would have been handed over to the defendant who would then have had to pay the plaintiff Rs. 10,000 on or before July 1, 1929. Learned Counsel also wishes us to construe this order as meaning that since out of the future profits of the estate plaintiff was to be paid the arrears due to him, therefore the defendant was similarly to pay herself the arrears of allowance due to her. This I think is far-fetched. Defendant took the estate absolutely. The whole of the profits belonged to her. If it had been intended that she was not to be accountable for the whole of those profits but could in any case appropriate Rs. 65,577 we think there would have been a definite direction to that effect. We observe also that defendant is in effect claiming this sum of Rs. 65,577 as a first charge on the revenues of the estate. She is putting it before the payments she was directed to make to the plaintiff. Those payments consisted of Rs. 30,000 arrears of allowance and Rs. 500 per month for 50 months or Rs. 55,000 in all. Defendant paid the plaintiff in fact only Rs. 29,000.

See Item No. 21 in the abstract statement. She owes him under this head Rs. 26,000. My conclusion therefore is that as regards the Rs. 65,577 arrears of allowance there is no warrant in the orders of this Court to justify the defendant in appropriating it; and that even if there was, such an appropriation would be provisional, and in the event that has happened, the money would have to be refunded to the plaintiff. And secondly that as regards the Rs. 64,500 claimed as allowance for the period during which defendant was in possession of the estate there is no shadow of a justification for that claim in any of the orders of this Court.

The second of the grounds on which the defendant claims to be entitled to retain almost the whole of the amount now claimed by the plaintiff as mesne profits is that as the widow of an undivided co-parcener of the Zamindar she has the right to be maintained out of the revenues of the estate; that Rs. 1,500 a month is a reasonable rate of maintenance and that therefore she is entitled to retain Rs. 1,30,077 which amount is calculated in the manner we have already explained, namely, Rs. 65,577 due up to her taking possession of the estate and Rs. 64,500 due for the subsequent period up to the date of the Privy Council decree. To this claim learned Counsel for the plaintiff answers (1) that the defendant is not a person who is entitled to maintenance; (2) that in these proceedings a counterclaim like the present cannot be adjudicated on as it raises complicated questions of law and fact; (3) that this counterclaim was not placed in the lower Court.

On the point of law whether the defendant is entitled to maintenance as of right learned Counsel for the plaintiff relies on what is known as the Second Pittapur case, (Venakta Mahipathi Gangadhara Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur) (11), in which the Privy Council ruled that in an impartible zamin-dari belonging to a person governed by the Mitakshara Law there is no co-parcenary between the Zamindar and his agnates; and therefore the grandson of a deceased Zamindar was held to be not entitled to maintenance out of the impartible estate in the hands of his successor. In this decision the view taken by this Court in certain cases decided prior to 1899 that there was joint property in an impartible estate which only fell short of co-parcenary because by custom there was no right to partition was held to be no longer tenable. On the other side learned Counsel for defendant contends that the decision in the Second Pittapur case, (Venkata Mahipathi Gangadhara Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur) (11), has been overruled in subsequent decisions of the Judicial Committee notably in Bajinath Prasad Singh v. Tej Bali Singh (12) and Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ram Sundar Lal (13). It is unnecessary for me to refer in detail to the decisions which have been cited to us now in support of the rival theories, since very recently a Bench of this Court has decided, following Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ram Sundar Lal (13), that the undivided members of the family of a Zamindar have a right to maintenance out of the estate as if it were joint family property and that the decisions of this Court to that effect made prior to the Second Pittapur case, (Venkata Mahipathi Gangadhara Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur) (11) and overruled by it may now be followed: see Maharajah of Venkatagiri v. Raja Rajeswara Rao (14), at p. 658. We quote from that decision with respect a passage in the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice :

"Impartibility arises out of custom, but with the greatest respect to what has been said to the contrary I do not regard a custom of impartibility as in itself destroying the right of the junior members of the family to maintenance out of the family estate while it remains in the family. The fact that a family has allowed a custom of impartibility to arise does not in itself imply the abandonment by the junior members of their right to maintenance out of the estate.....To deprive junior members of a joint Hindu family owing an ancestral estate, whether partible or impartible, of the right to maintenance there must, it seems to me, be a custom to that effect."

On this part of the defendant's case if the point directly arose for decision I would on the materials furnished in this case, hold that as widow of an undivided co-parcener defendant is prima facie entitled to maintenance out of the estate. There is I think very little reason to doubt that Kunji Behari Deo, her late husband, was an undivided member of the family to which the Zamindar belongs. Both were descended from a common great-grandfather who was the holder of the estate. Audikonda grandfather of the plaintiff, and Raghunatha, grandfather of Kunji Behari, husband of this defendant, were brothers. There was a younger brother but he died without leaving male issue and the family thereafter has been represented solely by Audikonda and Raghunath and their descendants. Audikonda, the elder brother, was Zamindar from 1840 till 1868. Dying without male issue, he was succeeded by Raghunath who was ousted in 1876 by plaintiff's father Brojo Kishore who had in 1870 been adopted by Audikonda's widow. Brojo Kishore was Zamindar till his death in 1906. Raghunath's son—Raghunath had in 1883—Vaishna Deo, claimed the estate but died before his claim could be recognized. In 1907 Vaishna Deo's elder son Purushottama Deo was registered in the Collector's books as proprietor of the estate and entered on possession and remained in possession till his death in 1915 when he was succeeded by his younger brother defendant's husband Kunji Behari Deo. Kunji Behari Deo was till Zamindar December 20, 1922, when the title of the plaintiff was declared by the decree of the Court of first instance in the present suit, in which plaintiff's claim as the legitimate son of Brojo Kishore was confirmed.

It will be seen therefore that the estate has been in the possession of the junior line for 23 years during the period from 1868 to this suit, while the senior line has held it for 27 years. In the judgments of this Court and of the Privy Council, in which the title to this estate has been in question, namely, Virada Pratapa Deo v. Brozo Kishoro Datta (15), Madana Mohana Ananga Bheema Deo v. Purushottama Ranga Bheema Deo (16) and the present suit Ananga Bhima Deo v. Suseela Mala Patta Mahadevi (1), there is no indication that the two branches of the family had ever become divided. Besides these cases, there is an unreported case dated 1896 of this Court, not referred to in the arguments before us in which Brojo Kishore zamindar from 1876 to 1908 and father of this plaintiff appealed to this Court against a decree of the District Judge, Ganjam, awarding maintenance to Brojo Kishore's cousin Vaishna Deo, father of defendant's husband Kunji Behari Deo: see A. S. No. 111 of 1895, decided on appeal against O. S. No. 14 of 1893 of the District Court, Ganjam. The decision of this Court was that Vaishna Deo was clearly entitled to maintenance as a matter of right. The amount awarded was Rs. 500 a month, stated to be about 1/9th of the admitted income.

Learned Counsel for the plaintiff contends however, that the defendant in her answer to the plaintiff's claim did not explicitly put forward her own claim to maintenance as a set-off against the amount, which plaintiff sought to recover from her as profits of the estate enjoyed by her while she was in possession. This I think is true. In defendant's pleading there is no positive assertion of a claim against the plaintiff for money due to the defendant by way of maintenance. The relevant portions of that pleading are as follows:

"The abstract herewith filed shows an expenditure of Rs. 1,19,264 towards arrears of allowances and the current allowance of this respondent. This expenditure is also binding on the estate. The order of Krishnan, J., fixing an allowance of Rs. 1,500 a month to each party..... is not modified or set aside so far as this respondent is concerned, and hence the expenditure of Rs. 1,500 a month as allowance of this respondent is binding on the estate and on the petitioner. Moreover, this respondent was representing and managing the estate during the period in question and had to maintain the status and expenditure incidental to the said position and hence the expenditure of Rs. 1,500 a month as the allowance of the respondent is reasonable and binding on the estate."

It is clear I think that respondent's counterclaim was put forward entirely on the strength of Krishnan, J.'s order and not on the ground that it represented the amount of maintenance due to her as of right. At the stage of argument in the lower Court, apparently, defendant's Counsel raised for the first time this alternative basis for the counterclaim. For the learned Subordinate Judge observes in para. 4 of his judgment:

"It is contended that the first counter-petitioner (that is, this defendant) is entitled to maintenance out of the estate as the widow of a member of the plaintiff's family."

And the learned Subordinate Judge disposing of this contention held that in accordance with the ruling in the Second Pittapur case (11), that the defendant was not entitled to maintenance out of the estate as of right or by custom. The question, therefore, arises whether this counterclaim by way of maintenance can be canvassed on appeal. The first point that would have to be decided, if the question was directly in issue before us is whether such a claim can be advanced in answer to an application for mesne profits under s. 144, Civil P. C. That I think is an arguable point. The decision of it would depend on whether the defendant's claim arises from the same transaction as the plaintiff's claim. And the crucial point would be, what is the transaction in the circumstances of the present case? Plaintiff claims the profits which accrued to the defendant while she was in possession of the estate. Defendant's counterclaim would presumably be that some of those profits would be payable to her even if she had not been in possession. We think there would be a reasonable ground for argument, in defendant's behalf, that her counterclaim arises in the same transaction as the plaintiff's claim. It might possibly be held that the transaction consisted in the enjoyment by the defendant of the whole profits of the estate during a period when she was, independent of her position as owner in possession, entitled to part of those profits. I do not think it necessary, however, to record a finding on this question as the set-off by way of maintenance was not properly raised and adjudicated upon in the lower Court and is not properly before us in appeal. Assuming that the defendant is entitled to maintenance, the question, how much she is entitled to under that head remains to be tried and decided.

In the result, therefore, I find that none of the objections raised on behalf of the defendant either in the lower Court or newly in this appeal can validly affect the plaintiff's right to recover from the defendant by way of restitution, under s. 144, Civil P. C., the sum of Rs. 1,30,476 which the defendant received as profits of the estate during the time she was in possession under the decree which has been reversed. In this judgment throughout I have referred to the amount of profits as Rs. 1,30,476. That is the actual amount, I should explain that in her abstract of accounts the defendant put it at Rs. 1,19,264. See Item No. 23 of that statement, in which she calls it her "allowance". That is a fallacious figure. Defendant arrives at it by debiting herself with Rs. 11,212 (see Item No. 22) which she sets down as having been paid by her to the plaintiff. But she never paid this sum to the plaintiff. The debit entry is sought to be explained in the following manner: At the date of the appellate decree plaintiff owed to defendant a certain sum for money which he had recovered from her as costs awarded to him by the Court of first instance. And he also became liable by the appellate decree to pay to the defendant a certain sum as costs. These two sums added together come to Rs. 11,212. Defendant on the other hand had, as already explained, to pay to the plaintiff large sums under the order of this Court Ex. B as well as an allowance of Rs. 500 a month. By entering on the debit side Rs. 11,212 defendant professes to have adjusted the money due to her by the plaintiff pro tanto against the money she had to pay the plaintiff. But she has done nothing of the sort. In order to effect that adjustment she would have to enter Rs. 11,212 also on the credit side of the account as having been received from the plaintiff. This she has not done. In fact therefore she did not pay the plaintiff this sum of Rs. 11,212. She put it in her pocket. The true figure of profits received by her is therefore Rs. 1,30,746.

I would also observe before leaving this part of the case that if defendant's counter-claim for the profits of the estate or part of them whether on the ground that she is entitled to them as allowances under the orders of this Court or as maintenance due to her as a co-parcener's widow is to be entertained, the money which the defendant owes the plaintiff as arrears of allowances and as allowance directed to be paid by her to the plaintiff—which is Rs. 26,000—should be taken into account. He who seeks equity should do equity. In accordance with the opinions expressed above I think this appeal should succeed and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover Rs. 1,30,476 from the defendant.

Wadsworth, J.—This appeal raises a question of restitution and has been referred to me on a difference of opinion between Burn and Stodart, JJ., on two points: (1) The question of the applicability of s. 144, Civil P. C., and (2) the question of the liability of the defendant's legal representative (respondent No. 1 herein) to make a restitution, if s. 144, Civil P. C., applies.

The facts of the case have been fully set forth in the judgments of my learned brothers and it is unnecessary to repeat them at length. The essential points are that the plaintiff sued for possession of his estate from the husband of the present respondent No. 1 and in the Subordinate Judge's Court he succeeded, the decree being dated December 20, 1922. The defendant appealed to the High Court and in that appeal a Receiver was appointed who took charge of the estate in April 1923, the plaintiff not having got possession meanwhile. The defendant died in 1925 and his widow (the present respondent No. 1) carried on the appeal. On March 30, 1928, the High Court reversed the trial Court's decree. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the Privy Council and asked that the Receiver should continue in possession of the estate. But this prayer was refused and the widow obtained possession from the Receiver. On November 1, 1932, the Privy Council set aside the decree of the High Court and restored the decree of the Subordinate Judge. Immediately after this decree was passed, respondent No. 1 was herself appointed Receiver pending receipt of the formal order in Council and the appellant got possession in March 1933. The appellant claims restitution in the shape of profits of the estate for the period from April 1929, when respondent No. 1 took possession from the Receiver, to December 1932, when she was herself appointed Receiver. The profits of the estate, after allowing ordinary charges, amount to approximately Rs. 1,30,000 for this period.

Respondent No. 1 contended, firstly, that there could be no order for restitution in the circumstances of the case, and secondly, that she was entitled to appropriate the profits to the amount due to her under the High Court's orders whereby the Receiver was directed to pay to each party a monthly maintenance of Rs. 1,500 and she claims that she is entitled to set off, against the surplus, the arrears of this maintenance for the period during which the Receiver was in charge and a monthly allowance of Rs. 1,500 for the period during which she herself had possession of the estate. It has to be observed that pending the appeal to the Privy Council, respondent No. 1 was required to pay a reduced maintenance of Rs. 500 per mensem to the plaintiff and she was directed to pay the arrears due to him under the previous order as the balances in her hands permitted and she did in fact pay certain sums towards the arrears.

The learned Judges who referred this appeal are agreed on certain points. They agree that the order of Krishnan, J., fixing for each party a monthly maintenance allowance of Rs. 1,500 cannot be regarded as anything more than a provisional arrangement to be in force during the pendency of the appeal. They are also agreed that the respondent cannot claim in these proceedings a right to appropriate maintenance under any common law right which she may have, so that she must stand or fall by the order of the High Court fixing her maintenance. There is a further fact which has to be stated. The suit originally included a claim for past and future mesne profits, but no issue was framed in this respect and the trial Judge held that the claim for mesne profits had been given up. Before the High Court there was a cross-appeal by the plaintiff on the subject of mesne profits which was dismissed. The judgment of the Privy Council does not deal expressly with the claim for mesne profits, but since the decree of the trial Court is restored, it must be taken that no mesne profits were awarded in the suit.

The view taken by Burn, J., is, firstly, that s. 144, Civil P. C., does not apply because the possession which respondent No. 1 got after the High Court's decree was neither under that decree nor properly consequential upon that decree; secondly, that even if s. 144 does apply, the most that could be claimed would be the restoration of any benefit accruing to respondent No. 1 on the basis of the continuance of the position which obtained immediately before the wrong decree was passed; therefore one must postulate the continuance of the provisional orders which would justify the appropriation by respondent No. 1 of the amounts to which she was entitled under the orders, so that nothing would be left which could be called a benefit returnable; and thirdly that the refusal of future mesne profits in the decree of the trial Court which the Privy Council has restored, bars the claim by way of restitution for any sum out of the profits of the estate during respondent No. 1's possession. Stodart, J. has taken a contrary view on all these points.

I will deal firstly with the question of the applicability of s. 144, a matter which seems to be covered by the decision in Bisheshwar Pratap v. Chandreshwar Prasad (3), discussed by both the learned referring Judges. In that case, a Receiver was appointed pending a suit for possession of land. After the decree the successful party obtained possession from the Receiver. The decree was reversed in appeal. The appellant applied for restitution. Objection was taken that the appellant was not entitled to get the property back by way of restitution because it was the Receiver who had been dispossessed and not the appellant. It was held that the appellant could get the property back, since the possession of the Receiver was for the benefit of the person entitled to the property. Burn, J. distinguishes this case on the ground that the wrong decree was actually executed and the Receiver was therefore dispossessed under that decree and he points out that there can be no doubt that the order for restoration of possession was one properly consequential on the variation of the erroneous decree. He points out that in order to justify restitution, it must be shown that property has been received by the decree-holder in execution of a wrongful decree or directly in consequence of that decree.

My learned brother holds the view that the possession obtained by respondent No. 1 in the present case was not possession in execution of the decree, nor under any explicit direction contained in the wrong decree and that it must therefore be held to be only indirectly consequential on the wrong decree, so that it cannot form the basis for an order for restitution. With the greatest respect, I find myself unable to agree with this conclusion and I am of opinion that Stodart, J. is right in holding that not only was the possession of the Receiver the possession of the plaintiff who is ultimately found entitled to the property, but also that the dispossession of the Receiver was directly consequential on the wrong decree. It is true that the High Court's decree merely reverses the decree for possession given by the Subordinate Judge and it is true that respondent No. 1 got possession after some little delay as a result of the refusal of the appellant's application to continue the Receiver pending the appeal to the Privy Council. But I am unable to subscribe to the view that restitution should not be ordered unless the possession is got as a result of either the execution of the decree or an explicit order contained in the wrong decree. When, as in this case, the property in dispute is held by the Court's Receiver, it is unnecessary for the decree to contain a direction to the Receiver to hand over the property to the successful party. The Receiver will automatically transfer possession to the party who succeeds in the suit and the fact that the transfer is made without the execution of the decree and without any explicit order in the decree, will not, to my mind, alter the fact that possession is, in fact, given under the decree. The surrender of possession by the Receiver on the termination of the appeal is the inevitable consequence of the decree passed in the appeal. It seems to me therefore with great respect that the distinction which my learned brother Burn, J. seeks to apply in dealing with the case in Bisheshwar Pratap v. Chandreshwar Prasad (3), is fallacious.

An attempt has been made before me to make a further distinction based on the ground that in the Patna case the party who got possession under the wrongful decree could trace that possession to no other source than the decree which was set aside, whereas in the present case respondent No. 1 who succeeded in the High Court was the widow of the party originally in possession before the litigation started who had continued in possession right up to the time when the Receiver was appointed. It is argued therefore that respondent No. 1's possession, obtained from the Receiver, was nothing more than the restoration of the possession which her husband had before the appointment of the Receiver. It seems to me that this argument is spacious. The point of time for determining a right to restitution is not the inception of the proceedings resulting in the wrong decree, but the point of time immediately before the wrong decree. This is clear from the words "place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree." They are not to be placed in the position which they occupied at the beginning of the litigation, but in the position which they occupied just before the wrong decree was passed.

When once it is conceded, as I think it must be, that the possession of the Receiver at the time when the High Court's decree was passed, was the possession of the plaintiff who ultimately succeeded before the Privy Council, it does not seem to me to matter that the plaintiff did not get possession after the trial Court's decree or that the defendant continued in possession up to the time of the appointment of the Receiver. The important question is, who was in possession before the wrong decree was passed. The answer to that question is that the Receiver was in possession on behalf of the person who would ultimately be found entitled, that is to say, on behalf of the plaintiff. The Receiver surrendered possession to respondent No. 1, not because he had taken possession from the original defendant, but because respondent No. 1 had been declared entitled by the erroneous decree. It follows, therefore, that his possession, which was constructively the possession of the plaintiff, terminated and the defendant got possession directly in consequence of the erroneous decree of the High Court, reversing the trial Court's decree. It seems to me, therefore, that s. 144, applies in terms and that the plaintiff is entitled to claim restitution of any profits realized by the defendant's legal representative which can be called properly consequential upon the wrong decree, unless the defendant's legal representative is entitled to resist the claim either by showing that she has a superior claim to those profits or by showing that the plaintiff's claim is barred by reason of the failure to establish his right to future profits in the trial Court.

This leads to the next question as to the extent of the defendant's legal representative's liability by way of restitution and involves a consideration of the precise meaning of the words "place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such a decree," occurring in s. 144, Civil P. C. It seems to me that there are three possible ways of interpreting these words. The words might mean that the parties are to be put in the position they would have occupied had the right decree been passed instead of the wrong decree; or, secondly, they may mean that the parties are to be put in the position that they would have occupied had no decree at all been passed; or the words may mean simply that the parties are to be put in the position which they would have occupied had it not been that a wrong decree had been passed. It seems to me that the last interpretation is the correct one. There is nothing in the words of s. 144 to justify the conclusion that it was the intention of the Code to give to the person claiming restitution any better position than that which he occupied at the time when the wrong decree was passed and this is what has to be inferred if we are to take it that he has to be put in the position which he would have occupied had the right decree been passed. Similarly I do not think that it can be said that the person claiming restitution must base his claim on the theory that he is entitled only to what he would have got had there been no decree at all and had the proceedings been pending right up to the time when the final decision set the matter at rest. It seems to me to be going too far to postulate, for purposes of restitution, the continuation of the proceedings until terminated by the right decree, more especially if we are to postulate also the continuation of all incidental orders passed during the pendency of those proceedings. The correct procedure seems to me to be to take the position as it stood immediately before the wrong decree, to find out what would be the position of the ultimately successful party as on that date, having regard to the fact that the proceedings terminated and to award to the successful party restitution in the shape of any profits wrongfully received under the erroneous decree or as a direct consequence thereof.

In any view, it seems to me that it is impossible to hold on the facts of the present case that the defendant's legal representative would be entitled to appropriate the whole of the amounts due to her both for arrears and for future maintenance on the basis of the continuation of the provisional orders passed pending the High Court appeal, without regard to the fact that those orders recognized similar rights in the plaintiff. But I am of opinion that the correct view is that which has been taken by my learned brother Stodart, J., namely, that one must regard the possession of the Receiver immediately before the erroneous decree as the possession of the plaintiff who is found ultimately to be entitled, one must treat these provisional orders passed purely for the purpose of appeal before the High Court as having terminated on the termination of that appeal and one must award to the plaintiff the profits wrongfully received by the defendant's legal representative as a result of the dispossession of the Receiver, as representing the plaintiff, without any adjustment in respect of payments which could only be made on the assumption of the continuance of the provisional orders, which automatically came to an end on the termination of the appeal before the High Court. That is to say the plaintiff is entitled to restitution on the basis of the position immediately before the wrong decree and on the assumption that orders made with reference to the pending appeal came to an end on the termination of that appeal.

There remains the question whether the plaintiff's claim to restitution is barred by reason of his failure to get a decree for future mesne profits in the original Court. On this part of the case, the respondent relies on the decision in Bhimana Gowd v. Siddalingana Gowd (17) which was to the effect that when in a suit for partition and possession, there was no prayer for mesne profits, mesne profits could not be claimed by way of restitution when the original order, dispossessing the claimants, was set aside. This decision would be authority for the view that the plaintiff could not claim by way of restitution mesne profits for the period anterior to the date on which the Receiver got possession constructively for the plaintiff. But when the Receiver got possession, there was really no scope for any execution by the plaintiff either in respect of possession or in respect of profits. Thereafter the possession of the Receiver was the possession of the plaintiff and no question of future mesne profits could arise.

The High Court having passed an erroneous decree as a result of which the Receiver was dispossessed and respondent

(17) 27 L W 188; 104 Ind. Cas. 768; A I R 1927 Mad. 898; 39 M L T 94.

No. 1 was put into possession the profits which accrued to the defendant's legal representative as a result of this erroneous decree are not, in my opinion, profits which could have been claimed in the original suit. They were profits flowing directly from the erroneous appellate decree, recoverable only by restitution and not such as could have been foreseen in drafting the original plaintiff. The position is just the same as it would have been had the plaintiff executed his decree and got possession during the pendency of the High Court appeal and been dispossessed as a consequence of his failure in that appeal. After such dispossession, profits accruing to the defendant's legal representative would not be recoverable as future mesne profits claimed in the suit, but by way of restitution owing to the wrongful decree. It seems to me therefore that there is no bar to the plaintiff's claim by reason of his failure to get a decree for future mesne profits before the trial Court. In the result therefore I find, agreeing with my learned brother Stodart, J., that the appeal must be allowed and the plaintiff be given a decree for restitution of a sum of Rs. 1,30,476 from the defendant's legal representative with costs throughout. No relief is granted against the sureties in this application. Advocate's fee Rs. 500.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 26-G—Held on construction that mortgage was not usufructuary but one by conditional sale—Usufructuary mortgage—Mortgagor representing that holdings mortgaged were mokarari—If estopped from saying that holdings are occupancy.

Held, on construction of the mortgage-deed, that the mortgage was not a usufructuary mortgage as contemplated by s. 58 (d), T. P. Act. Although the mortgagors were given possession of the mortgaged properties and they were entitled to appropriate the rents and profits towards the interest due, yet the essential element of a usufructuary mortgage was wanting, namely that the mortgagor would retain possession of the properties till the mortgage money was paid. The transaction was substantially a mortgage by conditional sale though certain rights of a usufructuary mortgage were also given to the mortgagors. The expressions kot kobala and saf kobala which were used in the document were quite sufficient to show that the mortgage was by conditional sale.

Where a mortgagor executing a usufructuary mortgage represents to the mortgagee that the properties mortgaged were mokarari holdings held by him at a fixed rent, he is not estopped from saying that these were occupancy holdings which would attract the operation of s. 26-G, Ben. Ten. Act.

C. Rule from the order of the Sub-Judge, Third Court, 24-Pargana at Alipore, dated March 26, 1940.

Mr. Prafulla Kamal Das, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Abinash Chandra Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

B. K. Mukherjea, J.—This rule is directed against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Alipore, dated March 26, 1940, made in a proceeding under s. 26-G (5), Ben. Ten. Act. The petitioners are the mortgagees under a mortgage-deed executed by opposite party No. 3 on behalf of herself and her two sons, the opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2, who were then minors in April 1923. The case of the opposite parties was that it was a usufructuary mortgage and they presented the application for restoration of the mortgaged properties under s. 26-G (5), Ben. Ten. Act, on the ground that more than fifteen years having elapsed from the date of the registration of the instrument the consideration of the mortgage was extinguished.

The mortgagees resisted the claim substantially on two grounds: It was urged in the first place that the mortgage was one by conditional sale and not a usufructuary mortgage and as such the provisions of s. 26-G (5) Ben. Ten. Act, were not applicable. The second point taken was that the mortgagors having represented to the mortgagees that the properties mortgaged were mokarari holdings held by them at a fixed rent, they were estopped from saying that these were occupancy holdings which would attract the operation of s. 26-G, Ben. Ten. Act. Both the defences were negatived by the learned Subordinate Judge who allowed the application of the opposite parties for restoration of possession of the mortgaged properties. It is against this order that the present rule has been obtained. The learned Advocate who appears for the petitioners has challenged the propriety of the decision of the trial Court on both these points.

As regards the first point it is conceded on both sides that the mortgage in dispute could not rank as a complete usufructuary mortgage as defined in s. 3 (3), Ben. Ten. Act. The only question is whether it is a usufructuary mortgage at all and the document being executed prior to the commencement of the Ben. Ten. Amendment Act of 1928, could take effect as a complete usufructuary mortgage under the provisions of sub-s. (1) (a) of s. 26-G. In the document itself the parties described it as a mortgage by conditional sale and the expression "kot kobala" is used throughout the instrument. The mortgagors purported to execute the mortgage by conditional sale in respect of their share of the mortgaged properties to secure an advance of Rs. 1,400 only. The possession of these properties was delivered over to the mortgagees and the stipulation was that they would enjoy the usufruct of the land and credit the same towards the interest due on the mortgage bond. The document mentions a due date which was the end of Chaitra 1338 B. S. and the mortgagors promised to pay the entire mortgage debt within that time upon which the mortgaged properties would be released to them. Then there appears a clause which runs as follows:

"If we make default in paying you the principal sum on or before the due date aforesaid, viz., within the month of Chaitra 1338 B. S. on expiry of the said due date you will be entitled to foreclose the mortgage and this conditional sale will thereupon ripen into an absolute sale and in that event you, your sons, grandsons and other heirs, your assigns will have title to the properties and will possess the same in great felicity and in any way you like."

Taking this document as a whole I am unable to say that this is a usufructuary mortgage as contemplated by s. 58 (d), T. P. Act. It is true that the mortgagees were given possession of the mortgaged properties and they were entitled to appropriate the rents and profits towards the interest due. But the essential element of a usufructuary mortgage was wanting, namely that the mortgagee would retain possession of the properties till the mortgage money was paid. The mere mentioning of a due date for payment is indeed not material and could be considered as a mere proviso for redemption, if the provision was that in default of redemption the mortgagees would continue to hold the property and go on enjoying the same till the mortgage money was paid. In the document in dispute not only is there no such terms, but on the other hand the express provision is that in default of payment of the mortgage money within the due date, the mortgagee will be entitled to foreclose; the kot kobala would then ripen into a saf kobala or an out and out sale. In my opinion the transaction was substantially what it purported to be, namely a mortgage by conditional sale though certain right of a usufructuary mortgage were also given to the mortgagees. I am not impressed by the argument of Mr. Ghose that the document could not be construed as a mortgage by conditional sale, because there are no express words of transfer in the document showing that the mortgagor ostensibly sold the property to the mortgagees. The expressions kot kobala and saf kobala which are used in the document are in my opinion quite sufficient for this purpose. It is a mortgage by conditional sale of the type mentioned in para. 1 of s. 58 (c), T. P. Act, where in default of payment of the mortgage money within a certain date the sale becomes absolute.

So far as the second point is concerned, we are not inclined to disturb the finding of the Subordinate Judge on this point and hold that there was any estoppel to preclude the mortgagor from showing that the holdings were really occupancy holdings. The Rule however must succeed on the first ground. The result is that the Rule is made absolute, the order of the Subordinate Judge is set aside and the application for restoration of the mortgaged properties made by opposite parties Nos. 1 to 3 is dismissed. We make no order as to costs in this Rule.

Derbyshire, C. J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 10—Stay of suit filed on original side of High Court pending decision in previous suit filed in mofussil—Procedure—Application to be made on original side to Judge trying suit.

The proper and convenient procedure to stay a suit which has been instituted on the original side of the High Court until the decision of a previously instituted suit in the mofussil Court, is to apply under s. 10, Civil P. C., on the original side of the High Court to the Judge trying the suit and not on the appellate side.

The Judge on the original side can, if necessary, restrain the parties from proceeding with the suit in the mofussil Court. If the Judge declines to make an order under s. 10 an appeal would then lie to an Appellate Bench. 53 Ind. Cas. 518 (1) and 143 Ind. Cas. 806 (2), relied on, C. A. No. 672 of 1939, explained.

Messrs. G. N. Thakor and T. N. Walavalkar, for the Applicant.

Mr. F. J. Coltman, for the Opponents.

Broomfield, J.—This is an application under s. 10, Civil P. C., to stay a suit which has been instituted on the original side of this Court until the decision of a previously instituted suit in the Sholapur First Class Subordinate Judge's Court. Mr. Coltman who appears for the opponents has taken a preliminary objection that the application should be made on the original side. We think he is right. He relies on r. 344 of the High Court Original Side Rules. But in our opinion the matter is made sufficiently clear by the language of s. 10 itself. The section provides that no Court shall proceed with the trial of any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties. It is a reasonable inference in our opinion that an application asking the Court not to proceed with the trial should normally be made to the Court which is actually seized of the case. According to my experience that is also in accordance with the general practice.

Mr. Thakor for the applicant says that so far the case has not been assigned to any particular Judge on the original side. But in due course the assignment will be made and when it is made his client can apply. As held in Mulchand Raichand v. Gill & Co. (1) the Judge on the original side could, if necessary, restrain the parties from proceeding with the suit in the mofussil Court. If the Judge declined to make an order under s. 10 an appeal would then lie to an appellate Bench as held in Jivanlal Narsi v. Pirojshaw Vakharia & Co. (2). Mr. Thakor has relied on a case, C. A. No. 672 of 1939, decided on January 17, 1940, by Broomfield and Macklin, JJ., Lachmandas Tulshiram v. Buckingham and Carnatic Co., Ltd. in which my learned brother and myself held that an appellate side Bench of this Court has power under s. 24 of the Code to transfer a suit pending on the original side of the High Court for trial to a Court in the mofussil. In coming to that conclusion we were partly influenced by the fact that there was a precedent, whereas in this case no precedent has been referred to, and we were also impressed by the circumstance that it is at least doubtful whether a Judge on the original side would have power to make the order of transfer which we were asked to make under s. 24. It is unnecessary, however, to decide whether we have or have not jurisdiction to make the order which we are asked to make in the present case, because we are quite satisfied that even if we have jurisdiction, we ought not to exercise it. We consider that the proper and convenient procedure is that the application should be made on the original side to the Judge trying the suit, and we apprehend that all sorts of difficulties might arise if applications of this kind were to be entertained on the appellate side. For these reasons we discharge the rule with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 26-J, 188 (1) (i)—Recovery of transfer-fee by landlord must be by application—Rights under s. 26-J accrued before its repeal—If can be enforced by application under s. 26-J read with s. 188 (1) (i) even after their repeal—Bengal General Clauses Act (I of 1899), ss. 8, (8) (e)—Words “instituted, continued or enforced” in s. 8 (e), interpretation—S. 8, construction of—Rights in respect of transactions completed prior to repeal saved—Remedies in respect of such rights are also saved—Interpretation of Statutes—Enactment altering procedure, if retrospective.

The recovery of the balance of transfer fees by the landlord must be by an application and not by a suit.

[Case-law relied on.]

A right acquired by the landlord under s. 26 (J) of the old Ben. Ten. Act to recover the balance of landlord's fees and compensation before the repeal of the section by Act VI of 1938, can be enforced by an application under s. 26-J read with s. 188 (1) (i) even after the repeal of those sections. 186 Ind. Cas. 349 (7), approved, 186 Ind. Cas. 589 (10), distinguished.

The words “instituted, continued or enforced” in s. 8, cl. (e), Ben. General Clauses Act are to be taken with each of the words “investigation, legal proceeding or remedy” so far as they seem to be appropriate.

Section 8, Ben. General Clauses Act contemplates a case where the repealing enactment repeals a substantive right as well as the procedure by which it was enforced, and in such cases if the rights are saved in respect of transactions completed prior to the repealing of the statute, the remedies in respect of such rights as laid down in the repealed statute are also saved and the litigant can institute or continue proceedings in the same way for the enforcement of his rights as if the repealing Act had not come into force. In re Hale's Patent (9), referred to.

Where an enactment merely alters the procedure, without altering the substantive rights of the parties, the new procedure would be retrospective in its operation, and would extend to rights which had accrued before the changes were made.

C. Rule issued from an order of the Second Court, Munsif, Jhenidah (Jessore), dated March 27, 1939.

Messrs. Hemendra Chandra Sen and Sailendra Nath Mitra (Jr.), for the Petitioner.

Syed Farhat Ali, for the Opposite Party.

B. K. Mukherjea, J.—This rule is directed against an order of the Munsif, Second Court, Jhenidah made in a proceeding under s. 26-J, Ben. Ten. Act. The petitioner before us is the landlord and there was an occupancy holding owned by opposite parties Nos. 2 to 7 who held the same as tenants under the petitioner. A two-thirds share of this holding was put up to sale in execution of a money decree obtained by a creditor against the tenants and it was purchased by opposite party No. 1. In the sale certificate the holding was incorrectly described as mokarari and on that footing the purchaser deposited only Re. 1 as landlord's fee. Notice of the sale was served upon the petitioner under s. 26 (E), Ben. Ten. Act, on January 12, 1937. On August 24, 1938, the petitioner applied to the Munsif, Second Court, Jhenidah for recovery of the balance of landlord's fee together with compensation under s. 26 (J), Ben. Ten. Act, as it stood prior to its being repealed by the amending Act in 1938. The amending Act came into force on August 18, 1939, just six days before the application was presented. The Munsif was of opinion that the petitioner had the right to recover the balance of landlord's fees, but his remedy lay in a suit and not by an application under s. 26 (J), Ben. Ten. Act, which was repealed by Act VI of 1938 and was not in existence at the date when the application was made. It is against this order that the present rule has been obtained. It is not seriously disputed before us that the petitioner acquired the right under s. 26 (J) of the old Act to recover the balance of landlord's fees and compensation from opposite party No. 1 as as soon as the holding was sold with an erroneous description that it was a mukarari tenancy, and a corresponding liability was imposed upon the purchaser at the same time to pay the money. Section 26-J stood repealed on and from August 18, 1938, but there is nothing in the repealing Act which would show that the Legislature intended to take away or impair any vested right that had already accrued under the repealed section. The question that has been pressed for our consideration is, whether the remedy by way of an application was still open to the landlord, or was he bound to enforce his right by means of a regular suit?

Section 26-J, as it stood before Act VI of 1938 was passed, simply defined the rights of the landlord to recover the balance of landlord's fees, and compensation in cases when an occupancy holding was sold with a false description that it was a permanent tenure or a holding at fixed rates. The section itself did not indicate as to how the right was to be enforced, and if the matter stood there, in my opinion, the conclusion would have been irresistible that the remedy lay in an ordinary suit instituted under the provisions of the Civil P. C. The Legislature however while enumerating the acts which the law authorizes co-sharer landlords to do, either acting together or by an agent definitely spoke of an application under s. 26-J; Ben. Ten. Act. This provided or rather implied that the remedy of the landlord lay in an application and it was held in several decisions of this Court that the recovery of the balance of transfer fees by the landlord must be by an application and not by a suit: vide Aghore Chandra Jalui v. Rajnandini Debi (1), Muhammad Ismail v. Lal Mia (2) and Mahaluxmi Bank Ltd. v. Abdul Khaleque (3). These decisions I think could be supported on principle. It was Act IV of 1928, which for the first time created the right in favour of the landlord, and if the Act itself provided as to how the right could be enforced, the remedy should be deemed to be exclusive, and the ordinary right of suit must be held to be barred. As Lord Tenterden, C. J., observed in Doe d. Bishop of Rochester v. Bridges (4), at p. 859:

"Where an Act creates an obligation, and enforces the performance in a specified manner, we take it to be a general rule that performance cannot be enforced in any other manner. If an obligation is created, but no mode of enforcing its performance is ordained, the common law may, in general, find a mode suited to the particular nature of the case."

The same principle was enunciated by Wills, J. in Wolverhampton New Water-works Co. v. Hawkesford (5) and was followed by the Judicial Committee in Attorney-General of Trinidad and Tobago v. Gordon Grant & Co., (6). Now both s. 26-J as well as s. 188, I (1) have been repealed by Act VI of 1938, and if the right which arose under the old law is not affected by the repealing statute, the question arises as to how the right could be enforced, after the repealing enactment came into force. Mr. Sen argues that the remedy provided by the old Act was still applicable under s. 8, Ben. General Clauses Act, I of 1899, and in support of his contention he relies upon a decision of S. K. Ghose, J. in Rajendra Nath Nag v. Ashalata Debi (7), s. 8, General Clauses Act (Bengal) runs as follows:

"Where this Act, or any Ben. Act, made after the commencement of this Act repeals any enactment hitherto made or hereafter to be made, then unless a different intention appears, the repeal shall not—

(c) affect any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued, or incurred under any enactment so repealed; or

(d) affect any penalty, forfeiture or punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed against any enactment so repealed; or

(e) affect any investigation, legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability, penalty, forfeiture or punishment as aforesaid; and any such investigation, legal proceeding or remedy may be instituted, continued or enforced, and any such penalty, forfeiture or punishment may be imposed, as if the repealing Act had not been passed."

Mr. Sen argues that as the right which arose under s. 26 (J) of the old Ben. Ten. Act is not affected by the repealing Act, any legal proceeding or any remedy in respect of such right is also not affected, and under the provision of the last clause in the section any such legal proceeding may be instituted, as if the old law was still in force. It has been argued on the other hand by Mr. Farhat Ali, who appears for the opposite party, that cl. (e) as well as the subsequent provision in s. 8 cannot apply to suits or proceedings which were started after the old Act was repealed. They refer only to pending litigations. He invites us to hold that the expressions 'instituted, continued, or enforced' occurring in the last clause of the section are to be taken distributively and should be predicated respectively of the words 'investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy' mentioned at the beginning of the section; and they should not be read with each of the preceding words. Any other construction, it is said, would offend the well known principle of law that nobody has a vested right in any particular form of procedure. This contention, though seemingly plausible, does not appear to me to be sound. The effect of this construction would be to limit the section unduly, which is not warranted by the express language used by the Legislature. Clause (e) of s. 8 relates to investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy in respect of a right which is preserved under cl. (c), and cl. (d) refers to any penalty, forfeiture, or punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed against any enactment so repealed. The last clause combines both these matters, and from the distribution of verbs, as has been made by the Legislature itself, it would appear that whereas investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy could be instituted, continued or enforced, the penalty, forfeiture or punishment could be 'imposed' as if the repealing Act had not been passed.

In my opinion, these words "instituted, continued or enforced" are to be taken with each of the words "investigation, legal proceeding or remedy" so far as they seem to be appropriate. If the strict interpretation suggested by the learned Advocate for the opposite party is accepted, the result would be that whereas a suit could only be continued and not instituted after the repealing Act is passed, an investigation on the other hand could be started, but not continued after the old law has been repealed. I am also not impressed by the argument that the word "investigation" here refers to a proceeding which is not judicial in its character. It is strenuously argued on behalf of the opposite party that if under s. 8, Ben. General Clauses Act, a suit is allowed to be instituted as provided for under the old law, even after that law is repealed, it would amount to giving a litigant a vested right in the procedure also; whereas it is an established principle that all changes in the procedure are normally retrospective. This contention, in my opinion, seems to be entirely misconceived. Where an enactment merely alters the procedure, without altering the substantive rights of the parties, the new procedure would be retrospective in its operation, and would extend to rights which had accrued before the changes were made. As was observed by Lord Blackburn in Gardner v. Lucas (8), at p. 603 :

"It is perfectly settled that if the Legislature intended to frame a new procedure that, instead of proceeding in this form or that, you should proceed in another and a different way; clearly then bygone transactions are to be sued for and enforced according to the new form of procedure. Alterations in the form of procedure are always retrospective, unless there is some good reason or other why they should not be."

(8) (1878) 3 A C 582, (603).

In other words, if a statute deals merely with the procedure in an action, and does not affect the rights of the parties, the new procedure will prima facie apply to all such proceedings as well as future. (Craies on Statute Law, p. 337). Section 8, Ben. General Clauses Act, in my opinion, does not contemplate a case where the procedure only is changed leaving the rights of the parties intact. Clauses (c) and (e) of the section go together. Clause (e) refers only to the remedial rights which arise in connection with substantive rights which are repealed by the new enactment but are saved under cl. (c). In other words s. 8 contemplates a case where the repealing enactment repeals a substantive right as well as the procedure by which it was enforced, and in such cases if the rights are saved in respect of transactions completed prior to the repealing of the statute, the remedies in respect of such rights as laid down in the repealed statute are also saved and the litigant can institute or continue proceedings in the same way for the enforcement of his rights as if the repealing Act had not come into force. This, I believe, is the true interpretation to be put upon the provision of s. 8, Ben. General Clauses Act. This section is almost a reproduction of s. 38 of the English Interpretation Act of 1889, and the principle embodied in the last clause is quite in accordance with what has been laid down in well known English cases.

In In re Hales Patent (9) there was a dispute regarding compensation to be paid for the use of a certain patent by the Govt. Department. Under the Patents and Designs Act of 1907 such dispute was to be settled by the Treasury. By the Act of 1919 the Court was substituted for the Treasury for the purpose of determining and settling such disputes. Hale, the appellant in the case, made the application before the Court after the new Act was passed but it was held that the applicant's proper remedy lay in presenting his application to the Treasury, as was provided in the Act of 1907. Sargeant, J., observed as follows :

"No doubt the general law is that, while rights are not statutorily altered retrospectively, procedure is, apart from indications to the contrary, altered retrospectively; but where rights and procedure are dealt with together in the way in which s. 8 of the Act of 1919 deals with them, the intention of the Legislature would seem fairly clear—namely that the old rights are still to be determined by the old tribunal under the Act of 1907, and that only the new rights under the substituted section are to be dealt with by the tribunal thereby substituted for the Treasury."

In the present case the rights of the petitioner in the matter of recovery of landlord's fees, when the holding was sold under a false description, as well as the procedure for enforcing the rights were dealt with together in the old Act and as they have both been repealed and as the right is saved in respect of antecedent transactions under cl. (c) of s. 8, General Clauses Act, the remedy in my opinion, is also saved under cl. (c); and as the landlord had the right of presenting the application under s. 26-J of the old Act read with s. 188-I (i) I hold that the same remedy is still open to the landlord even after the passing of the amending Act of 1938. In my opinion, the decision of S. K. Ghose, J. in Rajendra Nath Nag v. Ashalata Debi (7), is correct. The decision in Profulla Chandra v. Raj Mohan Das (10) which has been relied on by the opposite party refers to a proceeding under s. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act, and is not directly in point. The result, therefore, is that this Rule is made absolute. The order of the Munsif, Second Court, Jhenidah, is set aside and the case is sent back to him in order that the application may be heard and decided on points other than those dealt with in his order. As the petitioner was guilty of inordinate delay in making the application, I make no order as to costs in this Court.

Mohammad Akram, J.—I agree.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Business—Junior co-parcener participating in conduct of business—His personal liability—Whether extends to antecedent transaction—Principle of ratification, applicability of—Rule of estoppel, if can give rise to partnership quod general public—Personal liability of junior co-parcener, if can be based on that ground.

The whole question whether a co-parcener who takes part in the conduct of the family business is personally liable, and, if so, on what legal basis, is essentially one of fact depending for its decision upon the nature and extent of participation as disclosed by the evidence in the particular case. If what the junior member is shown to have done in relation to the business is nothing more than what can reasonably be attributed to his interest in the business as a member of the family, there will be no legitimate inference that he intended to undertake a greater liability as a partner in the business and consequently no question of personal liability can arise. On the other hand, if the part taken by such member in the management of the business goes beyond what can be sufficiently explained by his interest in it as an asset of the family, as for instance, when he joins in borrowing for the purposes of the business, it may afford ground for the conclusion that he has become a partner so as to be personally answerable for all the debts incurred in the course of the business including those which he did not join in borrowing. Without such definite and unequivocal consensual acts, no partnership relation between members of a joint family can be implied from participation, however, active, in the conduct of the family business, a position which has received additional emphasis from the provisions of s. 5, Partnership Act. But such liability does not extend, in either case, to antecedent transactions. 49 Ind. Cas. 220 (1) and Bala Venkata Sitarama Chettiar v. Sivagurunatha Chettiar (3), discussed, 179 Ind. Cas. 308 (4), relied on, 98 Ind. Cas. 257 (5), referred to.

In holding a junior member of a family personally liable for a contract purporting to have been entered into by the manager on the ground of ratification, it is important to bear in mind that the doctrine presupposes ability to adopt or repudiate the transaction in question and cannot properly be applied for this reason to dealings or transactions which under the Hindu Law the co-parceners are powerless to disown, so long as they continue to remain in the joint family, unless it can be shown that the manager pledged the individual credit of the junior co-parceners at the time when he received the deposits in question and that the junior co-parceners having come to know of the transaction accepted or acquiesced in it. 174 Ind. Cas. 308 (4) and Chalamayya v. Varadayya (6), explained. [p. 517, col. 1.]

The rule of estoppel can only preclude proof of facts against individuals actually misled. It cannot give rise to a partnership quod the general public in the case of a joint Hindu family and hence the junior members participating in the conduct of the family business cannot be personally liable merely on that ground. 162 Ind. Cas. 371 (2), not approved. [p. 516, col. 1.]

A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Sivaganga, dated August 1, 1936.

Mr. K. S. Sankara Ayyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. G. Krishna Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the appellant for recovery of Rs. 5,982-14-9 from defendants Nos. 1 to 3 personally and from the family properties of all the defendants. Defendant No. 1 is the father of defendants Nos. 2 to 4, and defendant No. 5 is the son of defendant No. 1's deceased brother. The defendants constitute a joint Hindu family of which defendant No. 1 is the manager. The defendants are Nattukottai Chetties and were carrying money-lending and banking business under their family vilasam VR. PL. M. at Rangoon and other places in Burma. The amount claimed is said to be the stridhana money of plaintiff No. 1 deposited by her father, plaintiff No. 2 with defendant No. 1.

The Court below decreed the claim against defendant No. 1 personally and against the family properties of all the defendants as it was a debt contracted by defendant No. 1 in the course of the family business. Not satisfied with this decree, the plaintiffs have appealed claiming a personal decree also against defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the respondents herein, and the only question for decision relates to their personal liability.

Such liability is said to arise on the ground that, as sons of defendant No. 1, they were managing the family business jointly with him and must, by virtue of such participation in management, be deemed to have become partners. A special ground of liability was also urged so far as respondent No. 1 was concerned, namely that he had expressly undertaken to pay the debt personally in certain letters written by him to appellant No. 2. The learned Subordinate Judge found that all that was established by the appellants was that respondent No. 1 was managing the business under a power-of-attorney dated July 13, 1931 executed in his favour by his father for a period of three years thereafter; and that respondent No. 2 was writing the accounts of the firm for some time and held, on these findings, the respondents could not be said to have become partners or to have held themselves out as such, so as to be personally liable for the debts incurred in the course of the business. The learned Judge said nothing about the special ground urged as regards respondent No. 1, as the point was apparently not raised before him. Some criticism was directed against the finding that respondent No. 1 was managing the firm as under a power-of-attorney executed by defendant No. 1, and it was pointed out that the power-of-attorney was not produced by the respondents. We are not prepared to attach any importance to the non-production of the power as the appellant's own witness (P. W. No. 2) who was the agent of another Chettier firm in Rangoon which had dealings with the respondents' firm, admitted that respondent No. 1 was acting as under a power executed by his father when he was managing the family business in Burma. But this is not, in our view, a material circumstance, for, we are clearly of opinion that even if he managed the firm in his capacity as a junior member of the family interested in the business, no personal liability could arise by virtue of such management, in the circumstances of this case. For, the deposits to which the suit relates, were all made prior to December 10, 1924 and duly stamped vouchers evidencing the terms of the deposits, including the final deposit letter (Ex. A, dated December 11, 1930) on which the suit was brought, were all executed from time to time only by defendant No. 1, before the respondents began to participate in the conduct of the business in 1931. Assuming, therefore, that the respondents must be deemed to have become partners or to have held themselves out as such in relation to the family business in Burma by reason of such participation, they could not, in our opinion, be held to be personally liable in respect of the pre-existing debts of the firm.

On the question of personal liability of junior members of a joint Hindu family for debts incurred in the course of family business on the ground of their participation in the conduct or management of it, the decisions of this Court, to go no further, have been neither clear nor uniform. In Official Assignee of Madras v. Palaniappa Chetti (1), it was held by Wallis, C. J., and Spencer, J. that the fact that the son had been assisting the father in the conduct of the business during his minority and had taken an active part in its management after attaining majority, did not make the son personally liable for obligations contracted during his minority, but that in respect of debts incurred since he attained majority such liability arose by reason of his conduct in taking an active part in the business. Both the learned Judges were of opinion that ss. 247 and 248, Contract Act, did not apply to the case, and based their conclusion apparently on the principles of Hindu Law. Sadasiva Ayyar, J. held that both by virtue of those sections and the rules of Hindu Law, the son was personally liable for all the debts of the business including those contracted during his minority. This extreme view has never been followed in this Court and may be left out of consideration. The other two learned Judges however have not clearly indicated on what legal basis personal liability in such a case rests—whether it is based on implied partnership or estoppel by holding out or ratification. In Ramasami Chetty v. Srinivasa Ayyar (2) the view is expressed that personal liability where it arises in such cases, rests on the doctrine of holding out and that, "a partnership from the point of view of the general public comes into existence."

It is however somewhat difficult to see how the rule of estoppel which can only preclude proof of facts against individuals actually misled, can give rise to a partnership quod the general public. On the other hand, in Bala Venkata Sitarama Chettiar v. Sivagurunatha Chettiar (3), it was thought that according to the majority view in Official Assignee of Madras v. Palaniappa Chetti (1),

"unless they (i. e., the junior members of the family) were partners, they cannot be made personally liable for the debts of the business," and the case was sent down to the lower Court for a finding on that point. That Court having found that the junior members had taken an active part in the management of the family business, the case came up again before Coutts-Trotter, C. J. and Ramesam, J. who however would seem to repudiate the doctrine of personal liability of a co-parcener arising out of an active participation in the family business, and refused to hold the junior members personally liable in the absence of "any other evidence of a consensual act whereby a definite new relation other than that of members of a joint Hindu family trading together was created: Bala Venkata Sitarama Chettiar v. Sivagurunatha Chettiar (3)."

It seems to us however that this divergence of opinion is more apparent than real, for we venture to think that the whole question whether a co-parcener who takes part in the conduct of the family business is personally liable, and, if so, on what legal basis, is essentially one of fact depending for its decision upon the nature and extent of participation as disclosed by the evidence in the particular case. If what the junior member is shown to have done in relation to the business is nothing more than what can reasonably be attributed to his interest in the business as a member of the family, there will be no legitimate inference that he intended to undertake a greater liability as a partner in the business. This is all, as it seems to us, that the learned Judges meant to affirm in the last mentioned case. On the other hand, if the part taken by such member in the management of the business goes beyond what can be sufficiently explained by his interest in it as an asset of the family, as for instance, when he joins in borrowing for the purposes of the business, it may afford ground for the conclusion that he has become a partner so as to be personally answerable for all the debts incurred in the course of the business including those which he did not join in borrowing. Without such definite and unequivocal consensual acts, no partnership relation between members of a joint family can, in our opinion, be implied from participation, however active, in the conduct of the family business, a position which has received additional emphasis from the provisions of s. 5, Partnership Act, which postulate the possibility of members of a joint family carrying on the family business without becoming partners therein in the legal sense of the term. Again, the part taken by a junior member, while it may not be sufficient to justify an inference of partnership, may be such as to lead others to act on the belief that he is a partner, in which case the member will be precluded by the principle of estoppel from showing as against the person misled that he (the member) is not in fact a partner. Thus, in each case, the question is, as it seems to us, what is the proper inference to be drawn from the facts proved; and as pointed out by Varadachariar, J. in Alagappa Chettiar v. Bank of Chettinad (4) at p. 954, the extent of the personal liability incurred by the member will vary according as it is found to arise on the one ground or the other. But what is important for the purpose of this appeal is, that such liability does not extend, in either case, to antecedent transactions. As observed by the same learned Judge in the case referred to above:

"If the liability, to be based on the doctrine of holding out it is obvious that such liability can arise only in respect of transactions subsequently entered into and on the faith of his conduct. Even if it should be held that by such participation the co-parcener becomes a partner in the business, it seems to us unreasonable to hold that he thereby incurs a personal liability in respect of the pre-existing debts of the business."

See also Russa Engineering Works v. Kanara Transport (5). The appellants next relied on the following observations in Chalamayya v. Varadayya (6) at p. 167:

"No doubt where it is shown that the contract relied on, though purporting to have been entered into by the manager only, is in reality one to which the other co-parceners are actual contracting parties either because they had agreed, before the contract was entered into, to be personally bound thereby, or because they, being in existence at the date of the contract and competent to enter into it, have subsequently duly ratified and adopted it, in that case unquestionably every such co-parcener is absolutely responsible. Equally he would be responsible though he did not assent to the particular contract if there had been such acquiescence on his part in the course of dealings, in which the particular contract was entered into, as to warrant his being treated in the manner as a contracting party."

(4) (1938) 2 M L J 944 (954); 179 Ind. Cas. 308; A I R 1939 Mad. 6; 48 L W 707; (1938) M W N 1194; 11 R M 565.

(5) 49 M 930; 98 Ind. Cas. 257; A I R 1926 Mad. 1138; 51 M L J 506; (1926) M W N 825; 24 L W 546.

(6) 22 M 166 (167); 9 M L J 3.

Appellants accordingly urged that the respondents must be taken by reason of their participation in the business to have "ratified and adopted" even the antecedent transactions in the business including the suit deposit and that, in any case, there has been such "acquiescence" on the part of the respondents in the course of the dealings had by the father as to warrant the respondents being regarded as contracting parties themselves in respect of the suit deposit. Our attention was also drawn to the approval by Varadachariar, J. at pp. 955 and 956 of Alagappa Chettiar v. Bank of Chettinad (4), already referred to, of the observations in Chalamayya v. Varayya (6) quoted above. There is nothing in those observations which need arouse any dissent, for they do no more than envisage the possible application of the general principle of ratification by adoption or acquiescence to this class of cases. The principle itself is simple and well known, but the difficulty arises, as with so many other principles, in the application. In holding a junior member of a family personally liable for a contract purporting to have been entered into by the manager on the ground of ratification, it is important to bear in mind that the doctrine pre-supposes ability to adopt or repudiate the transaction in question and cannot properly be applied for this reason to dealings or transactions which under the Hindu Law the co-parceners are powerless to disown, so long as they continue to remain in the joint family. As pointed out in the very case in which these observations occur, when

"the contract is of a character such as under the Hindu Law entitle the manager to enter into independently of the consent of the other members of the family so as to bind them thereby, then it is clear that the scope of the manager's power is restricted to and does not extend beyond the family property (italics ours)."

It would be wholly subversive of this well-established rule of Hindu Law to hold that a co-parcener is personally liable on the ground of ratification by acquiescence for the dealings of the manager in the ordinary course of family business. If it had been shown in this case that defendant No. 1 pledged the individual credit the respondents at the time when he received the deposits in question and that the respondents having come to know of the transaction accepted or acquiesced in it, it might be possible to hold them personally bound on the principle of ratification; but nothing of the kind has been proved or even suggested in this case. We have therefore no hesitation in rejecting this contention.

It remains to consider the special ground of liability urged with reference to respondent No. 1, namely a personal undertaking to pay in consideration of the appellants' forbearance to sue. Reliance was placed upon Exs. J., J-2 and D to show that when appellant No. 2 demanded the money and threatened to sue, respondent No. 1 wanted time for payment promising to pay the debt personally and that in consequence the filing of the suit was delayed for over a year. We are unable however to read these letters as containing any undertaking by respondent No. 1 to pay the debt due to the appellants personally. The letters merely explained why there was delay in the payment of the debt and gave an assurance that as soon as conditions of trade improved, arrangement would be made to pay up the debt.

Though written by respondent No. 1, the letters bore only the family vilasam VR. PL. M. and were signed with an invocation of the family deity, the mode usually adopted for signing family letters in accordance with the practice prevailing among Nattukottai Chetties. The letters are thus consistent with respondent No. 1 having merely affirmed the pre-existing liability of the family such as it was, and contain no indication of his having undertaken any additional or extended liability for the debt. Nor is there any definite request in any of them for grant of time for payment. The suit was, no doubt, brought more than a year after the latest of them, namely Ex. D, but it does not appear that this delay was due to the appellants' having granted any time for payment. Appellant No. 2 who was examined as P. W. No. 1 does not say that time was granted in compliance with the request of respondent No. 1; nor was such a thing suggested in the cross-examination of respondent No. 1. On the other hand, the allegations in para. 7 of the plaint that "On several dates after the said date (that is after Ex. D) both personally and through agents demands were made on the defendants and a demand was made lastly on June 30, 1934, all to no purpose," are plainly destructive of any such suggestion. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Easement—Punjab—Licensee acting on license building works of permanent character—License, if can be revoked at option of licensor even on payment of compensation.

If the licensee acting upon the permission granted, has executed a work of a permanent character, and has incurred expenses in its execution it is not open to the licensor to revoke the license at his option and resume the land even on offer of compensation. This rule being in consonance with equity, justice and good conscience should be given effect to in provinces like the Punjab, where the Easements Act is not in force. 186 Ind. Cas. 890, affirmed.

[Case-law discussed.]

L. P. A. from the judgment of Mr. Justice Bhide, Reported in 186 Ind. Cas. 890.

Mr. Barkat Ali, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kishan Chand, for the Respondent.

Tek Chand, J.—This appeal has arisen from a suit for possession of 3 kanals and 19 marlas of land in Mauza Raya, District Amritsar, instituted by the plaintiff-appellant against the respondent, the District Board of Amritsar. It was alleged in the plaint that the plaintiffs are the owners of the land, that 11 years ago they had given it temporarily to the District Board, Amritsar, for the purposes of an agricultural farm attached to the Board School at Raya on the condition that they would be entitled to resume possession at their option, at any time they liked. They averred that they required the land for their own purposes and had demanded possession from the District Board but the latter had refused to surrender it. The defendant Board resisted the suit on various grounds. It was denied that the land had been given temporarily to the defendant and could be resumed by the plaintiffs at their pleasure. On the other hand, it was pleaded that the plaintiffs had gifted the land to the Board for the purpose of an agricultural miniature farm attached to the school. It was further alleged that in order to make the land fit for use as a farm the Board had spent large sums of money on constructions of a permanent character including a well, boundary wall and a pucca gate and that the plaintiffs never objected to these constructions and, therefore, they were estopped from maintaining the suit.

The trial Judge held that the land had not been given temporarily to the defendant but there was an out-and-out gift for the purpose of starting a miniature farm, and that as the land was being used by the defendant for that purpose the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover possession at their pleasure. He also held that the plaintiffs were estopped from maintaining the present suit. On these findings he dismissed the suit. On appeal, the learned Senior Sub-Judge concurred with the trial Judge in holding that there was a permanent gift and so long as the school at Raya continued and used the land in question for the farm, or for purposes akin to it, it could keep the land. He accordingly dismissed the appeal.

On second appeal to this Court, the learned Single Judge found that in finding that there was an out-and-out gift the Courts below had ignored important evidence on the record and had misread the depositions of some witnesses. He, therefore, held that this finding was not conclusive. He accordingly, examined the evidence himself and came to the conclusion that there was no out-and-out gift, but the plaintiffs had retained the ownership in themselves and had granted permission to the District Board to occupy the land and use it for the purposes of the school. He held that this possession was in the nature of a 'license' as defined in s. 52, Easements Act. He further found that though such a license is ordinarily revocable but it is not so if the licensee, acting upon the license, has executed a work of a permanent character and incurred expenses in its execution, as laid down in s. 60 of the Act. As the District Board had sunk a well on this land and erected compound walls, which were works of a permanent character, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the Board was not liable to be ejected on account of the undertaking given by the plaintiffs that they would not claim the land so long as it was required for the school and also on account of works of a permanent character having been executed by the Board acting on that promise. In the result, he dismissed the appeal, leaving the parties to bear their own costs. He, however, granted a certificate to the plaintiffs for a further appeal under cl. 10 of the Letters Patent.

Before us, Counsel for the defendant-respondents challenged the finding of the learned Judge on the merits and contended that the transfer was in the nature of an out-and-out gift. After hearing him, however, I can find no force in this contention, and agree with the learned Judge that the grant was in the nature of a license, as defined in s. 52, Easements Act. The main contention raised by Mr. Barkat Ali on behalf of the plaintiff-appellants is that the Indian Easements Act is not in force in the Punjab and, therefore, the rule laid down in s. 60 is not applicable, and that in this province the rule of English Law should be followed, according to which even where the licensee, acting on the license, has executed works of a permanent character, the licensor is entitled to revoke the license and recover possession of the land on payment of compensation to the licensee for the expenditure incurred by him in executing these works. In support of this contention the learned Counsel relied upon Wood v. Leadbitter (1), and three Calcutta cases, to which I shall refer presently. In Wood v. Leadbitter (1), the facts were materially different and the decision does not really touch the point before us. There, the licensor, on receipt of money, had allowed the plaintiff to go to a stand in his enclosure and witness the races; the plaintiff had gone to the enclosure but was asked to leave and on his refusal to do so was forcibly ejected; and he brought an action for assault and false imprisonment. The case was decided primarily on the ground that according to the law, as administered in England at the time (1845), the right to come and remain for a certain time on the land of another could only be granted by deed; and that a parol license to do so, though money had been paid for it, was revocable at any time and without paying back the money.

This common law doctrine, however, was not allowed to prevail in equity; and ever since the Judicature Act the Courts in England have been giving effect to equitable considerations, and Wood v. Leadbitter (1), has not been followed in its integrity: see the judgment of Lindley, L. J. in Hurst v. Picture Theatres, Ltd. (2) (at pp. 6 to 10) and Lowe v. Adams (3) see also Gale on Easements (Edn. 11), pp. 69 and 70. Further in Wood v. Leadbitter (1) a distinction was drawn between what is called a "naked license" and a "license coupled with a grant." Alderson B., who delivered the judgment in that case, observed at pp. 844 and 845*:

"A mere license is revocable, but that which is called a license is something more than a license; it often comprises or is connected with a grant, and then the party who has given it cannot in general revoke it so as to defect the grant, to which it was incident."

It cannot be said that in the case before us the license was a mere "naked" license. The case cited, however, does not deal with the principle underlying s. 60, Easements Act, and, therefore, it is not necessary to discuss it further. That principle appears to be based on equitable considerations and is really an application of the rule of estoppel to the case of a licensor, and I have not been able to find anything in English Law, to the contrary. Indeed, the following passage from Goddard on Easements (Edn. 8) p. 529 sums up the English Law in words, which are almost identical with s. 60 of the Indian Act:

"A license is also irrevocable if the licensee acting upon the permission granted, has executed a work of a permanent character, and has incurred expenses in its execution. This rule of law seems to be based upon the injustice which would be inflicted upon the licensee if, after he had laid out money and executed a permanent work, the licensor were permitted to revoke his licence and make him waste the money expended, or if he ever allowed to treat him as a wrongdoer and recover damages for the very act for which he gave permission."

Of the three Calcutta cases cited by Mr. Barkat Ali Prosonna Coomar v. Ram Coomar (4) is clearly distinguishable, as in that case no work of a permanent character had been executed; the plaintiff had merely been given the right to go to a corner of the defendants' land and use it as a privy and, following Wood v. Leadbitter (1) it was held that this being a "naked license" to use the land of the defendant, not coupled with a grant, was revocable at the will of the licensor, subject to the right of the licensee to damages if revoked contrary to the terms of any express or implied contract. The other two cases certainly support Mr. Barkat Ali's contention and have the high authority of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee behind them. In Surnomoyee Peshakar v. Chunder Kumar Das (5) it was observed that where a licensee acting upon the license has executed works of a permanent character and has incurred expenses in their construction, the grantor of the license is entitled to revoke it, if he makes compensation to the licensee for the loss he may incur by reason of the revocation of the license. The learned Judge based this conclusion upon certain English authorities, mentioned therein. This view was reiterated by the same learned Judge in Moti Lal Rai v. Kalu Mondar (6) (at p. 323). But as pointed out by Sulaiman, C. J. in Mathuri v. Bhola Nath, 149 Ind. Cas. 389 (7) (at p. 391) the rule has been expressed in too wide terms in these Calcutta cases and is not supported by the English decisions cited therein. In one of these cases, Plimmer v. Mayor, Councillors, etc. of Wellington (8) the license was held to be irrevocable and the compensation actually granted to the licensor was not for revoking the license but for acquisition of certain other interests which he held in the land.

Similarly, in Rochdale Canal Co. v. King (9) the Court gave full effect to the rule of estoppel and refused to the licensor the injunction asked for, as he had acquiesced in the construction of costly works by the licensee. The decision in Bankart v. Tenant (10) turned on its peculiar facts and it was held on the evidence that the undertaking given by the licensor did not form the foundation of an equitable right and therefore neither an injunction nor compensation was granted. In Winter v. Brockwell (11) an action in a case for nuisance was dismissed, as the license executed was held to be not countermandable, though it was remarked obiter that after the licensee had incurred expenses the license could not be recalled "at least not without putting him in the same position as before, by offering to pay all the expenses which had been incurred in consequence of it." No compensation was, however, actually granted and the verdict was entered for the defendant. Again in Liggins v. Inge (12) in an action for tort it was held that the license was not countermandable and injunction was refused: it does not appear from the judgment that compensation was in fact granted. The last case referred to is Aidin v. Latimer Clark Muirhead and Co. (13) in which a parol license by a lessor to the lessee to open ventilators in the walls of a building demised by the lease was held to be revocable, and on the lessor closing the ventilators, the lessee's action for injunction to restrain the obstruction was dismissed, but an enquiry was ordered to ascertain the amount of damage (if any) which he had suffered by reason of the obstruction. In the judgment emphasis was laid on the circumstances that the license was not by deed but was parol and Wood v. Leadbitter (1) was followed the authority of which (as already stated) has since been shaken, so far as the particular matter is concerned.

In England, the present rule is as expressed in the passage from Goddard on Easements reproduced above and is substantially the same as that contained in s. 60, Easements Act. This rule being in consonance with equity, justice and good conscience should be given effect to in provinces like the Punjab, where the Act is not in force. This was done by Sulaiman, C. J. in Mathuri v. Bhola Nath, 149 Ind. Cas. 387 (7) in a case in which the license had been granted before the Easements Act was extended to the United Provinces and by the Judicial Commissioner of Central Provinces in Dayaram v. Deorao, 94 Ind. Cas. 923 (14) to a case from Berar where the Act is not in force. The contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant is without force and must be repelled. It is not denied that the land in dispute is being actually used by the District Board for the purpose for which it was given. It is also proved that more than ten years ago the defendant, acting on this license had sunk a well, erected a boundary wall and a pucca gate at considerable cost. These are works of a permanent character and therefore applying the rule laid down above, it is not open to the appellants to revoke the license at their option, and resume the land on offer of payment of compensation. I would accordingly affirm the judgment of the learned Judge and dismiss the appeal, but having regard to all the circumstances I would leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

conditional sale—Test to determine — Mortgage held anomalous — Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 4 (3) — Anomalous mortgage—Mortgagee's choice of remedy between sale and foreclosure — Discretion of Court in this respect.

The remedy by way of foreclosure is not exclusive to a mortgage by conditional sale. It is equally applicable to an anomalous mortgage.

The test whether a particular document is a mortgage by conditional sale or is some other kind of mortgage, is not what the parties have said it is, but is rather whether it fulfils those statutory requirements which the Legislature has laid down. The parties can call it by whatever name they like, but that will not make it a mortgage of a particular kind, unless it complies with the requirements of such a mortgage as defined by the Act. [p. 522, col. 2.]

A mortgage-deed stated that the property was mortgaged without possession. There was a covenant to pay interest, then a covenant to pay the principal and the accumulated compound interest, "at the stipulated period", that is, at the end of the period of five years, thirdly, a provision that the mortgagors were not to be entitled to redeem earlier than at the expiration of the five years, and finally it provided.....that in case of non-payment of the entire amount of principal, interest, and compound interest the mortgagees would after the expiry of the stipulated period, have power to obtain proprietary possession of the entire property mortgaged by bringing a suit for a decree for foreclosure and that the mortgagors would not have any objection thereto:

Held, that the mortgage was not a mortgage by conditional sale but an anomalous mortgage.

There is in O. XXXIV, r. 4 (3), a perfectly clear statutory provision that in the case of an anomalous mortgage the mortgagee's choice of remedy, between a sale and foreclosure, is to be subject to the discretion of the Court. This discretion, as every other discretion vested in a Court must be exercised judicially and not arbitrarily. The consideration that it is open to a mortgagee, where a sale is ordered, to bid for it and purchase it himself, a good deal enlarges the scope of a Judge's discretion. [p. 523, cols. 1 & 2.]

F. A. from a decision of the Second Sub-Judge, Cawnpore, dated February 12, 1935.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana and B. N. Sahai, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. L. Chaturvedi, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a first appeal arising out of a mortgage suit of a quite simple character. The suit was by certain plaintiffs suing as mortgagees to enforce their security against two defendants, who were mortgagors. The result of the suit was that the plaintiffs were given the usual preliminary mortgage decree for sale, and the only contest in this appeal is whether, instead of having a preliminary decree for sale, they are entitled to have as they desire, a decree for foreclosure. I find that this very simple suit has been pending for over seven years. The mortgagees started this endeavour to get this money back by instituting this suit on September 7, 1933, and they paid, as the price of the justice that they hoped to get, a not inconsiderable court-fee of Rs. 1,470. They obtained their decree for sale on February 3, 1935, and it has taken till now a period of nearly six years for the matter to come in first appeal to this Court. The facts are that, on August 31, 1925, the defendants executed the mortgage in question. In view of the fact that the principal question in this appeal is whether this document constitutes a mortgage by conditional sale, as the plaintiffs contend, or an anomalous mortgage, as the defendants contend, I must look closely at its terms. The mortgage begins by reciting the title of the mortgagors, and then goes on to say :

"Now we have, of our own accord and free will while in a sound state of mind and without any undue influence mortgaged without possession the entire 'zamin-dari' property specified below.....to the extent of one-half, for a period of five years, for Rs. 30,000 of the King's coin....."

There then follow certain covenants, the first covenant to pay interest, then a covenant to pay the principal and the accumulated compound interest, "at the stipulated period," that is to say, at the end of the period of five years, thirdly, a provision that the mortgagors were not to be entitled to redeem earlier than at the expiration of the five years, and finally it goes on in these terms :

".....that in case of non-payment of the entire amount at principal, interest, and compound interest the mortgagees shall, after the expiry of the stipulated period, have power to obtain proprietary possession of the entire property mortgaged by bringing a suit for a decree for foreclosure and that we shall not have any objection thereto....."

The document then concludes with an attestation clause in these words :

"We have therefore executed this simple mortgage deed carrying interest by conditional sale so that it may serve as evidence and be of use when needed."

I should say that the word "simple" does not appear in the original before the words "mortgage deed". The amount due for principal and interest, at the date of the institution of the suit, was apparently Rs. 42,000, and at the date of judgment, as the learned Judge says, was approximately Rs. 45,000. There is no contest upon the facts, and the point which has taken nearly six years to bring an appeal to this Court is a very simple one, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to insist upon a decree for foreclosure, instead of the decree for sale, which they have obtained. This question turns primarily upon whether the mortgage is a mortgage by conditional sale, or whether it is an anomalous mortgage. If it is a mortgage by conditional sale, then it must be conceded that the plaintiffs are entitled to insist upon a decree for foreclosure and that they cannot, by any means, be prevented from obtaining it. If, however, this is not a mortgage by conditional sale but an anomalous mortgage, then it would appear, for reasons with which I shall deal in a moment, that it is open to the Court in its discretion to give a mortgagee-plaintiff either a decree for foreclosure or a decree for sale. In this case, the learned Judge in the Court below has found that the mortgage was an anomalous mortgage and, in the exercise of his discretion, he has further determined that the plaintiffs' proper remedy is by a decree for sale and not by a decree for foreclosure. The first thing to consider therefore is whether the learned Judge is right in the conclusion he has arrived at that this is an anomalous mortgage. A mortgage by conditional sale is described in s. 58 (c), T. P. Act, 1882. That section says :

"(c) Where the mortgagor ostensibly sells the mortgaged property—

on condition that on default of payment of the mortgage money on a certain date the sale shall become absolute, or on condition that on such payment being made the sale shall become void, or on condition that on such payment being made the buyer shall transfer the property to the seller, the transaction is called a mortgage by conditional sale and the mortgagee a mortgagee by conditional sale."

An anomalous mortgage is defined by s. 58 (g) as a mortgage which is not a simple mortgage, a mortgage by conditional sale, a usufructuary mortgage, an English mortgage or a mortgage by deposit of title deeds within the meaning of that section. I agree with the learned Judge in thinking that this, upon the face of the mortgage, has not the characteristics of a mortgage by conditional sale. The first question we have to ask in the terms of s. 58 (c) is, whether by the deed the mortgagor 'ostensibly sells' the mortgaged property. Looking at this deed, there is not, to my mind, a trace of a sale about it from beginning to end. The word 'sale' is not mentioned, but, on the contrary, it is said that the property is 'mortgaged without possession.' There is, to my mind, nothing, and a fortiori, nothing 'ostensible', in this deed to indicate that there is in contemplation a sale of any kind, whether conditional or not, to the mortgagees. Nor is there any single one of the three conditions set out in s. 58 (c) to be found in this mortgage. The only condition covering the event of default of payment of the mortgage money, which is one of the events contemplated by s. 58 (c), is that the mortgagee shall have power to obtain proprietary possession of the entire property by bringing a suit for a decree for foreclosure. That is, I think, a long way from a condition that, to use the words of s. 58 (c), "the sale shall become absolute." In my view, on the face of this deed it is not a mortgage by conditional sale.

But then two things are said by the appellants. It is said that the Court is not entitled to go behind the description of the deed, which the parties themselves have provided, in what I have described as the attestation clause, which is set out above. The parties themselves have described it as a "mortgage deed.....by conditional sale....." This is perfectly true and is a perfectly legitimate comment. But, in my view, the test whether a particular document is a mortgage by conditional sale or is some other kind of mortgage, is not what the parties have said it is, but is rather whether it fulfils those statutory requirements which the Legislature has laid down. The parties can call it by whatever name they like, but that will not make it a mortgage of a particular kind, unless it complies with the requirements of such a mortgage as defined by the Act. The second thing that is said, is that the provision, to which I have already drawn attention, allowing the mortgagee, upon a default in payment of the principal and interest at the expiration of the stipulated period, to obtain proprietary possession by bringing a suit for foreclosure points strongly to the conclusion that the mortgage is a mortgage by conditional sale. I do not think that that is so. The remedy by way of foreclosure is not exclusive to a mortgage by conditional sale. It is equally applicable to an anomalous mortgage, and, indeed, if we turn to s. 67, T. P. Act, we find it is stipulated that an anomalous mortgage must contain a provision for foreclosure in order to allow a mortgagee under such a mortgage to obtain a decree for foreclosure. That shows, quite clearly, that the remedy by way of foreclosure is well known in the case of an anomalous mortgage, and is, in no way, peculiar to a mortgage by conditional sale. It seems to me therefore that the force of this second contention is greatly lessened.

It is not suggested that, if this mortgage is not a mortgage by conditional sale, it can be any other form of mortgage than an anomalous mortgage. I have come to the conclusion that it is not a mortgage by conditional sale, and it must, therefore, be an anomalous mortgage. That disposes of the first point in the case. But even upon this finding, it was well within the rights of the plaintiffs to come to the Court and ask for a decree for foreclosure. They possessed an anomalous mortgage, and that mortgage, by its very terms, gave them the power to foreclose. They were, therefore, under s. 67 (a), T. P. Act, 1882, entitled to institute a suit for foreclosure. And that they did. That, however, is not the end of the matter, because of O. XXXIV, r. 4, sub-r. (3). By this it is provided as follows :

"(3) In a suit for foreclosure in the case of an anomalous 'mortgage,'—that is, this case—'if the plaintiff' succeeds, the Court may, at the instance of any party to the suit or of any other person interested in the mortgage security or the right of redemption, pass a like decree (in lieu of a decree for foreclosure) that is to say, a decree for sale on such terms as it thinks fit, including the deposit in Court of a reasonable sum fixed by the Court to meet the expenses of the sale and to secure the performance of the terms."

The learned Judge, in reliance upon that rule, has declined to give a decree for foreclosure. He says, in effect, that the value of the security is at least Rs. 65,000, and that the amount charged on it is only Rs. 45,000 at the most. He considers therefore that if the plaintiffs are allowed, as they want to do to foreclose, they will "get an unfair advantage", and therefore he gives them a decree for sale. The appellants say before me that, in any case, this is wrong, because they were entitled to have the form of relief which they themselves chose; and the learned Judge ought not to have interfered with that right. The only difficulty in this case, which I have experienced, is upon this aspect of the matter. I am a strong believer in the principle that, if a man lends money to another upon a particular security, he is entitled to the full fruits of that security, and all the remedies under it, whatever they may be, and that it is not, as a rule, for the defendant to be heard to complain of the very bargain which he was willing to submit to at the time he was in need of, and borrowed, the money. But that general view of the sanctity of contract must yield to any statutory provision to the contrary, and we find, I think, in O. XXXIV, r. 4 (3), a perfectly clear statutory provision that in the case of an anomalous mortgage the mortgagee's choice of remedy, between a sale and foreclosure is to be subject to the discretion of the Court. That is a statutory limitation of the Court. That is a statutory limitation upon what I should otherwise have regarded as a salutary principle. The only difficulty is to determine upon what principles the Court should exercise the discretion with which it is vested. It goes without saying that this discretion, as every other discretion vested in a Court, must be exercised judicially and not arbitrarily. The question is upon what judicial principles a discretion such as this should be exercised. Now, it is possibly worth observing that O. XXXIV, r. 4, sub-r. (3) is so far as this discretion is concerned, in very much the same terms as s. 25, English Conveyancing Act of 1881. The relevant sub-section of that section says :

"(2).....in any action.....the Court.....may, if it thinks fit, direct a sale of the mortgaged property, on such terms as it thinks fit, including, if it thinks fit, deposit in Court of a reasonable sum fixed by the Court, to meet the expenses of sale and to secure performance of the terms."

It is possibly therefore relevant to look and see upon what principles English Courts of Equity have chosen between the remedy by way of foreclosure and the remedy by way of sale. In Hurst v. Hurst (1), the Master of the Rolls, Sir John Romilly, says :

"The next question is with respect to the sale of the estate. I apprehend that the statute, enabling the Court to direct a sale, intended to give the Court a very considerable discretion, in order to avoid the great delay and expense which is occasioned by foreclosure and redemption in a case where there is great number of successive mortgages ; and the Court will, upon the terms and according to the directions contained in the section, exercise that power in such a manner as not to operate injuriously or oppressively on any person interested....."

And he goes on to point out that in a case in which a sale could take place as beneficially and profitably to the parties concerned as a foreclosure, then it would be a proper thing to exercise the discretionary power to order a sale. In Heath v. Crealock (2), Lord Cairns says :

"The next objection made to the decree was on the score that in place of ordering a foreclosure it ordered a sale. It appears to me that under the recent Act of Parliament, it is within the discretion of the Court in a mortgage suit whether a foreclosure or a sale shall be ordered; but a sale is not to be ordered as of course. There may be cases of complication where a sale is eminently desirable, and there may be cases where, by reason of there being little or no complication or for other reasons a sale ought not to be ordered by this Court. It is sufficient for me to say that in this case there appear to be no special reasons on the one hand why a sale ought to be ordered and on the other hand there is at least one very special reason why it ought not...."

It has always been recognized, I think, that where the security is deficient or where it is a matter of speculation whether it is sufficient or deficient a mortgagee will not be deprived of his remedy by way of foreclosure if he prefers it. That is a principle to be found, I think, in Merchant Banking Co., of London v. London and Hanseatic Bank (3). There, Chitty, J. says :

(1) (1852) 16 Beav 372; 22 L J Ch. 538; 1 W R 105; 96 R R 179.

(3) (1886) 55 L J Ch. 479.

"Section 25, sub-s. (2) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, no doubt confers upon the Court a discretionary power; but it is a discretion which must be exercised judicially. Where the question of value is merely speculative, it is not just that the rights of first mortgagees should be postponed to a speculative sale at the instance of second mortgagees."

It appears to me that it makes no difference in principle whether it is a second mortgagee, or a mortgagor, who objects to the foreclosure :

"If a sale were ordered, the reserved price would be fixed at an amount which would cover the first mortgage and costs; and if no bid were made, the market value of the property would be depreciated by the knowledge that there had been an abortive attempt to sell it. Therefore, were the Court to direct a sale, the plaintiff's rights might be seriously prejudiced. The plaintiffs have satisfied me as to the insufficiency of their security."

And he goes on to say that a mere speculation that in a year or two the property may increase in value is no reason for depriving a mortgagee of his right to foreclose. Those are the principles, I think, so far as the English Law goes. They may be summarized possibly very simply by saying that the Court has a wide discretion, that it must be exercised judicially, and that it will be exercised in any case in which for a proper reason foreclosure is not in the interests of the parties or in which as a matter of practical business, a sale is clearly indicated as the more desirable course. I have been a little tempted to take the view in the present case that, had I been dealing with the matter in the first instance, I should have hesitated to deprive the mortgagee of what after all is one of his prima facie rights, merely because there is a margin—and not an overwhelming margin—between what is due on the mortgage and the estimated value of the security. But there is, I think, one further consideration to be borne in mind, which is peculiar to India. That is, that it is open to a mortgagee, where a sale is ordered to bid for it and purchase it himself. That, of course, is not open to an English mortgagee. And, it appears to me to make a considerable difference. One of two things must happen on a sale; either the property will be sold for sufficient or more than sufficient to cover the principal, interest and costs due on the mortgage, or else, it will be sold for less than is sufficient to do so. In the former case, the mortgagee will have nothing to complain of, because he will get back everything that is due to him. In the latter case, it is always open to him to purchase himself, and to set off, pro tanto, the amount of the purchase money against what is due to him on the mortgage. In other words, he could, in that event, get the very thing that he is seeking by foreclosure, the only difference being that he gets it at a cheaper price.

It appears to me therefore that this is a consideration which a good deal enlarges the scope of a Judge's discretion in this country. It appears to me to deprive a mortgagee of an argument that he might otherwise have had, to the effect that he was not entirely satisfied that he would get his money back by means of a sale, and preferred not to take the risk, but to endeavour to get his money back over a longer period by taking possession of the property by foreclosure. The learned Judge appears to have exercised his discretion in this case, and to have exercised it judicially. He has based it upon the ground that there is every probability that the mortgagee will get his money back by means of the sale. It is true that there is no actual professional evidence as to what the value of the property is, and that it is merely estimated upon a conservative basis. It would have been better, perhaps, if there had been actual evidence of the market value of the property. But the estimate that the learned Judge has made has not been challenged in this Court. For all these reasons, I do not think it right to interfere with the exercise by the learned Judge of his discretion, and I shall, accordingly, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Mortgage-deed providing that mortgagee could secure payment of principal and interest by bringing mortgaged property to sale or he could secure payment of interest and compound interest by bringing separate suit thereafter—Suit by mortgagee for interest and decree obtained—His second suit for principal and interest, if barred.

A mortgage-deed provided as under—".....It would be open to the mortgagee at his will to secure payment of the principal together with the balance of interest by bringing the mortgaged property to sale at any time. It would be open to the mortgagee to let the interest accumulate till the time provided by law for payment, or to obtain the payment of interest and compound interest by bringing a separate suit. In this contingency the principal mortgage amount shall remain secured on the mortgaged property." So far as the payment of interest and compound interest was concerned, no reference was made to the mortgaged property in this clause. The mortgagee instituted a suit for interest only and got a decree. Subsequently he brought another suit for principal and interest :

Held, that the subsequent suit was not barred under O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C., since the first suit was based on a cause of action distinct from the second. 65 Ind. Cas. 79 (1), distinguished. 72 Ind. Cas. 187 (2), Yashwant v. Vithal (3) and 91 Ind. Cas. 403 (4), relied on.

Held, also as the mortgage-deed contained a separate personal covenant for the payment of interest and compound interest, such a covenant could not be ignored simply because in the previous suit this stipulation in the mortgage deed was not made the basis of the claim.

Mr. Mela Ram, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The suit, which has given rise to the present appeal, was instituted on August 31, 1933, for recovery of Rs. 630 on the basis of a mortgage deed. On November 8, 1932, the defendants, Nidhan Singh and Hardit Singh, had executed a registered mortgage deed (Ex. P-2) in favour of Prem Singh, plaintiff, for a sum of Rs. 510, in respect of a house. The following passage from the mortgage deed may be reproduced in extenso :

"The conditions are that the mortgaged house shall remain in possession of the mortgagors. The mortgage debt shall bear interest at Re. 1-9-0 per cent. per mensem. If we, the mortgagors, do not pay interest every year, we will be liable for compound interest..... It would be open to the mortgagee at his will to secure payment of the principal together with the balance of interest by bringing the mortgaged property to sale at any time. It would be open to the mortgagee to let the interest accumulate till the time provided by law for payment, or to obtain the payment of interest and compound interest by bringing a separate suit. In this contingency the principal mortgage amount shall remain secured on the mortgaged property. If any amount on account of principal or interest is still due after the sale of the mortgaged property, the other property and the person of the mortgagors shall be liable for this amount."

On August 28, 1936, the mortgagee sued the mortgagors for Rs. 236, consisting of interest and compound interest due from November 8, 1932, till August 25, 1936. It was prayed in this suit that a decree for Rs. 236 may be awarded to the plaintiff on the security of the mortgaged house. This suit was decreed, and it was provided in the decree that the mortgaged house shall be brought to sale in execution of the decree. The mortgagors, however, deposited the amount in Court soon after the final decree, and the mortgaged property was not brought to sale. The present suit was resisted by the defendants on the ground that it was barred under the provisions of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C. This contention was accepted by the trial Court and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. On appeal the plaintiff was granted a decree for Rs. 510 by the learned Additional District Judge on the basis of the mortgage dated November 8, 1932. Against this decision the defendants have preferred a second appeal to this Court, while cross-objections in the sum of Rs. 120 have been preferred on behalf of the plaintiff.

It was contended by Mr. D. N. Aggarwal, for the appellants, that on August 28, 1936, when the plaintiff filed the previous suit for a sum of Rs. 236, he was entitled to claim the entire principal amount as well as interest. As he sued for the interest only, he cannot now be allowed to bring a separate suit for the principal amount. It was urged by the learned Counsel that under O. II, r. 2, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action in a single suit; and that he cannot split the relief due to him on one cause of action into two suits. If he chooses to include only a part of the cause of action in the first suit, he is not entitled to bring another suit for any relief that may be due to him in respect of the cause of action on which the first suit was based. The learned Counsel contended that it was clearly stated in the Explanation to r. 2 O. II, Civil P. C., that an obligation and a collateral security for its performance and successive claims arising under the same obligation shall be deemed respectively to constitute but one cause of action. According to the learned Counsel, the claim for Rs. 236 on account of interest and the present claim for Rs. 630 were successive claims in respect of one and the same cause of action, and as both of these claims were not included in the first suit, no second suit is competent with respect to the second claim, that is the sum of Rs. 630, consisting of Rs. 510 as the principal mortgage debt and Rs. 120 as interest thereon.

Reliance was placed in this connection on a ruling of their Lordship of the Privy Council reported in Muhammad Hafiz v. Mirza Muhammad Zakariya (1). In that case a simple mortgage executed in 1910 provided by cl. 2 that the interest should be paid monthly; and that if it was not paid for six months the mortgagee could realize either the unpaid interest only, or both the principal and interest, by bringing a suit, without waiting for the expiration of the time provided for repayment of the principal; by cl. 7 it was provided that if the principal and interest were not paid within three years, the mortgagee could sue for principal and interest, together with incidental expenses. In 1914 the mortgagee sued in respect of the interest due and obtained a decree. In 1915 he brought a second suit in respect of the principal and the interest then due. In these circumstances, it was held that the second suit could not be maintained, having regard to the provisions of O. II, r. 2, Civil P.C. In this case it was observed by their Lordships that when the first suit was instituted the cause of action was the default in the payment of interest. The same cause of action entitled the plaintiff to claim as the principal also. At the date of the institution of the first suit it was open to the plaintiff to claim principal and interest and as he failed to claim the principal, he was not entitled to claim it in a subsequent suit, because the cause of action was the default which formed the foundation of both the suits.

The learned Counsel for the appellants also relied on Kishan Narain v. Pala Mal (2). It was held in this case that if a mortgage deed provides for the payment of principal and interest as independent obligations, O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C., 1908, does not preclude the mortgagee from suing to recover the principal by reason of his having previously sued for a personal decree for the interest due. But in the case of a mortgage deed which upon a default in the payment of interest gives the mortgagee the right to realize both the principal and interest, if, upon such a default occurring, the mortgagee sues to realize the interest from the property, the rule above referred to precludes him from afterwards suing to realize the principal due, even if by his plaint in the first suit he has purported to reserve the right to do so. In my opinion, on a proper construction of the mortgage deed in the present suit, both the Privy Council rulings alluded to above are clearly distinguishable. In the first instance, the mortgage deed provides that the mortgagee can at any time secure payment of principal and interest by bringing the mortgaged property to sale. In the second place, it provides that if interest is not paid then the mortgagee can either allow the interest to accumulate for a period of 12 years, or he can secure payment of the interest and compound interest by bringing a separate suit therefor. So far as the payment of interest and compound interest is concerned, no reference is made to the mortgaged property in this clause of the deed. It appears to me, therefore, that the parties intended that the mortgagee would have the option to secure payment of the interest separately irrespective of the mortgaged property. If he chooses this alternative, only the principal amount will thereafter remain as a charge on the property mortgaged. The following observations from the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kishan Narain v. Pala Mal (2), at p. 36* are of great importance:

"It does not appear to their Lordships that if the mortgage had provided, as mortgages always do in this country, for an independent obligation to pay the principal and the interest, that in a suit brought to obtain a personal judgment in respect of the interest alone the rule (O. II, r. 2) would have prevented a subsequent claim for payment of the principal. In such a case the cause of action would have been distinct. The matter is, however, different if the non-payment of the interest causes the principal money to become due, as in that case the cause of action, the non-payment of the interest, gives rise to two forms of relief which the Code provides shall not be split."

In the present case the cause of action, so far as the first suit is concerned, was the non-payment of interest from November 8, 1932, till August 25, 1936. A separate remedy is provided for in the mortgage deed so far as this cause of action is concerned. The first suit, therefore, was based on a cause of action distinct from the one which forms the foundation of the present suit. Reference may be made in this connection to certain observations in Yashvant v. Vithal (3). In that case the mortgage deed contained a covenant to pay interest each year. It was held that this covenant was distinct from and independent of the claim of the mortgagee to recover the principal sum, and its performance was secured in a different manner. It was held that this covenant was similar to the covenant to pay interest which is inserted in well-drawn English mortgage deeds for the purpose of enabling the mortgagee to sue for overdue interest without calling in the principal after the date fixed for the payment of the latter. Similar observations were made by Krishnan, J. in Sawmy Rao

v. Official Assignee, Madras (4). A number of other rulings were quoted on behalf of the respondent by Mr. Mela Ram, such as Par-meshri Das v. Fakeria (5), U. Po Naing v. Burma Oil Co. Ltd., (6), Maung Kyin Pein v. Ma Pwa Me, 64 Ind. Cas. 953 (7), but it is unnecessary to refer to them as they are clearly distinguishable: Ganda Ram v. Shiva Nand Ganesh Das (8), was also relied upon by Mr. Mela Ram.

The learned Counsel for the appellant also contended that as the previous suit had not been based by the mortgagee on any personal covenant embodied in the mortgage deed and as he had obtained a decree on the security of the mortgaged property, he was not entitled to institute the present suit again, asking for the sale of the property mortgaged for non-payment of the principal. In my opinion this contention is without any force. If the mortgage deed contains a separate personal covenant for the payment of interest and compound interest, such a covenant cannot be ignored simply because in the previous suit this stipulation in the mortgage deed was not made the basis of the claim. For the reasons given above, I hold that the present suit is not barred under the provisions of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C. I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

There is no force in the cross-objections. It is stated in the mortgage-deed that if a separate suit is brought by the mortgagee to secure payment of interest and compound interest, the principal mortgage amount shall remain secure. Rupees 510 being the principal mortgage amount, the learned District Judge was right in passing a decree in favour of the plaintiff only in the sum of Rs. 510. I accordingly dismiss the cross-objections also with costs.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Referred Trial No. 114 and Criminal Appeals Nos. 469 and 470 of 1939

BURN AND MOCKETT, JJ.

In re KATTAMEEDI CHENNA REDDI AND ANOTHER—PRISONERS

Criminal trial—Evidence—Medical witness giving evidence relying on text-books—Value of—Identification—Value of—Murder—Sentence—Youth by itself, if reason for not passing death sentence—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 27—Duty of Police in recording statement of accused—Statement leading to discovery.

Where a medical witness gives evidence relying largely on statements in text-books as to the time of the death from the appearance of blisters on the dead body, the theoretical evidence of this description is not of value unless it is exhaustive with regard to all possible circumstances. [p. 528, col. 1.]

It is not illogical to say that the evidence of identification by itself might be unreliable, but that, when substantial evidence is added to it, the identification evidence assumes a totally different aspect. When therefore a man is identified as being one of three persons engaged in a murder and when that person states that a jewel produced by him from a hiding place came to his share, it is reasonable to hold that he was concerned in the murder in the absence of any explanation. [p. 532, col. 2.]

Youth by itself is not a reason why the Court should evade its duty of sentencing the accused to death especially in the case of a cruel murder. [p. 533, col. 1.]

The duty of the Police, if they desire to record a statement of the accused is to record it as given and to leave it to the Court to decide what evidence is admissible. 180 Ind. Cas. 590 (1), referred to. [p. 531, col. 1.]

It is the first statement of the accused to whomsoever made, that leads to the discovery of the fact, if a fact is discovered. 171 Ind. Cas. 245 (2), referred to. [p. 531, cols. 1 & 2.]

Messrs. C. Narasimhachariar and M. Ranganatha Sastri, for the Accused.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mockett, J.—Accused Nos. 1 and 2 together with one Guddi Peeran were charged before the learned Sessions Judge of Cuddappah with the murder on March 12, 1939, of a woman Golla Nagamma. Guddi Peeran who was accused No. 3 was acquitted; accused Nos. 1 and 2 were convicted and sentenced to death and they now appeal. The plan Ex. P indicates roughly the scene of Nagamma's death. She lives at Venkatapuram which is 2½ miles from Prodattur. On March 12, some time before midday, she was alive. P. W. No. 3, her husband, said that she gave him his food before he left for Prodattur, and P. W. No. 2, her sister, was with her in her house on that morning. Some time after noon she was found dead, having been throttled. There is no doubt whatever that she met her death at about midday on the 12th. No cross-examination was addressed to her sister, P. W. No. 2, or to her husband, P. W. No. 3, to suggest that the deceased had in fact met her death long before noon, on the 12th, even so early as late on the previous night. This aspect requires a passing reference because the Lady Sub-Assistant Surgeon, relying largely on statements in text-books, was inclined to say that from the appearance of blisters on the body death must have taken place from 22 to 35 hours prior to her examination which was at 7 A.M. on the 13th. Even 22 hours before 7 A.M. when blisters were seen on the body would mean, if the doctor's premises are correct, that the woman was alive in the early hours of the 12th; and 36 hours before would mean that she met her death on the 11th.

Theoretical evidence of this description is not of value unless it is exhaustive with regard to all possible circumstances. This body had been left in a March sun from about noon to sundown on the 12th, if the prosecution story is correct, and all night in the open air. The text-books do not deal with circumstances such as these, but ordinary experience shows that in those circumstances decomposition sets in with great rapidity. It is notorious that bodies are burnt or buried in this country within a few hours of death. We should require the clearest possible evidence of the time when blisters appear under circumstances such as those before us in order to prefer the deductions based on such theories to the clearest evidence of the fact that this woman was alive late in the morning of the 12th. There is no question in our minds that she met her death at about noon on that day. It is clear also from the medical evidence that she was strangled. P. W. No. 2, Sayamma, claims to have witnessed Nagamma's death. She bears out P. W. No. 3, the husband, who says that he had gone to Prodattur on the morning of the 12th for work. P. W. No. 2's story proceeds as follows: The deceased was wearing, as was her custom, on her body gold katlu, gold kantini gundulu, gold thalakulu, gold rettakadiyam, gold bendu kammalu, gold upper ear-rings and silver kala kadiyalu. P. W. No. 2 took the buffaloes out leaving her sister in the house. She grazed the buffaloes, brought them back, collected the buffalo dung and stacked it. A little before noon she returned home and told her sister that she had stacked the collected buffalo dung near the palmyrah tope. The deceased left, bidding P. W. No. 2 to follow after she had her food. When she left the deceased was wearing the jewels mentioned.

After the meal P. W. No. 2 went to the scene and states that she saw accused No. 1 "accompanied by two strangers" throttling her sister. Her conduct was then just what one would expect of a little girl, namely, she became afraid and ran home and reported the matter to her aunt and three other persons who have not been examined. There is however ample evidence on the record that this little girl at once reported to her aunt and told her what she had seen. P. W. No. 6, Chinna Bali, bears out the latter part of P. W. No. 2's statement. He says that P. W. No. 2 came crying and told P. W. No. 5 that accused No. 1 and two strangers were throttling and killing her sister. It is convenient to mention here that the examination-in-chief in this case does not appear to have been very satisfactory. The statement of P. W. No. 2 that she saw the accused accompanied by two strangers throttling her sister was obviously not an adequate recording of her evidence; but it is plain beyond doubt that she at once reported to her aunt in the hearing of others that all three were throttling her sister deceased, and no cross-examination was directed to suggest that the two strangers were not taking part.

It is obvious from the learned Judge's judgment who after all recorded the evidence that in the words of his judgment "there she (P. W. No. 2) saw the three accused in the act of throttling the deceased." P. W. No. 6 and others went to the scene and P. W. No. 6 at the request of P. W. No. 2, went to Prodattur to tell P. W. No. 3 and he found P. W. No. 3, told him and brought him back to the village. P. W. No. 2 identified two of the jewels—kantini guntulu and bendu kammalu after the accused's arrest. She says she was able to identify the bendu kammalu especially because there was a dent on one side of it due to her niece (the deceased's daughter) treading on it. There remained on the body the gold thalukulu, gold upper earrings and the silver kala kadiyalu and the other jewels were missing. It does not seem to us that any cross-examination was addressed to P. W. No. 2 to suggest that her identification of the jewels was faulty. It may be said that the cross-examination in the case of accused No. 1 was especially directed to suggest that she was swearing falsely owing to enmity against accused No. 1 and naturally her identification of accused Nos. 2 and 3 was questioned. It should be stated here that there was material on the record brought out by the defence suggesting that accused No. 1 had previously been involved in a case of theft, for it appears, according to Ex. 6, that the deceased had given information regarding this to the authorities and that as a result the village elders ordered the accused to pay Rs. 80 to Kondayya, the man from whom the jewels had been stolen.

The defence relies on this incident to suggest that it was for this reason that accused No. 1 has been implicated in this case. This was put directly to P. W. No. 3 in cross-examination. P. W. No. 3 received the news at about 4 p. m. from P. W. No. 6—it may be stated that some of the times are vague in this case—and he (P. W. No. 3) returned at once to Venkatapuram. He sent P. W. No. 11 to fetch the village Munsif who resides in Prodattur. P. W. No. 3 has been much criticised. His conduct is said to be remarkable. Why did he not when he received the news at Prodattur at once complain in Prodattur? And why did he go first to his village? The answer to all this is that it is unsafe to say what any man might or might not do on receiving the news that his wife had been strangled. It is at least safe to say that there is nothing remarkable in his at once going to where the body of his wife lay. The village Munsif states that he was informed (and it must have been at about 5 o'clock) by P. W. No. 5 whereupon he proceeded to the spot and examined P. W. No. 3 at the scene. He states that he recorded P. W. No. 3's statement but did not take his thumb impression. The reports Exs. D and D-1 were sent to the Sub-Magistrate and the Police. That by the Police was received at 10-20 p. m. and by the Sub-Magistrate at 1 a. m. P. W. No. 3 stated in his evidence that he gave a dhava—or complaint—to the village Munsif and that it was attested by five persons including P. W. No. 11, but the village Munsif states that no written complaint was given and P. W. No. 11 states he knows nothing about this dhava. On this the defence build the theory that a written dhava was given stating probably that persons other than the accused had committed the murder or that persons unknown had done it, that it has been destroyed after it was decided to foist this case on accused No. 1.

We entirely reject this theory. Exhibits D and D-1 were sent by 8 in the evening. They are consistent with the prosecution case as they name accused No. 1 and mentioned two strangers and give in detail the stolen jewels and that P. W. No. 2 saw what happened. It is extremely unlikely that the village Munsif was participating in the concoction of a false case. The evidence for the prosecution of many different people had been consistent throughout that this little girl at once identified accused No. 1 together with two strangers as the murderers. The real question in this case is whether the identification of P. W. No. 2 and that of other witnesses to whom reference will be made taken with further evidence relating to dealings with these jewels by the accused, is sufficient as a whole to bring home the guilt for this crime. We accept the position that P. W. No. 2 reported in the manner she says she reported. We think there is no ground for supporting that this is a foisted case. It is quite possible that P. W. No. 3 has confused the statement he made to the Magistrate with the dhava. It must be remembered that at the time he must have been suffering from great mental distress and his memory may not be accurate. But we think the evidence of the Munsif P. W. No. 13 entirely disposes of a wholly concocted case. There is no cross-examination addressed to him, a Munsif of 23 years standing on which it can be said that he was a party, as he must presumably have been, to such a conspiracy.

The criticism that before sending his report he preferred to go to the spot does not, in our view, affect his credibility in any manner whatever. The report of the murder was second hand hearsay and there was nothing unreasonable under the circumstances in his deciding to verify the fact. That P. W. No. 2 immediately reported that she had seen accused No. 1 and two strangers murdering the deceased is borne out by P. Ws. Nos. 4, 5 and 6. P. W. No. 2 is the only eye witness who claims to have witnessed the murder, but other witnesses say they saw accused No. 1 and two strangers near by at or about the time. Those witnesses are P. Ws. Nos. 7, 8, 9 and 10, all villagers of Venkatapuram. They all claim to have seen the accused and two strangers in the neighbourhood of the scene of the crime shortly after about midday. P. W. No. 7 was in his mango tope. Accused No. 1 and two strangers, according to him, were going towards Prodattur coming from the west. Nagamma was murdered a little away to the west of this mango tope. At 1 p. m. the witness went home and learnt from P. Ws. Nos. 4 and 6 what had happened, whereupon the witness stated that accused No. 1 and two strangers had been seen by him going towards Prodattur. P. W. No. 4 was not asked whether P. W. No. 7 spoke to him and therefore, P. W. No. 7's statement to P. W. No. 4 should not have been admitted in evidence. This witness also claims to identify the jewels of the deceased. The witness states that he identified the three accused at an identification parade. It may be mentioned that this witness together with the other Venkatapuram witnesses was examined on the morning of March 13. The identification of the accused and of the jewels by this witness was attacked by the defence.

As to the jewels, neither by the prosecution nor by the defence was the question as to how he was able to identify the jewels fully investigated. P. W. No. 8 was looking at his buffaloes in the neighbourhood and he tells the same story. Here again, the inadequacy of the examination-in-chief is apparent. This witness was allowed to give the effect of conversations between him and the villagers on his return, but the villagers were not asked about those conversations. P. W. No. 9 had gone to plough up the onions in his field. He too states that he saw the accused in Kalamalla Venka shown on the plan. He describes how they were occupied. P. W. No. 10 says he was grazing goats and actually saw accused No. 1 and two strangers. The evidence of these witnesses can be dealt with together. On the assumption that they are giving honest evidence, it is difficult to criticize the identification of accused No. 1 who belonged to the same village, but their identification of accused Nos. 2 and 3 is naturally vulnerable because they were strangers. The identification parade was held on March 17, in the morning. The conventional mahazar, Ex. Q was taken and signed by P. Ws. Nos. 21 and 22. This identification parade was attacked as identification parades invariably are. P. W. No. 21 says that the identifying witnesses had no opportunity to see accused Nos. 2 and 3 before identifying them when they were mixed up with about 40 persons. In cross-examination he said that the lock-up doors provided with iron bars had no shutters and that persons inside the lock up can be seen from the verandah. Apparently a number of persons interested in the case had come to Prodattur on the 16th and at that time accused Nos. 2 and 3 were in the lock up. The learned Judge on this says :

"It is seen from the evidence of P. W. No. 21 that persons from Venkatapuram had ample opportunities to see accused Nos. 2 and 3 in the Police lock up. No reliance can therefore be placed on the evidence of the identification."

It seems to us that that finding is not wholly justified, and does not accurately represent the evidence of P. W. No. 21. It would appear that, if his view is to be accepted, the only lock up in which persons intended for identification can be safely put is one without any bars or windows, which would hardly be possible in the climate of Madras. It does not follow that, because the witnesses might have seen the accused, they did in fact see him. However, the learned Judge took the view that the identification of accused

No. 3 was unsatisfactory in the absence of further evidence and acquitted accused No. 3. Reviewing the evidence so far as it stands, the position is that P. W. No. 2 claims to have seen the murder and she at once reported it to her aunt. P. Ws. Nos. 7 to 10 claim to have seen the accused in the neighbourhood of the scene of murder at about the time of the murder. So far as accused No. 3 was concerned, that is all the evidence, and the learned Sessions Judge thought that that evidence was insufficient to convict accused No. 3. There was however in the case of accused Nos. 1 and 2 further evidence. It is obvious that, if that evidence was accepted, the evidence of P. W. No. 2 must obviously be true and it is probable that the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 7 to 10 was also true although, if they were untruthfully reinforcing the case, it does not follow that the evidence of P. W. No. 2 is untrue.

It will be remembered that two of the jewels missing from the body of the deceased woman were katta kadiyam and bendu kammadu, both of gold. P. W. No. 18, a shroff in Prodattur town, says that accused No. 1 came to his shop at about 3 o'clock on March 12, giving the name of Ganga Reddi and sold the above jewels for which he was paid Rs. 59-1-0 and his thumb impression taken in the account book. Exhibit F is the entry in the book and Ex. F-1 is the thumb impression. It is not denied that this thumb impression is that of accused No. 1. P. W. No. 18 says he melted the katlu and kadayam but retained the kammalu and that he sold the gold of the katlu and kadayam to one Venkatasami who was not examined. The Police four days later came with panchayatdars. Accused No. 1 pointed out P. W. No. 18 to the Police and at the request of the Police P. W. No. 18 produced the kammalu, M. O. No. 2. The date of Ex. F appears at the top of the page above another entry. It is mistakenly written as Sunday, Bahula 6, when it should be Sunday, Bahula 7. The correct date is the 6th, being March 11, but an examination of the account book shows that this mistake is a continuation of the same mistake which has been made earlier in the book and no significance can be attached to it.

This witness was vehemently attacked by the defence and the reasons for the attack may best be stated by the accused's answer to his evidence. It is a complete denial that he ever went to the shop. He states that the thumb impression was obtained from him under pressure at the Police Station by the Police who had taken the book of P. W. No.

18 for the purpose. The kammalu M. O. No. 2, is stated not to be that of the deceased at all but one bought from D. W. No. 1, a Prodattur shroff, who said that he himself sold this jewel to P. W. No. 18, on the 15th. It is a fact that Ex. 23, P. W. No. 1's book, shows a sale of bendu kammalu, corresponding precisely in weight to M. O. No. 2. It must be remembered that M. O. No. 2 was identified by P. W. No. 2, because it had a dent caused by a child treading on it. P. W. No. 3, also identified it. It has in fact got such a dent. It appears, and it is obviously a fact, that the accused made a statement to the Police which might well be admissible under s. 27, Evi. Act, and the statement was admitted by the Magistrate. The statement was made in the presence of panchayatdars, but it is obvious that this was not the first statement that had been made. A statement had been made to the Police which P. W. No. 20, had thought it wise to get repeated in the presence of panchayatdars.

It is obvious that the statement cannot be complete. It is remotely improbable that the accused said simply, "I and accused Nos. 2 and 3 removed the jewels from the person of the deceased" without any sort of initial narrative as to how he came to be where the deceased was, or whether the woman was alive or dead at the time. This is an example of the mutilation of a statement made by the accused person, due apparently to the Circle Inspector supposing that it was his duty to decide what evidence was admissible and what was not. The duty of the Police, if they desire to record a statement, is to record it as given and to leave it to the Court to decide what evidence is admissible. In Public Prosecutor v. Subba Reddi (1), this Court had condemned the practice of Police Officers giving not statements made to them in the first instance in evidence but statements made obviously for the second time before panchayatdars. Such statements have been held to be inadmissible. The result of the handling of this statement by the Police is that what probably was a simple and admissible statement under s. 27 must, in our opinion, be ruled out entirely for reasons which may be re-stated as follows: (1) that the statement is obviously incomplete and (2) that obviously what was stated by the accused was a repetition of something that he had previously said to a Police Officer. It is the first statement of the accused to whomsoever made, that leads to the discovery of the fact if a fact is discovered.

The attention of the trial Judge may usefully be directed to the Full Bench decision of this High Court in Athappa Goundan v. Emperor (2). Excluding any statement by the first accused, there remains the fact, if true, that he pointed out P. W. No. 18 to the Police and that P. W. No. 18, stated that on the afternoon of the murder the accused sold to him M. O. No. 2, said to be the property of the deceased. It is most important to remember, when considering whether this story can be accepted, that on March 15, the date of Ex. 23, the Police had no idea that the first accused was supposed to have sold the kammalu to P. W. No. 18, because it was not until the next day, the 16th that he was brought to Prodattur having been arrested at Thumulur and on that day took the Police to P. W. No. 18. It is therefore incredible that the Police should be attempting to identify the accused with a jewel procured from D. W. No. 1, on March 15, when they did not know until the 16th of any connection between P. W. No. 18, and the accused. Evidence of this is based largely on the book of D. W. No. 1, and it is unquestionably remarkable that kammalu of precisely the same weight as that said to have been taken from the deceased's body is shown to have been sold on the 15th. But it is curious that D. W. No. 1, was never asked in chief to identify the kammalu at all; he was only asked by the Court. The book of D. W. No. 1, is not above suspicion. The explanation about the sheet corresponding to Ex. 23 being blank that it was the last day of the financial year is not very convincing. So far as the time of these events is concerned Ex. 23 is the first entry of the day on the 15th and the accused was arrested at 4-30 on that day at Tumulur. The theory of this jewel being foisted must in our opinion be rejected. The question arises, was M. O. No. 2 the property of the deceased? Its identification by those who are familiar with it, especially of the description of the dent on the side by P. W. No. 2, seems to us entirely satisfactory. P. W. No. 3's identification of both M. O. No. 1 and M. O. No. 2 was attacked.

The defence were driven to such criticisms as that P. W. No. 3 hesitated in his identification of M. O. No. 1 in the Magistrate's Court, a circumstance satisfactorily explained by him by the statement that he was much overcome with being confronted by his murdered wife's jewels, because that this woman was murdered there is no doubt. Another criticism was that P. W. No. 3 said that he did not know where his wife got the kammalu from and that she had told him that she bought it. But these criticisms entirely disappear in the face of the fact that the accused took the Police to P. W. No. 18, that there was a kammalu and that in P. W. No. 18's books was the thumb impression of the accused and that, as will later be shown, accused No. 2 revealed where M. O. No. 1 was hidden. The alternative, accepting those facts, is to suppose that the Police by some mysterious manner, having heard that a kammalu was in the possession of P. W. No. 18, thought fit to invent the story that the accused had taken it there, and having invented it obtained by force a thumb impression of the accused in the book of P. W. No. 18. If the Police had descended to this method surely it may be supposed that they would have ascertained the source of the foisted jewel and arranged that that source should be amenable to their wishes as well.

It is impossible for the defence in this case to avoid the argument that, beginning with the villagers and ending with the Police, there has been a conspiracy to convict accused No. 1 of a crime of which at least there is no evidence. The villagers are supposed to have selected him because he had been concerned in a robbery before and therefore he was the likely person to have committed the murder. This is a theory which at least requires consideration, but the learned Counsel for defence has been quite unable to suggest any explanation as to why, having selected accused No. 1 as the victim, the villagers have elected to complicate what would have been a relatively simple case by attaching to him two unidentified strangers. The only explanation suggested was that, as accused No. 1 was no more than seventeen, it was safer to associate others with him lest it be said that he was physically incapable alone of murdering the deceased. But why two other men should be introduced has never been explained especially as accused No. 3 was a Muhammadan. The defence have argued, and rightly argued, that the combination of accused No. 1, a Reddi, with accused No. 2 a Hindu of totally different caste and accused No. 3, a Muhammadan, is remarkable and improbable. It is certainly remarkable; but when considering the hypothesis of a carefully thought out false case the introduction of three such different persons as acting together is equally unlikely. Then, so far as the foisting of the jewels is concerned, why should the Police, who could quite easily have 'planted' these jewels on the accused in a simple manner, involve themselves in a much more complicated transaction involving the assistance of a bazar shroff?

The evidence against accused No. 2 consists very largely of his conduct after arrest in relation to a jewel (M. O. No. 1) identified as the property of the deceased. It is not illogical to say that the evidence of identification by itself might be unreliable, but that when substantial evidence is added to it, the identification evidence assumes a totally different aspect. When P. Ws. Nos. 7 to 10 identified two unknown persons whom they had no particular reason to notice, it is permissible to doubt whether that identification can be trusted, but when those very people are found dealing with the jewels of the murdered person, it is reasonable to hold that they were making no mistake when they picked out the accused as the culprits. Accused No. 3 has of course been acquitted, but in the case of accused No. 2 there is evidence of the precise nature which we have indicated. After his arrest accused No. 2 told P. W. No. 23, the Sub-Inspector, that the kantini gundulu which came to the shares of accused Nos. 2 and 3 was concealed by him in the cattle shed of his uncle and that he would show it. Here again his statement is obviously shorn of much of its context, but there is no reason to suppose that any part of a statement made by accused No. 2 would have assisted the accused's case nor is it suggested that this was the case. Accused No. 2 thereupon took the Police Officer and the panchayatdars to his uncle and removed M. O. No. 1 from under a slab in the cattle shed.

We have been asked to say that what might have happened was that, after the murder, accused No. 2 in some way became possessed of this jewel and no hostile conclusion can be drawn from the statement. But when a man is identified as being one of three persons engaged in a murder and when that person states that a jewel produced by him from a hiding place came to his share, it is to put it no higher, reasonable to hold that he was concerned in the murder in the absence of any explanation. What explanation has been given by the accused? Accused No. 1, completely denied the offence and said that he was at a jathra in Kothapallee, Cuddappa taluk, where he had gone to stay in his maternal uncle's house three days prior to the occurrence, that after the jathra he went to Tummalur to his relation's house where he was arrested, and that his revelation of P. W. No. 18, and his thumb impression in the witness's book, were induced by Police coercion. If that is so, he could have called witnesses to establish an impregnable alibi, but no witnesses were called from his maternal uncle's house to say that he was at Kothapallee three days before the murder or from the other relation's house in Tummalur to say that he was there on the day of the murder itself. As to accused No. 2, he denies entirely that he ever produced the jewel at all or that he even knows (Muganna) Muga-vadu at whose house the kantini gundulu was alleged to have been recovered. Here again we see, according to accused No. 2, that the Police chose for the scene of foisting this jewel on accused No. 2, the house of a stranger. With regard to this jewel it is true that it is of a sort commonly worn by women, but there is nothing in the evidence of identification to suppose that it was not the property of the deceased. In the case of accused No. 2 we are invited to say that the whole of the evidence against him is false.

This is a remarkable case because of the difference in caste and creed of the three accused and we have already noticed the curious fact that the book entry of D. W. No. 1, purports to deal with a jewel identical with M. O. No. 2. But in spite of these matters we are satisfied that the inferences of guilt to be drawn from the evidence are overwhelming and we reject entirely the theory that the charge arising from this combination of facts owes its inception to the hasty—for it must have been hasty—agreement among the villagers of Venkatapuram and that the Police gladly and enthusiastically co-operated from the moment the matter came into their hands. The learned Sessions Judge was satisfied and we are satisfied that the evidence brought home beyond all reasonable doubt the guilt of this murder to accused Nos. 1 and 2. We therefore confirm the convictions. With regard to the sentence, accused No. 2, is 25 years old and accused No. 1, is stated to be 17, although before the Court of Session his age was given as 19. In the case of accused No. 1, as we have frequently had occasion to remark before, youth by itself is not a reason why the Court should evade its duty of sentencing the accused to death especially in the case of a cruel murder, such as this. We think that the sentences of death were rightly passed and we confirm them. The appeals of the accused are dismissed.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 22, 22 (II)—Specific performance—Suit for, dismissed by trial Court—Findings leading to such decision set aside by Appellate Court—Appellate Court can decree suit in its own discretion—Contract of sale deliberately and solemnly entered into by vendor—Court cannot interpose its aid on ground of inadequacy of price.

Where the basic findings, which ultimately led the trial Court to dismiss the suit for specific performance, are set aside on appeal by the Appellate Court, no question of interference by the Appellate Court with the exercise of discretion by the trial Court arises, and the Appellate Court is competent in the exercise of its own discretion to decree the specific performance. 17 Ind. When a contract of sale has been entered into deliberately and solemnly by the vendor with open eyes in the presence of the Court and with the advice of Counsel without the slightest suggestion of the vendor having been imposed upon, a Court of Equity will not be entitled to interpose its aid on the ground of inadequacy of price. *Administrator-General of Bengal v. Messrs. Haider Husain and Ramapat Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. S. Misra, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale which was dismissed by the trial Court whose decision on appeal has been reversed by the lower Appellate Court which has decreed the suit against the defendant-appellant.

It is no longer disputed that the defendant Beni Madho contracted to sell his house situate in Yahীগanj, Lucknow, to one Hakim Shiam Lal on April 27, 1935. Beni Madho had filed a suit for possession of certain property against Hakim Shiam Lal in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Budaon. He had also filed an application in forma pauperis along with the plaint which was opposed by Hakim Shiam Lal, who contested the same on the ground that the defendant was possessed of a house in Yahীগanj in Lucknow, which he had not included in the schedule of property, and that the defendant was possessed of sufficient means to pay the court-fees. Hakim Shiam Lal offered to purchase the said house himself for Rs. 500. Beni Madho agreed to sell the house and further agreed that he would deliver possession of the house if the plaintiff deposited the money in Court. He also promised to execute the sale deed within a fortnight provided the money was deposited in Court by Shiam Lal within that time. On September 28, 1935 Shiam Lal put forward Ram Nath, the present plaintiff, as the purchaser for the same house on the same terms on which Beni Madho had agreed to sell it to him (Shiam Lal). Ram Nath, who was present in Court, supported this statement of Shiam Lal and offered to deposit the sum of Rs. 500 that very day subject to the condition that the amount was not to be withdrawn by Beni Madho till possession was delivered to Ram Nath. Beni Madho accepted this condition. It was also agreed between Beni Madho and Ram Nath that the costs of the execution of the sale deed would be borne in equal shares by them but the entire costs of the registration of the sale deed would in the first instance be paid by Ram Nath and the sum of Rs. 500 in deposit would be paid to Beni Madho after deducting the costs of registration. The Subordinate Judge of Budaon before whom these proceedings took place ordered that the sale deed as agreed between Ram Nath and Beni Madho should be completed on October 12, 1935. On October 12, 1935 Beni Madho did not appear with the result that his application to sue in forma pauperis was dismissed for default. No sale deed having been executed by Beni Madho in favour of Ram Nath in pursuance of the contract of sale, Ram Nath filed the present suit against Beni Madho to enforce specific performance of the contract of sale. The contract of sale was alleged to have been embodied in Exs. 1, 2 and 3, which contained the original offer of Hakim Shiam Lal, the subsequent substitution of Ram Nath as a purchaser in place of Hakim Shiam Lal and the acceptance by Beni Madho of the terms of the sale referred to above.

Beni Madho contested the suit on the ground that the house in suit belonged to his mother who had constructed it and that he was therefore not in a position to deliver the possession of the house. It was also alleged that the plaintiff did not pay in advance the expenses of registration with the result that he was unable to execute the sale deed on October 12, 1935, the date fixed for the disposal of the application for permission to sue in forma pauperis. Beni Madho also asserted that the sale consideration agreed upon between the parties was Rs. 520 and not Rs. 500. The value of the house was alleged in the written statement as being over Rs. 2,000. It was also alleged that there were certain family idols placed in a portion of the house to which the public had access. In regard to these family idols the plaintiff had asserted in the plaint that the defendant had agreed to put the plaintiff in possession of the same.

The trial Court held that the plaintiff duly deposited the sum of Rs. 500 by tender in Court and also held that the sale consideration agreed upon between the parties was Rs. 500 and not Rs. 520 as alleged by the defendant. The trial Court, however, held that the plaintiff did not tender to the defendant the costs of the execution and registration of the deed within the time fixed and having failed to comply with the terms of the contract he was not entitled to a decree for specific performance. As regards the defendant's plea that he was unable to deliver possession of the house because it belonged to his mother, the trial Court held that this fact was no bar to the maintainability of the suit. According to the trial Court, the defendant had contracted to sell and at the time of the contract he was fully aware of the rights of his mother and if he chose to enter into it with his eyes open he could not be permitted to resile from the contract on that ground. The trial Court finally held that the term relating to the delivery of possession over the house by the defendant as a condition precedent to his obtaining the sale consideration was one which could not be performed by the defendant.

In this connection it was observed by the trial Court that the house was the ancestral property of the defendant and the mother had obviously a right of residence and therefore the defendant could not be expected to deliver possession. Reading the terms of the contract in the light of the provisions of ss. 15 and 22 of the Specific Relief Act, the trial Court was of opinion that the contract was of such a nature that specific performance could not be granted. The suit was, therefore, dismissed.

In appeal the lower Appellate Court has confirmed the finding of the trial Court as regards the amount of the sale consideration but it has disagreed with the finding that the plaintiff did not pay the costs of registration of the deed in time to the defendant. After considering the evidence on the record the lower Appellate Court came to the definite conclusion that the plaintiff had offered Rs. 20 to defendant to meet the initial expenses of registration but the defendant refused to take it without any reason. The lower Appellate Court has also found that the defendant was the owner of the house and the evidence regarding the construction of the house by his mother was neither reliable nor satisfactory. A further contention was raised on behalf of the defendant before the lower Appellate Court that the term that the defendant was not entitled to withdraw the sum of Rs. 500 till he delivered possession of the house to the plaintiff was a condition precedent to the execution of the sale deed, and since that condition was not and could not be complied with no sale deed could be executed. The lower Appellate Court however, held that the condition for the withdrawal of the price from the Court before the delivery of possession to the plaintiff was not a condition precedent and did not and could not affect the transaction of sale. It also found that the defendant was in a position to deliver the possession of the house. Having regard to the findings at which the lower Appellate Court arrived, it held that ss. 15 and 22 of the Specific Relief Act did not help the defendant's case. As regards the price of the house, the lower Appellate Court remarked that the transaction was entered into between the parties before the Subordinate Judge of Budaun and there could be no question of the plaintiff or Hakim Shiam Lal over-reaching the defendant. The parties entered into the transaction with the advice of their Counsel who were present in Court at the time. The appeal was, therefore, allowed and the suit decreed with costs.

In this second appeal preferred by the defendant to this Court two points have been urged on his behalf. The first point is that the trial Court had perfect discretion under s. 22 of the Specific Relief Act to refuse a decree for specific performance of the contract and that the lower Appellate Court should not on appeal have interfered with the exercise of discretion by trial Court. Reference has been made in support of this contention to Balla Mal v. Chunni Lal (10 All. L. J. 498) (1), Dayal Singh v. Mahabir Singh (A. I. R., 1930 All., 166) (2) and Bishun Narain v. Mazharul Haq (5 O. W. N. 35) (3). Section 22 of the Specific Relief Act lays down that the jurisdiction to decree specific performance is discretionary, and the Court is not bound to grant such relief, merely because it is lawful to do so; but the discretion of the Court is not arbitrary, but sound and reasonable, guided by judicial principles, and capable of correction by a Court of Appeal. The section itself stresses the necessity on the part of the Court to exercise its discretion in a sound and reasonable manner and not in an arbitrary fashion. That a Court of Appeal is competent to intervene and correct the wrong done to a party if the exercise of the discretion has been arbitrary, is clearly recognised by the latter portion of the section itself. Even in the case cited by the learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant, namely Dayal Singh v. Mahabir Singh, (A. I. R. 1930 All., 166) (2) it was held following a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Habibur Rahman v. Ali Azhar, (A. I. R. 1926 Cal., 1237) (4) that the discretion to grant or refuse specific performance can be exercised in second appeal. The trial Court in refusing to decree the suit for specific performance was influenced by the fact that the plaintiff had not paid the registration expenses before the date fixed for the execution of the sale deed and the further fact that the condition for the withdrawal of the price from the Court before the delivery of possession was a condition precedent to the execution of the sale deed. Its decision did not rest upon any express finding of hardship upon an examination of the various circumstances of the case. The basic findings referred to above, which ultimately led the trial Court to dismiss the suit for specific performance, were set aside on appeal by the lower Appellate Court. Consequently no question of interference by the lower Appellate Court with the exercise of discretion by the trial Court arose. In the case of Balla Mal v. Chunni Lal, (10 All. L. J., 498) (1) there was a finding of the lower Courts that the contract of sale conferred undue advantage on the plaintiff and caused hardship to the defendant which was not anticipated at the time when the contract was made. The learned Judge observed that the case was similar to those mentioned in illustrations (e), (h) and (j) of s. 22 and that he would not be justified in interfering with the discretion vested in the Courts below under s. 22 which they had exercised not arbitrarily but on reasonable grounds.

The case of Dayal Singh v. Mahabir Singh, (A. I. R., 1930 All. 166) (2) is a wholly different case and has no application to the present case. There it was held that specific performance of an agreement to sale of land against a subsequent purchaser where the latter is entitled to a right of pre-emption against the person seeking to enforce the agreement for sale, cannot be enforced.

The case of Bishun Nardin v. Mazharul Haq, (5 O. W. N. 35) (3) related to an order of the trial Court in the matter of awarding costs and has no bearing whatever upon the present case.

In the second place, it has been argued that the circumstances of the present case bring the case within cl. I read with Illustration (d) and cl. II read with Illustration (e) and of s. 22 of the Specific Relief Act, and it is argued that the specific enforcement of the contract would give the plaintiff an unfair advantage over the defendant and would also involve hardship upon him which he did not foresee. The first circumstance pointed out in this connection is that though the land upon which the house stands belonged to the defendant's father, yet it was constructed by his mother and being the streedhan property it must devolve not upon the defendant but on his sister who is alive. I have already upheld the finding of the lower Appellate Court on this point to the effect that the house belongs to the defendant and has not been proved to belong to his mother. There can, therefore, be no question of any hardship upon the defendant as it is his house which is being sold and not the house belonging to his mother.

The second circumstance pointed out is that the value of the house is much more than the sale consideration agreed upon between the parties. The lower Appellate Court has already disposed of this contention and I agree with its conclusion. The parties in this case were dealing at arms length. The contract took place in presence of the Court and both parties were represented by Counsel who gave their help and advice in the negotiation of sale and the preparation of the draft sale deed (Ex. 6). When a contract of sale has been entered into deliberately and solemnly by the vendor with open eyes in the presence of the Court and with the advice of Counsel without the slightest suggestion of the vendor having been imposed upon, a Court of Equity will not be entitled to interpose its aid on the ground of inadequacy of price. Reference may be made in this connection to a decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Administrator-General of Bengal v. Juggeswar Roy, (I. L. R. 3 Cal., 192 P. C.) (5) where it was held that a party seeking to set aside a transaction on the ground of inadequacy of consideration must show such inadequacy as will involve the conclusion that he either did not understand what he was about, or was the victim of some imposition. The following passage at p. 196* of the report may also be quoted with advantage as being fully apposite to the case :—

"The question then reduces itself to whether there was such an inadequacy of price as to be a sufficient ground of itself to set aside the deed. And upon that subject it may be as well to read a passage from the case of Tennent v. Tennent (L. R., 2 Scot. Ap. 6) (6), in which Lord Westbury very shortly and clearly stated the law upon this subject."

He says :

"The transaction having been clearly a real one, it is impugned by the appellant on the ground that he parted with valuable property for a most inadequate consideration. My Lords, it is true that there is an equity which may be founded upon gross inadequacy of consideration, but it can only be where the inadequacy is such as to involve the conclusion that the party either did not understand what he was about, or was the victim of some imposition."

It was similarly held in Pichai Moideen Rowther v. Chaturbuja Das Kushal Das & Sons (A. I. R. 1933 Mad., 736) (7), that persons who have entered into contract to carry out certain things should not be allowed lightly by Court to break their given word on the ground of mere technical pleas or imaginary hardship. In the absence of adequate grounds specific performance should not be refused. It was observed in this case that the term "hardship on the defendant" used in s. 22 (2) of the Specific Relief Act is used in the sense of some collateral hardship and not merely the diminution of the purchase money. The illustrations which are all based on English Law clearly show this and the term hardship is used in the same sense as it is used in English Law (Vide Fry on Specific Performance, Chap. VI).

From the circumstances established in the present case it is difficult to see how the plaintiff obtained any unfair advantage over the defendant or in what manner the performance of the contract would involve any hardship on the defendant which he could not have foreseen.

It has been stated on behalf of the defendant-appellant that his client was interested in undervaluing his property so as to evade the payment of the court-fees and therefore had no alternative but to accept the offer of Rs. 500 which had been made by Hakim

Shiam Lal. It is admitted that there was a prior encumbrance of Rs. 700 upon this house and the offer to purchase the house for Rs. 500 subject to the prior encumbrance was made on April 27, 1935. The defendant agreed to sell the house on the same terms to Ram Nath on September 28, 1935, nearly five months after. There was ample time and opportunity for the defendant to resile from the position taken up by the defendant and either refuse to sell the house to Ram Nath or to sell it to some other person for a higher price.

Lastly it has been contended that the house being in the possession of Mst. Bittan, the sister of the defendant, the plaintiff might have to face litigation in obtaining possession of the house. Whether this is so or not, I cannot hold that this can be any reason for refusing specific performance of the contract nor can the existence of the family idols of which the defendant had agreed to give possession to the plaintiff be an insuperable bar to a decree for specific performance being made in favour of the plaintiff.

Reference has been made in course of the arguments on behalf of the defendant-appellant to the provisions of s. 15 of the Specific Relief Act. This section deals with the specific performance of a part of the contract, where the part unperformed is large. Having regard to the findings in the present case, no question of the applicability of s. 15 of the Specific Relief Act can possibly arise.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

First Civil Appeal No. 98 of 1938

October 16, 1939

STONE, C. J. AND BOSE, J.

ATMARAMSAO AND OTHERS—

PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus:

BHUPENDRANATH AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS

Mortgage—Mortgage by undivided co-parcener of share in particular portion of family property—Rights of mortgagee and non-mortgaging co-parcener—Mortgage by undivided co-parcener of his share in particular part of family property—In subsequent partition in family, mortgaged property allotted to non-mortgaging co-parcener—Non-mortgaging co-parcener undertaking to pay-off mortgage—Mortgagee can sue non-mortgaging co-parcener on mortgage—Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 94—"Beneficial interest," scope of—Non-mortgaging co-parcener is saddled with obligation in nature of trust and must hold property to benefit of mortgagee to extent necessary to satisfy his demand.

When an undivided co-parcener purports to mortgage his share in a particular part of the family property something less than that interest which passes on a mortgage by a man severally seized of the mortgaged property is transferred. The mortgagee's main right is, after foreclosing or purchasing his mortgagor's rights, to get defined by partition what it is that is mortgaged. In a case where the subject-matter of the mortgage is the mortgaging co-parcener's share in a village the mortgagee would have the right to demand a partition and any Court entertaining such an application for partition, failing agreement, would be bound to partition the family property in accordance with justice and equity, that is to say, in the same way that a reasonable and honest co-parcener would agree to have the joint family property partitioned. The fact that there has been such a mortgage would not in the least debar a non-mortgaging co-parcener from having the family property partitioned as though there were no mortgage but it would debar the mortgaging co-parcener from assenting to any such partition as would imperil his mortgagee's rights. A Court entertaining such a suit for partition in such circumstances should, unless there are countervailing reasons due to interests other than those of the family calling for consideration, so divide the family property that the property mortgaged by the mortgaging co-parcener goes to that co-parcener and the non-mortgaging co-parcener gets other property. [p. 541, col. 2; p. 542, col. 1.]

Where an undivided co-parcener mortgages his share in a particular part of family property and on partition in the family the mortgaged property is allotted to non-mortgaging branch and the mortgage has not been taken into account (and of course where fraud or collusion does not enter into the story) the mortgagee cannot proceed against the subject-matter of his mortgage but has substituted for his security any property that has been given to his mortgagor in the partition. But if in fact the mortgaged property has been taken by a non-mortgaging branch and that branch has at the same time and as part of the partition arrangement undertaken to pay that mortgage-debt, then the true position is that the non-mortgaging co-parceners have in effect obtained the equity of redemption only and are liable in the first place to the mortgagee who may sue them on the mortgage. [p. 542, col. 1.]

The term "beneficial interest" as used in s. 94, Trusts Act should not be given any restricted or technical meaning. The sum total of the interests of a beneficial owner contains among other things freedom from encumbrances. If the property is encumbered, then there is something missing from the whole beneficial interest, namely the interest which the mortgagees have acquired. In that sense the mortgagees can be regarded as having in them a fraction of the whole beneficial interest. As against their mortgagors this makes no difference for they have there in addition the legal interest into which the lesser equitable interest merges. But if for some reason they are unable to avail themselves of the legal interest, there is no reason why they should also be cut off from the equitable beneficial interest. Consequently where an undivided co-parcener has mortgaged his share and on partition the property is allowed to non-mortgaging co-parcener who undertakes to pay off the mortgage he is saddled with an obligation in the nature of a trust and is bound to hold the property for the benefit of the mortgagees to the extent necessary to satisfy their demands. Mr. M. R. Bobde, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

Judgment—The appellants are plaintiffs in a mortgage suit. The mortgage was effected over a 8 annas' share of a village called Risda. The mortgagor was one Brijlal and the subject of mortgage is expressed as follows: "I mortgage without possession my eight anna share of Mouza Risda, Tahsil Baloda Bazar, District Raipur" and then are added the various rights and privileges mortgaged connected with that 8 annas' share. The date of the mortgage is August 15, 1922. At that date the mortgagor was a member of a joint Hindu family which was disrupted by partition in 1923. The defendants to the present suit comprise both branches of that joint family, the one branch being headed at all material times by Brijlal who since this suit was brought has died leaving behind him two major and one minor sons and the other by Sheodutt and comprising his grandson and his (Sheodutt's) sons two of whom are majors and one minor at the time of suit which was brought in 1934. Sheodutt's branch whom we shall refer to as the non-mortgaging co-parceners, are sued as the persons primarily responsible for this mortgage debt for the following reasons:—

By the partition the family properties, which were considerable consisting of $9\frac{1}{2}$ villages, and debts, which amounted to Rs. 68,000 (including the mortgage debt), were divided up as follows: Brijlal was given three villages and some houses and was made responsible for Rs. 44,000 of the Rs. 68,000 debts together with interest thereon. That left $6\frac{1}{2}$ villages and Rs. 24,000 of debts partly unsecured, and partly secured by the suit mortgage. The suit mortgage debt is taken as of the value of Rs. 12,000 though there was due at the time of the suit, according to the plaint, Rs. 25,457-12-6 a major part of that being due to interest. This property and the remaining debts were divided as follows: Brijlal was directed to pay off the Rs. 12,000 unsecured debts and obtained $3\frac{1}{4}$ villages and the other branch was directed to pay the suit mortgage and also got $3\frac{1}{4}$ villages but in their $3\frac{1}{4}$ villages was included the village half of which was the subject-matter of the suit mortgage. In other words, though Brijlal had mortgaged his half share in the village Risda the whole of the village Risda was given on partition to the other branch, the other branch undertaking with Brijlal to pay off the mortgage. It is perhaps not quite accurate to say that the above results from the partition, for the partition was brought about apparently, though this is by no means clear, as a consequence of a reference to arbitration and was preceded by an agreement which made the above allocation. The steps so far as we can see are as follows:—

By an agreement come to on August 1, 1923, the sons of Sheodutt, two of them under the guardianship of Sheodutt's widow Mst. Gondibai, came to the arrangement with regard to the Rs. 68,000 and the Rs. 44,000 with the Brijlal branch and also arranged as to the debts amounting to Rs. 24,000 which were treated as joint debts owing by the family, and the various component parts were treated in the following way; Rs. 12,000 due on the bond to Bal-kishenseth was arranged to be paid by Brijlal. The major and minor sons of Sheodutt undertook to pay the debt of Rs. 12,000 with interest due to Atmaram Sao under the suit mortgage and they state: "Besides the above as a result of partition Mouza Risda 16 annas.....have fallen to the share of we people", that is to say, the sons of Sheodutt. On August 28, 1923, nearly a month after this agreement, arbitrators were appointed to settle the details of the partition. What exactly happened thereafter is not clear but both sides agree that in the result the property was so divided that the non-mortgaging co-parceners got the whole of the village half of which had been mortgaged by Brijlal and that they agreed with Brijlal that they would be wholly responsible for the mortgage debt. At the same time Brijlal agreed to be responsible for the Rs. 12,000 above mentioned due to an unsecured creditor. It is common ground that Brijlal failed to pay that creditor; that the debt being a joint one the creditor was at liberty to proceed against Sheodutt's branch as well as against Brijlal, that he did so proceed, obtained a decree, and was paid by Sheodutt's branch, which in turn proceeded against Brijlal's branch got a decree, executed that decree in part but has not as yet been able to recover the whole of the Rs. 12,000 and costs.

The award and the agreement remained for a time, to long as we know, within the knowledge only of the family and the arbitrators. There was no recording in any public register of this arrangement but at latest by 1929 the mortgagee became aware that there had been a partition and that the half share mortgaged by Brijlal had gone, together with the rest of the village in question, to the other branch. Doubtless on learning those facts he was anxious about his security. He wrote to the non-mortgaging co-parceners asking about his debt and he received back the following reply, dated January 23, 1929:

".....It is to be written that your letter has been received. It has been read and its contents have been noted. According to the partition as stated in the ikrarnama (deed of agreement), the amount of your khata is my liability. In this respect the settlement between us has not taken place through Court. Only within three months there will be a settlement through Court. After the settlement, I will pay your amount in full in a lump. You need not be anxious at all. I am anxious to credit the amount."

The person signing that letter is the managing member of Sheodutt's branch and in it he accepts liability for the mortgage debt, but he is not sought to be made liable upon that contractual liability. The position taken up by the plaintiffs is that Sheodutt's branch, having accepted liability for this mortgage, took the village subject to the mortgage. Reliance is placed upon a passage in Ghose's Law of Mortgage (5th edition) and the case, Joy Sankari Gupta v. Bharat Chandra Bardhan (1) on which that view is based and on Bhup Singh v. Chedda Singh (2). The learned author is concerned with the well-known rule, set out with all the authorities to date in Mayne's Hindu Law p. 506, note (c), that where a member of a joint Hindu family mortgages an item of joint family property (the mortgage debt not being binding on the other co-parceners) and later on a partition that item of property is given to a co-parcener other than the mortgaging co-parcener, the mortgagee's right is to obtain a substitution of security for the security mentioned in the mortgage. The learned author (Ghose) observes:

"But if in making the allotments, the incumbrance is taken into account in valuing the share which is subject to it, the partition will not, for obvious reasons, affect the security of the mortgagee. It is hardly necessary to add that the mortgagee will not be bound by an unequal partition effected by fraud and collusion between the mortgagor and his co-sharers, whether such partition is made by private arrangement or by the Court....."

Unfortunately the learned author does not give his reasons, nor are any to be found in the two cases cited. We do not think the conclusion is obvious for the non-mortgaging co-parcener does not claim through or under the one who mortgaged; there is no assignment or transfer of title or interest at partition; consequently there is no privity of estate and it is clear that there is no privity of contract.

As to the cases cited the questions did not arise, and so naturally the learned Judges did not enter into it. They merely indicated, in each case in a single sentence, that this would probably form an exception to the general rule.

The only case we have been able to discover which at all decides the point is Sundar Lal v. Brij Lal (3) and even that is not on all fours.

There two brothers A and B owned, along with other zamindari property, a 10 biswa share in a certain village. In the year 1879 they jointly executed a mortgage of their joint undivided 10 biswa share in this village to the plaintiff's father. In the year 1881 each of the two brothers executed two separate mortgage bonds in which each separately mortgaged his undivided 5 biswa share in the village to the same mortgagee for half the amount due on the earlier bond. Thus the two mortgages together satisfied the earlier one. Each brother signed the other's bond as a witness.

After this, in the year 1888, the family property was privately partitioned and the entire 10 biswa share of the village was then allotted to be. B's mortgage was then discharged. The mortgagee's son thereupon sued transferees from B on the mortgage executed by A in 1881 and claimed the remaining 5 biswa share which had been allotted to B at the partition. It was held that he could proceed against that share and was not bound to accept as substituted security the property which had been allotted to his mortgagor A.

But here again, unfortunately, the ground on which this could be done was not disclosed. It seems to have been taken for granted that that was the only possible course. For instances, Ryves, J., said at p. 547*:

"Could Baldeo [the brother we have called B] himself after partition, have claimed the benefit of the rule in Byjnath's case? (1 I. A. 106) I think not. He knew that his brother was mortgaging his undivided 5 biswa share in Chauwar, and when, at the time of the partition, he accepted 10 biswas in Chauwar in exchange for something else, he knew perfectly well how it was incumbered."

The other Judge Piggott, J., seems to ground his decision on estoppel for he says:

"In the present case I look on the transaction of November 16, 1881, as little more than a novation of the older contract of 1879, and seeing that each of the brothers signed the other's mortgage deed as a witness, it is obvious that the mortgagee was dealing with the two of them and had the consent of both to the transaction then entered into."

With the utmost respect we do not think the matter is obvious. Mere knowledge cannot affect the non-mortgaging co-parcener's rights; otherwise it would always be possible for one co-parcener to prevent another from getting mortgaged property free of the incumbrance by telling him about it. Such a rule might work fairly to the mortgagee but on the other hand it might well prevent the possibility of a fair partition; and in any case it is not the rule indicated by their Lordships of the Privy Council and by the cases in India which have followed it.

Nor does estoppel seem possible. There was no misleading. The mortgagee knew the facts and acted with his eyes open. He chose to sever the interests of the two brothers and must therefore be taken to have known the legal consequences which that would involve.

Before us it is said that here the incumbrance was taken into account and the partition was made subject to the incumbrance and that therefore the mortgagee can proceed against that branch which has got the subject-matter of his mortgage. On the other hand it is said that that is not so, that this is not a case where one branch has been given a large property because what is really given to that branch is only the equity of redemption in that property but it is a case where each branch has been given an equally valuable immovable property and each branch has had imposed upon it equal debts and that the true way of looking at this position can be expressed as follows:

Each branch has contracted with the other to pay certain debts. That contractual obligation does not confer any right upon a stranger to the contract. The creditors are not in any way prevented by such a contract from suing their debtor and in fact the creditor to whom was owed the debt allocated to Brijlal's branch has sued Sheodutt's branch, has got a decree against Sheodutt's branch, has been paid by Sheodutt's branch and Sheodutt's branch's only remedy is to get, as they are endeavouring to get, reimbursement from Brijlal's branch that right being given them by the fact that Brijlal's branch agreed to pay those debts. In the same way Sheodutt's branch, though it has agreed to pay this debt, cannot be made to pay it by the mortgagee but if Brijlal's branch has to pay it and if, in the meantime, Sheodutt's branch has become recompensed for the amounts that they have spent in paying the debts that Brijlal's branch should have paid then doubtless Brijlal's branch having paid the mortgage debt, having reimbursed Sheodutt's branch, could sue Sheodutt's branch on the contract contained in the partition arrangement and get reimbursement. But this is a right possessed by Brijlal and springing out of contract. It is not a right possessed by Brijlal's mortgagee who is a stranger to that contract.

Further it is urged that the only remedy that a mortgagee, who has the temerity to lend money on the security of a co-parcener's share to a co-parcener, has is to obtain a substitution of security. It is said that there is ample security here. On the other hand it is suggested that in all the years that have elapsed since this partition Brijlal's branch has dissipated the property allocated to their share. This is only suggested. There is no evidence one way or another, but we must consider, in order to see the principles of equity involved, the position that arises on the assumption that in point of fact Brijlal's branch has wholly dissipated the properties allocated to that branch's share.

It will be noticed that a specific share belonging to a specific co-parcener in a specific village is mortgaged. That mortgage is registered and that register is open to all the world. Any person wishing to purchase or lend money on that village or any part of it would be warned once he looked in the register that already half of it was mortgaged. On the other hand the partition arrangement and the award given by the arbitrators, if indeed there was an award, are unregistered and so far as we know remained unknown to anybody but the family and the arbitrators until sometime in 1929 and, when testing the principle one must bear in mind that the partition might have remained unknown for an untold number of years thereafter. As a consequence of that partition this co-parcenary was broken into two parts. One part got the village half of which was mortgaged and the other part got certain other villages and became liable for certain debts. To enable Brijlal's branch to pay those debts some, and it may be, for aught we know, all, of the villages would have to be sold. Accordingly had Brijlal carried out his bargain and had he paid those debts it may well be that the property allocated to his share would have been all exhausted in paying the family's unsecured debts. Were that so then unless, as was argued on the authority of Byjnath Lall v. Ramodeen Chowdry (4) from the very moment of partition there is a substitution of one security for another the mortgagee driven to rely on a substituted security would find that there was nothing to substitute, for all the property had been sold.

It is said, however, that the substitution takes place instantaneously with the effecting of the partition even though that partition is by a private family arrangement. If this be so then the position is that according to the public registers village Risda is, as to a half, mortgaged but owing to a partition privately made unknown to the world there is instantaneously substituted for half Risda some other property because the whole of Risda has been given to a co-parcener who is not a mortgagor and the mortgagor has been given the other property. It is said that from the very moment of partition the mortgage ceases to be over half village Risda and becomes a mortgage over the other property which we will call Misda. If the co-parcener who has got Misda should sell Misda the day after the partition to a bona fide purchaser for value who knows nothing of the partition that bona fide purchaser for value will only get the equity of redemption and he will only get this equity of redemption because that is all that his vendor had; his vendor only had that because of the private and secret, though bona fide, partition made between the various co-parceners. The vendee could not in the least know that what he was buying was subject to that mortgage which the public records of his country show to have been effected over Mouza Risda. This proposition of a somewhat startling nature is founded upon their Lordships' decision in Byjnath Lal v. Ramoodeen Chowdry (4) and upon Amar Singh v. Bhagwan Das (5). The Privy Council case above mentioned is, it is true, very difficult completely to understand on the facts so far as the purchase in the auction of December 23, 1862 is concerned, but we apprehend that the decision turns on the fact that there was a revenue partition which no one could interfere with, that that revenue partition allocated the mortgaged item to the non-mortgaging branch, that as a consequence it must be deemed that as from the effecting of this partition there was substituted for the security mentioned in the mortgage that property which was allocated to the mortgaging co-parcener and that accordingly any person purchasing in Court auction from the mortgaging co-parcener with knowledge of that revenue partition must be deemed to have bought only the right, title and interest of the mortgaging co-parcener which after partition by the revenue authority was subject to the mortgages, notice or no notice. We do not understand their Lordships to have decided that where there is a private partition then from the moment of that partition purchasers buying without notice bona fide and for value from one co-parcener run the risk of finding that they have only purchased the equity of redemption. On the other hand if the mortgagee's rights over the substituted security are really those of a chargee the bona fide purchaser for value without notice would get a good title and the mortgagee would lose his security.

If the purchaser has priority in title over the mortgagee the mortgagee's title only attaches to the substituted security as and when it was substituted. If that be so it is clear, in our opinion, that in a case such as the present the mortgagee might find himself with no real remedy unless he could attack the branch that had accepted liability for the mortgage debt. Indeed although the facts are not before us—and it is not necessary to arrive at any decision on the point—the general course that all parties to this litigation have taken suggests that in the opinion of the mortgagee and in the opinion of Sheodutt's branch the assets available in the hands of Brijlal's branch are not such as to make it likely that the mortgagee will be able to recover his money were substitution his only right. We think that in principle the matter can be expressed as follows:

When an undivided co-parcener purports to mortgage his share in a particular part of the family property something less than that interest which passes on a mortgage by a man severally seized of the mortgaged property is transferred. The mortgagee's main right is, after foreclosing or purchasing his mortgagor's rights, to get defined by partition what it is that is mortgaged. In a case such as the present where the subject-matter of the mortgage is the mortgaging co-parcener's share in a village the mortgagee would have the right to demand a partition and any Court entertaining such an application for partition, failing agreement, would be bound to partition the family property in accordance with justice and equity, that is to say, in the same way that a reasonable and honest co-parcener would agree to have the joint family property partitioned.

The fact that there has been such a mortgage would not in the least debar a non-mortgaging co-parcener from having the family property partitioned as though there were no mortgage but it would debar the mortgaging co-parcener from assenting to any such partition as would imperil his mortgagee's rights. A Court entertaining such a suit for partition in such circumstances should, unless there are countervailing reasons due to interests other than those of the family calling for consideration so divide the family property that the property mortgaged by the mortgaging co-parcener goes to that co-parcener and the non-mortgaging co-parcener gets other property, of course if the mortgaging co-parcener has mortgaged more than his share different considerations arise. As that would be the duty of a Court so it would be the duty of a reasonable and honest man and accordingly the duty of the mortgagor who could not properly assent to any partition which gave this half to a non-mortgaging co-parcener.

That is the position if the mortgagee after foreclosure or purchase demanded a partition. Can that right and can that result be affected by the family privately, or through arbitrators, arranging a partition which so allocates the property as to free the subject-matter of the mortgage from the mortgage that is, which prevents the mortgagee from realising his debt out of the security which has been given to him by a co-parcener to secure the mortgage-debt? The answer is that, in the normal case, where the mortgage has not been taken into account (and of course where fraud or collusion does not enter into the story) the mortgagee cannot proceed against the subject-matter of his mortgage but has substituted for his security any property that has been given to his mortgagor in the partition.

But if one finds that in fact the mortgaged property has been taken by a non-mortgaging branch and that that branch has at the same time and as part of the partition arrangement undertaken to pay that mortgage-debt then, in our opinion, the true position is that the non-mortgaging co-parceners have in effect obtained the equity of redemption only and are liable in the first place to the mortgagee who may sue them on the mortgage according to the principle extracted from Ghose's Law of Mortgage as explained above. We consider that that is the position here.

This is not a case, in our view, where the mortgagee is driven to rely on a contract made between co-parceners. Were that so one would have to consider the line of cases which are to be found examined in two conflicting decisions of the Calcutta High Court the one reported in Khirodebehari Dutta v. Mangobinda Panda (6) the other in Adhar

(6) 61 C 841; 152 Ind. Cas. 351; A I R 1934 Cal. 682; 38 C W N 682; 7 R C 363.

Chandra Mandal v. Dole Govinda Das (7) See also the recent Privy Council decision in Rana Uma Nath v. Jang Bahadur (8). Nor do we place the obligation of the branch to pay this debt upon any contract arising out of their promise to pay contained in Ex. 3-D-7. We found it mainly on the view that Sheodutt's branch has taken the equity of redemption only in this village and are in the position of assignees of this property subject to the mortgage. This position, is, of course, marked by the fact that the transfer of interest has passed on partition which does not create a transfer there being no case of A transferring to B but a co-parcenary breaking up each taking part of what once belonged to both. We do not, of course, intend in any way to make an inroad upon the well-settled rule that, apart from any such arrangement whereby the non-mortgaging branch accepted the mortgage liability, the mortgagee cannot proceed against the mortgage security in the hands of the non-mortgaging branch but is restricted to his remedies against any security in the hands of the mortgaging branch that may be substituted for the mortgage security. On this view of the case it is not, in our opinion, necessary to amend the claim as asked by, in the alternative, claiming substitution of security. Nor is it necessary in any way for the plaintiffs to rely on the principle that where A and B contract together for the benefit of C, C may sue A or B in contract.

In our opinion another ground on which this can be placed is s. 94 of the Indian Trusts Act which is in the following terms:

"In any case not coming within the scope of any of the preceding sections, where there is no trust, but the person having possession of property has not the whole beneficial interest therein, he must hold the property for the benefit of the persons having such interest, or the residue thereof (as the case may be), to the extent necessary to satisfy their just demands."

When Sheodutt's branch obtained the property at the partition they did not take the whole beneficial interest in it. The interest of the mortgagees had already been carved out of the sum total of rights which constitute the whole beneficial interest. Of course they had the right to claim the whole beneficial interest, but in that event they would have been obliged to forego something else which, on the assumption that the partition was fair and equitable, they had obtained to compensate them for the lesser rights in the mortgaged property. Therefore, with their eyes open, and for consideration, they deliberately accepted and took possession of this property without the whole beneficial interest in it, agreeing to hold it, to the extent of that interest for the benefit of the mortgagees.

(7) 63 C 1172; 167 Ind. Cas. 604; A I R 1936 Cal. 663; 63 C L J 287; 40 C W M 1037; 9 R C 707.

That being so, they were saddled with an obligation in the nature of a trust and were bound to hold the property for the benefit of the mortgagees to the extent necessary to satisfy their demands.

We are aware that the interest of a mortgagee cannot ordinarily be regarded as a beneficial interest. As against his mortgagor it is clearly not that but a legal interest: but Sheodutt's branch were not the mortgagors and all that the mortgagees can enforce against them, if they can enforce anything at all, is on equity; and this is the only equity that we can find.

We see no reason why the term "beneficial interest" as used in s. 94 should be given any restricted or technical meaning. It is perhaps relevant to observe that in England the term "beneficial owner" is taken by s. 7 of the English Conveyancing Act of 1881 to imply the covenants for right to convey, for quiet enjoyment, freedom from encumbrances and for further assurance. The comment of the learned authors of Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edition, Vol. 10, p. 313, on this is that these four covenants "are not four separate and distinct covenants, but parts of one entire covenant."

It would seem, therefore, that the sum total of the interests of a beneficial owner contains among other things freedom from encumbrances. It must follow that if the property is encumbered, then there is something missing from the whole beneficial interest, namely the interest which the mortgagees have acquired. In that sense the mortgagees can be regarded as having in them a fraction of the whole beneficial interest. As against their mortgagors this makes no difference for they have there in addition the legal interest into which the lesser equitable interest merges but if for some reason they are unable to avail themselves of the legal interest, we can see no reason why they should also be cut off from the equitable beneficial interest.

However, unusual it may be to look at the matter in this way we can find nothing either in practice or in principle against it. Indeed that seems to have been the ground on which their Lordships of the Privy Council acted in Muhammad Khan v. Husaini Begum (9).

If we are right in this, then under s. 95 of the Trusts Act Sheodutt's branch would be obliged to perform the same duties and be subject, so far as may be, to the same liabilities and disabilities as if they were trustees for the persons for whose benefit they are holding the property, namely the mortgagees, to the extent of their interest in it.

Now a person who takes property in trust for a mortgagee on condition that he will either pay off the mortgage or suffer the property to be foreclosed or sold would be compelled to fulfil that trust, and s. 95 places him, in cases to which s. 94 applies, in the same position as if there had been a trust. Therefore, as we see it, the plaintiffs' rights in this suit are not grounded on the mortgage but on the obligation in the nature of a trust which Sheodutt's branch took upon themselves at the partition. The results, so far as this suit is concerned, are the same as if the suit was grounded on the mortgage qua mortgage, but it is conceivable that in other circumstances, especially if the rights of strangers intervene, the effect might be different.

Accordingly, in our opinion, there can be and should be a mortgage decree for foreclosure in favour of the plaintiffs as prayed. No further interest. The appeal is allowed with costs in both Courts. There will be one year allowed in which the defendants may redeem.

Order.—This is an application in revision under s. 115, Civil P. C. against an order dated March 16, 1940, passed by an Assistant Collector, first class.

The suit was brought by the opposite parties under s. 108, cl. (15) of the Oudh Rent Act against the present applicants. The Assistant Collector passed the following order on March 5, 1940.

"The plaintiff has failed to summon the relevant records to enable the pattuari to prepare profit statement although it was definitely ordered that all evidence should be summoned to to-day and no further adjournment would be allowed. I therefore, dismiss the plaintiff's suit for default."

This order as already stated on March 5, 1940, and the order sheet of that date shows that the Court had taken action under O. XVII, r. 1, Civil P. C. On March 16, 1940, the Assistant Collector made the following order—

"The ex parte order dated March 5, 1940, is set aside and the suit is restored to the file".

This order was passed without any notice to the defendants who are the present applicants and they have come up to this Court in revision against this order.

A preliminary objection has been taken that no revision lies. The suit was instituted on September 18, 1939, when the Oudh Rent Act was in force, but the U. P. Ten. Act was in force on March 5, 1940 and March 16, 1940. I think this application should be governed by the U. P. Ten. Act. The suit was no doubt instituted before the Ten. Act came into force but the revisional remedy is not the right of any party and so it cannot be said that the U. P. Ten. Act could not affect the rights acquired by a party before it came into force. I think we have to see whether the revision is maintainable under the provisions of the U. P. Ten. Act. It is clearly provided in s. 243 and List I of the Second Schedule of the U. P. Ten. Act that s. 115 of the Civil P. C. is not applicable to suits or other proceedings under the Act, Section 115 under which the application has come to this Court is therefore not applicable. The applicants were expressly asked by the office whether they would like to have the application treated as one under s. 115 or one under s. 276 of the Ten. Act and they stated that they would like to have it treated as an application under s. 115. Section 276 of the Ten. Act is applicable only when an appeal from an order complained of lies to the District Judge. The order complained of in this case is dated March 16, 1940 and was not appealable to the District Judge. A revision is therefore not maintainable. This view was taken in Panna Lal v. Basdeo (A. I. R. 1933 All., 118) (1) on an interpretation of s. 253 of the Agra Ten. Act which corresponded to s. 276 of the U. P. Ten. Act. The learned Counsel for the applicant has relied on Gobardhan Das v. Dau Dayal (Revenue Decisions 1932 p. 293) (2). In that case it was held that a revision lies from an order of an Assistant Collector whether an appeal has been filed before the District Judge or not but it nowhere lays down that a revision would lie even if the order complained of is not appealable to the District Judge.

I think this revision is not maintainable under s. 276 of the U. P. Ten. Act and s. 115 does not apply.

The application is therefore dismissed with costs.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 4—Railway Company in accordance with contract paying into Bank of England certain amount as its share capital and

Secretary of State undertaking to pay in London out of revenue of India interest on this amount—Guaranteed interest received by Company in London held liable to assessment.

In accordance with a contract entered into with the Secretary of State for India in 1882, the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Co., paid into Bank of England certain amount as its share of capital and the Secretary of State had undertaken to pay in London out of the revenues of India a guaranteed interest on this amount:

Held, that all the profits of the Company accrued or arose in British India and the guaranteed interest, therefore, received by the Company was liable to assessment. M. & Sm. Ry. Co. v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue (2), approved. 70 Ind. Cas. 46 (1), not approved.

O. P. Reference by Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Ayyangar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Nugent Grant and C. Krishna-swami Iyer, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—The assessee in this case is the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Co., Ltd., which was incorporated in England in 1882. The main object of the incorporation of the company was the fulfilment of a contract with the Secretary of State for India in Council for the construction and carrying on of a railway in India. After the incorporation, the contract was duly entered into and in accordance therewith the company constructed, equipped and maintained the railway to which the contract related and supplied the necessary staff for its working. The Secretary of State provided the land required for the railway and also the moneys necessary for its construction and working. All the assets of the undertaking including the rails, plant, machinery and rolling stock were to be and are his property. The company manages the railway under the supervision and control of the Secretary of State, who is empowered to appoint one member of the Board of Directors. The Court has been informed that the director appointed by the Secretary of State possesses a power of veto. By virtue of the contract of 1882 the company undertook to pay into the Bank of England to the credit of the Secretary of State a sum £30,00,000, and the Secretary of State undertook during the continuance of the contract to pay half yearly to the company out of the revenues of India interest at the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum on the amount. The £30,00,000 was duly paid by the company into the Bank of England to the credit of the Secretary of State, who has paid to the company in London half yearly the amount required to meet the interest due, but the Secretary of State has reimbursed himself at the end of the year out of the profits of the undertaking. The £30,00,000, represented the company's capital and the Secretary of State guaranteed interest on it at the rate mentioned. The contract also provided for division of the surplus profits between the Secretary of State and the company according to their respective shares in the capital of the undertaking.

The contract of 1882 continued to govern the relations between the company and the Secretary of State until June 26, 1908 when a further contract, expressed to be supplemental to the contract of 1882, was entered into. The contract of 1908 provided for the continuance of the original contract subject to certain variations and modifications. It was agreed that the capital of the undertaking should be taken to be the sum of £1,62,50,000 of which £1,27,50,000 was to be the capital of the Secretary of State, and £35,00,000 to be the capital of the company. The Secretary of State was given the right to require the company to issue new capital stock not exceeding £15,00,000 to be allotted as fully paid up to such share-holders as he might direct. This new stock was issued in the same year with the result that the amount of the company's capital became £50,00,000 the figure at which it now stands. After the issue of this new stock the capital of the Secretary of State was deemed to be £1,12,50,000 for the purposes of determining the proportion in which the profits should be distributed. All moneys received by the company in the course of the working of the railway have to be paid over to the Secretary of State. The company is not entitled to use any of the receipts of the undertaking for the purposes of meeting working expenses. These expenses are met from a grant made each year by the Secretary of State. As I have indicated the net receipts of the undertaking are divided at the end of each year between the Secretary of State and the company in proportion to their respective shares in the capital. The distribution of the profits rests with the Secretary of State, who is entitled in calculating the surplus to deduct the equivalent in rupees of the amount he has paid to the company by way of guaranteed interest in the course of the year. The surplus has always been more than sufficient to enable the Secretary of State to reimburse himself.

The reference arises out of the assessment of the company for the year 1937-38. The company returned an income of Rs. 24,36,479 for 1936-37. In arriving at this figure, the company. deducted Rs. 23,33,333 which it had received from the Secretary of State as interest under his guarantee. This deduction was in accordance with the practice which had been previously followed, a practice which received the approval of the Calcutta High Court in B. N. Ry. Co. v. Secretary of State (1). This decision however conflicts with a later decision in England affecting the company, M. & Sm. Ry. Co. v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue (2), and it is this conflict which has given rise to the reference. The income-tax authorities say that the Calcutta decision is wrong and that the company in calculating its annual profits must include the amount of guaranteed interest received in London. In order that the question may be decided the Commissioner of Income-tax, in agreement with the company, has referred to this Court under the provisions of s. 66 (1), Income Tax Act, 1922, the following question :

"Whether the said sum of Rs. 23,33,333 being the equivalent in rupees of the guaranteed interest paid by the Secretary of State for India under the terms of the contracts dated June 1, 1882 and June 26, 1908, between the Secretary of State and the company which was deducted for the purpose of the company's return for the accounting year 1936-37 is liable to assessment in the hands of the company ?"

In B. N. Ry. Co. v. Secretary of State (1) that Company was called upon to pay tax on an income of Rs. 1,72,60,595, which included a sum of Rs. 13,07,440 being the equivalent of the amount of the guaranteed interest paid in sterling by the Secretary of State on the share of the capital of the Company. For the purposes of the present reference the contract of the Company with the Secretary of State may be taken to be on all fours with the contract of the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company Limited with the Secretary of State. The Bengal Nagpur Railway Company Limited claimed that it was only taxable in respect of the amount which it received in India at the end of the year as its share of the surplus profits. A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that the Company was only liable in respect of its share of the surplus profits received in return for its services in the management of the railway, and not in respect of the moneys received in London. It was considered that the payment of the guaranteed interest in London was independent of the earnings of the railway and that the repayment of the amount of the guaranteed interest constituted the payment of a debt due from the Company to the Secretary of State.

In M. & Sm. Ry. Co. v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue (2) the question was whether the Company was liable to Corporations profits tax in respect of the amount which it received from the Secretary of State as guaranteed interest. Admittedly, there is no difference in principle between assessment in England to the Corporations profits tax and assessment to Indian income-tax. It was held by Roylatt, J. that the guaranteed interest paid by the Secretary of State formed part of the Company's profits and that the recoupment to the Secretary of State out of the surplus profits represented a distribution of profits within the prohibition of deduction from profits in s. 53 (2), Finance Act, 1920. Rowlatt, J. put the question this way :

"Are the profits of the Company for the purpose of Corporation profits tax the amount of their share before the Secretary of State is recouped, or are they only the balance which is left to them after the Secretary of State is recouped ? That is what the question is, or to put it in another way, are they to be taxed on that balance, or are they to be taxed on the balance plus the amount of the guaranteed interest; which is only putting the same thing in another way ?"

In deciding the case against the Company, the learned Judge said :

"If you put it in commercial or financial language or look at it from the commercial or financial point of view, the position simply is that these share-holders have been paid out of the proceeds of the working of the railway, and the revenues of India have not paid them a penny. The money they have got is simply because the railway has been so successful, and for no other reason they have got it. If it had not been successful they would have got some of it from the Secretary of State for India, but that position has not arisen; or, if you use language framed more exactly with respect to tax law, this, in my judgment, is the position, that the Railway Company have earned all these profits, all their one-fifth share, or whatever it is profits of the Railway Company, and it does not matter in the least that they have had to apply those profits, being profits from the working of the railway, in making good to the Secretary of State a guarantee which he had honoured provisionally in favour of the share-holders.....The Secretary of State is recouped out of what is called the company's share of the surplus receipts and as I have pointed out, the extent of his recoupment depends upon the amount of the profits. I think that this is a distribution of profits within the prohibition in s. 53, sub-s. 2 (b), Finance Act, 1920. I think it is a distribution of profits. It is a distribution of profits in recoupment of a guarantor, who guaranteed those profits—guaranteed them if you like to the share-holders, but what he guaranteed are the profits. He has guaranteed that the people who put up the capital shall have a return on the capital, and if the profits unaided give that return, the person who gives the guarantee gets them to make good his guarantee. It seems to me the very simplest case of the application of profits after they have become profits, by way of distribution of them to make good to somebody who has taken the risk of those profits not reaching that amount."

Both the Company and the income-tax authorities accept the decision of Rowlatt, J. in M. & Sm. Ry. Co. v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue (2) as correctly stating the law and consequently are agreed that B. N. Ry. Co. v. Secretary of State (1) ought not to be followed. While accepting the judgment of Rowlatt, J. in M. & Sm. Ry. Co. v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue (2) Mr. Grant has contended on behalf of the Company that the payment of interest on the £ 50,00,000 in London cannot be regarded as profits accruing or arising in British India within the meaning of s. 4, Income Tax Act, 1922. In fact this is the only point taken on behalf of the Company. As the correctness of the decision in M. & Sm. Ry. Co. v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue (2) is not challenged, I fail to see any basis for the argument that the receipt of the interest in London must be taken to be income earned there. The decision of Rowlatt, J. emphatically negatives the contention. The basis of his judgment is that all the profits of the undertaking are earned in India and the payment by the Secretary of State in London is merely a provisional payment which he recovers out of the profits in India. There are cases arising under the Income Tax Act, which also militate against Mr. Grant's contention. In Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay v. Sarupchand Hukamchand (3) the Bombay High Court had to consider whether s. 4 (1), Income Tax Act, 1922, applied in these circumstances. A Company registered in Indore, a Native State, entered into an agreement with a firm in Bombay under which the firm was to open and maintain at the Company's expense shops in Bombay and elsewhere for the sale of the Company's goods, to keep the books of account in Indore in respect of all sale proceeds and disbursements of the Company to charge a commission of $1\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. on the gross sale proceeds of all cloth and yarn produced by the Company, and to pay itself out of the moneys of the Company all sums due to it by way of commission or otherwise. The sale proceeds of the Bombay shop were all sent to Indore and the commission was paid there. It was contended that in these circumstances no income accrued or arose in British India, but the contention was rejected and the decision was approved of by the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income Tax; Bombay v. Chunilal B. Mehta (4). In Saunders v. Commissioner of Income Tax, United Provinces (5) the Allahabad High Court held that a sum of money paid annually in London to the Bishop of Lucknow by the trustees of a certain fund as a gratuitous and unconditional personal allowance of the holder of the Lucknow See was income accruing or arising in British India and was assessable as salary under s. 7 (1) of the Act. In In the matter of V. G. Every (6) the Calcutta High Court held that commission earned by an assessee in British India for services rendered there as an employee of a company, which was received by him in the United Kingdom while on leave, was income which had accrued or arisen in British India within the meaning of s. 4 (1).

It is not necessary to carry the discussion any further. There is ample authority in the cases which I have quoted to support the contention of the Income-tax authorities that all the profits of the Company accrue or arise in British India, and therefore I would answer the question referred in the affirmative. I would add that the Court is not called upon to consider whether the payment in London would constitute profits arising in British India in the event of the working of the undertaking not realizing sufficient to reimburse the Secretary of State at the end of the year, as this situation has not arisen. As the reference has been made by consent in order that there should be a pronouncement by the Court on the question there will be no order as to costs.

entail serious consequences in man of normal health—Deceased suffering from chronic malaria—Formation of abscess due to lowered vitality—Offence held fell under s. 324—Use of dangerous weapon held no indication of intention to cause injury likely to cause death—Offence, therefore, held did not amount even to culpable homicide.

The injury inflicted by accused on the head of the deceased was not such as to entail serious consequences to a man in normal health. It had healed up at the end of seven days, but he had a temperature, and on this account the doctor advised him to remain in the hospital until the temperature had subsided. However, the deceased stated that he suffered from chronic malaria and that his fever was due to malaria, and he insisted on leaving the hospital. He was brought back to the hospital again. He was then partially paralyzed on the left side, and there was an abscess over the seat of the first injury, which, was healed. An operation was performed on the same day; the abscess was lanced, and about eight ounces of pus were removed, but he became unconscious and died. Had the deceased stayed in hospital as advised, even if the abscess on the injury had formed, it would have been a simple matter to have cured it and no abscess on the brain would have formed at all and the deceased would have recovered. The deceased suffered from chronic malaria, and this malaria lowered his power of resistance and helped the formation of pus when there was an open wound. Death was not due directly to the enlarged spleen or to the heart, but these contributed indirectly because they lowered the vitality and power of resistance of the deceased. Thus the immediate cause of his death was his debilitated condition for which the injury was in no way responsible.

Held, that the accused was guilty of causing simple hurt, with a weapon for cutting, punishable under s. 324, I. P. C.

Held, further that the fact that a dangerous weapon was used was often, and might be indeed generally, a matter to be taken into account in deciding questions of intention; but circumstances alter cases, and, having regard to the medical evidence as to the wound itself, it was impossible to say that there was an intention to cause such injury as was likely to cause death. The offence could not, therefore, amount even to culpable homicide. 159 Ind. Cas. 1032 (4), 157 Ind. Cas. 667 (5), discussed. 171 Ind. Cas. 574 (1) and 165 Ind. Cas. 245 (2), distinguished. Cr. A. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Bassein. in Sessions Trial No. 16 of 1940.

Mr. Lambert, Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Dunkley, J.—The appellant, Nga Moe, has been convicted of two offences by the learned Sessions Judge of Bassein, namely: (1) under s. 452, I. P. C., of having committed house trespass, having made preparation for causing hurt, on January 14, 1940, and (2) under s. 302, I. P. C., of having committed murder by causing the death of one Oo Swi on the same date. He has been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment for the first offence, and transportation for life for the second offence, the sentences to run concurrently.

The facts out of which these charges arose have been clearly established by the evidence led at the trial, and the appellant, although not admitting the offences, was not able to throw any doubt on the prosecution evidence. He called no evidence in his defence. On the evening of January 14, the appellant and a companion went to the shop of Kyaung Ngan, who keeps a shop at Shankwin village, and demanded to speak to Kyaung Ngan. He was armed with short dah, and his companion also had a longer dah. Kyaung Ngan spoke to them on the verandah of his shop, and the appellant, who was somewhat under the influence of liquor, tried to pull him down from the verandah, but Kyaung Ngan was able to push the appellant off the verandah. Then the appellant and his companion raised their dahs in a threatening manner, and so Kyaung Ngan entered his shop and closed the doors; thereupon the appellant and his companion cut at the doors with their dahs; and the appellant called out to Kyaung Ngan to open the doors. After a short interval the appellant and his companion went away. At that time the Township Magistrate happened to be staying in the village, and so it was decided that Oo Swi, who is the nephew and employee of Kyaung Ngan, should go and make a report to the Township Magistrate. Oo Swi and his wife left Kyaung Ngan's shop by the back door and went to the house where the Township Magistrate was staying. They found that the Magistrate had gone to bed; but some of his followers were seated in the house talking to the Headman's agent and another person who had come to pay land revenue. Oo Swi and his wife came on to the verandah of this house and began to report the occurrence at Kyaung Ngan's shop to the Headman's agent, and then the appellant also came on to the verandah and delivered blows with his short dah at Oo Swi. He struck two blows and then ran away. Oo Swi was not seriously injured. He was brought to the Bassein Hospital on the next day, and the medical witness states that he had three injuries, namely (1) an incised wound, one and a half inches long by a quarter inch broad, scalp deep, on the right side of the head one and half inches above the tip of the right ear, (2) a linear contusion one and a quarter inches long on the upper part of the right shoulder blade, and (3) a superficial incised wound, one and a half inches long and one-eighth inch deep, on the lower part of the left side of his back. All these injuries were simple injuries and only the first was deserving of any attention at all.

Oo Swi was detained as an in-patient in the hospital and this injury was treated. It had healed up at the end of seven days, but Oo Swi had a temperature, and on this account the doctor advised him to remain in the hospital until the temperature had subsided. The doctor now deposes that on account of this temperature there was a suspicion that sepsis might be forming underneath this injury. However, Oo Swi stated that he suffered from chronic malaria and that his fever was due to malaria, and he insisted on leaving the hospital. He was brought back to the hospital by his relatives on February 5. He was then partially paralyzed on the left side, and there was an abscess over the seat of the first injury, which, as I have said, was healed. An operation was performed on the same day; the abscess was lanced, and about eight ounces of pus were removed, but on February 7, Oo Swi became unconscious and died. The post mortem examination revealed that in addition to the abscess over the seat of the injury, there was another internal abscess on the top of the head between the two lobes of the brain, and death was due to this abscess on the brain which had been caused by sepsis.

According to the medical witness, the brain abscess had formed as a result of infection spreading into the brain through the blood stream after the formation of pus under the first injury. This injury had not cut the skull at all, and there was no direct communication between the external injury and the abscess on the brain, which was not near the injury. The doctor has stated that, had the deceased stayed in hospital as advised, even if the abscess on the injury had formed, it would have been a simple matter to have cured it and no abscess on the brain would have formed at all and the deceased would have recovered. The post mortem examination revealed that the spleen of the deceased was greatly enlarged, his liver was congested and somewhat enlarged, his heart was hypertrophied and the valves of the heart were slightly thickened, and malarial parasites were found in the blood stream. The medical witness stated that the deceased suffered from chronic malaria, and opined that this malaria lowered his power of resistance and helped the formation of pus when there was an open wound. In his evidence before the Court of Session the medical witness said:

"Death was not due directly to the enlarged spleen or to the heart, but these contributed indirectly because they lowered the vitality and power of resistance of the deceased."

Dealing first with the first charge of house

trespass, having made preparation for causing hurt, this offence was clearly established on the facts. But as nothing whatever was alleged against the previous character of the appellant, the sentence passed was, in my opinion, somewhat severe. I would uphold the conviction on this charge, but reduce the sentence to one of rigorous imprisonment for one year.

Turning now to the second charge of murder, the learned Sessions Judge rightly laid down that in order to constitute the offence of culpable homicide it is necessary, first that the death of the deceased should have been caused by the act of the accused, and, secondly, that the accused did this act with the intention of causing death, or of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. The learned Sessions Judge then came to the conclusion that the appellant caused the death of the deceased, and in coming to this conclusion he referred to the case in King v. Abor Ahmed (1) and Emperor v. Nga San Pai (2). He quoted a passage from the judgment of Spargo, J. in King v. Abor Ahmed (1) to the effect that if death results from an injury voluntarily caused, the person who caused that injury is deemed to have caused the death. With all due respect, this passage, when read alone, is too broadly stated, and it must be construed in conjunction with the facts of the particular case, which showed that the injury inflicted was of itself likely to cause death. The proposition of law laid down by the Full Bench in King v. Abor Ahmed (1), is stated in the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice, and is that where an injury is intentionally inflicted the defence that no proper medical treatment was administered does not exonerate the person who inflicted the injury from guilt of culpable homicide if death ensues as a natural or likely consequence. In order that the accused may be held to have caused the death of the deceased, the injury inflicted must be a proximate cause of death, and not a remote cause connected with the death by a chain of intervening events. Thus, in a case not officially reported, in Nga Paw v. Emperor, 38 Cr. L. J. 103 (3) where the injury inflicted was itself likely to cause death, but death in fact ensued as a result of gangrene induced by tying up the injury with a dirty cloth, my Lord the Chief Justice and myself, sitting as a Bench, held that the accused was guilty of murder.

On the other hand, in another case not officially reported, in Nga Ba Min v. Emperor, 37 Cr. L. J. 205 (4) where the injury inflicted was slight and the immediate cause of death was the effect of the village remedies applied to the injury, I held that the accused was not guilty of culpable homicide. The Chief Court of Oudh has come to the same conclusion in Sobha v. Emperor (5) the facts of which case were exactly the same as those in Nga Ba Min v. Emperor, 37 Cr. L. J. 205 (4). In this latter case I said that in order that a person should be guilty of culpable homicide, the death of the deceased must be connected with the act of violence or other primary cause, not merely by a chain of causes and effects, but by such direct influence as is calculated to produce the effect without the intervention of any considerable change of circumstances. The principle involved is stated in Hale's Pleas of the Crown, Vol. 1, p. 428 in the following terms:

"If the wound or hurt be not mortal and it shall be made clearly and certainly to appear that the death of the party was caused by ill-applications by himself or those about him of unwholesome solves or medicines, and not by the wound or hurt, it seems that this is no species of homicide. But when a wound, not in itself, mortal, for want of proper applications or from neglect, turns to a gangrene or a fever, and that gangrene or fever is the immediate cause of the death of the party wounded, the party by whom the wound is given is guilty of murder or manslaughter according to circumstances, for, though the fever or gangrene, and not the wound, be the immediate cause of the death, yet the wound, being the cause of gangrene or fever, is the immediate cause of the death causa causati."

The injury inflicted by the appellant in the present case was not such an injury as would be likely to entail any serious consequences to a person in normal health, and even in the case of the deceased Oo Swi his death would not have resulted from the injury if he had not insisted on leaving the hospital against medical advice. His death really ensued because of his weak physical condition due to his suffering from chronic malaria and because his powers of resistance to infection had been so much lowered by the effects of this disease. It seems clear that no abscess would have formed on the brain if the deceased had been in a normal state of health, and he died from the abscess on the brain, not from the injury, which had only a remote connection with this abscess. The immediate cause of the death of the deceased was his debilitated condition, for which the injury was in no way responsible. Therefore it cannot be held that the act of the appellant caused the death of the deceased. The only case in which the infliction of an injury of this nature under similar circumstances could be held to amount to culpable homicide or murder is a case falling within cl. 2 of s. 300, I. P. C., namely, if the act is done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knows to be likely to cause the death of the person to whom the harm is caused. If there had been evidence to show that the appellant was at the time aware of the state of the deceased's health and therefore knew that even a slight injury was likely to result in his death, his act might have been brought under this clause, but there is no such evidence. No doubt, in his examination in the committing Court the accused did make this statement:

"The injuries received by him were not serious. He had been ailing for 15 years. Then about a year ago he was struck on the head, and on this account he became ill and died;"

but this statement is not evidence that the appellant was aware of these facts before he struck the deceased, and in making this answer he was merely repeating, in familiar language, the medical evidence which had already been given. In my opinion, the appellant cannot be held to be guilty of culpable homicide, and his offence was the offence of causing simple hurt with a weapon for cutting, punishable under s. 324, I. P. C. I would therefore set aside the conviction and sentence of the appellant under s. 302, I. P. C., and, instead thereof convict him of an offence under s. 324, I. P. C., and sentence him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a term of two years for this offence, the sentence to run consecutively with the sentence passed on the first charge.

Roberts, C. J.—I entirely agree, but as this case comes to us on a reference I wish to add a few words. It really is plain commonsense that, if a man strikes another such a blow as will not in the ordinary course of events cause more than simple hurt, he is answerable for causing simple hurt and for no more. No doubt, the natural effect of some grave wounds, if not medically treated, is septic inflammation, and if death proceeds from this in the ordinary course the offender is prima facie guilty of murder, if death is merely the likely result of such an injury it is culpable homicide. But here the dangerous condition which supervened was an unlikely consequence of a blow comparatively trivial in character, although the weapon was a dangerous one. The fact that a dangerous weapon is used is often, and may be indeed generally, a matter to be taken into account in deciding questions of intention; but circumstances alter cases, and, having regard to the medical evidence here as to the wound itself, it is impossible to say that there was an intention to cause such injury as was likely to cause death. The offence could not therefore amount even to culpable homicide. In King v. Abor Ahmed (1), at p. 391* I observed that:

"Where an injury is intentionally inflicted the defence that no proper medical treatment was forthcoming does not exonerate the person who caused the injury.....from guilt of culpable homicide if death ensues as a natural or likely consequence. Such a person is deemed to have caused the death."

The learned Sessions Judge has quoted the judgment of my learned brother Spargo who whilst in no way dissenting from the rest of the Court, used the shorter phrase "where death results from an injury voluntarily caused, the person who causes that injury must be deemed to have caused the death, although, etc."

Spargo, J. doubtless thought it unnecessary to overload this particular sentence by repeating the qualification which I had already expressly made, and which is derived from the I. P. C. The death of a person must be at least a likely consequence of the injury received before s. 299 can operate at all, much less before any consideration arises as to whether the offence of murder has been committed. In the case cited, the Full Bench was not dealing with a matter in which the likelihood of death from the injuries was ever in dispute. It turns out here, though there is no evidence that the appellant knew it at the time he struck the blow, that the deceased was in such bad health as to lower his power of resistance to a septic condition; and when, owing to his state of health, this supervened, he was unwilling to exercise common prudence or to abide by the proper remedies and skilful treatment available to him. These circumstances, in my opinion, explain the cause of death, which was due to a number of factors of which the appellant's wrongful act was only one. The learned Sessions Judge found him guilty of murder, but he cannot be said to have caused the death of the deceased so as to be guilty even of the offence of culpable homicide; for, he did nothing which was likely to cause it, or which would have done so except in conjunction with other circumstances which no reasonable man could foresee.

Again, even in order to constitute the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, s. 322, I. P. C., and the explanation thereto lay down that the offender must intend or know himself likely to cause grievous hurt. There was no such intention or likelihood proved here and the offence was thus one of simple hurt. I agree in the convictions and sentences proposed by my learned brother both in respect of this offence and of the other offence of house trespass having made preparation for causing hurt.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, r. 1—Consent decree sought to be vacated or amended on ground of fraud—Proper course is by separate suit.

The proper course and indeed the only course, for a party desiring to have a consent decree amended or vacated upon the ground that it was fraudulently procured, is to proceed by a separate suit for the purpose. It is not competent under O. XLVII to obtain a review of a consent decree on the ground that the consent decree was obtained by fraud. 89 Ind. Cas. 946 (1), applied, 124 Ind. Cas. 525 (2), relied on, Ram Gopal Mazumdar v. Prasanna Kumar Sanyal (4) and Barahmdeo Prasad v. Banarsi Prasad (6), not followed, 2 Ind. Cas. 129 (3), 72 Ind. Cas. 566 (5) and 50 Ind. L. P. A. from a decision of Mr. Justice Rowland, dated October 16, 1939.

Messrs. B. P. Sinha, B. N. Rai, and J. K. Ray, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. P. R. Das and K. Dayal, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application in review by the respondents in a Letters Patent Appeal who ask us to vacate the compromise decree passed in that appeal on August 16, 1940, on the ground that in fact they had not consented to the terms of the compromise and that the Advocates who appeared for them had consented to those terms against their instructions.

The subject-matter of the litigation which had given rise to the Letters Patent Appeal was 1 bigha. 15 dhurs of raiya land in village Narainpur appertaining to khata No. 37. This land consisted of plots Nos. 457 and 465 which originally belonged to one Mst. Dulari Kuer. Dulari Kuer mortgaged plots No. 457 to defendant No. 7 for Rs. 25 and plot No. 465 to defendant No. 8 for Rs. 40. The present petitioners subsequently purchased from the defendants Nos. 9 and 10, who are alleged to be the daughters of Mst. Dulari Kuer, the two disputed plots and some other lands for a sum of Rs. 200 on May 25, 1936, and subsequently instituted a suit for the redemption and recovery of possession of the disputed plots against defendants Nos. 7 and 8 to whom Dulari Kuer had mortgaged the land and also impleaded in the suit the appellants in the Letters Patent Appeal, who were described in the plaint as defendants first party, as they had purchased the land subsequently by a registered sale-deed from defendants Nos. 7 and 8 and thereafter put up certain structures and machinery upon it and also constructed a railway siding thereon. Their case was that the defendants Nos. 7 and 8 had not the full right of ownership and could not transfer the land to the defendants first party. On the other hand the defence in the suit was that the land originally belonged to one Jadhubans Gir, but as he had no wife or issue, he had surrendered the land to the landlord and thereafter the land had been settled by the landlord with defendants Nos. 7 and 8, the vendors of defendants first party.

The First Court decreed the plaintiffs' suit but the decree was reversed in appeal and the plaintiffs' prayer for recovery of possession of the land and the demolition of the structure standing thereupon, was refused. A decree, however, was passed in favour of the plaintiffs directing the defendants first party to pay them a sum of Rs. 210-8-0 as the value of the land, the Appellate Court observing that as the plaintiffs had acted maliciously, they were not entitled to any cost. The plaintiffs thereupon preferred a second appeal to this Court and the learned Judge who heard the appeal set aside the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and passed a preliminary decree for redemption in accordance with O. XXXIV, r. 7. Then there was a Letters Patent Appeal in which a consent decree was passed in the following terms:—

"If the defendants first party pay to the plaintiffs within a period of two months from to-day a sum of Rs. 5,500 the plaintiffs' claim will stand dismissed in its entirety. On the other hand, if the defendants fail to pay the plaintiffs the said sum within the said period this appeal will stand dismissed and the decree of the learned Single Judge affirmed. The said sum of Rs. 5,500 must be deposited in this Court within the stated period."

Before this order was made, we had on the oral application made on behalf of the parties given them leave to compromise the appeal as in our opinion the compromise was for the benefit of the minor plaintiffs. At the time of the compromise the plaintiffs who were respondents in the appeal were represented by Dr. Dwarika Nath Mitter and Mr. G. P. Shahi, and the defendants first party who were appellants were represented by Mr. P. R. Das, Mr. Hem Chandra Mitter and Mr. Kameshwar Dayal. In order to avoid confusion the plaintiffs (respondents in the Letters Patent Appeal) will be hereafter referred to as the petitioners and the defendants first party (the appellants in the Letters Patent Appeal) will be referred to as the opposite party.

Now the allegations upon which the present application is based may be summarised as follows:—On August 15, 1940, a day before the Letters Patent Appeal was taken up, the petitioners Nos. 1 and 3 had definitely instructed their Advocates Dr. Dwarika Nath Mitter and Mr. G. P. Shahi, not to compromise the appeal in any event. On the morning of August 16, 1940 Mr. Kameshwar Dayal, one of the Advocates appearing for the opposite party accompanied by some of their servants had gone to the house of Mr. G. P. Shahi, one of the Advocates appearing in the case on behalf of the petitioners. At the house of Mr. Shahi, Pandit Ram Chandra Sukla on behalf of the opposite party made a proposal to Chandra Bhukhan Prasad Missir that the appeal might be compromised and offered a sum of Rs. 10,000 as one of the terms of the compromise. Chandra Bhukhan Missir, however, did not agree. Thereafter when the appeal was taken up in Court Mr. G. P. Shahi called Chandra Bhukhan Prasad Missir and asked him whether he was willing to compromise the appeal to which he replied in the negative. Some time later Chandra Bhukhan Missir told Mr. Shahi that petitioner No. 3 Girdharan Prasad Missir was also not willing to compromise the appeal. Later on the petitioners Nos. 1 and 3 came to know about the compromise and then they asked their Advocates as to why the appeal had been compromised against their specific instructions and requested them to inform the Court that they had not given their consent to the terms of the compromise, but the Advocates did not listen to this request. The petitioners Nos. 1 and 3 then wanted to inform the Court personally after 2 p. m. as to what had happened, but as the Court was hearing arguments in another case, they could not do so. At 4 p. m. when the Court was raising, they informed the Court that they had not consented to the compromise, whereupon the Court ordered them to file a petition to that effect. The petitioners accordingly filed an application for review on September 30, 1940. Now if these facts were admitted or there were prima facie grounds for believing them to be true, we might have been inclined to consider this application. But the petitioners have come to Court with a strange story and the opposite party whose case is that this petition is only an attempt to blackmail them, strongly challenge the truth of the main part of the story. In such circumstances we can review the order, only if after an investigation, which must be more or less like the trial of a suit, we are satisfied that the allegations made in the petition are correct. In our opinion, therefore, this application must be rejected on the ground that the petitioners have, as they themselves admit, an alternative remedy by way of a suit, which is undoubtedly the more appropriate remedy in this case, inasmuch as the matters raised before us require an elaborate investigation.

We are also not fully satisfied on the materials before us that this is a bona fide application. Dr. Dwarika Nath Mitter, the leading Counsel for the petitioners was a Judge of the Calcutta High Court for many years and is one of the most distinguished and highly respected members of the local Bar. It seems to us incredible that Dr. Dwarika Nath Mitter would have compromised the case, if, as is alleged, he had been given clear and specific instructions not to compromise it. The other Advocate, Mr. Shahi, who appeared for the petitioners has been practising in this Court for many years and we see no reason why this learned Advocate should have also acted contrary to what the petitioners allege to have told him not only on August 15, but also at the time when the arguments in the case were in progress. If these learned Advocates had appeared before us and made a statement at the Bar that there was some misunderstanding on their part in regard to the instructions given to them, we would have been inclined to consider this application. But these Advocates are not before us and the petitioners have filed this petition through an Advocate, who did not represent them at the time of the hearing of the appeal and who has no personal knowledge of what happened at the time of the hearing. It is practically admitted that two of the petitioners, that is to say, petitioners Nos. 1 and 3 who were apparently in charge of this litigation were present in Court on the day the appeal was heard. We find it somewhat difficult to believe that if the compromise had been recorded without their consent, they would not have then and there brought the fact to the notice of the Court. The story put forward in the petition that the petitioners came to know much later that the appeal had been compromised and they tried to bring the matter to our notice at 2 p. m. but refrained from doing so as another case had started does not appear to us to be at all a probable one. However that may be, there is a clear mis-statement at the end of the petition. Though it is a fact that when the Court was rising one of the petitioners told us that he was not satisfied with the compromise, yet after we had risen, we were informed by the Reader that that petitioner did not want to press the matter further. It is significant that though the order was recorded and signed by us on August 16, the application for review was not filed until September 30, 1940.

There was considerable discussion before us as to whether an application for review lies at all in the circumstances of this case. In Nathumal v. Raghubir Singh (1) it was held that when a compromise has been incorporated into a decree, the Court cannot review its order on the sole ground that the compromise has been entered into under undue influence or coercion. In J. G. Galstoun v. Pramatha Nath Roy (2) Rankin, C. J. expressed the opinion that if a party desires to have a consent decree amended or vacated upon the ground that it was fraudulently procured, his proper course and indeed the only course is to proceed by separate suit for the purpose, because the matter is certainly grave enough to deserve a separate suit. The learned Chief Justice then proceeded to deal with the question as to whether O. XLVII of the Civil P. C. was applicable to such a case and observed as follows :—

"The authorities in this Court are not uniform, but putting the matter at the highest in favour of the respondents, it may be said that there is some difference of opinion upon the question whether, and in what circumstances, a consent decree may be reviewed under O. XLVII of the Code. It was said in Golab Koer v. Badshah Bahadur (3) that 'while it must be conceded that a large preponderance of authority is against the contention that a consent decree cannot on any ground be challenged upon an application for review of judgment, there is no foundation for the suggestion that there is a preponderance of authority in favour of the contention that a consent decree may be reviewed on the ground of fraud.' The main proposition decided in that case was that a party who had applied unsuccessfully under O. XLVII for review of a consent decree on the ground that it has been obtained by fraud was entitled, notwithstanding his failure, to prosecute a remedy by suit. This decision was contrary to a previous decision in the case of Ram Gopal Mazumdar v. Prasanna Kumar Sanyal (4) and I desire to reserve my opinion upon the point. In Gulab Koer's case (3) (supra) it was pointed out that there are weighty reasons why a regular suit should be regarded as a more appropriate remedy in such cases. Now, I desire to say that, in my opinion, it is not competent under O. XLVII, to obtain a review of a consent decree on the ground that the consent decree was obtained by fraud. It appears to me that before such a doctrine can be taken as authorised by the Code, it is very necessary to lay one's finger upon some enactment which is clearly intended to make so large and inconvenient an exception to the general principles which govern this matter. Rule 1 of O. XLVII, after speaking of a case where a party has discovered new and important matter which was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed, and of mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, introduces the words 'or for any other sufficient reason'. In Chajju Ram case (5) the Judicial Committee had occasion to point out that these words were not unlimited and must be taken to point to a reason which is sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those mentioned in the rule. It appears to me that if mistake or error is prima facie intended to be beyond the scope of the rule, unless the mistake or error be apparent on the face of the record it is curious, to say the least of it, that a party should employ this procedure for the purpose of making out a contentious case of fraud. In my opinion, the correct doctrine under the Civil P. C. is in no way different upon this point from that which is laid down for England in Daniel's Chancery Practice, 8th edition, 709. The authorities in this Court to the contrary are neither numerous nor impressive and had not infrequently been challenged cf. [Barahamdeo Prasad v. Banarsi Prasad (6).] On principle, and as a matter of construction of O. XLVII of the Code, I approve of the view taken in Ramlagan Sadu v. Ram Birich Koeri (7) and were it necessary I should desire to refer the matter to a Full Bench."

The learned Advocate for the petitioners tried at first to bring the present case under O. XLVII, r. 1 on the ground that there is a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record. This ground, however, had to be abandoned and the learned Advocate proceeded to contend that the petitioners were entitled to apply for a review on the ground that they had discovered a new and important matter. The new and important matter is said to be the fact that the Advocates for the petitioners had consented to the petition of compromise though they had been told not to give such consent. In our opinion the case cannot be brought under O. XLVII, without straining the meaning of the words used in that rule; but even if it can be brought under it, it is difficult to hold that petitioners Nos. 1 and 3 who were undoubtedly present in Court at the time of the hearing of the appeal could not with exercise of due diligence have prevented their Advocates from consenting to a decree on terms which they were not prepared to accept. If their case is that the consent decree was due to some kind of fraud practised upon them by their Advocates, the case is directly hit by the decision in Nathumal v. Raghubir Singh (1). In any event we agree with Rankin, C. J. that the matter "is important enough to deserve a separate suit" and we accordingly reject this application with costs.

Electricity Act (IX of 1910), ss. 2 (n), 37—Definition of 'works' in s. 2 (n) not exhaustive—"Works," meaning explained—S. 37, rules under—Electricity Rules, 1922, r. 40-A (1) Proviso—Notification (No. 640/27-II) issued by Bombay Government on November 15, 1934, under—Words "works" and "their own works," meaning of—Installation works carried out by exempted electric company on other's premises at its own expense, remaining its own property—Whether fall within notification—Accused being exempt from operation of r. 40-A cannot be convicted under r. 46, Electricity Rules, 1932—Electricity Rules, 1937—Offence between March 27, 1937 and March 22, 1938—Neither r. 40-A of Rules of 1922, nor its corresponding r. 48 of the Rules of 1937, held applied—S. 24, General Clauses Act (X of 1897), held not applicable to Rules.

The definition of "works" in s. 2 (n), Electricity Act, is not exhaustive. Nevertheless, a reference to other provisions in the Act indicates that when the expression "works" is used it usually means works connected with the supply of energy, and not lighting installations.

The word "works" in the Bom. Govt. Notification (No. 640/27-II) issued on November 15, 1934, refers to installation works and not to works connected merely with the supply of energy and the words "their own works" in the same notification mean works carried out by the exempted bodies themselves, or perhaps works belonging to them and not merely the works carried out by them on their own premises. Hence the installation works which are carried out by exempted electric supply company on other's premises but at its own expense and which remain its own property fall within the notification and are, therefore, exempt. The accused thus being exempt from the operation of r. 40-A by reason of the notification cannot be convicted under r. 46, Electricity Rules, 1932.

The Electricity Rules, 1937, were made applicable in supersession of the Electricity Rules, 1922, on March 27, 1937. The Electricity Rules of 1937, came into force on March 22, 1938. The accused was charged under r. 40-A of the Electricity Rules, 1922, for an offence committed between March 27, 1937 and March 22, 1938:

Held, that neither r. 40-A of the Rules of 1922, nor its corresponding provision r. 48 of the Rules of 1937, applied to the offence.

Held, further that s. 24, General Clauses Act, could not be invoked to apply r. 40-A of Rules of 1922, to the offence as that section did not apply to rules framed under the Act.

Cr. As. from the order passed by the First Class Magistrate, Hungund.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, Govt. Pleader, for the Govt. of Bombay.

Mr. K. G. Datar, for the Accused.

Broomfield, J.—These are appeals by the Govt. of Bombay in two connected cases in which one Raghunath Ramchandra Karlekar licensee and proprietor of an electric supply company at Ilkal in the Bijapur District, was prosecuted for an alleged breach of r. 48, Electricity Rules, 1937, and was acquitted by the Magistrate. There is no dispute about the facts of the case. In the months of February and March 1938, the accused carried out certain small installation works on the premises of some half a dozen inhabitants of Ilkal. The installation works consisted of putting in in each case one light point with switches and cut-outs. Three of these works were made the subject of one case and three of the other. The work was admittedly done at the expense of the supply company, and the light points, switches etc., remained the property of the company. Rule 48, which is alleged to have been infringed, is as follows:

"Precautions to be adopted by consumers and owners, electrical contractors and electrical workmen

—(1) No electrical installation work, including additions, alterations, repairs, and adjustments to existing installations, except such replacement of lamps, fans, fuses, switches and other component parts of the installation as in no way alters its capacity or character, shall be carried out upon the premises or on behalf of any consumer or owner for the purposes of the supply of energy to such consumer or owner, except by an electrical contractor licensed by the Provincial Govt. in this behalf and under the direct supervision of a person holding a certificate of competency issued by the Provincial Govt.:

Provided that the Provincial Govt. may by notification in the Official Gazette exempt on such conditions as it may impose any such description of work either generally or in the case of any specified class or consumers or owners from so much of this sub-rule as requires such work to be carried out by an electrical contractor licensed by the Provincial Govt. in this behalf:

* Provided further that this rule shall not apply to any work carried out by or on behalf of the Govt. of India unless the Govt. of India so direct.

(2) This rule shall come into force in any province or part thereof on such date as the Provincial Govt. may by notification in the Official Gazette appoint."

The accused in this case holds a certificate of competency issued by the Provincial Govt. and it is not disputed that the works in question were carried out under his supervision. But the accused has not an electrical contractor's license. It is by reason of the want of this license that the prosecution alleges the rule has been infringed. The first difficulty in the way of the prosecution is that r. 48, under which the accused was charged did not come into force until March 22, 1938. That was the date fixed in the notification issued under part (2) of the rule. It is common ground that the installation works in question were carried out by the accused in February and March 1938, before March 22, 1938. But under the Indian Electricity Rules of 1922, there was a r. 40-A, which was in precisely the same terms as the present r. 48. It is suggested, therefore, that the reference to r. 48 of the rules of 1937 was a mere slip, that the charge should have been under r. 40-A of the rules of 1922, but that this mistake has not in any way prejudiced the accused, the wording of the two rules being precisely the same. That, however, does not get rid of the difficulty. The rules of 1937 were introduced by a notification dated March 27, 1937, which was as follows:

"In exercise of the powers conferred by s. 37, Electricity Act, 1910 (IX of 1910), and in supersession of the Indian Electricity Rules, 1922, the Governor-General in Council is pleased after previous publication to make the following rules applicable to the whole of British India."

Therefore, the old r. 40-A was superseded prima facie when the new rules were made applicable on March 27, 1937. As I have said the corresponding new r. 48, did not come into force until March 22, 1938, and, according to the contention of the learned Advocate for the accused, in February and the first part of March 1938, when he carried out these installation works, there was no rule corresponding to the present r. 48, in force. The learned Govt. Pleader attempts to get over this difficulty by relying on s. 24, General Clauses Act X of 1897. That provides, so far as is material, that where any Central Act or Regulation is repealed and re-enacted with or without modification, then, unless it is otherwise expressly provided, any rule made under the repealed Act or Regulation, shall, so far as it is not inconsistent with the provisions re-enacted, continue in force, and be deemed to have been made under the provisions so re-enacted, unless and until it is superseded by any rule made under the provisions so re-enacted. The learned Govt. Pleader's argument is that the old r. 40-A cannot be considered to have been superseded by the Electricity Rules of 1937 when they were made applicable on March 27, 1937, and was only superseded when the new r. 48, came into force in consequence of the notification issued under part (2) thereof. However, the notification by which the new rules were introduced expressly stated that they were in supersession of the Electricity Rules, 1922, and it is a little difficult to see how an exception is to be made in the case of r. 48. Another point is that s. 24 only comes into operation where a Central Act or Regulation has been repealed and re-enacted. According to the definitions in the General Clauses Act, neither Central Act nor Regulation would include a rule made under an Act, unless by some straining of language it is possible to say that the rule can be regarded as part of the Act, because it is provided that it is to have the same effect as though it were part of the Act. Assuming, however, for the sake of argument that the old r. 40-A can be regarded as having been in force at the time when the accused was prosecuted, we are not satisfied that a breach of the rule has in fact occurred. The accused has relied for his defence on the terms of a notification (No. 640/27-II) which was issued by the Bombay Govt. on November 15, 1934, (p. 2566, part I). It was as follows :

"In exercise of the powers conferred by the proviso to sub-r. (1) of r. 40-A of the Indian Electricity Rules, 1922, the Governor-in-Council is pleased to direct that the following Administrations, Institutions and Bodies shall be exempted from the operation of the said sub-r. (1) of r. 40-A in so far as their own works are concerned, namely :

1. The Electrical Branch of the Public Works Department, Bombay.
2. The State Railways.
3. The Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute, Bombay.
4. The College of Engineering, Poona.
5. The N. E. D. Civil Engineering College, Karachi.
6. All Electric Supply Companies.
7. All factories within the meaning of the Indian Factories Act, 1911 (XII of 1911).
8. The Royal Indian Navy Dockyard, Bombay.
9. Railways other than State Railways.

Provided that in the case of bodies referred to at items Nos. 7, 8 and 9 above, a person holding a Certificate of Competency is employed for supervising such works on their own premises."

The accused relies on the words "their own works," in this notification and contends that as the installation works in question were carried out by the company itself, and after being carried out remained the property of the company, they are the company's own works, and therefore the exemption given by this notification in the case of electric supply companies is applicable to him. The case depends therefore on the interpretation of this notification and in particular of the words "their own works." The learned Govt. Pleader says that what is meant is works carried out on the premises of the various bodies referred to. There seems to be no very good reason however why the words "on their own premises" should be implied. It would have been very easy to say "works carried out by them on their own premises." Moreover, at the end of the notification there is a proviso that in the case of certain bodies "such works" (which would naturally mean their own works), when carried out on their own premises, are not exempted unless a person holding a certificate of competency is employed for supervising them. If the words "their own works" in themselves meant works on the premises of the body concerned, the addition of the words "on their own premises" in this last proviso would have been unnecessary. This interpretation of the words therefore seems to be unacceptable.

The learned Govt. Pleader has argued with more force that the word "works" should be interpreted with reference to the definition contained in the Act. According to that definition "works" includes electric supply lines and any buildings, machinery or apparatus required to supply energy and to carry into effect the objects of a license granted under part. II, which deals with the supply of energy. The definition is not exhaustive. Nevertheless, a reference to other provisions in the Act does seem to indicate that when the expression "works" is used it usually means works connected with the supply of energy, and not lighting installations of the kind with which we are concerned which have nothing to do with the supply of energy. It is usually a sound rule of construction to give the same meaning to words used in rules made under an Act as the words have in the Act itself. We were therefore at first somewhat impressed by the argument put forward on behalf of Govt. in this respect. But when we look at the language of r. 48, or r. 40-A, it becomes extremely difficult, if not impossible, to suppose that the word 'works' in the notification has the meaning ascribed to it in the definition in the Act.

The section begins by referring to "installation works" and the description of the work there given clearly covers the kind of work which was carried out by the accused in this case and in respect of which he has been prosecuted. The work referred to there is quite obviously not work connected merely with the supply of energy. Then the notification goes on to say that the Provincial Govt. may by notification exempt any such description of work either generally or in the case of any specified class of consumers or owners from the requirement that a licensed electrical contractor must be employed. So that the kind of work referred to in the rule is not work connected with the supply of energy but electrical installation work, and, that being so when we find the notification issued under the rule stating that certain bodies shall be exempted in so far as their own works are concerned, it seems reasonable to hold that by 'works' it meant the kind of works referred to in the rule and not the kind of works referred to in the definition.

The words "their own works," would naturally mean works carried out by the exempted bodies themselves, or perhaps works belonging to them. In the present case, the works were not only carried out by the electric supply company but were carried out at their own expense and remained their own property. Since it seems to be clear that the notification applies to the installation works, we find it impossible to say that the works carried out by the accused in this case are not such as can be fairly included in the expression "their own works" in this notification. If Govt. intended that the exemption was only to apply in the case of works carried out by the various bodies on their own premises, that intention has not been made sufficiently clear. On behalf of Govt. reliance was also placed on r. 46, of the rules issued on November 15, 1932, in connection with the issue of certificates of competency under r. 40-A of the Indian Electricity Rules, 1922. That rule is as follows:

"Supply companies to obtain contractor's licenses.—No electrical contracting work shall be carried out by any electric supply company unless they have obtained an Electrical Contractor's license and employed a separate staff of supervisors and wiremen, in compliance with these rules."

It is not clear however that the work carried out by the accused in this case can be described as electrical contracting work within the meaning of this rule. In any case, if he is exempted under the provisions of the notification from the operation of r. 40-A, he could not be convicted of a breach of that rule, and it is a breach of that rule which is the subject of the charge. For these reasons we are of opinion that the learned Magistrate was right in acquitting the accused in this case, and we dismiss the appeals.

OUDH CHIEF COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 723 of 1940.

THOMAS, C. J. AND GHULAM HASAN, J.

May 7, 1941

KING-EMPEROR—COMPLAINANT—

versus

GAYA PRASAD AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—

RESPONDENTS

Criminal trial—Evidence—Appreciation—Practice of awarding rewards to Police witnesses before case is finally decided deprecated — Its effect stated — Appreciation of evidence — Prosecution evidence should be considered on merits and not rejected on consideration of defence evidence — Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 149, 436—Common intention should be established.

Action of the Police authorities of rewarding Police witnesses before the case is finally determined is calculated to prejudicially affect the fair trial of the case against the accused. Such action may lead to a large body of otherwise good evidence being eliminated altogether from consideration. [p. 560, col. 2.]

[Their Lordships treated the evidence of such witnesses as suspicious and tainted.] [ibid.]

Where no common intention to burn the houses is proved all the accused cannot be convicted under ss. 436/149, I. P. C. [p. 562, col. 1.]

While dealing with the evidence of each prosecution witness the Judge should not unnecessarily introduce the defence evidence and reject the prosecution evidence largely because in his opinion the defence evidence established the innocence of the accused. The Judge should examine the prosecution evidence witness by witness on its own merits and reject it, if upon a careful analysis and scrutiny of the evidence he finds that it was not true or reliable to support the prosecution case. He should not test trustworthiness of the prosecution witnesses in the light of the defence evidence. [p. 563, col. 2.]

Cr. A. against the order of the First Assistant Sessions Judge, Gonda, dated July 8, 1940.

Mr. S. C. Das, Assistant Govt. Advocate assisted by R. B. Sarju Prasad Srivastava, Govt. Pleader, Gonda, for the Crown.

Messrs. H. G. Walford and J. W. Peters, for Accused No. 1.

Mr. H. G. Walford, for Accused Nos. 3 and 4.

Judgment.—Forty three persons were tried under ss. 147, 323/149, 325/149, 332/149 and 436/149, I. P. C. by the learned 1st Assistant Sessions Judge of Gonda and acquitted on July 8, 1940. The Provincial Govt. has preferred this appeal against the order of acquittal of (1) Gaya Prasad Azad, (2) Hira Singh, (3) Ram Milan, and (4) Har Prasad Singh.

Hira Singh accused has not been arrested as it is said that he is on active service somewhere in Africa.

The charge against the accused was that on January 29, 1940, in Mohalla Chain Tola, Nawabganj, they were members of an unlawful assembly, the common object of which was to forcibly rescue four cows belonging to Mohammad Ishaq alias Gojai, (P. W. No. 1), as it was apprehended that they were going to be slaughtered; that in the prosecution of the said object they committed the offence of rioting punishable under s. 147, I. P. C.; that they caused simple hurt to Gojai and others, and grievous hurt to Mst. Shubraton, P. W. No. 5; that they set fire to the houses of Mohammad Ishaq, Mohammad Yasin and others and further voluntarily caused hurt to Abid Husain, Head Constable, P. W. No. 2, and some other constables in the discharge of their duties.

Nawabganj is about 23 miles from Gonda and the majority of the population in the town consists of Hindus.

Mohammad Ishaq alias Gojai is a beef seller in Mohalla Chain Tola, of Nawabganj, which is a short distance from the Police Station of Nawabganj.

The case for the prosecution is that Mohammad Ishaq on January 29, 1940, purchased four cows for Rs. 16 from Ali Raza, P. W. No. 3. Mohammad Ishaq did not pay the price of the cows but asked Ali Raza to accompany him (Mohammad Ishaq) and that he would pay the money and take a receipt at his house. Abdul Rahim, Mohammad Ishaq's cousin, Ali Raza and his five year old son Roshan went with the cows to Mohammad Ishaq's house. When they were near a school in Chain Tola they met two Hindus Ram Milan accused, and another man. It was 11 a. m. They asked them where they had got the cows from. Mohammad Ishaq replied that he had purchased them from Ali Raza. Ram Milan and his companion are alleged to have said that they would kill him and set his house on fire if he slaughtered the cows. Mohammad Ishaq kept quiet. The two Hindus then went towards the Bazar, and Mohammad Ishaq and his party proceeded to Chain Tola. Mohammad Ishaq tied the cows in his ghari and went to his shop with Ali Raza where they waited for Allah Bakhsh who had been sent for to write a receipt. Abdul Rahim who was sent to call Allah Bakhsh informed Mohammad Ishaq that Allah Bakhsh was not at his house. He was then sent a second time, but Allah Bakhsh could not be found. This was about 2 p. m.

A mob consisting of 100 or 150 persons headed by Ram Milan accused and armed with lathis, bamboos, kulhari and brickbats arrived at Mohammad Ishaq's house. Ram Milan and Hira Singh accused, forcibly untied the four cows from the ghari. Mohammad Ishaq and his party protested against this high-handedness and tried to snatch the cows. On this some of the rioters beat Mohammad Ishaq and his party. On their shouts for help some Muslim residents of the Mohalla arrived. Gobardhan accused ordered his companions to set fire to Mohammad Ishaq's house. Lachhman and Ram Khelawan accused lighted a match and set the house on fire. The rioters are alleged to have next threatened to beat the Muslims who came to help Mohammad Ishaq and to burn their houses. The Muslim party which had come to help Mohammad Ishaq was chased by some of the rioters and beaten, and their houses set on fire.

A Police party consisting of Abid Husain, Head Constable, and three constables, Mohammad Yaqub, Sharafat Husain and Durga Din with Bashir Juman and Phurti Din chaukidars, armed with guns arrived on the scene. It appears that Bashir chaukidar, P. W. No. 14, received information that a riot was going on. He saw some houses burning and rushed to the thana which was four furlongs from his house and informed the Head Constable who was in charge at that time. His statement was reduced to writing in the general diary at 2-10 p. m. The Head Constable ordered the rioters to disperse, and when they refused to do so, he ordered the constables to arrest them. Thereupon Har Prasad accused struck the Head Constable with a lathi on the head which felled him. He was removed by the chaukidars to the kachcha road at a place shown as No. 12 in the sketch plan at a distance of 35 paces. The Head Constable's gun was picked up by Durga Din constable. The rioters are alleged to have caused injuries to some of the chaukidars, and when they advanced towards the Police party shouting "seize their guns and beat them", the Police fired from a distance of 4 or 5 paces in self-defence. One Jagmohan among the rioters was fatally wounded and nine other persons received gunshot wounds. The crowd then dispersed. The Head Constable was taken to the Police Station where his injuries were attended to by the Medical Officer of Nawabganj dispensary.

The Station Officer who was away at village Newada returned by train, and was informed on the way that a riot had taken place. He went to the scene at about 4 p. m. when it is said that Mohammad Ishaq dictated the first information report, Ex. 3. He sent the injured persons for medical examination. Jagmohan died at the Hospital the following day and his dead body was sent for post mortem examination by the Second Officer, M. Mohammad Mirza, P. W. No. 30.

The Superintendent of Police reached the scene of occurrence about 6-30 p. m. Mr. Harpal Singh, Magistrate, First Class, reached about 7 p. m. in response to a telegram which was sent by the accused Gaya Prasad Azad, and the Deputy Commissioner reached about 8 p. m.

Gaya Prasad accused was arrested on January 29, 1940, that is on the day of the riot. Hira Singh was arrested on February 1, 1940, Ram Milan on February 16, 1940, and Har Prasad Singh presented himself in Court on February 23, 1940.

Abid Husain, Head Constable, had the following injuries:—

"1. Contused wound round, scalp everted, which is also torn in the middle 4" x 3" x 2" just behind the top of the head. This is scalp deep.

2. 5 small abrasions on the back of left middle and ring fingers. Each equal to size, small pea.

3. There has been slight bleeding from the nose.

4. small pea-sized abrasions over nose which is swollen." (Vide Ex. 12.)

Mohammad Yaqub constable had a swelling 2" x 2" on the back of the right shoulder (vide Ex. 27).

Sharafat Husain and Durga Din constables received no injuries.

Bashir chaukidar had a faint contusion 3" x 1" on the right side of the back (vide Ex. 28).

Jumman chaukidar had a faint contusion on the left knee 2" x 2" (vide Ex. 15).

Phurti Din chaukidar had no injuries.

It will thus appear that the Police party with the exception of one injury on the head of Abid Husain Head Constable had very minor injuries.

Mst. Shubratn had the following injuries:

"1. Fracture, compound, of the lower part of the right arm bone, Wound 1" x 3" bone deep (bone fractured) over the medial side of the right arm.

2. Swelling all over the back of right palm. A bone below the index finger is fractured.

3. Contusion 3" x 2" over the front and middle of right thigh", (vide Ex. 13).

Shakir Ali, P. W. No. 7, Mohammad Yasin, P. W. No. 6, Allah Bhej, P. W. No. 4, Abdul Rahim, Jhottoo, P. W. No. 11, Noorullah, P. W. No. 10, Natey Khan, P. W. No. 15, Gojai, P. W. No. 1, Ali Raza, P. W. No. 3, Mohammad Taqi Khan, P. W. No. 8, Roshan and Badal Chikwa also received injuries. They were simple. Some of them had contused wounds, (vide Exs. 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 and 26 respectively.)

The following persons received gunshot wounds:

- (1) Ram Het Ahir,
- (2) Nageshur,
- (3) Jagannath,
- (4) Sarju,
- (5) Gokul,
- (6) Nokhai,
- (7) Ram Daras Das and
- (8) Ram Parshad

(Vide Exs. 29, 31, 32, 33, 34, 42, 43 and 44 respectively).

There was another man named Ram Swarup who received six injuries of which five were contused wounds, (vide Ex. 35). He is not a witness in the case. The defence wanted to produce him, but he could not be traced and the allegation is that the Police made him disappear. There is nothing to show how he received these injuries though he has got more injuries than a good many others.

Jagmohan's post mortem report shows that the cause of death was shock and internal haemorrhage caused by gunshot wounds.

The accused denied the charge, pleaded enmity with the Police, and stated that they were not on the scene of occurrence.

The Hindus who received gunshot wounds stated that they were innocent passers-by, but as we are not concerned with their cases, no further comment is necessary.

Ram Milan accused works in the Sugar Mills at Nawabganj. He stated that he was not present at the scene of occurrence and did not join the rioters and that he did not go to Gojai's house and untie the cows. He further stated that he was run in by the Police in a dacoity case, but was acquitted on December 15, 1939. (Exhibit MM is the judgment of the Sessions Judge). In his defence he examined Ram Lal, D. W. No. 4, who produced the attendance register to show that the accused was on duty from 8 A. M. to 6 p. m. on January 29, 1940.

Har Prasad Singh pleaded enmity with the Police, and stated that the Police prosecuted him under s. 411, I. P. C., and in a riot case, but he was acquitted in both. He further stated that he was employed in the Sugar Mills, and was on duty from 10 A. M. to 6 p. m. on January 29, 1940. He denied beating the Head Constable.

It may be mentioned that he and Ram Milan are history sheeters.

Gaya Prasad Azad filed a long written statement in which he stated that cow slaughter was not permitted in Nawabganj, that Mohammad Ishaq with the help and connivance of the Police wanted to establish this as an old custom, that on January 29, 1940, it was known in the town that cows were going to be slaughtered, that he with Ram Swarup and 5 or 6 others went to Mohammad Ishaq's house to ask him not to slaughter the cows, that he saw a gathering of Muslims there who told him that they would not stop cow slaughter, that he left his companions at Mohammad Ishaq's house and went to the Police Station for help, that the Head Constable refused to record his report, that he went back to Mohammad Ishaq's house and saw a fight going on between the Hindus and Musalmans where Ram Swarup was seriously injured. Some badmash had set fire to Mohammad Ishaq's house and the fire spread to other houses, that soon the Police party arrived and fired indiscriminately injuring several innocent persons. He further stated that he was the President of the Congress Committee of Nawabganj and had been doing his best to stop corruption in the Police department which was very bad in Nawabganj. He filed a pamphlet Ex. AA which evidently was printed in November 1930. There are strong allegations against the Police for corruption.

Hira Singh was an employee of the Sugar Mills. He stated that he was an Aryasamajist and the Darogha who was a Muhammadan did not like him or his work. He further stated that on the day of the riot he was at the Mills from 10 A. M. to 6 P. M. In his defence he examined D. W's Nos. 3, 6 and 7 to prove that he was working at the Mills between 10 A. M. and 6 P. M.

The case for the prosecution may be divided into three parts namely the first incident which took place near Mohammad Ishaq's house at 11 A. M.; the second incident which took place at 2 P. M. when the Police party arrived to disperse the rioters and the third incident when the Station Officer reached the scene of occurrence about 4-30 P. M. and started the investigation.

In this appeal we are faced with three difficulties:—

(1) There is evidence to show that a large number of accused committed overt acts, but the Govt. has not appealed against their acquittal. We take it that the appeal has been filed against these four persons perhaps because they were the leaders and assailants of the Police party. There is overwhelming evidence to show that at the instigation of Go-bardhan, Lachhman and Ram Khelawan accused set fire to Mohammad Ishaq's house, and some of the witnesses who testify to this incident are witnesses against the present four persons. If we accept their evidence against these persons it means that though their evidence was disbelieved on material points as far as the other accused persons were concerned yet we accept the remaining portion of their evidence as far as these accused are concerned which, to say the least, is unfair.

(2) It has come out in evidence that before the trial of this case was concluded in the Court of Session the D. I. G. rewarded all the Police witnesses and two outsiders, namely Mohammad Rafiq, P. W. No. 16 and Sultan Ali, P. W. No. 25. The date when the reward was distributed is not apparent from the record, but it certainly was before the trial was concluded. P. W. No. 37 M. Ghulam Ahmad, Station Officer of Nawabganj, has made the following statement:—

"From the Reward Grant Fund, D. I. G. sanctioned the reward of Rs. 100, to the Head Constable, Rs. 50, to each constable and Rs. 10, to each of the chaukidars Sultan Ali and Rafiq."

The word "sanctioned" used by the learned Judge is not accurate. The Urdu record shows that the D. I. G. distributed the amounts himself.

Durga Din constable P. W. No. 26, admits that he received a reward of Rs. 50, in this case.

This action of the authorities has given a chance to the defence to urge that the evidence of the witnesses who received rewards should not be accepted as it is tainted. It is regrettable that the distribution of the rewards was not delayed till the decision of the case. Such an action is calculated to prejudicially affect the fair trial of the case against the accused and we cannot help expressing our disapproval of the distribution of rewards to Police and other witnesses before Courts of Law had finally pronounced judicial findings. We confess we have not in our experience come across such action before, and we desire to lay down for future guidance that similar action repeated in future may lead to a large body of otherwise good evidence being eliminated altogether from consideration. Having regard to the circumstances of this case we are compelled to treat the evidence of such witnesses as suspicious and tainted.

In this case the action of the Police in firing on the mob is challenged. The defence urged that Durga Din constable was not in Nawabganj on January 29, 1940. He had gone out and returned on January 30, as the entry in the general diary shows.

Sultan Ali and Mohammad Rafiq, who were two independent witnesses, have not shown any act of bravery, and it is difficult to understand why they were rewarded.

Sultan Ali, who is a postman, sent a petition, Ex. Z to his superior officer in which he stated that about 2 P. M. when he started for the post office and came out of his house he saw a mob and rushed back to his house and locked himself in. According to this he cannot be said to be an eye-witness and yet we find that he has given a long statement in Court, and identified a large number of accused persons as rioters. It is unfortunate that Ex. Z was not put to the witness in cross-examination as the defence did not know about it until he had been examined, and it is doubtful whether it is admissible in evidence, though an attempt has been made to prove it by the evidence of Kunj Behari Lal, D. W. No. 8, only. We do not propose to make use of Ex. Z for the purposes of this case and have referred to it only incidentally.

If the evidence of the seven Police witnesses and Mohammad Rafiq, P. W. No. 16, and Sultan Ali, P. W. No. 25, is rejected as tainted, as we hold it to be, the case of the prosecution becomes very weak, and certainly the serious charge of assaulting the Police while in discharge of their duty cannot be maintained.

(3) Some of the important witnesses have not identified the accused on the spot. On the other hand there are some witnesses who have identified the accused among the rioters.

The prosecution have examined no less than 35 witnesses in this case.

We shall first take up the charge under s. 332/149, I. P. C., which arose out of the second incident as great stress has been laid upon it by the learned Assistant Govt. Advocate. His contention is that there is overwhelming evidence against each of the accused, and the learned Judge has wrongly and without sufficient reasons rejected this evidence. (Their Lordships considered the evidence and rejected it. The judgment then continued). It is thus clear that the charge against the accused under s. 332/149, I. P. C., is not proved.

There can be no doubt that there was a riot, (though the number of the rioters has been greatly exaggerated by the witnesses), that the houses were burnt, that the common object of the rioters was to forcibly take away the cows, and in the prosecution of their common object they caused simple and grievous hurt.

It was strongly urged by the learned Counsel for the defence that the Police fired indiscriminately and injured a large number of persons who were either sightseers, or passers-by, and in order to justify their action they have falsely stated that when the mob was at a distance of 4 or 5 paces they fired in self-defence. We are not holding an inquiry into the conduct of the Police, but the evidence and the circumstances of the case make it very improbable that the firing was resorted to by the Police when the mob was at a distance of 4 or 5 paces. When the Head Constable was knocked down by the accused Har Prasad Singh, and the gun was picked up by Durga Din constable, and the mob was so furious, as is alleged by the prosecution, one would have expected that the Police would fire then and there at Har Prasad Singh who was the actual assailant and well-known to the Police, but we find that the Head Constable was removed to the road about 35 paces away and then the firing was resorted to. It is said that when the Police reached the kachcha road 60 or 70 rioters advanced towards them shouting that the Policemen should be killed and their guns snatched, and that when they were at a distance of 4 or 5 paces they raised their lathis and then the Police constables fired, (vide the statement of Durga Din constable P. W. No. 26). Thirteen rounds were fired in all, and as far as we have been able to ascertain shots were fired from 303 rifles. No shots were fired in the air to frighten the mob, nor is there any evidence to show that the shots were fired to frighten the mob. They were actually fired at them, and if they were fired at a distance of 4 or 5 paces, we are of opinion that more serious injuries would have been caused to the rioters because from this close range the shots would not have spread out but gone in a bunch and shattered the part they hit. But we find from the medical evidence that Nageshwar had only one gun shot wound $4\frac{1}{2} \times \frac{1}{4}$ in diameter on the lower part of the right shoulder-blade (vide Ex. 31).

Jagannath had two wounds :

(1) G. S. wound $\frac{1}{2}$ in diameter $\frac{1}{2}$ deep over the medial side and right side of the thigh.

(2) G. S. wound $\frac{1}{2}$ in diameter "deep over the outer side and below the left knee joint" (vide Ex. 32) Sarju had 5 wounds all $\frac{1}{2}$ in diameter no doubt caused by five different pellets, (vide Ex. 33).

Ram Daras Das had :

thigh (middle) 1½ c. m. round", (vite Ex. 43).

We take it that it was not a bullet mark, but an injury caused by stray shot, similarly Ram Prasad had a bullet mark 1½ below the left shoulder blade.

The injuries to the other persons are also more or less superficial, and on a careful examination of the medical report it would appear that a good many injuries were caused on the back and not on the front of the body which suggests that they were caused when the wounded persons were running away. If they were advancing towards the Police party, the injuries would have been on the front part of the body. We therefore do not believe the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution when they say that the shots were fired from a range of 4 or 5 paces.

The evidence as to the number of rioters is conflicting. Some witnesses put it down to 100 or 150. Durga Din P. W. No. 26, puts it down to 200 or 250. According to Mohammad Rafiq, P. W. No. 16, he saw 100 Hindus going towards Gojai's house. P. W. No. 17, Ibrahim, stated that he saw 30 or 32 men with 2 Nagas coming from the side of the Sugar Mills but according to him the crowd swelled later in the bazar to 100 or 150 men. The learned Judge has found that "the original party of the rioters consisted of members not more than 50 and less than 20 and that of them 12 or 16 were armed."

After considering all the evidence we are inclined to take the view that the number of rioters did not exceed 50 or thereabout.

The charge under ss. 436/149, I. P. C., may be disposed of in a few lines. We are of opinion that the common intention of all the accused was not to burn the houses. There is definite evidence that at the instigation of one man (Gobardhan), Lachhman and Ram Khelawan set fire to one of the chhapars. In our opinion, no common intention is proved, and all the accused cannot be convicted under s. 436/149, I. P. C. This charge against the present accused must fail.

As regards the first incident which furnishes the basis for the charges under ss. 147, 323/149 and 325/149, I. P. C., the prosecution relied upon the evidence of Mohammad Ishaq alias Gojai, P. W. No. 1, Ali Raza, P. W. No. 3, and Noorullah, P. W. No. 10. According to their evidence Ram Milan accompanied by another Hindu, whom the witnesses were not able to identify, met Gojai, his cousin Abdul Rahim, Ali Raza and his son Roshan in the bazar at 11 A. M. on January 29, 1940, while they were proceeding to Gojai's house with the four cows purchased by Gojai from Ali Raza. Ram Milan is alleged to have told Gojai and his party that he should not slaughter cows, else he would be beaten and his house will be burnt.

Abdul Rahim and Roshan have not been produced and the only witnesses to this particular incident are therefore Gojai and Ali Raza.

The evidence of Ali Raza, P. W. No. 3, can be disposed of with the remark that he did not mention the name of Ram Milan in the Court of the Committing Magistrate.

Gojai would have us believe that he took no notice of the threat and quietly went with his party to his house where he waited along with others up to 2 P. M. in order to obtain the services of some scribe to get a receipt written. We are not at all convinced that there was any very great difficulty to obtain a scribe for writing out an ordinary receipt for three hours from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.

We cannot in the circumstances therefore rely upon the solitary statement of Gojai, a highly interested witness, in proof of the meeting of Ram Milan at 11 A. M. and the open threat held out by him to beat Gojai and burn his house.

At 2 P. M. Gojai states that he heard an uproar at his house. When he came out along with his companions he saw 100 or 150 persons standing armed with lathis, bamboos kulhari and bricks. Ram Milan and Hira Singh united the four cows and brought them outside the ghari and when he tried to stop them from taking away the cows he was beaten with lathis by some from the crowd of rioters, but he was unable to identify any of them. This incident was witnessed according to Gojai by Abdul Rahim, Noorullah and Ali Raza. Abdul Rahim has not been produced in the case and Noorullah, P. W. No. 10, frankly states that he did not know whether the two persons who brought the cows out of ghari were among the accused in the dock. Ali Raza, P. W. No. 3, states in his examination-in-chief that two of the rioters went inside the ghari and brought out the four cows round which was tied a rope, but he could not identify those two persons. Gojai himself did not state that he received any beating at the hands of Ram Milan and his companion and we are not prepared to hold upon the evidence produced in the case that the charges under ss. 147, 323/149 and 325/149 I. P. C. are brought home to the accused.

There is no doubt that 13 persons were injured on the complainant's side, including the Police party, out of whom one, namely, Mst. Shubratani, P. W. No. 5, received grievous hurt. There is however no satisfactory evidence on the record to show as to who were the assailants of the injured persons. We have already dealt at some length with the difficulties which confronted us in accepting the evidence of a number of prosecution witnesses. The evidence of these witnesses was disbelieved by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge on material points against the other accused persons against whom no appeal has been filed by the Provincial Govt. We find it hard to believe that important prosecution witnesses such as Mohammad Taqi, P. W. No. 8, Noorullah, P. W. No. 10, Allah Baksh, P. W. No. 12 and Hasan Ali, P. W. No. 13 could possibly have missed identifying the present four accused who were undoubtedly the ring leaders the rioters according to the prosecution case.

Mohammad Taqi identified Ram Milan and Gaya Prasad besides four others, but he did not identify Hira Singh and Har Prasad Singh. In his statement Exs. A and B recorded by the Sub-Inspector on April 15, 1940, he did not mention Gaya Prasad Singh but Ram Milan only.

Noorullah, P. W. No. 10, who, according to the prosecution evidence, witnessed the advent of Ram Milan and Hira Singh and the removal of the cows by them, was unable to identify them.

Allah Baksh, P. W. No. 12, mentioned only the name of Ram Milan but admitted that he was unarmed. He appears to bear some ill-feeling towards Ram Milan on account of the fact that the latter did not pass his cart of sugarcane about one or one and a half months before the occurrence and this led to a fight between the two.

Hasan Ali, P. W. No. 13, admits that all the 43 accused have been known to him from before the occurrence but he did not notice them among the rioters with the exception of six persons other than the present four accused.

Although these prosecution witnesses are alleged to have identified some out of the rioters in the crowd, it is at least remarkable that they failed to notice all the four accused who admittedly took a prominent part in the riot. The prosecution evidence as a whole does not, in our opinion, establish beyond reasonable doubt the participation of any of the four accused. We do not therefore find it possible to hold that the present accused are guilty either of a charge under s. 147, I. P. C. or the charge under s. 323/149, I. P. C.

As regards the charge under s. 325/149, I. P. C. Mst. Shubratani, P. W. No. 5, no doubt received grievous injuries. She deposes to have seen Ali Raza, Roshan, Abdul Rahim, Gojai and Noorullah injured and bleeding at the door of their houses. She also deposes to have seen Khelawan and one other man set fire to Gojai's house. She herself was beaten by Ram Shankar accused with lathis at her house and Kedar Nath accused set fire to her house. She identified eight persons out of whom one was Gaya Prasad. Her son Mohammad Yasin, P. W. No. 6, did not identify Gaya Prasad but identified Hira Singh. No appeal has been filed against Ram Shankar or Kedar Nath. No part is alleged by these witnesses to have been assigned to Gaya Prasad and Hira Singh. In the absence of satisfactory or reliable evidence to connect any of the accused with complicity in the crime of committing riot and causing simple and grievous injuries, we are driven to the conclusion that the case against the accused is not free from reasonable doubt and the learned Assistant Sessions Judge was justified in giving the benefit of the doubt to the accused and acquitting them. We therefore hold that the charge under s. 325/149, I. P. C. also is not substantiated.

Nothing turns upon the third incident which merely relates to the investigation of the case by the Station Officer.

As the prosecution evidence in the case in our opinion does not satisfactorily establish the charges against any of the accused, it is not necessary to deal with the defence evidence. Before taking leave of this case we should like, however, to observe that the learned Assistant Sessions Judge's approach to the consideration of the prosecution evidence does not commend itself to us. While dealing with the evidence of each prosecution witness the learned Judge has unnecessarily introduced the defence evidence and has rejected the prosecution evidence largely because in his opinion the defence evidence established the innocence of the accused. The learned Judge should in our opinion have examined the prosecution evidence witness by witness on its own merits and rejected it, if upon a careful analysis and scrutiny of the evidence he found that it was not true or reliable to support the prosecution case. Instead of examining the prosecution evidence on its intrinsic worth the learned Judge tested its trustworthiness in the light of the defence evidence, and here we think the procedure adopted by him was not justified.

The result is that we dismiss the appeal against all the accused including Hira Singh, although the latter has not been apprehended and has not been represented before us. We direct that they be set at liberty forthwith unless wanted in connection with some other matter.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Revision No. 1828 of

SKEMP, J.

JAHANA AND OTHERS—CONVICTS

PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 379—In execution of decree property belonging to other person than the judgment-debtor taken away by bailiff—Property taken back by person owning it and by his associates—No offence under s. 379.

It is an absurd doctrine to apply to the people of a Punjab village that if their property is wrongly taken by some one acting under colour of Govt. office it is their duty to go to the Police or to the Court and that it is a crime to take back the property.

Where in execution of a decree against a certain person, property belonging to another person is being wrongfully taken away by the bailiff and the latter and his associates take back that property, this is not an offence under s. 379, I. P. C.

Cr. R. from an order of the Additional, Sessions Judge, Gujrat, dated October 2, 1940.

Mr. Manohar Lal Mehra, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Abdul Aziz Khan, for the Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Order.—Ismail, Mohammad Din and Jahana have petitioned against their convictions under s. 379, I. P. C., and sentences of six months rigorous imprisonment. In execution of a decree for Rs. 260 against, Bakhu, a party including the decree-holder, Amir Chand and his brother, two bailiffs and others went to attach Bakhu's property. According to the prosecution they found Bakhu tethering a she-buffalo. They attached it and Bakhu being unable to provide a sapurdar they were taking it away along with its katta or young one when Bakhu, the three petitioners and Bakhu's daughter Mst. Rahmon attacked them and rescued the buffalo. The decree-holder took the katta to his own house. Five persons were prosecuted of whom the Magistrate acquitted Mst. Rahmon, put Bakhu who is 65 years of age on security under s. 562, Criminal P. C., but convicted and sentenced the others. Their appeals were rejected by the Sessions Judge. Musammam Rahmon who is married to Dadu claimed the buffalo and the katta as her own. This was found as a fact by the Magistrate who said:

"It is however proved as stated by Jahan Khan Zaidar, Amir Chand and other defence witnesses that the she-buffalo does belong to Mst. Rahmon."

He did not believe her story that it was taken forcibly by the decree-holder's brother in front of her house. The learned Sessions Judge said that having read the defence evidence for himself he agreed with the Magistrate's conclusions. The bailiff's report and the prosecution witnesses said that the decree-holder and his brother were struck; the evidence in Court refers to one blow each. The Magistrate did not believe this because they did not get medically examined. I do not think that this is a good argument. It is probable that some force was used. Indeed there is an expression in the Magistrate's judgment which indicates that he thought that force might have been used. He said that "when the she-buffalo was attached the proper course for Mst. Rahmon and the other accused was to file an objection petition in the Civil Court and not to take away the she-buffalo by force."

However, he found that there was no force and the offence was one under s. 379, I. P. C., only. The Magistrate appears to have thought that because Mst. Rahmon's buffalo had been taken by bailiffs acting under colour of their office it was wrong for Mst. Rahmon and her associates to take it back. I have quoted one passage which illustrates this view and elsewhere he said:

"Regarding the defence version if Mst. Rahmon had been robbed of her heifer she ought to have made immediately a report to the Police and her indifference has not been explained by the defence."

It is an absurd doctrine to apply to the people of Punjab village that if their property is wrongly taken by some one acting under colour of Govt. office it is their duty to go to the Police or to the Court and that it is crime to take back the property. Put in more technically legal form, the petitioners are not guilty under s. 379 because they did not commit theft as defined in s. 378, I. P. C. The definition says:

"Whoever, intending to take dishonestly any movable property out of the possession of any person without that person's consent, moves that property in order to such taking, is said to commit theft."

"Dishonestly" is defined in s. 24, "whoever does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain or wrongful loss." Musammāt Rahmon and the petitioners had no intention of causing wrongful gain or wrongful loss but merely of recovering Mst. Rahmon's property. There is no offence under s. 379. The convictions and sentences must be and hereby are set aside. The petitioners who were already enlarged on bail by Abdul Rashid, J. are to be discharged from their bail bonds. The conviction of Bakhu is also set aside and he is to be discharged from his bond.

D. Conviction set aside.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4, O. XXI, rr. 90 to 93—Execution sale set aside—Suit by auction-purchaser against decree-holder, judgment-debtor and another decree-holder who had shared sale proceeds rateably, decreed—At hearing of appeal judgment-debtor dying and his representatives substituted—Second appeal by auction-purchaser impleading original defendants as parties in spite of judgment-debtor's death—Suit held abated only against representatives of judgment-debtor—Execution sale—Judgment-debtor proved to have no title to property sold—Auction-purchaser, if can sue to recover purchase price—His remedy—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 97, 62—Execution sale confirmed—Objections subsequently allowed and confirmed in revision—Suit by auction-purchaser to recover purchase price—Article applicable—Starting point for limitation.

An auction-purchaser filed a suit for the recovery of the sale price, subsequent to the setting aside of the execution sale, against the decree-holder X, the judgment-debtor Y and another decree-holder Z who had shared the sale proceeds rateably along with X and the suit was decreed. All the defendants appealed. At the hearing of the appeal Y died and his legal representatives were substituted in his place. The appeal having been allowed, the auction-purchaser filed a second appeal against X, Y and Z although Y was already dead:

Held, that the appeal abated only against the representatives of Y but not against X and Z as the auction-purchaser could sue only X and Z without adding Y as a party to the suit.

Where an execution sale is confirmed and the objections to the sale are subsequently allowed and also confirmed in revision, a suit by the auction-purchaser for recovery of the purchase price on failure of consideration for sale, falls under Art. 97 and not under Art. 62, Lim. Act and the cause of action arises either from the date of the order allowing the objections or from the date of the order in revision confirming the objections. 171 Ind. Cas. 923 (4) and 135 Ind. Cas. 63 (5), relied on, Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Man- dar (2) and 118 Ind. Cas. 203 (3), explained and relied on.

The auction purchaser in Court sale is not entitled to maintain a suit for the recovery of purchase money in the event of the judgment-debtor being proved not to have any title to the property sold. His remedy is confined within the limits of O. XXI, r. 93. 178 Ind. Cas. 1 (8) and 175 Ind. Cas. 347 (9), followed, 138 Ind. Cas. 47 (6) and 96 Ind. Cas. 64 (7), dissented from.

A. from the judgment and decree of the Additional Judge, Peshawar, dated March 28, 1940.

Sh. Mohammad Shafi, for the Appellant.

Sh. Allah Baksh and Mr. L. Nanak Chand, for Respondent No. 1.

Almond, J. C.—The facts of this litigation are as follows: Ghulam Raza obtained a decree for Rs. 300 against Ahmad Bakhsh and Ram Singh in 1924. The decree-holder got the house now in suit put up for auction in execution of his decree and sold on January 19, 1932 to Mirza Jan for Rs. 700 subject to a mortgage of Rs. 2,000 in favour of one Inzar Gul. On February 20, 1932 this sale was confirmed. Before it was confirmed, objections to the sale had been put in by Abdul Latif, Mst. Amina Begam and Iqbal Sultan; the representatives-in-interest of Mustaqim who had also been a defendant in Ghulam Raza's suit, and those objections were also dismissed on February 20, 1932. Abdul Latif thereafter died and further proceedings on the objections were continued by Mst. Amina Begam and Iqbal Sultan and eventually their ownership of the property was established by the order of the Additional Judge, Peshawar, dated March 7, 1935 in Civil Appeal No. 7 of that year. The finding was confirmed on an application for revision made to this Court—Civil Revision No. 156 of 1935 Ghulam Raza v. Iqbal Sultan (1) decided on June 17, 1935. One other preliminary fact need be stated viz., that out of the sum of Rs. 700 paid by Mirza Jan for the house, Rs. 318-8-0 were paid to the decree-holder, Ghulam Raza, Rs. 175 were paid to Tila Mohammad who had made an application for rateable distribution of the assets and Rs. 146-8-0 were paid to Ahmad Bakhsh the judgment-debtor. The balance of the sum went in the expenses of the sale. Mirza Jan has now brought a suit against Ghulam Raza, Ahmad Bakhsh and Tila Mohammad for the recovery of Rs. 700 principal and Rs. 399 interest on the failure of the consideration for the sale. His suit was decreed by the trial Court in the following form: Ghulam Raza was ordered to pay Rs. 318-8-0 plus costs of the sale and the other two defendants were ordered to pay the sums which they had actually received.

Against that decree, Ghulam Raza alone appealed to the District Court, but the Additional Judge set aside the decree in toto. He held that in the first place the suit was time-barred and in the second place that even if the plaintiff had any cause of action for recovery of the purchase money in equity, there were clearly no equities in his favour in the present case as he had brought the suit with some delay and in the meantime the remedy of Ghulam Raza against his judgment-debtor had become time-barred. Against that decree of the District Court the plaintiff has presented this further appeal. The appeal was filed against the three original defendants in spite of the fact that at the hearing of the appeal before the District Judge Ahmad Bakhsh had already died and his legal representatives were substituted for him as respondents in that case. Learned Counsel for the contesting respondent have argued that the appeal abates in toto as it was filed against a defendant who was dead. Learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant concedes that his appeal must fail as against the representatives of Ahmad Bakhsh but contends that it does not abate in toto. We are of opinion that the appeal does not abate against the remaining respondents for it is evident that on the plaintiff's claim he is entitled to sue Ghulam Raza and Tila Mohammad even if he never made Ahmad Bakhsh a party to the suit at all. We are therefore of opinion that the appeal does not abate as against the remaining respondents.

The two other points which have been argued in this appeal are the question of limitation and the question whether a suit lies for the relief which the plaintiff claims. As regards the question of limitation learned Counsel for the appellant contends that Art. 97 applies, whereas learned Counsel for the respondent contends that Art. 62 applies but even on the cases on which Counsel for respondent relies Art. 97 is clearly applicable. The two cases which he refers to are Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (2) and Abdul Rahim Fateh Mahomed v. Kadu, 118 Ind. Cas. 203 (3). In the first of these cases it was held that either Art. 97 or Art. 62 applied and in the latter case it was laid down that Art. 62 applied if the sale was void ab initio and that Art. 97 applied if the consideration subsequently failed. That is also the ratio decidendi which has been given in the two cases relied upon by Counsel for the appellant, namely, Hans Ram Singh v. Kishore Lal, 171 Ind. Cas. 923 (4) and Chanan Mal v. Maharaj (5). We have no doubt that Art. 97 applies and that the cause of action arose either from the order of the District Judge in March 1935 or from the subsequent order of this Court in June 1935. From either of those dates the suit is within time.

As regards the maintainability of the suit there are conflicting rulings. The leading cases on the subject are, Mehar Chand v. Milkhi Ram (6) and Reshee Case Law v. Manik Molla (7), on the one side, and Amar Nath v. Firm Chotelal Durga Prasad (8) and Paliram v. Laheria Sarai Central Co-operative Bank Ltd. (9) on the other. These latter two rulings do not appear to have been brought to the notice of the trial Court which referred to rulings of earlier dates. The Lahore and Calcutta view is to the effect that a suit for the repayment of the sale money lies on equitable grounds. In the Calcutta case relief was actually refused to the plaintiff on the ground that there were no equities in his favour as the decree-holder had represented the property sold, by inadvertence or perhaps by carelessness, to be that of the judgment-debtor and that in the meantime the decree-holder's right to recover from the judgment-debtor had become time-barred. The Lahore view goes beyond this and holds that there is always an implied representation by the decree-holder that the judgment-debtor has some interest in the property which the decree-holder gets up for sale and if the judgment-debtor has no such interest, then the auction purchaser is entitled to recover his purchase money from the decree-holder unless there are equities against the auction purchaser. The view of the Allahabad and the Patna High Courts is that the remedy of an auction purchaser in cases in which the judgment-debtor has no interest in the property is confined to a right to recover his purchase money under O. XXI, r. 93, when the sale has been set aside under r. 92, and that apart from that right he has no equitable relief by way of suit. In this connection they referred to the fact that r. 93, reproduced s. 315 of the Code of 1882 with an important modification. Section 315 of the old Code read as follows :

"When a sale of immovable property is set aside under s. 310-A, s. 312 or s. 313 or when it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property which purported to be sold and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it, the purchaser shall be entitled to receive back his purchase money from any person to whom the purchase money has been paid."

The present rule reads as follows :

"When a sale of immovable property is set aside under r. 92, the purchaser shall be entitled to an order for the repayment of his purchase money against any person to whom it has been paid."

The argument of the Allahabad and Patna High Courts is to the effect that the Legislature by removing the additional clause in re-enacting the Code in 1908 intended to deprive the auction purchaser of any remedy except that given by the new rule. The argument of the Lahore and Calcutta Courts on the other hand is that the additional clause was removed by the Legislature as it was unnecessary in view of the fact that the auction purchaser had already another remedy by way of equitable relief to be sought in a separate suit. Under s. 9, Civil P. C., the Courts have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature except suits of which their cognizance is expressly or impliedly barred, and the question for decision in this case is whether this suit is impliedly barred by the provisions of O. XXI, r. 93, Civil P. C.

We are of opinion that it is so impliedly barred. When the Legislature removed the additional clause in re-enacting the Civil P. C., they must have done so deliberately. There was no other provision of statute law under which the auction purchaser could recover the sale money when he was ousted by a paramount title and we think that the reasonable inference was that the Legislature intended that the rights of the auction purchaser to get a sale set aside were to be confined within the limits of O. XXI, s. 93. In dealing with the general subject of execution provision has been made in which under certain circumstances suits can be brought to establish rights which have been denied in execution. No such provision has now been made in O. XXI, in the case of an auction purchaser who is subsequently ousted by a paramount title although he had some remedy under the old Code. To grant the relief which the plaintiff now seeks by a separate suit would, in our opinion, amount to nothing more than granting him a relief which the Legislature meant to deny him. The plaintiff in the present case sued solely on the basis of failure of consideration. At the hearing of this appeal, learned Counsel did make a suggestion that there had been some sort of misrepresentation or fraud on the part of the plaintiff who was well aware at the time he got the property put up to auction that the judgment-debtor had no interest in it, but that case was not set out in the plaint and where fraud is alleged it must be specifically pleaded. We are, therefore, not prepared to hold that the plaintiff has any other cause of action except the failure of consideration. We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

S. Appeal dismissed.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

Second Appeal No. 682 of 1940

October 11, 1940

BECKETT, J.

MANAK KHAN—DEFENDANT—

versus

Mst. MULKHAN BANO—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT

Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act (VIII of 1939) s. 2 (ii)—Failure to maintain wife, whether should be wilful—Cause of failure, is immaterial, for divorce—S. 2 (ii), if can be applied retrospectively.

There is nothing in the wording of cl. (ii) of s. 2, Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act to suggest that the failure to maintain wife must be wilful. It is absolutely immaterial whether the failure to maintain is due to poverty, failing health, loss of work or to any other cause whatsoever. Divorce can be granted on grounds which do not necessarily involve any deliberate default on the part of the husband.

Section 2 (ii) must be taken as intended to apply with retrospective effect. When an Act is intended to provide a remedy for what is considered to be an existing unsatisfactory state of affairs, the intention is clearly that the remedy should be applied even though this may involve giving retrospective effect to some of its provisions.

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated April 20, 1940.

Mr. Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. A. Cooper, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff is suing for a divorce under the Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act, 1939, the main ground being that her husband has been in jail for several years and has failed to maintain her. The trial Court refused to grant her a divorce, holding that there had been no wilful default on the part of the husband. This decision was reversed by the District Court which granted a decree in favour of the plaintiff holding that failure to provide for the plaintiff's maintenance for a period of two years had been proved. The first point urged in this second appeal is that it is only wilful default which entitles a Muslim woman to seek a divorce under the Act on the ground that her husband had not been maintaining her and that there is no question of wilful default when a man is unable to maintain his wife by reason of the fact that he has been put in prison. Section 2 (ii) of the Act merely provides that a woman married under Muslim Law shall be entitled to obtain a decree for the dissolution of her marriage on the ground that the husband has failed to provide for her maintenance for a period of two years. There is nothing in the wording of this clause to suggest that the failure must be wilful and the other clauses show that divorce may be granted on grounds which do not necessarily involve any deliberate default on the part of the husband. That such is the plain meaning of the clause is the view taken by Mr. A. C. Ghose in his Commentary on the Act. Before the passing of the Act, it had been held that mere inability to maintain a wife was no ground for granting a divorce. The author considers that the effect of the present clause is to supersede this view of the law. He considers that it is now absolutely immaterial whether the failure to maintain is due to poverty, failing health, loss of work or to any other cause whatsoever. I see no reason for differing from him as to the effect of the clause.

The second ground urged on behalf of the appellant is that the Act, which affects rights and obligations such as those of a husband, cannot be taken as intended to apply with retrospective effect, and that divorce cannot be granted under the Act of 1939 on grounds which involve anything which happened before that year. So far as the present case is concerned, the rule of interpretation will be found in Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, Edn. 8, at pp. 196 and 197. A similar case arose in England under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895. Section 4 enacted that a married woman might apply to a Court of summary jurisdiction for an order under the Act when she had been forced by the persistent cruelty of her husband to live apart from him. This section was held to be retrospective in its operation and to apply to acts of cruelty before the Act came into force. When an Act is intended to provide a remedy for what is considered to be an existing unsatisfactory state of affairs, the intention is clearly that the remedy should be applied even though this may involve giving retrospective effect to some of its provisions. In the present instance, the wording of s. 4 shows that it is intended to provide a remedy for wives who have been deprived of maintenance. In these circumstances, there is no reason to differ from the English decision on the same point. The only other arguments which have been advanced relate to questions which have been concluded by findings of fact. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed. The parties are left to bear their own costs in this Court.

U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934), s. 7—Section is mandatory—Controversy as to applicability of s. 7—Court holding s. 7 applies, and ordering stay—Order is appealable.

Section 7, U. P. Encum. Estates Act is mandatory and gives no discretion to the executing Court. Where a controversy arises between the parties as to whether s. 7 applies and the Court holding that it applies, orders stay of execution, the order staying execution is appealable. 189 Ind. Cas. 848 (2), applied.

Ex. S. As. from the decision of the District Judge, Kumaun, dated March 30, 1939.

Mr. S. N. Seth, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The two connected appeals arise out of two orders of the Court below holding that no appeal lay to the District Judge from the orders of the execution Court staying the execution proceedings. It appears that the appellant obtained a decree on April 16, 1937, against the respondent on the basis of two pro-notes, one dated August 10, 1936, and the other dated January 11, 1937. The decree-holder proceeded with the execution of the decrees. Before the decrees were passed, the judgment-debtor had made an application under s. 4, Encum. Estates Act. An order under s. 6, was passed by the Collector on October 30, forwarding the application to the Special Judge. The judgment-debtor made an application to the execution Court praying for the stay of execution proceedings under s. 7, sub-cl. (2), Encum. Estates Act. The decree-holder objected and contended that for certain reasons s. 7 (2) was not applicable, and that the judgment-debtor was not entitled to have the execution proceedings stayed. The application was granted. Upon appeal by the decree-holder, the learned District Judge considered himself bound by a ruling of this Court in Husain Bhai v. Beltu Shah (1), which held that no appeal lay from an order staying execution. There was some conflict of judicial opinion on this point at one time. The matter has however been set at rest by a Full Bench of this Court in Har Narain v. Mathura Prasad (2). In that case an application for stay of execution proceedings was made under s. 3, Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act, Act X of 1937. The Civil Judge allowed the application and stayed the execution of the decree. The decree-holder appealed against the order of stay and the question for determination was whether an appeal lay. The learned Chief Justice in delivering the judgment of the Bench made the following observation :

"The test to be applied in determining whether an order is appealable or not may be stated thus—does the order conclusively determine the rights and liabilities of parties in a controversy which has arisen between them and which relates to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree? Now, in the present instance, there was a controversy between the parties as to the judgment-debtor's right to have the execution of the decree postponed during the operation of the Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act..... There therefore was in the present instance a conclusive determination of a question arising between the parties and which related to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree. The order therefore in our judgment was appealable."

Applying this test to the present case, it would appear that the order staying execution proceedings was appealable because a controversy between the parties had arisen which was conclusively determined. The judgment-debtor claimed that he was entitled to have the execution proceedings stayed by virtue of s. 7, of the Act. The contention of the decree-holder was that that section did not apply to the facts of the case and the judgment-debtor's application was not tenable. If s. 7, did apply the Court was bound to stay the proceedings. It had no discretion in the matter and the order of stay would not be in the exercise of a discretion vested in the Court. On the other hand, if s. 7, for any reason was inapplicable, the Court would be at liberty to proceed with the execution proceedings. That being so, in my opinion, the Full Bench case fully applies to the present case and the order of the execution Court was appealable to the learned District Judge. The case cited by the learned District Judge and several other cases where similar view has been taken, are distinguishable because in all those cases the execution Court had the discretion to stay the execution proceedings temporarily and the order of stay was passed in the exercise of that discretion. Section 7, Encum. Estates Act, is mandatory and gives no discretion to the executing Court. In these circumstances, I hold that the order of the Court below was erroneous. I would therefore allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and remand the case to the learned District Judge with the direction that the appeal be registered under its original number and be decided according to law. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result. The court-fee shall be refunded.

AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law — Widow — Maintenance — Suit for, against manager — Manager's duty to prove binding nature of debts sought to be taken into account for reducing family income—Costs in such suit—Nature of widow's right to maintenance — Her separate property, if can be taken into account—Debts—Manager—Necessity—Purchase of new lands and litigation are not prima facie family necessities.

In a suit by a Hindu widow for maintenance, against the manager of the joint family, the manager is under obligation to prove that the debts which according to him have to be taken into account in ascertaining family income are binding on the family; in other words, the manager's ipse dixit is not sufficient to show for this purpose that the debts are binding on the family. It may be that the standard of proof, so to say, required for establishing the binding nature of the debts need not be so high as in a suit in which the dispute arises either as between the co-parceners in a suit for partition or as between the creditors and the other members of the family. But nevertheless, there must be some prima facie reliable evidence to show that the debts are binding on the family when the manager of the family wants to have those debts to be taken into account for the purpose of reducing the family income available for calculating the rate of maintenance. [p. 571, col. 2.]

true and the amount claimed is not out of all proportion to the amount that is found to be due, the widow claiming maintenance ought not to be mulcted in costs, when she has established her right to maintenance, a right to which she is entitled and which was refused unreasonably and unlawfully by the defendants. [p. 575, col. 1.]

There is, it is true, a distinction made in some of the text-books, between the productive and unproductive character of a widow's stridhanam property, but this does not seem to be based on any principle, if it is borne in mind that it is a right of the widow to be maintained out of her husband's estate or what was once her husband's estate, and it is the duty of those on whom her husband's estate has devolved to maintain the widow out of that property in the same degree of comfort to which she was used during her husband's lifetime. It is immaterial if she had any private means of her own or could have them by selling some of the jewellery which would not be required by her after her husband's death. Had the husband remained alive, it would have been his duty to maintain his wife out of his own estate irrespective of her stridhanam or private means and there appears to be no reason why the latter should be regarded to be any factor in fixing the maintenance after his death. The right of maintenance was conferred on the widow under the Hindu Law in lieu of her husband's share in the joint family property and cannot be taken away by the fact that she has some property of her own either productive or non-productive of income. [p. 578, col. 2; p. 579, col. 1.]

[Case-law reviewed.]

Prima facie, the purchase of new lands for the family is not a family necessity, and certainly every litigation cannot be regarded as prima facie a necessity of the family, assuming in both cases that borrowing alone could meet the alleged necessity, and the money required could not be found from the surplus of the family income. Pandrang Row, J.—These four connected appeals arise out of two suits for maintenance filed by two widows belonging to the same composite family. Appeals Nos. 156 and 191 are by the plaintiffs in the suits and the other two appeals are by defendants Nos. 1 to 7. The suits were for maintenance including arrears of maintenance and also for recovery of jewels or their value and for provision for residence. The claim in both cases was for maintenance and arrears at the rate of Rs. 300 a month and Rs. 5,000 each in lieu of provision for residence. The value of the stridhanam jewels that were claimed was Rs. 6,700 odd in one case and in the other Rs. 8,700.

The suits were tried together and disposed of by one and the same judgment dated October 12, 1935, the suits having been actually instituted in 1929. The Subordinate Judge of Nellore who decided both these suits gave a decree in each case for Rs. 100 a month as maintenance and arrears of maintenance and Rs. 2,500 as provision for residence and dismissed the claim for jewels or their value in both the suits. Both parties have now appealed in both suits and the contentions of the defendants, who are the appellants in two of the appeals, namely 166 and 179, are that the maintenance and arrears of maintenance should not be more than Rs. 40 a month and that the provision for residence is excessive and they raise also two comparatively minor points relating to the alleged payment of Rs. 500 at the rate of Rs. 250 to each of the plaintiffs just before the suits were instituted and to the direction by the Court below regarding costs of the suits. The point raised in the appeals by the plaintiffs, i. e., the claimants for maintenance and arrears, is that they should be given at the lowest Rs. 200 a month and that a decree should have been given for jewels or their value to the extent of Rs. 3,000 in the case of Seethamma, i. e., the plaintiff in O. S. No. 66 of 1931 and Rs. 4,000 in the case of Annapurnamma, the plaintiff in O. S. No. 68 of 1931. A point regarding costs has also been raised in these appeals. This direction regarding costs made by the Court below which is objected to by both the sets of appellants will be dealt with after the other points are disposed of.

The main question, the discussion of which took up most of the time before us is the one relating to the rate of maintenance. The question has been dealt with in very great detail by the Court below, but unfortunately, in dealing with the point in great detail, the Court below lost sight of one or two important points which had to be decided as a preliminary to an examination of the details. In the first place, the Court below relied almost entirely, or at least primarily, on the abstracts of the accounts said to have been kept by the family of the parties for many years. (His Lordship discussed the evidence relating to the abstracts of the account books prepared and then proceeded.) In these circumstances it is impossible to say that anyone who really examined all the numerous accounts in this case and prepared the abstracts as the result of his examination has been examined as a witness in this case to prove that the abstracts are correct, and certainly it is not pretended that defendant No. 1 is himself competent to prepare correct abstracts of so many accounts as are put forward in the present suits. It is thus apparent that these abstracts have been admitted in evidence in circumstances in which they should not have been admitted; in other words, they have not been properly proved and should not have been relied upon to such an extent at any rate as the Court below has done. Apart from that we find there are obvious discrepancies which even a cursory glance at the accounts and abstracts themselves would show. (After pointing out these, his Lordship proceeded.) Basing its finding mainly on the abstracts, the Court below was of opinion that the total income was not less than Rs. 20,000, from landed property. We need not go into the evidence at very great length regarding this point because after all it does not make a great deal of difference whether the family income is Rs. 20,000 or Rs. 25,000 or even Rs. 30,000. The income in any case is sufficiently large as not to bring into operation of what one may call the rule prescribing the maximum amount that might be awarded as maintenance. Even on the basis of Rs. 20,000 the share of the deceased husbands of the plaintiffs in these suits would be about Rs. 5,000 a year or Rs. 400 a month and what they now demand is Rs. 200 a month. Unless, therefore, the income of the family is something less than Rs. 10,000 a year the claim of the plaintiff's maintenance at Rs. 200 a month could be satisfied without going beyond the maximum fixed by the law as laid down by the highest authorities. Nevertheless, we have to say something on the other aspects of the question on what one may call general evidence, which in a case like this affords a greater security, so to say, against falsity creeping in. (His Lordship then dealt with the general evidence and proceeded.) On the whole, therefore, there can be no doubt that the net income of the family after making all allowances for vicissitudes of season and risk of all kinds cannot be less than Rs. 20,000 a year. Indeed it would not be unreasonable to say that the income would not be less than Rs. 25,000 a year, the family being one which pays about Rs. 10,000 Govt. assessment in respect of patta lands and Rs. 4,000 jodi in respect of shrotriam villages. A net income of double the Govt. revenue and jodi is certainly not unreasonable even when prices are lowest.

We do not propose to say much about the details of the question which has been argued at some length, namely, the amount of outstandings and the amount of debts relating to the family. As regards the outstandings, it is obvious that the view taken by the Court below is right, namely that the belated attempt made by the defendants to prove that some of the outstandings of the family were irrecoverable and that some others did not bear any interest did not succeed. This allegation was subsequently made during the trial, and there is really no independent evidence corroborating this belated allegation; none of the debts due to the family has been written off as irrecoverable or shown as irrecoverable in the accounts of the income submitted to the income-tax authorities. It is too much to suppose that out of a total amount of Rs. 40,000 and odd of outstandings more than Rs. 11,000 should be irrecoverable and more than Rs. 6,000 should carry no interest. It becomes all the more improbable when one considers the wealth of the family and the existence of debts due by the family to others. When the family is borrowing moneys it is most unlikely that they would lend money without interest. In any case, we do not propose to deal with this aspect of the case at greater length as the lower Court has dealt fully and correctly with it. As regards, however, the debts due by the family, one or two observations fall to be made. We do not agree with the Court below that the defendants are under no obligation whatever to prove that the debts which according to them have to be taken into account in ascertaining family income are binding on the family; that, in other words, the manager's ipse dixit is sufficient to show for this purpose that the debts are binding on the family. It may be that the standard of proof, so to say, required for establishing the binding nature of the debts need not be so high as in a suit in which the dispute arises either as between the co-parceners in a suit for partition or as between the creditors and the other members of the family. But nevertheless, there must be some prima facie reliable evidence to show that the debts are binding on the family when the manager of the family wants to have those debts to be taken into account for the purpose of reducing the family income available for calculating the rate of maintenance.

In this case there is no such reliable prima facie evidence. It is admitted by defendant No. 1 himself that more of the debts were contracted after the dispute arose in 1928. It is admitted that the family is well-to-do, and in such a case the evidence required of necessity to borrow much obviously be more satisfactory than in the case of a family more or less impecunious all the time. In this case the debts were contracted—all of them—by defendant No. 1 and most of them after 1928. The debts were only about Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 35,000 when he took up the management, and they have now swelled to Rs. 71,000. The explanation given is that he had to borrow for the purpose of purchasing properties, making repairs to lands and for litigation and so on; he mentions two big items—Rs. 20,000 for purchase of lands and Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 16,000 for certain litigation. As defendant No. 1 himself was a party to both these items of expenditure, certainly he should have been in a position to give evidence that both these items of expenditure were necessary and that money had to be borrowed for the purpose of meeting this expenditure. But beyond saying that they were borrowed for these purposes, he does not say that there was a necessity to borrow. Prima facie, the purchase of new lands for the family is not a family necessity, and certainly every litigation cannot be regarded as prima facie a necessity of the family, assuming in both cases that borrowing alone could meet the alleged necessity, and the money required could not be found from the surplus of the family income.

Bearing all these circumstances in mind, the general conclusion emerges that in cases of this kind, where we are not required to determine, so to say, correctly to the last pie, what the family income is, where a rough estimate is as good as any attempt to arrive at strict accuracy and indeed—where strict accuracy is hardly to be hoped for—namely, the outstandings and the debts can be set off one against the other without doing any serious injustice to either party in this litigation and this conclusion which we mentioned during the hearing of the appeal was not controverted or disputed on either side. We, therefore, do not propose to go further into the details of debts and liabilities and we rest content with the general observation which is accepted on both sides that for the purposes of this case it is enough to disregard both of them because one can be regarded as being set off against the other. But we make it clear that this is done only for purposes of these cases, namely, where we have to determine roughly the family income in order to decide, so to say, the status of the family and the amount of maintenance that could be granted.

Before determining the reasonable amount that can be given in these cases as maintenance, one point remains to be dealt with and that arises in one of these cases only, namely, the claim of Sitamma, the plaintiff in O. S. No. 66. She claimed in a separate suit certain properties as her own and she got a decree in part in her favour in the Court below and that decree is now under appeal. It is argued in these appeals that so far as Sitamma's claim for maintenance is concerned, the income which she derives from the separate property which may be ultimately decreed in her favour should be taken into consideration in determining the maintenance to be allowed to her and that this should be done even in the matter of arrears because mesne profits have been claimed by her and have been decreed. We cannot anticipate the ultimate decision in that suit relating to the separate property of Sitamma, and we shall therefore assume for the purpose of these appeals that Sitamma has separate property of her own which brings her an income of about Rs. 50 a month which is what is alleged by the defendants against her. In other words, we proceed on the basis that Sitamma has separate property from which she gets a monthly income of about Rs. 50. Now, the question is whether the possession of this income from separate property is a factor to be taken into account or consideration in the determination of the maintenance to be given to her. On this point, I have had the advantage of seeing my learned brother's judgment which deals with all the relevant cases declining with this point, and I do not propose to anticipate or repeat any portion of what he is going to say in his judgment. It is enough for me to say that I concur in his views as to the effect of the decided cases and in his final conclusion that this income from separate property is not a factor to be taken into account at all, and that the defendants' contention is not supported by any recognized principle of Hindu Law. It is obvious that the recognition of any such contention will introduce greater uncertainty into a field where already there is too much uncertainty. Because, while it is no doubt very easy to say in a general way that the income from separate property should be taken into consideration, the extent and mode of taking it into consideration are left vague, and vagueness in a point like this means trouble to the parties who will have to get the question determined by one Court after another.

The learned Counsel for the defendants, Mr. Umamaheswaran, felt himself compelled to admit that taking into consideration cannot mean that if the widow, for instance, be entitled legitimately to a maintenance allowance of Rs. 100 a month in this case, the rate of maintenance allotted to her should be reduced by Rs. 50 a month, i. e., by the amount of the income from her separate property. Obviously he feels that such a position could not possibly be defensible, because, if the income from the widow's separate property had not been only Rs. 50 a month but Rs. 100 a month, the rate of maintenance to which the widow would be entitled would be nil which would be absolutely in the teeth of all principle, for, the right of a Hindu widow to maintenance from out of the property belonging to her deceased husband is absolute and not subject to any condition that she should be in need of any allowance for maintenance.

The co-existence of an absolute right to get maintenance with conditions of this kind is really difficult to postulate, for, what is absolute must be unconditional, and if there are conditions, there cannot be any absolute right. It may be that though in a case of a co-parcener's right to a share, the law itself fixes definitely what his share is to be, the amount of the maintenance due to a widow has to be determined by the Court having regard to the facts and circumstances of each case, but that does not make the right other than absolute. The fact that a Court has to determine the exact money value, so to say, of a right which is not determined by the law itself, cannot convert what is an absolute right into a conditional right, i. e. a right that can be claimed or that can be said to exist only if certain conditions are satisfied. The only condition—if one may call it a condition—to be satisfied in a case like this is that the person who claims maintenance must show that she is the widow of a deceased co-parcener and that the family has property on which the claim for maintenance can be fastened. I do not however propose to go further into this point. We therefore come to the conclusion that there is no necessity for taking into consideration the income that Sitamma would derive from her own separate property.

The point is what is the rate of maintenance that can be regarded as reasonable and proper in the circumstances of these cases. The Court below has given Rs. 100 and the defendants want to reduce it to Rs. 40 while the plaintiffs want to enhance it to Rs. 200. Of course, it is impossible to satisfy both the parties in cases like these, however deeply one may go into the details of the case, or to expect both parties to accept any amount as reasonable, unless they are reasonable enough to compromise and settle the rate between themselves, and not leave it to the Court to decide what the rate should be. In these cases, there is no danger, as we have observed, of exceeding or even approaching near the limit prescribed in cases of this kind, namely the income of the deceased husband's share which in each of these cases is one-fourth of the entire family property and which share on any reasonable estimate would fetch an income of not less than Rs. 400 a month. It is obvious that the rate of Rs. 40 is obviously and clearly unreasonable low. There is no legal authority for the shastric injunction on which extremely low awards of maintenance are sought to be based, namely that the widow ought to "eat or enjoy moderately," that is live as abstemiously as possible. This moral precept cannot be given legal authority in order to cut down the level of comfort which otherwise a widow to whom fortune has been unkind, would be entitled to claim. Whatever might have been the practice in the past, there can be no doubt that the recent tendency has been to be liberal in the grant of maintenance; or to put it perhaps more accurately not to be illiberal in the grant of maintenance to widows. This is obviously in keeping with the changed times and the changed notions of the people including notions as regards comforts reasonably required for persons belonging to certain classes of society.

These changes are reflected in the recent legislation in favour of widows in the shape of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, which as Mr. Raghavachariar, the learned author of "Hindu Law Principles and Precedents" says can more appropriately be called the Hindu Widows' Rights to Property Act, because the most marked change introduced in the Hindu Law by that Act is the provision in favour of Hindu widows. Though that Act is not applicable to the present cases because the law governing the rights of the parties in these cases is the law as it prevailed before the Act of 1937, nevertheless, the reference to this new legislation is not entirely pointless because that legislation only reflects the change that has unconsciously and slowly crept into Hindu society towards a more liberal treatment of Hindu widows. It is not as if the Legislature suddenly thought it necessary to ameliorate their condition but the Legislature merely gave sanction to a change which had already taken place and that change cannot be ignored by Courts in determining the rates of maintenance. In other words, to put it concretely, the changed notions as to the way in which a widow should live and what pleasures she should be permitted and so on, have to be determined, not in accordance with the old ideals which have more or less ceased to apply or to be applied to actual life, but according to the changed notions that prevail to a greater and greater extent in the present day; as is well known one tendency observed in the country is the gradual steady rise in the standard of living and Hindu widows have been as much subject to this tendency as any other class of people in Hindu society.

We therefore think that while the principle to be observed is to bear in mind all the circumstances of the family, Courts should also bear in mind the changed conditions of society and award maintenance in such a way that the widow concerned is able to live in more or less that standard of comfort in which she would have been able to live if her husband had been alive, so long as the family can stand it and there is no difficulty in the way of the family finding the necessary money to maintain the widow in such comfort. It cannot be said that Rs. 100 a month is sufficient for a widow of a wealthy family who is no longer content to stay in her own native village and live the same village existence as widows in the past. It cannot be said that her desire to live in a place like Nellore is unreasonable nor that life in Nellore is not more expensive than life in a village like Kota.

Considering all the circumstances, we are of opinion that the rate of maintenance should be enhanced from Rs. 100 a month to Rs. 150 a month. This however would apply only to maintenance from the date of the suit and will not apply to the arrears claimed and allowed by the Court below which will remain at the figure Rs. 100 a month. This enhanced rate of maintenance, namely Rs. 150 a month, will, of course, be granted to both the widows; that is to say, the plaintiffs in both the suits will each get maintenance at this rate from the date of her suit.

Before leaving this aspect of the case we might conveniently deal with the contention of the side of the defendants that the charge given by the Court below covers a much larger extent of land than is reasonably necessary in the circumstances. The lower Court has given a charge in respect of all the nine shrotriem villages to each plaintiff. The result is that the defendants' family would be unable to deal with the properties contained in the shrotriems on account of the charge. We must however have regard to the higher rate of maintenance which we have considered it necessary to award. In these circumstances, and with the consent of the Advocates on the side of the plaintiffs in the suit, we will confine their charge in respect of their claim to maintenance including arrears to the following villages. As regards the claim of Annapoornamma the charge is limited to Vudathavari Parlapalle and Bhuvanagripalem and as regards the claim of Sittamma the charge is limited to the villages of Polipadu, Muddumudi and Ambapuram. The charge given by the Court below on the remaining four villages is cancelled. (His Lordship then dealt with the controversy regarding the provision for residence and the question of jewels and proceeded.) The only other points that remain to be decided in these appeals are the payment of Rs. 500 in two halves of Rs. 250 to each of the plaintiffs after disputes arose between the parties, and the point relating to costs in the Court below. As regards the payment of Rs. 500 after disputes arose the finding is against defendant No. 1 who pleaded the payment, and after looking into the evidence relating to the point we are not inclined to differ from the finding of the Court below. (After examining the evidence, his Lordship held that the alleged payment could not be believed and proceeded.) The other question of the costs in the lower Court more or less answers itself after the other points have been decided. It is now found that the plaintiffs are entitled to maintenance at least at one half of the rate which was claimed by them in the Court below. In view of the peculiar way in which information was kept back by defendant No. 1 about the status and the property of the family even from the Court itself, it is obvious that the plaintiffs could not be expected to have made a better or nearer estimate of the income of the family than they did. It is impossible to say that a family which, as is now found, pays a Govt. assessment of Rs. 10,000 in respect of ryotwari lands and Rs. 4,000 for jodi in respect of shrotriem villages could not possibly be getting a net income of Rs. 50,000 a year. It was not an unreasonable estimate to make and it cannot be said that in putting forward that estimate the plaintiffs deliberately exaggerated their claim. After all, even according to the correct state of facts as now found by us the family must have an annual net income of not less than Rs. 25,000 and therefore the shares of the deceased husbands of the plaintiffs would have been about Rs. 500 a month. Even assuming that the total income was only about Rs. 20,000 their shares would have come to Rs. 4,500. They were entitled to claim up to this limit.

What exactly is the reasonable amount to be claimed as maintenance is probably more difficult for the claimant-widow to decide than it is for the Court to decide what is the reasonable amount to give, because it is more difficult for the widow to decide against herself than for the Court so to decide. Moreover the Court has to decide only after having all the materials before it. In this case, as in many other similar cases, the plaintiffs are widows with little or no exact knowledge of the extent of the property belonging to the family, and have necessarily to depend upon vague information given by people who may know something about it, and they should not and cannot rightly be penalized for acting upon such information as they pick up in this manner. The determination of the actual amount depends on a number of circumstances, and, as these cases themselves show, two Courts can form different opinions as to what is the reasonable rate of maintenance in a given case. The Court below thought Rs. 100 was reasonable and proper whereas we are of the opinion that Rs. 150 is reasonable and proper. This itself shows that it is not reasonable to expect parties who claim maintenance to be meticulously accurate and observe all possible moderation in making their claim. So long as the claim to maintenance is genuine and true and the amount claimed is not out of all proportion to the amount that is found to be due, the widow claiming maintenance ought not to be mulcted in costs, when she has established her right to maintenance, a right to which she is entitled and which was refused unreasonably and unlawfully by the defendants. In these circumstances we are of opinion that the plaintiffs should be given their entire costs including court-fee due on the plaint in the Court below to be paid by the contesting defendants, and the contesting defendants should bear their entire costs in the Court below.

The result is that the appeals by the plaintiffs in the suits are allowed to the extent indicated above that is to say the rate of maintenance is raised from Rs. 100 to Rs. 150 a month, but not in the case of arrears claimed. The value of the jewels Rs. 2,200 and Rs. 4,000 are decreed in favour of the plaintiffs, Sitamma and Annapurnamma respectively, in addition to what has been decreed in their favour by the Court below. We have already indicated the change to be made in the decree of the Court below as regards the provision for residence of both the plaintiffs. The question of costs in the Court below has been already dealt with. In the circumstances the appellants in Appeals Nos. 156 and 191 of 1936 are allowed their costs of these appeals to be paid by the contesting respondents who will bear their own costs, the appeals being allowed to the extent indicated above. The other appeals, namely those by defendants Nos. 1 to 7, Appeals Nos. 166 and 179 of 1936, are dismissed with costs.

Abdur Rahman, J.—I agree with my learned brother and should like to examine the legal point which arises here for consideration with reference to decided cases relied upon by learned Counsel for the parties. The question to decide is whether the private income which Seethamma has been getting from her stridhanam, (or which has been at times described as peculiar property) should be taken into account in assessing the amount of her maintenance. Learned Counsel for the appellant contends that it should be so. There is some divergence of opinion on the subject both amongst the text-book writers and the decisions of the various High Courts. Strange in his Hindu Law, Vol. 1, at pp. 171 and 172 (1830 edition) observes as follows:

"Whether, in estimating her stridhana on the occasion, her clothes, ornaments, and the like, are to be taken into account, or only such articles of her property as are productive of income to her, or conducive to her subsistence, does not distinctly appear; though the restricting the account to the latter would seem to be reasonable, considering the object. An opinion, that her maintenance should be independent of her peculiar property is unsupported."

This was not the correct method, in my opinion, of approach to this question. It should not have been presumed that a widow's income from her stridhanam property would have to be taken into consideration in fixing the amount of her maintenance unless some authority was found to support that view. This is particularly so, when Sir Thomas Strange has himself in Vol. 2 of his Hindu Law published the opinion of the Nellore Pundit at p. 307 when the matter was referred to him, i. e. the Pundit, for his opinion by the Court. The answer which the Court proposed to give to the matter issue was suggested in the following words:

"On the death of a Brahmin, leaving a widow and two sons, she and they take possession of his estate, subject to her possession of stridhana in which case she is entitled only to a half share."

The Pundit's comment on the answer was as hereunder:

"This opinion is generally correct, but I do not understand either the authority or the reason for restricting the maintenance to the amount of half a share, in case of the existence of stridhana. The division (as it appears to me) should be made without reference to any property she may hold under this title, unless it may have been accepted by her.....The widow's claim to maintenance from her husband's estate is absolute, unlimited by circumstances; but then it is only a claim to maintenance and it is not correct to say that she is entitled to any share or division."

Having regard to this opinion and without referring to any text or authority which would point to a different conclusion, the presumption raised by Sir Thomas Strange in Vol. I against the widow does not seem to be, if I may say so with respect to that author justifiable. Learned Counsel for the appellant has also not been able to point to any original text in support of his contention and in the absence of any such text, I will have to examine the relevant passages from the works to which reference was made and the cases which were cited at the Bar. There are certain passages in Mayne's and Mullah's Hindu Laws at pp. 834 and 595 of their latest editions respectively; but having gone through them I do not find any opinion expressed by the learned authors themselves although relying on certain decisions of the various High Courts, the proposition has been stated that in calculating the amount of maintenance a widow's stridhanam property must be taken into consideration unless it was of an unproductive character. Sir Dinshaw Mullah has however referred to the conflict of opinion existing on the point. Sirkar in his treatise on Hindu Law after referring to the various cases on which reliance was placed by the other authors struck a discordant note at p. 621 of Edn. 6 where he observed as follows:

"But all this is open to the objection, that the right to maintenance being a right to property, which the law confers on one person against another, and annexes it to some estate, why should any such extraneous consideration affect it in the manner set forth above, when the law does not say so?"

Since the Hindu Women's Right to Property Act (XVIII of 1937) came into force, subsequent to the dates on which the rights to get their maintenance had become vested in Sitamma and Annapurnamma, the law as it stood before the Act had come into force will govern the present appeals. It cannot be denied that the widows would be entitled to maintenance as members of their deceased husband's families. It is a right which devolved on them on account of their marriage with those who owned certain shares during their lives in the joint family property. Their husbands were during their own lives bound to maintain these ladies and the same right would continue to exist as long as they

(that is the widows) do so and there is property in which their husbands had shares at the time of their deaths. The question is whether this right can be held to have ceased to exist or said to remain in abeyance if these widows happen to possess some private means of their own. There seems to be nothing on principle which would compel us to take the view that this right which came into existence at the time of their marriage and continued to subsist even after the demise of their husbands should disappear permanently or even temporarily, only because they are able to maintain themselves out of their own stridhanam property.

A widow's right of maintenance is an absolute right and cannot ordinarily be taken away without a clear provision of Hindu Law. No such provision has been brought to our notice by the learned Counsel for the appellant and in the absence of such a provision or any other cogent reasons it is impossible to ignore that right. Nor are there any decisions of this Court in which the view pressed upon us on behalf of the appellant has been taken. The only Madras case to which our attention was drawn on behalf of the appellant was that in Lingappa v. Kanakamma (1). It might be noted here that the head note of this case is rather misleading. The learned Judges do not seem to have decided that a widow's private income was to be taken into account in determining the quantum of maintenance to be paid to her. The facts of the case were that the defendant was found to be in possession of the family property yielding an income of about Rs. 100 per annum. The widow had some private property out of which she could realize something like Rs. 40 to 50 per year. It was contended there that a widow who was able to maintain herself out of other property had no right to claim out of the husband's estate anything for that purpose. This contention was repelled as it was found by the learned Judges to be based on an entirely wrong conception of the right sought to be enforced. In disposing of that contention the learned Judges observed as follows:

"The wives of the male co-parceners in a Hindu family are not entitled to equal shares with the males in the family estate, nor do they take their husband's shares by representation on their death, but in place thereof they are entitled to a portion of their estate for their enjoyment during their lifetime sufficient to maintain them in comfort according to the means of the family. This is an absolute right due to their membership in the family and does not depend on their necessity arising from their want of other means to support themselves."

Two Single Bench decisions of this Court were cited on behalf of the respondent in which Ananthakrishna Ayyar, J., and Pandalai, J. sitting separately took the view that a widow's private means were not to be considered in fixing the amounts of her maintenance. Those cases are reported in Kothandarami Reddi v. Chenchamma (2) and Sundari Ammal v. Venkatarama Sastrigal (3). It is true that the question for decision in the latter case was whether the amount of maintenance granted to the widow should not be reduced if her condition had subsequently improved by her own efforts or on account of a gift made to her by one of her relations; but I think that the principle on which that decision was based was that her private income could not be taken into consideration for the purpose of her maintenance. With these decisions I find myself in respectful agreement. Ananthakrishna Ayyar, J. had in Kothandarami Reddi v. Chenchamma (2), after considering the various decisions of different High Courts and what was stated in Mayne's Hindu Law, come to the conclusion that a widow's income from her private property should be, in fixing her maintenance, disregarded. It may not be necessary in this case to decide the question, but the observation in that case by the learned Judge to which I am, as at present advised, unable to give my assent, reads as follows :

"The question will be different when the income from the joint family estate is not enough to maintain all the members depending upon it."

It was unnecessary for Ananthakrishna Ayyar, J. to say this in that case. It is unnecessary for us also to decide that question now. I have simply drawn attention to that observation on that ground that our silence may not be construed as tantamount to its approval. In a case where this question arises for decision, it will have to be examined with care. Out of the cases decided by the High Courts it appears to be more convenient at this stage to examine an old Allahabad decision given in Shib Dayee v. Doorja Pershad (4), to which reference has been made in one or two Bombay rulings. The facts of that case were that a suit for the recovery of maintenance was instituted by Shib Dayee against her father-in-law in which it was pleaded by the latter that the plaintiff had taken some cash and movable property belonging to her deceased husband and of the defendant of the value of Rs. 5,000 which sufficed for her maintenance. The trial Court found the proof of the fact that Shib Dayee had taken any jewellery, etc. to the value of Rs. 5,000 wanting, but held that she possessed a sum of Rs. 1,000 awarded to her husband in an arbitration and jewels suitable to the position of the family. Holding that the income of the estate purchased by the defendant for his son, i. e. Shib Dayee's husband, along with the interest on the Rs. 1,000 in her possession would be sufficient for her maintenance, the Subordinate Judge dismissed her claim. It will be noticed that no plea was raised on behalf of the defendant that Shib Dayee had no right to get a maintenance on account of her stridhanam property. The sum of Rs. 1,000 which was found to be in her possession was alleged to belong to her husband and if it did, there is no doubt that it had to be taken into consideration in fixing maintenance. But it appears that some argument was advanced in appeal that she was not entitled to get any maintenance inasmuch as she was found to be in possession of some jewels and other property although unproductive of any income. This was repelled by the learned Judges with the observation :

"Nor will the fact that a widow has in her possession jewels and other property unproductive of income, deprive her of or diminish her right to maintenance if they constitute her stridhanam although forming part of her husband's estate they are suitable to the position of the family in society."

This does not help the appellant, but the next passage appears to be more directly in point and is liable to be construed so as to be more helpful to him. It reads :

"If, on the other hand, she has property in her possession productive of income, the amount should be taken into consideration in determining the measure of her allowance for maintenance."

In reading this passage, I do not think that the learned Judges were referring to the widow's stridhanam property at all. In fact the property in Shib Dayee's possession which was productive of interest was the sum of Rs. 1,000 and this observation must necessarily be taken to have referred to that property. It cannot be detached from its context or from the facts of that case and held to be expressing a principle which the learned Judges were not called upon to consider. If it referred to the Rs. 1,000 belonging to her husband, it would not help the appellant. If on the contrary it referred to some property which was not mentioned in that suit it would be obiter and although entitled to respect, yet it would not be, in the absence of any authority, of any great help to us here.

The first Bombay Case which was brought to our notice was that in Chandrabhagabai v. Kashinath Vithal (5) (the page given in some of the references is 323 but the case is the same). It does not help the appellant as it shows that the income accruing from the widow's peculiar property was not taken into account. The next Bombay decision in Gokibai v. Lakshmidas Khimji (6) does not help the appellant either. It is true that Farron, J. did observe in this case that the defendant was bound to show that the widow was possessed of property out of which she could maintain herself, but nothing was said in that judgment which would indicate whether the learned Judge was referring to the joint family property or to the widow's stridhanam property. It is obvious that if the widow could be shown to be in possession of joint family property out of which she could maintain herself she would not be entitled to maintain an action of this nature at all. The decision in Dattatraya v. Rukhmabai (7) does not support the contention raised by the appellant. The widow was in that case found to be in possession of funds belonging to her husband's family estate which fund was sufficient to provide her maintenance for five years after the suit had been brought at the rate allowed by the lower Court. In the circumstances it was held that no cause of action had accrued to the plaintiff in 1904 when the suit was instituted. This case does not decide whether the widow had any private income of her own. The last Bombay case to which reference was made was that in Gurushiddappa v. Parvatewa (8). The question in this case was whether the value of the widow's ornaments should be taken into consideration in awarding maintenance to her. The learned Judges who heard the case came to the conclusion that it could not be, but in recording their decision, Broomfield, J. observed :

"I think it must be taken to be good law that as an ordinary rule stridhan ornaments are not to be taken into account in assessing maintenance. It need not be laid down as an invariable rule. If the widow were in possession of ornaments of great value which she would not ordinarily wear or use, and which she would be likely to dispose of, that might be a different matter. In the present case I see no reason to differ from the view taken by the trial Judge."

No stridhanam property of a productive character or which could be converted into property of that character was involved in that suit and the observation must be regarded to be in the nature of obiter. Wassoodew, J. in writing a concurring judgment observed that a widow's right to claim maintenance out of the husband's estate was absolute and rested upon the possession of her husband's property by the person from whom the maintenance was claimed. But he happened to observe :

"It seems to me difficult upon principle to say that the clothes and jewels or ornaments of the widow, whatever their value, should invariably be excluded in the calculation of her maintenance out of her husband's property."

It was not stated by the learned Judge what principle did he have in mind to which reference was made in this sentence. In view of the position that a widow's right to maintenance was conceded to be absolute, i. e., not conditional on anything else, why should the fact of her not being in possession of her own private or peculiar property be regarded as a condition before maintenance is granted? If the right is an absolute one, her possession of stridhanam property must be regarded as irrelevant. In spite of this observation the learned Judge agreed in excluding the ornaments from consideration although on the ground that "it was not clear upon the record, having regard to the custom of the community to which the widow belonged, that the ornaments in her possession would not all be required to maintain the status of her family."

There is, it is true, a distinction made in some of the text-books, which have already been referred to, between the productive and unproductive character of a widow's stridhanam property, but this does not seem to be based on any principle, if we bear in mind that it is a right of the widow to be maintained out of her husband's estate or what was once her husband's estate, and it is the duty of those on whom her husband's estate has devolved to maintain the widow out of that property in the same degree of comfort to which she was used during her husband's lifetime. It is immaterial if she had any private means of her own or could have them by selling some of the jewellery which would not be required by her after her husband's death. Had the husband remained alive, it would have been his duty to maintain his wife out of his own estate irrespective of her stridhanam or private means and there appears to be no reason why the latter should be regarded to be any factor in fixing the maintenance after his death. The right of maintenance was conferred on the widow under the Hindu Law in lieu of her husband's share in the joint family property and cannot be taken away by the fact that she has some property of her own either productive or non-productive of income. This exhausts all the Bombay cases cited at the Bar. The next decision to which reference was made at the Bar was that in Saraswati Kuer v. Sheoratan Kuer (9), Wort, J., in delivering his judgment at p. 874* observed as follows :

"The point really is somewhat academic, having come to the conclusion, as I have done, that the plaintiff's claim was based under the general Hindu Law, and that being so, the amount to which she is entitled would be a sum in accordance with her position in life, and, as the Privy Council has pointed out, in accordance with the condition of the estate."

No exception could be taken to this statement, but the learned Judge at p. 875 happened to observe :

"There is no doubt that under the general Hindu Law a widow claiming maintenance claims it on the basis, as I have said, of her position in life and the position of the estate having regard also to her means."

The last words in the preceding sentence do not occur in any of the decisions by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The statement made by the learned Judge himself on the previous page and which has been quoted above does not contain any such qualification. No authority was cited by the learned Judge for the view that a widow's means had to be taken into consideration and apparently the point was not considered by him in its legal aspect. Moreover, the private income which the widow was getting in that case by way of an allowance from her brother was disregarded as it was held not to be an income which could be taken into consideration by the Court. This case is certainly no authority for the proposition that in calculating the amount of maintenance her stridhanam must be taken into account. The last case to which reference was made was an old Calcutta case in Ramawati Koer v. Manjhari Koer (10). Relying on Gokibai v. Lakshmidas Khmiji (6) the case which has been already considered by me in an earlier portion of this judgment, and on the Privy Council decision in Narayana Rao Ramachandra Pant v. Ramabhai (11) the learned Judges came to the conclusion that so long as an applicant for maintenance had private means for her own support she could not claim maintenance from her husband's family. I have already tried to show that Gokibai v. Lakshmidas Khmiji (6) does not support that proposition.

As for the second case decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, a reference to that case would show that their Lordships did not hold in that case that the right of a widow to maintenance was, "according to the wants and exigencies of the widow." The last words were certainly used by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee but they were used when they were considering a question of limitation and not a question of Hindu Law. Referring to the Lim. Act they observed as follows :

"The language of the Act is not very clear; and by two subsequent statutes of limitation the events from which the time of limitation is to run in the case of maintenance are wholly different. By common law the right to maintenance is one accruing from time to time according to the wants and exigencies of the widow; and a statute of limitation might do much harm if it should force widows to claim their strict rights, and commence litigation which, but for the purpose of keeping alive their claim, would not be necessary or desirable."

This would show that their Lordships of the Privy Council were trying to express that the cause of action for a widow to maintain her action is of a recurring nature and the period of limitation would only start from time to time according to the wants and exigencies of the widow. They were not considering whether the widow's private means had to be taken into account before a decree for maintenance was passed in her favour. In the absence of any other authority, the decision in Ramawati Koer v. Manjhari Koer (10) could not be supported. It was expressly dissented from in Lingayya v. Kanakamma (1). A review of these cases would show that but for certain obiter dicta in some of the judgments it has not been decided in any case, except in the Calcutta case just referred to, that the widow's private means have to be calculated in fixing the amount of her maintenance. On principle as we have already stated above there seems to be no reason why a widow's stridhanam property or private income should be taken into consideration if her right to maintenance is absolute and the duty of persons who are in possession of her husband's estate unqualified and unconditional.

March 28, 1939

BOSE, J.

TULSIRAM—DEFENDANT—APPELLANTversusPAIKAN—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTYLimitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 7, 102—Suit by village barber for remuneration for services rendered—Article applicable.*

Article 7, Lim. Act is confined to suits for the wages of a household servant, artisan or labourer. Village barbers are not household servants. They are not labourers in the sense in which the term 'labourer' is used in that Article. It is used there with reference to a man who does work chiefly requiring bodily strength. They are not also artisans, though the modern hairdresser who works on the heads of fashionable ladies, may be considered as artists. Consequently a suit by a village barber for remuneration for services rendered, is governed by Art. 102 and not by Art. 7, Lim. Act. The mere fact that a village barber who may not be as highly skilled a person as a village carpenter or a village blacksmith gets a longer period of limitation would not justify the Court in straining the meaning of the words employed in Art. 7. 46 Ind. Cas. 779 (1) and 104 Ind. Cas. 520 (2), distinguished.

C. R. of the decree of the Court of Judge, Small Causes, Brahmapuri, dated January 19, 1938.

Mr. M. R. Rajkarne, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. B. Chandurker, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The plaintiff is a village barber and the defendant is a resident of that village and is one of the plaintiff's customers. The plaintiff sues for remuneration for services rendered to the defendant, and the question at issue is one of limitation. If the suit falls within Art. 7 of the Lim. Act then it is beyond time; on the other hand if it falls under the general Art. 102 it is within time.

The lower Court finds that Art. 102 applies and has consequently decreed the claim which is for a small sum of Rs. 9. The learned Counsel for the applicant contends that Art. 7 applies and so asks me to dismiss the plaintiff's claim.

Article 7 is confined to suits for the wages of a household servant, artisan or labourer. It is clear that village barbers are not household servants. It is also, I think, clear that they are not labourers in the sense in which the term 'labourer' is used in that Article. It is used there with reference to a man who does work chiefly requiring bodily strength. That leaves the word 'artisan' to be considered.

Artisan is defined in the Oxford English Dictionary as "one who practises or cultivates an art: an artist" and also as "one who is employed in any of the industrial arts; a mechanic, handicraftsman, artificer". I think it is clear that a barber cannot be said to be employed in any industrial art; he is not a mechanic or craftsman or artisan in that sense. The only question is whether he can be said to cultivate an art. The word 'art' is defined in the Oxford English Dictionary and also in Webster's Dictionary and a large number of illustrations are collected under the definition to indicate the sense in which the term is ordinarily used in the English language. Nowhere is cutting of hair or shaving or trimming of beards included as one of the arts. Whether a modern barber who works on the heads of fashionable ladies can be considered an artist may perhaps be open to question. It is possible that the skill required by him placed him in a higher category than was formerly the case, but in any case such persons no longer call themselves barbers. They describe themselves as hair-dressers and use other names of that kind. But however that may be, it is not possible to include barbers of a remote village of the Central Provinces in the class to which a modern barber may perhaps aspire.

I am referred to a passage in Bala v. Ballabhdas (1) which places the village barber among village servants such as carpenters and blacksmiths. It is argued that blacksmiths and carpenters are undoubtedly artisans and there is no reason why the village barber should be placed in a higher category and be given a longer period of limitation. It is also pointed out that the learned Judges in the Rangoon High Court in R. Sewaram v. Lachminarayan (2) considered this a relevant argument in the matter of a motor driver.

I do not think that either of the rulings is in point here. One may or may not consider the village barber a village servant, but that would not bring the case under the purview of Art. 7, for the servant described there is a household servant and not a village servant. As regards the Rangoon case there can be little doubt that a motor driver is an artisan in the sense that he is employed in an industrial art, namely that of a motor mechanic. Apart from that, I do not think that the mere fact that a village barber who may not be as highly skilled a person as a village carpenter or a village blacksmith gets a longer period of limitation would justify me in straining the meaning of the words employed in Art. 7.

I am of opinion therefore that the lower Court was right in holding that the case did not fall within Art. 7. The application is, therefore dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 10.

Bengal Non-Agricultural Tenancy (Temporary Provisions) Act (IX of 1940), s. 3—Phrase "on account of the non-payment of rent"—Meaning explained.

The words in s. 3, Ben. Non-Agricultural Tenancy (Temporary Provisions) Act "on account of the non-payment of rent" are not used for purposes of indicating that the cause of action for ejectment must be the non-payment of rent. The Legislature meant that if a tenant was in arrears, a suit for ejecting such a tenant would be a suit for ejectment "on account of the non-payment of rent."

C. R. for setting aside the order of the Munsif, 1st Court, Sealdah (24-Parganas), dated June 10, 1940.

Messrs. S. N. Banerjee, Hiralal Chakravarty and Mahendra Kumar Ghose, for the Petitioners.

Order.—It is rather unfortunate that the opposite party is not represented at the hearing, for this rule raises a question of first impression, and I am told that it is a first case falling under Ben. Act IX of 1940, The Ben. Non-Agricultural Tenancy (Temporary Provisions) Act. The facts are as follows:

The opposite party was a monthly tenant under the petitioners holding four cottas of land at a rent of Rs. 3, a month in the suburbs of Calcutta. The plaintiffs' case is that he has not paid any rent since Baisakh 1343 B. S. Before the Ben. Non-Agricultural Tenancy (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1940, was passed the petitioners served a notice to quit on the opposite party requiring him to vacate with the expiry of the month of Ashar 1346. The opposite party not having vacated, this suit was filed on February 10, 1940. The prayers in the suit were (1) for recovery of rent for the three years which had not been barred by limitation, (2) for ejectment, and (3) mesne profits from Sravan 1346 till restoration of possession.

In the plaint the petitioners recited the fact that the tenant was in arrears for a long period. They did not, however, expressly state that they wanted ejectment on account of non-payment of rent. In fact, as the law now stands non-payment of rent is not even a ground for ejectment of a non-agricultural tenant. The question is whether this case comes within the provisions of s. 3 of the said Act, namely Act IX of 1940. That section provides thus:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force every suit and proceeding in any Court for ejectment of a non-agricultural tenant other than a suit or proceeding for ejectment on account of the non-payment of rent by such tenant, shall be stayed for the period during which this Act continues in force."

The proviso to the section states that a decree for ejectment on account of the non-payment of rent by such tenant shall be stayed if, within thirty days from the date of the decree, such tenant deposits into Court the amount of the decree together with costs of the proceeding. This section, therefore, makes a distinction between suits for ejectment on account of the non-payment of rent and other suits for ejectment. A suit for ejectment falling within the second class has to be stayed for the period during which Act IX of 1940 would be in force. A suit falling within the first class would go on and a decree will have to be passed, but if the decree be for ejectment its execution is to be stayed if the tenant deposits in Court the amount of the rent due under the decree and costs. This seems to me to be the plain intention of the Legislature. But the difficulty is created by reason of the use of the words "ejectment on account of the non-payment of rent." As I have already pointed out, in the case of a non-agricultural tenant non-payment of rent, as the law now stands, cannot be a ground for ejectment. To take an illustration, if a tenant coming within the provisions of Act IX of 1940 holds under a registered lease for a term of years and if he fails to pay rent, or even an habitual defaulter in the payment of rent, he cannot be ejected during the term on the ground of non-payment of rent. The words, "on account of the non-payment of rent" must however be given some meaning. That being the position so far as the substantive law is concerned in the case of non-agricultural tenants, to my mind it seems that the words "on account of the non-payment of rent" are not used for purposes of indicating that the cause of action for ejectment must be the non-payment of rent. But some meaning must be given to those words "on account of the non-payment of rent." To my mind, it seems that the Legislature meant that if a tenant was in arrears, a suit for ejecting such a tenant would be a suit for ejectment "on account of the non-payment of rent." In this view of the matter, it is not necessary for me to express any opinion on the question as to whether Act IX of 1940 was ultra vires of the Bengal Legislature. In fact that point has not been argued as Mr. Banerjee said that he would not argue that point unless I take the view against him on the interpretation of s. 3. As the view that I have taken of the said section is in favour of his contention I did not ask him to enter into the question of ultra vires. The plaint in this suit must be regarded as a suit for ejectment on account of the non-payment of rent. I, therefore, direct the learned Munsif to proceed on with the suit, and to try it on its merits. The rule is accordingly made absolute. As there is no appearance on the other side, there would be no order for costs. Let the records be sent down without delay.

MARUTEERAO KRISHNAJI—

JUDGMENT-CREDITOR

*versusTHAKURDAS ISARDAS—JUDGMENT-

DEBTOR

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908 as amended by Act IX of 1937), ss. 60, 73—Attachment of salary before June 1, 1937, by judgment-creditor saved by s. 3 of Amending Act, whether available for rateable distribution to other creditor not so saved.

An attachment of salary made before June 1, 1937, under s. 60, Civil P. C., by a judgment-creditor saved by s. 3 of the Amending Act, is available by way of rateable distribution to another judgment-creditor who is not covered by s. 3. Execution Darkhast No. 280 of 1937, affirmed, 176 Ind. Cas. 682 (1), approved, 173 Ind. Cas. 561 (2), distinguished.

Order.—This is a reference by the learned acting Second Registrar not made under the proviso to r. 2 (A), Part II, Chap. V at p. 73 of the Rules of the Court but of his own motion and his reason for the reference is that he does not agree with a decision which I gave, in Execution Darkhast No. 280 of 1937, decided on August 30, 1940, Mangal- das Nanchand v. Ghulam Dastagir which the learned Second Registrar in his reference tells me is in accordance with a decision of Lobo, J. reported in Kewalmal v. Rodrigues (1).

The point involved is whether an attachment, made under s. 60, Civil P. C., of salary now exempted by the Amending Act of 1937, but made by a judgment-creditor saved by the proviso to that Amending Act, is available by way of rateable distribution to another judgment-creditor who is not covered by this proviso. In my order in Execution Darkhast No. 280 of 1937 dated August 30, 1940 Mangaldas Manchand v. Ghulam Dastagir I held that such a judgment-creditor is entitled to rateable distribution and although the point was slightly different in the matter before Lobo, J. in Execution Darkhast No. 1056 of 1936 my decision receives support from the view taken in that case. The learned Second Registrar refers to a Bombay case Krishnaji v. Vishnu (2), but in that case the facts were not the same and the question was one of allowing execution against immovable property of an agriculturist which was not liable in satisfaction of that particular decree. I do not, in the light of this authority, consider, as the learned Second Registrar has considered, that my decision in Judicial Miscellaneous No. 280 of 1937 is wrong and the order in this matter and the companion matters Execution Darkhast Nos. 972/36 Krishnasahi, 1173/36 The Mercantile Co-operative Bank, 1264/36 Thakurdas Mangharam, 16/37 Lekhraj, 96/37 Menghraj, 912/37 The Hindu Co-operative Bank, 914/37 Krishnasahi, 572/38 Sitabai, 864/38 Jagatsing and 1060/38 Mangaldas v. Thakurdas, will be that the judgment-creditors seeking rateable distribution are entitled to it.

Civil Revision Application No. 387 of 1940

APPLICANT
versus

JAI KISAN—DEFENDANT—NON-APPLICANT
Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—S. 476, scope and interpretation—Section assumes that offence appears to have been committed—Decision of lower Courts under ss. 476 and 476-B, if can be interfered with by High Court under Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115.

It is not correct to say that only after the Courts have come to a conclusion that an offence of the kind contemplated by s. 476, Criminal P. C., appears to have been committed they can direct their minds to the next question, namely whether it is expedient in the interests of justice that a prosecution should be launched. The section assumes that an offence appears to have been committed.

The sum and substance of s. 476 is that before a prosecution can be launched either the first or the Appellate Court must be of opinion both that an offence appears to have been committed and that it is expedient to prosecute. If in their opinion either of these elements is absent, then no prosecution can be launched. It is consequently not necessary for these two Courts to deal with both questions when in their opinion the answer to either is in the negative; also they can consider the questions in any order they please, but the opinion has to be their opinion and not the opinion of the High Court in revision. Also, if they take up those questions or either of them and deal with them judicially and reach a conclusion, then the High Court has no jurisdiction whatever to interfere in revision under s. 115 of the Civil P. C., however, wrong or erroneous the High Court may consider that conclusion to be.

C. R. App. of the order of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Ellichpur., dated April 29, 1940.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Applicant
Mr. T. L. Sheode, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This order will govern Civil Revision No. 386/40 and Civil Revision No. 387/40. They are directed against the orders of the lower Courts refusing to prosecute the non-applicants for the offences of perjury, forgery and false personation, said to have been committed either in, or in relation to, a proceeding in the first Court. Both Courts hold that there is no reasonable certainty of conviction and that in their opinion it is not expedient in the interests of justice that the prosecution asked for should be launched. The revision here is a civil revision under s. 115 of the Civil P. C. and I am of opinion that this Court has no jurisdiction to interfere.

The matter is governed by ss. 195, 476 and 476-B of the Criminal P. C. Under s. 195 no prosecution in respect of these offences can be launched except in the manner provided by s. 476. Section 476 confers the power to prosecute. That power is conferred in the first instance on the Court in which, or in relation to a proceeding in which, the offence or offences appear to have been committed. If that Court refuses to prosecute, then the power is transferred to the Appellate Court under s. 476-B. Except for these two Courts, no other Court, person or body has power to prosecute, not even the High Court unless it happens to be the Appellate Court contemplated by s. 476-B.

If, therefore, the lower Courts consider the matter under ss. 476 and 476-B and come to the conclusion that it is not, in their opinion, expedient in the interests of justice to prosecute, this Court has no power to compel them to do so. The discretion is theirs and theirs alone. The privilege belongs to them and no other person or body or tribunal can usurp it, or substitute its discretion for that of these Courts. They have to be of opinion that it is expedient to prosecute: not anybody else. See as to this a decision of the House of Lords in Weinberger v. Inglis (1) and also Thakurdas v. Secretary of State (2).

It is possible that this Court can interfere in revision if the lower Courts do not consider the matter under those sections or if they direct their minds to matters which are foreign to those sections, or if they act arbitrarily or capriciously. In that event, the order could be set aside and the lower Courts could be directed to apply their minds to the only matters material under those sections. But in no event could this Court acting under s. 115 substitute its opinion for that of either the first Court or the Appellate Court and direct a prosecution, however, much it may be of opinion that it is desirable that one should be launched. Once the lower Courts consider the questions which arise under s. 476 and deal with the matter on the merits, then, however, wrong or erroneous their opinions may be, this Court cannot interfere. In no circumstances could; or at any rate in my opinion should, this Court send the case back in a matter of this kind for reconsideration on the same evidence and the same materials, because an order of that kind would be nothing more than a direction to the lower Court to act in accordance with the view of the High Court. In other words, it is tantamount to a direction to the lower Courts to substitute the opinion of the High Court for their opinions.

That is something which the Legislature does not allow. It is something which s. 195, read with s. 476 expressly prohibits. The undesirability of remanding cases in such circumstances has been pointed out in Ma Nyein v. Maung Chit Hpu (3), and stressed by me in Kartikram v. Emperor (4).

Coming now to s. 476, the material portion is as follows:

"When...Court is...of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to etc....which appears to have been committed etc...."

It is strenuously argued that Courts in such circumstances have to consider first whether an offence appears to have been committed or not, and only after they have come to a conclusion that an offence of the kind contemplated by s. 476, appears to have been committed can they direct their minds to the next question, namely, whether it is expedient in the interest of justice that a prosecution should be launched. In my opinion that is wrong. The section assumes that an offence appears to have been committed. Unless such an assumption were made it would be impossible to ask a Court to direct its mind to considering whether a prosecution should be launched. No Court would prosecute for an offence which does not appear to anybody to have been committed, and it would be idle and foolish to ask it to consider whether in such circumstances it is expedient in the interests of justice to prosecute. The answer is self-evident. Of course it is not.

The section is dealing with a situation in which the Court has already had the matter before it in another capacity and ordinarily the Judge who presided at that stage will have had an opportunity of considering whether an offence of the kind we are dealing with appears to have been committed. If he indicates at that stage that in his opinion one does appear to have been committed, then clearly it is not necessary either for him or his successor to cover the same ground and all that is left for consideration is whether it is expedient in the end of justice to prosecute.

If however the Judge in the original proceedings has not expressed an opinion to that effect, then the Court at this stage can either take it for granted that an offence appears to have been committed and state that even assuming that it is not in its opinion expedient to prosecute for reasons given, or it can look into the matter and state that in its opinion no offence appears to have been committed and if it reaches that conclusion, then clearly the only conclusion it can reach on the question of expediency is that in its opinion a prosecution is not expedient.

The sum and substance of s. 476 is that before a prosecution can be launched either the first or the Appellate Court must be of opinion both that an offence appears to have been committed and that it is expedient to prosecute. If in their opinion either of these elements is absent, then no prosecution can be launched. It is consequently not necessary for these two Courts to deal with both questions when in their opinion the answer to either is in the negative; also they can consider the questions in any order they please. And I repeat again that the opinion has to be their opinion and not the opinion of the High Court in revision. Also, if they take up those questions or either of them and deal with them judicially and reach a conclusion, then the High Court has no jurisdiction whatever to interfere in revision under s. 115 of the Civil P. C., however wrong or erroneous the High Court may consider that conclusion to be.

In the present case the first Court after setting out the facts and the allegations of the applicant about the commission of the various offences applied its mind to the question of expediency and came to the conclusion that a prosecution would not be likely to succeed and that it was not in the interests of justice to file complaints.

The Appellate Court went more fully into the matter. In para. 7 of its order it directed its mind to the question whether there was sufficient material on record to reach a prima facie and definite conclusion that the offences complained of had been committed. It examined the evidence carefully its order covers 17 type written pages and it reached the conclusion that there is no sufficient material on record which would justify it in taking action under s. 476. It had power to do this. It entertained the matter and exercised jurisdiction. It has acted judicially. Consequently its conclusions are final and this Court has no jurisdiction to interfere under s. 115 of the Civil P. C., whether the conclusions are right or wrong.

The applications are dismissed with costs Counsel's fee in Jaikisan's case (C. R. No. 387/40) Rs. 40, and in Maroti's Case (C. R. No. 386/40) Rs. 35.

Mst. MEERO AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 5—Suit for sale of mortgaged property—Plaintiff dying—Person relying on will executed by deceased claiming to be brought on record—Probate of will, if essential—Decision under r. 5, whether confers any rights to heirship or to property—Decision, if operates as res judicata.

Where a suit is merely for sale of mortgaged property and after the death of the plaintiff, a person relying on the will executed in his favour by the deceased plaintiff claims to be brought on record as his legal representative, he need not take out probate of the will.

A decision under r. 5 of O. XXII, Civil P. C., should be limited to the purpose of carrying on the suit and cannot have the effect of conferring any right to heirship or to property. Balabai v. Ganesh (8), relied on.

A decision under O. XXII, r. 5 does not operate as res judicata. Parsotam Rao v. Jankibai (2), 163 Ind. Cas. 283 (3) and 155 Ind. Cas. 985 (4), relied on.

C. R. P. to revise an order of the Sub-Judge, Second Class, Delhi, dated March 18, 1940.

Mr. Bishen Narain, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Amar Nath Grover, for the Respondents.

Order.—This is a petition for revision of an order under O. XXII, r. 5, Civil P. C., deciding the claims of two rival claimants to be brought on the record as legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff. Mst. Meero, the contesting respondent, propounded a will in her favour with regard to the property in suit. On the strength of this will, her claim to be regarded as the legal representative of the plaintiff, was preferred to that of Daulat Ram, the petitioner, who is a son of the deceased. Two objections were raised to the claim of Mst. Meero. The first was that the will had not been duly executed by the plaintiff and the second was that she could not be brought on the record as a legal representative without taking out probate first. On the second point, the finding was that probate need not be taken out, the suit being one for sale of the mortgaged property. So far as the suit relates merely to bringing the property to sale this finding is undoubtedly right, and this has been admitted in the course of arguments, although the finding was challenged in the grounds of revision. It may, however, be observed that it would be necessary for Mst. Meero either to take out probate or obtain a succession certificate before proceeding to take out a personal decree, if this became necessary.

The grounds upon which the order is now challenged relate entirely to the execution and the validity of the will; in other words, it is proposed to treat this revision in the same way as if it were a first appeal from the order in question. Before going into the merits, it has to be decided whether this can be done. The reason given by Counsel for the petitioner for presenting the petition is that the interest of his client in the property may be vitally affected and that the order of the trial Court may be treated as conclusive in any further proceedings which may be brought to establish his rights. It is true that if orders passed under O. XXII, r. 5, regarding the choice of a legal representative, were to be treated as finally determining the rights of any claimants to the property in suit, the interest of a disappointed claimant would be seriously affected. On this point, however, the apprehensions of the petitioner appear to be groundless. As held in Balabai v. Ganesh (1) a decision under this rule should be limited to the purpose of carrying on the suit and cannot have the effect of conferring any right to heirship or to property.

It is still suggested, however, that if the claimants choose to put directly in issue any such right, then any decision on such an issue may possibly turn up to be final by virtue of the rule of res judicata. Here again the authorities do not appear to support the applicant. It is true that there have been decisions in the past to the effect that such a decision might operate as res judicata, but the weight of authority is against such a rule. Reference need only be made to Parsotam Rao v. Jankibai (2), Antu Rai v. Ram Kinkar Rai (3) and Chiragh Din v. Dilwar Khan (4). It is finally contended that the bringing of Mst. Meero on the record as the legal representative of the original plaintiff may have a further serious effect, inasmuch as it will be open to her to compromise the suit or otherwise prejudice the course of the proceedings. While this possibility exists, I do not think that this in itself is a sufficient ground for entertaining a petition for revision. If the rival claimants in cases of this kind are prepared to bring their claims before a competent Court, by way of application for a succession certificate or probate, the appointment of a legal representative can await determination of such a suit. If they choose to have the matter determined incidentally by the Court which has to appoint a legal representative for the purposes of that suit only, they do so with the knowledge that their claims will be decided by an order which is not open to appeal. For these reasons, I do not think this is a case in which revision can be entertained, and the petition is dismissed with costs.

(2) 28 A 109; A W N 1905, 206.

(4) A I R 1934 Lah. 465; 154 Ind. Cas. 985; 7 R L 619.

Second Appeal No. 1308 of 1939

February 26, 1941

COLLISTER, J.

RADHA KISHEN AND ANOTHER—

DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

IKRAM-UDDIN—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2, s. 11—Applicability—Essentials—First suit for recovery of specific sums—Second suit for rendition of accounts, held not barred either by O. II, r. 2 or s. 11.

In order to ascertain whether the suit is barred by the provisions of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C., it is necessary to consider what facts had to be proved in the first suit and what facts have to be proved in the second suit.

The defendants who were proprietors of a firm of military contractors gave a sub-contract to the plaintiff for the supply of goods and the arrangement between the parties was that the plaintiff should submit his bills to the defendants and the latter should realize the money from the military department and should thereafter pay it to the plaintiff, after deducting a commission of 5 per cent. The plaintiff instituted a suit for recovery of a specific sum of money, which admittedly had reference to specific bills submitted by the plaintiff to the defendants. Subsequently the plaintiff filed another suit against the defendants for rendition of accounts:

Held, that the causes of action and the matters to be proved were different in the two suits and hence the provisions of O. II, r. 2 did not operate as a bar to the second suit. Nor was the suit barred by s. 11. 121 Ind. Cas. 327 (1), relied on.

S. A. from the decision of Temporary Civil Judge, Bareilly, dated September 19, 1939.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru Messrs. Panna Lal J. N. Sapru and Ajudhiya Nath, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondent.

Judgment—This is a defendants' second appeal. It appears that the appellants are the proprietors of a firm of military contractors. They gave a sub-contract to the plaintiff-respondent for the supply of leather goods and the arrangement between the parties was that the plaintiff should submit his bills to the defendants and the latter should realize the money from the military department and should thereafter pay it to the plaintiff, after deducting a commission of 5 per cent. On November 1, 1934 the plaintiff-respondent instituted a suit (Suit No. 725 of 1934) for recovery of a specific sum of money amounting to Rs. 1,066-10-0, which admittedly had reference to specific bills submitted by the plaintiff to the defendants. The suit was originally dismissed, but was decreed in first appeal, and the decree of the Appellate Court was affirmed by this Court in second appeal on March 28, 1938.

Meanwhile on August 30, 1936 the plaintiff filed the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen for rendition of accounts in respect to the period from March 1928 to November 1933. This suit was stayed pending the decision of this Court in connection with the second appeal which had been preferred in respect to Suit No. 725 of 1934. When that appeal was decided and the suit out of which the present appeal arises was taken up again by the trial Court, an application was made to amend the written statement by pleading the bar of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C. That application was disallowed and a preliminary decree was ultimately passed. There was an appeal, and the learned Judge of the Appellate Court has substantially affirmed the decree of the trial Court. The learned Judge allowed Counsel for the defendants-appellants to plead the bar of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C. and also the bar of res judicata under s. 11, Civil P. C., but both these pleas have been repelled by the lower Appellate Court, and the point taken before me in this appeal is that the learned Judge has erred in holding that the suit was not barred either by the provisions of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C., or under s. 11, Civil P. C. Rule 2 (4) of O. II, provides:

"Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court."

Rule 2 (3) provides:

"A person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any of such reliefs; but if he omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all such reliefs he shall not afterwards sue for any relief so omitted."

In considering whether the suit out of which this appeal arises was barred by the provisions of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C., the criterion is whether or not this claim and the claim which was made in Suit No. 725 of 1934 arose out of the same cause of action. In Shib Singh v Jograj Singh (1), the plaintiff sued the defendant for a specific sum of money as money had and received to the plaintiff's use. The suit was dismissed as legally incompetent and the plaintiff then instituted a suit for account and for payment of whatever money might be found due to him. It was held that O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C. was no bar to the second suit. The learned Judge who decided that case observed:

"The first action was an action for a sum of money which the defendant had received to the use of the plaintiff. In order to prove his claim in that case the plaintiff merely would have to prove that the defendant had received a specific sum of money on the plaintiff's behalf. The present action is for accounts and the plaintiff would have to prove that the defendant was his general agent."

Further on the learned Judge says:

"It is clear from what I have said above that it would be unnecessary to prove the same facts in both these cases and it is equally clear that the evidence which would suffice to enable the plaintiff to obtain a decree in both the suits is not the same."

The learned Judge then went on to find that the causes of action in the two suits were not the same and that O. II, r. 2 (3), Civil P. C. did not apply. In Mangal Sain v. Labhu Mal (2) the plaintiff instituted a suit against a person whom he alleged to be his gumashtha or agent on the ground that the latter had misappropriated some ornaments, a specific sum of money and the price or value of certain other articles. That suit was dismissed and thereafter he instituted a suit against the same defendant for rendition of accounts. It was held by a Bench of the Lahore High Court that the suit was not barred by O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C. The learned Judge says:

"A careful perusal of the point in the first case indicates that the plaintiff was confining his claim to certain specific items said to have been appropriated by the respondent quite apart from his liability to render accounts as an agent."

In order to ascertain whether the suit is barred by the provisions of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C. it is necessary to consider what facts had to be proved in the first suit and what facts have to be proved in the second suit. In Suit No. 725 of 1934 what had to be proved was the fact that the defendants had received certain sums of money from the military department on behalf of the plaintiff in respect to bills which had been submitted by the latter. In the suit out of which this appeal arises what had to be proved was (1) the terms of the sub-contract and (2) the liability of the defendants.

(1) A I R 1930 All. 116; 121 Ind. Cas. 827; Ind. Rul. (1930) All. 203.

appellants to render an account. In my opinion, the cause of action in the two suits was different and therefore the provisions of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C., do not operate as a bar.

Upon the same reasoning I am of opinion that the suit is not barred by the provisions of s. 11, Civil P. C. inasmuch as the same matter is not directly and substantially in issue in the suit out of which this appeal arises as the matter which was in issue in Suit No. 725 of 1934. For the reasons given in this judgment I dismiss this appeal with costs. Permission to appeal under the Letters Patent is refused.

Legal practitioner—Professional misconduct—Addressing of letter to Magistrate's clerk asking him to deal with application filed, urgently, is professional misconduct.

It is improper for an Advocate to address a letter to a clerk in a Magistrate's office asking that an application filed by him should be dealt with urgently and amounts to professional misconduct. The proper course for him if there is any delay, is to bring the matter to the notice of the Magistrate himself.

Refd. Case under s. 12 of the Indian Bar Councils Act in respect of the complaint of the Sub-Magistrate, Manapparai, dated March 16, 1940.

The Advocate-General, in support of the Reference.

Mr. S. Krishnamurthi, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—The respondent is an Advocate practising in the Madura District. He has been charged with professional misconduct in that he wrote a letter to a clerk of the Sub-Magistrate of Manapparai in the Trichinopoly District asking in effect that the return of money, jewels and wrist watch to his clients should be dealt with urgently. They were entitled to the return of the money and the articles. In fact an application had been made to the District Magistrate for an order directing their return and this order had been passed. The letter complained of is dated May 18, 1938, and is in these terms.

"My dear Brother,

I pray that you will be blessed with welfare, riches and good luck. I have herewith enclosed a memo. Yesterday, I have sent a memo. You should immediately sent the documents referred to in these two memos to the Treasury Office at Kulitalai for reference and return; further, I request you much to send me immediately the order directing the return of money to the petitioner. You must excuse me for the trouble. I feel very grateful for the help rendered by you till now and for the same to be rendered in future. I pray that God will bless you with long life and prosperity."

The Sub-Magistrate opened the cover and it was in this way that the letter came to light. The inquiry into the respondent's conduct was conducted by the District Judge of Trichinopoly and he has submitted a report in which he has expressed the opinion that the respondent has not been guilty of professional misconduct. The District Judge has gone so far as to say that there was nothing improper on the part of the Advocate in requesting the clerk to expediate the despatch of the refund order to enable his clients "to get a refund of the money which they were ultimately entitled to get."

It is manifest that it is improper for an Advocate to address a letter to a clerk in a Magistrate's office asking that an application filed by him should be dealt with urgently. The proper course for the respondent was, if there was any delay, to bring the matter to the notice of the Sub-Magistrate himself. If such letters were allowed there is no knowing to what it might lead. We will assume that the respondent did not intend anything improper, but he must have realized that what he was doing was improper. He has apologised and therefore we consider that the case will be met by censuring him for his conduct. It must be clearly understood that in future a case of this nature will not be so leniently dealt with.

First Civil Appeal No. 102 of 1937

April 18, 1941

THOMAS, C. J. AND GHULAM HASAN, J.

Haji FAQIR BUX AND OTHERS—

versus

Pandit THAKUR PRASAD—PLAINTIFF

AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS
Muhammadian Law—Dower—Prompt—Lapse of time—Effect—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Preference of one creditor—Effect stated—Question of adequacy of consideration, if relevant, even after amendment of Act by Act XX of 1929—Scope of s. 53 (1), para. 4—Test to know whether suit is a representative one—Suit based on fictitious nature of transfer for vindication of plaintiff's personal and individual rights—Suit held not one under s. 53 and need not be in representative form—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 5—Pleadings obscure—Court must call for particulars.

Although prompt dower, according to Muhammadan Law, is payable immediately on demand, yet in a large majority of cases it is rarely demanded and is rarely paid; in practice a Muhammadan husband generally gives little thought to the question of paying dower to his wife save when there is domestic disagreement, or when the wife presses for payment upon the husband's embarking upon a course of extravagance and indebtedness without making any provision for her. Lapse of time since marriage raises no presumption in favour of payment of dower. [p. 591, col. 2; p. 592, col. 1.]

A debtor is entitled to prefer a creditor, unless the transaction can be challenged in bankruptcy, and such a preference cannot in itself be impeached as falling within s. 53, T. P. Act. In re Moroney (2) and 120 Ind. Cas. 645 (4), relied on. [p. 592, col. 2.]

The question of the adequacy of the consideration will be relevant in a suit under s. 53 of the T. P. Act, even after its amendment by Act XX of 1929. But to draw any inference of fraud, the inadequacy should be to a material degree. [p. 593, col. 1.]

The case set up by the plaintiff in the plaint as regards the fictitious character of the deed of gift and the other deeds is entirely different from the scope of a suit under s. 53 of the T. P. Act, where the plaintiff has to accept the genuineness of the deed as an initial fact and has to prove that the transfer, though genuine, was made with a view to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor. The primary object of an action under s. 53 of the T. P. Act, is to make the assets of the transferor available to the general body of creditors. If it would, then the action would in substance be an action under s. 53 of the T. P. Act and would have to be instituted by, or on behalf of, all the creditors. If it would not, then the action cannot be regarded as an action under s. 53 of the T. P. Act. The proper test to apply when a question of this nature is raised is to see whether if the plaintiffs succeed in the action, the property claimed in the action would be available to the general body of creditors. Where the plaintiff bases his suit upon the fictitious nature of a transfer and wants only to vindicate his individual and personal rights, it is not a suit under s. 53 and need not be in the form of a representative suit on behalf of, or for the benefit of all the creditors. 40 Ind. Cas. 242 (12), 63 Ind. Cas. 788 (13) and 29 Ind. Cas. 497 (14), referred to. [p. 595, col. 2; p. 596, col. 1.]

The rules of pleadings contained in O. VI of the Civil P. C., should be complied with and the practice of introducing obscure pleadings with a view to taking the adversary by surprise is open to grave objection and is not unoften likely to lead to grave miscarriage of justice. Where the parties neglect to perform their duty it is clearly the duty of the Court to call upon them to furnish definite particulars of the plea contained in their pleadings. [p. 595, col. 2.]

F. C. A. against the order of the Sessions and Civil Judge of Lucknow, dated May 22, 1937.

Messrs. Niamatullah and Rameshwar Dayal, for Appellants.

Messrs. K. N. Tandon and R. S. Kapoor, for the Respondant No. 1.

Mr. Suraj Sahai, for Respondent No. 4.

Judgment.—These are the defendants first appeals arising out of a claim for declaration of right which has been decreed by the Civil Judge of Lucknow by a judgment and decree dated May 22, 1937.

The plaintiff-respondent brought a suit claiming a declaratory decree to the effect that the deed of gift dated October 20, 1930, and subsequent sale deeds dated October 22, 1932, December 16, 1932, and January 23, 1935, are void and ineffective against him and that he is the absolute and sole owner of the auctioned property. The material facts upon which this claim was based were as follows:—

The plaintiff obtained a simple money decree on the basis of a compromise from the Court of the Munsif of Sitapur on July 25, 1930, against Karim Bakhsh, defendant No. 1, for Rs. 750, besides costs and interest.

Under the compromise defendant No. 1 was required to pay the decretal amount with costs and interest to the plaintiff within three months, that is to say by October 25, 1930, failing which the plaintiff was given a right to take out execution. The money was not paid and the decree was transferred for execution to Lucknow. The plaintiff applied for execution by attachment and sale of five annas and three pies share of Karim Bakhsh in Muhalla Rahimganj, near Fatehganj, Lucknow, and himself purchased the property in a public auction on June 27, 1932. He also obtained possession through Court on November 2, 1932. It is stated in para. 5 of the plaint that Karim Bakhsh, defendant No. 1, in order to deprive the plaintiff of his money, in bad faith and fraudulently, executed a deed of gift in respect of three annas and eleven pies share situate in Rahimganj in favour of his wife, Mst. Maryam Begam, defendant No. 2, on October 20, 1930 (Ex. 25) which is alleged to be fictitious, concocted and showy. The plaintiff alleged that the deed of gift was void against him and he was not bound by it. Defendant No. 2 in turn executed a sale-deed of the same property in favour of defendant No. 3, Sultan Mohammad, her son-in-law, on October 21, 1932, and this deed is likewise fictitious, showy, concocted and is void and ineffective against the plaintiff. It is further alleged that the five annas three pies share in Rahimganj was mortgaged with possession to Faqir Bakhsh, defendant No. 4, by a deed dated December 15, 1923, (Ex. 36) in lieu of Rs. 2,500, and he (Faqir Bakhsh) took possession of the said property under a decree dated October 22, 1926, passed by the Subordinate Judge of Mohanlalganj, Lucknow.

The plaintiff approached Faqir Bakhsh for redemption of the mortgaged property on April 2, 1936, but he refused to redeem the property. It was then that the plaintiff came to know for the first time that two sale-deeds were collusively executed by defendant No. 3 Sultan Mohammad in favour of defendant No. 5, Abdul Ghafur, on December 16, 1932, (Ex. 40) in respect of two annas share out of the Rahimganj property and in favour of defendant No. 6 Abdullah on January 23, 1935 (Ex. 39) in respect of one anna share out of the same property. Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are admittedly the sons of defendant No. 4, Faqir Bakhsh. These latter deeds are alleged to have been executed by defendant No. 3 Sultan Mohammad, in collusion with defendant No. 4, Faqir Bakhsh, in favour of the latter's sons and were fictitious benami and without consideration. In two redemption suits filed by Faqir Bakhsh and Abdullah against Karim Bakhsh and others in 1932 the plaintiff, who was made a party to the suits, was described as a mortgagee of the Rahimganj property, in reply whereof he filed a written statement dated February 23, 1934, clearly mentioning that he was owner by virtue of the auction-purchase and not a mortgagee. Despite this knowledge defendant No. 4, Faqir Bakhsh, got a fictitious deed executed on January 23, 1935, without consideration in favour of Abdullah. In para. 14, of the plaint all the deeds, namely the deed of gift in favour of Mst. Maryam, defendant No. 2, the sale-deeds in favour of Sultan Muhammad, defendant No. 3, Abdul Ghafur, defendant No. 5, and Abdullah, defendant No. 6, are alleged to be absolutely void and ineffective against the plaintiff and the necessity for filing the suit arose against the defendants because they totally denied the ownership of the plaintiff. Paragraph 17 of the plaint may be considered to divide the relief for declaration into two parts, firstly a declaration that the gift and the three aforementioned deeds are void and ineffective against the plaintiff, and secondly that the plaintiff is the absolute owner of the property in dispute.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 made no defence.

The defence of the other defendants was that the deed of gift was executed in lieu of dower debt and was a perfectly genuine transaction. It was also alleged that the defendants had no knowledge of the execution proceedings by the plaintiff and that the plaintiff never got possession of the property purchased by him. It was pleaded that the plaintiff not being in possession of the property in suit, the suit for a mere declaration was not maintainable. Defendants

Nos. 2 to 6 were alleged to be bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration and the sale deeds in their favour were binding upon the plaintiff. The pleas of limitation and insufficiency of court-fee were also raised. In para. 25 of the written statement filed by the defendants Nos. 4 and 6 it was vaguely asserted that the plaintiff's suit as it stands is not maintainable and is fit to be dismissed with costs.

The learned Civil Judge framed issues in the case of which only the material ones may be set out below:—

1. Did the defendant No. 1 execute the deed of gift dated October 20, 1930 in favour of defendant No. 2 fraudulently and in bad faith? Is the deed not binding on the plaintiff as alleged in paras. 5 and 6 of the plaint?

2. Did the defendant No. 2 execute the sale-deed in favour of the defendant No. 3 after receiving information of the proceedings for the delivery of possession and is it fictitious and not binding on the plaintiff?

3. Is the plaintiff in possession of the property in suit and is the suit for mere declaration maintainable?

5. Are the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 bona fide purchasers for value?

7. Is the plaintiff not entitled to maintain the suit as alleged by the defendants Nos. 4 to 6?

On the first issue the learned Civil Judge held that the deed of gift was a fraudulent and fictitious deed executed in order to defeat and delay the creditors of Karim Bakhsh and was not binding upon the plaintiff.

On the second issue he held that the defendant No. 3 got the sale-deed effected in his name inspite of the knowledge of the execution proceedings by the plaintiff and the circumstances attending it were such as to lead him to infer that it was a fictitious document and therefore not binding upon the plaintiff.

On the 3rd issue he held that the plaintiff being in constructive possession, the suit for a mere declaration was maintainable and no extra relief for possession was necessary.

On the 5th issue he held that none of the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 was a bona fide purchaser for value.

On the 7th issue he held that the suit was maintainable inspite of the fact that it was brought by the plaintiff in his individual capacity and not on behalf of all the creditors.

The pleas of court-fee and limitation were not pressed.

The result was that the suit for the declaration was decreed and the deed of gift and the three sale deeds were declared to be fictitious and fraudulent documents and not binding upon the plaintiff.

Two appeals were brought against the aforesaid judgment and decree. Appeal No. 102 of 1937 is by Faqir Bakhsh, defendant No. 4, and his two sons, defendants Nos. 5 and 6, while Appeal No. 103 of 1937 is by Sultan Muhammad, defendant No. 3. Both these appeals will be disposed of by one judgment.

The following questions have been argued before us on behalf of the defendants-appellants.

(1) That the deed of gift was executed in lieu of the dower debt of Mst. Maryam Begam, which was due and subsisting at the time of the execution of the gift, namely, October 20, 1930, that the deed was genuine and was not fictitious or fraudulent, and further that the three sale deeds were genuine deeds and were not fictitious or fraudulent.

(2) That the suit as framed is neither in form nor in substance a suit under s. 53 of the T. P. Act and that even if it were assumed to be one under that section, no relief under that section could be granted to the plaintiff.

(3) That the plaintiff not being in actual or constructive possession of the property was not entitled to maintain the suit for a mere declaration under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

(4) That the defendants were in any event bona fide purchasers for value.

The first question that arises for determination before us is whether the deed of gift executed by Karim Bakhsh in favour of his wife Mst. Maryam Begam, was fictitious or genuine. It is clear that the gift was made in lieu of dower debt of Rs. 1,000. The plaintiff denied the amount of the dower but the learned Civil Judge found that the dower of Mst. Maryam was Rs. 1,000. The deed recites that the parties were married thirty years ago and the dower debt was due from the husband. It was ingeniously argued on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that there was no proof that the whole of the dower was prompt and that in the absence of any evidence that the whole dower was prompt it must be held that the dower was partly prompt and partly deferred. The learned Civil Judge rejected this contention and we agree with him. As we have already stated, the deed of gift itself recites the amount of Rs. 1,000 as dower debt due from

Karim Bakhsh to Mst. Maryam Begam. This by itself indicates that unless the whole dower was prompt it could not have been stated in the deed to be due as deferred dower is not due until dissolution of marriage either by death or by divorce. There is also the evidence of Mst. Maryam Begam, which shows clearly that she had been demanding the entire dower debt of Rs. 1,000. This demand could not have been made until the whole dower was prompt. The learned Civil Judge found that the dower had really been paid off by Karim Bakhsh to his wife long before the deed had been executed. He, however, conceded that if the dower debt had not been paid then the husband would not have been guilty of any fraud in transferring the property by means of the gift in lieu of dower debt. He says that "There can be no doubt that if the dower had really remained due nobody could have stopped defendant No. 1 from paying it off by making a gift of the property, and in that case his wife would have been a creditor, and no doubt preference shown by him to one creditor would not have been tantamount to fraud. That would have been merely a piece of family policy."

In support of this finding that the dower debt must really have been paid off before the execution of the deed of gift the learned Civil Judge relied upon the evidence on the plaintiff (as P. W. No. 10) who stated that he had heard from one Nathuni, the husband of the sister of Karim Bakhsh, and one Hafiz Ahmad Husain, the son-in-law of Mst. Maryam, that her dower debt had been paid, and some circumstantial evidence to which reference will be made hereafter. Nathuni, according to P. W. No. 10, told him about the payment of the dower during the pendency of the suit. P. W. No. 10 states that he saw him in Court. Hafiz Ahmad Husain told the witness some time in 1934 or 1935. Hafiz Ahmad Husain is also admittedly alive. We are of opinion, that the evidence of P. W. No. 10 based upon the alleged statements of Nathuni and Hafiz Ahmad Husain is manifestly hearsay and is inadmissible in evidence. The plaintiff raised no plea in the case that the deed of gift was not genuine because the dower due to Mst. Maryam had been paid long before the execution of the gift. If the plaintiff really wanted to produce evidence in support of the payment of the dower, it was his bounden duty to have produced Nathuni and Hafiz Ahmad Husain, who are alleged to have conveyed to him the information on the point. We must, therefore, eliminate from consideration the hearsay evidence referred to by the plaintiff in his evidence as

P. W. No. 10. It also appears that Mst. Maryam who was examined in the case stated that her dower debt had not been paid till her husband transferred the property by means of the gift in lieu of her dower. She was not cross-examined on this point and we cannot, therefore, but hold that the evidence about payment of dower before the execution of the deed of gift is completely lacking. We are not prepared to agree with the learned Civil Judge that as soon as the plaintiff in the witness-box stated that two living witnesses gave him information about the payment of the dower long before the execution of the gift, it became the bounden duty of the defendants to produce those witnesses in rebuttal. The burden of proving the payment of dower clearly lay upon the plaintiff and this burden cannot be held to have shifted on to the defendants by the mere statement of the plaintiff disclosing two living persons as the source of his knowledge.

The circumstantial evidence relied upon by the learned Civil Judge is to the effect that as the parties were married 40 years ago and the dower was demanded on a number of occasions, there is no reason why it should not have been paid long before the execution of the deed of gift. Another circumstance which has been greatly pressed upon our notice is that on different occasions Karim Bakhsh came by large sums of money which he borrowed, and he should have discharged the dower debt of his wife out of those moneys. The third circumstance alleged in this connection is the execution of the deed just a few days before the period of time allowed under the compromise decree expired. We have given due weight to these considerations but we do not think that either of these circumstances constitute a valid and adequate ground for raising a presumption that the dower debt must have been paid long before the execution of the deed of gift. The deed of gift, which was executed in 1930, mentions that the parties had been married thirty years ago. The learned Judge is wrong in stating that they were married 40 years ago. Although prompt dower, according to Muhammadan Law, is payable immediately on demand, yet our experience about Muhammadan families shows that in a large majority of cases it is rarely demanded and is rarely paid; in practice a Muhammadan husband generally gives little thought to the question of paying dower to his wife save when there is domestic disagreement, or when the wife presses for payment upon the husband's embarking upon a course of extravagance and indebtedness without making any provision for her. Lapse of time since marriage raises no presumption in favour of payment of dower. That Karim Bakhsh may have been in a position to pay the dower debt of his wife, does not necessarily lead to the inference that he actually paid it; nor can the mere circumstance, that Karim Bakhsh paid the dower by means of the execution of the deed of gift only a few days before the time allowed under the compromise decree expired, throw any doubt upon such payment. At best his conduct may amount to an attempt to save the property from the hands of the creditors and to prefer paying the dower debt of his wife against the debts of his other creditors.

Having given our best consideration to the case, we have no hesitation in arriving at the conclusion that the dower debt of Mst. Maryam was due and subsisting at the time of the execution of the deed of gift in 1930 and it was paid only by means of the deed of gift in her favour. The finding of the learned Civil Judge on this point cannot, therefore, be upheld.

If the deed be upheld as a genuine gift, it follows that the sale deed executed by Mst. Maryam in favour of her son-in-law, Sultan Muhammad, was perfectly valid, and similarly sale-deeds by Sultan Muhammad in favour of defendants Nos. 5 and 6, Abdul Ghafur and Abdullah are equally valid. In this view of the matter the auction purchase made by the plaintiff on June 27, 1932, conferred no title upon him.

The next question that arises for consideration in this connection however is, that the transfer under the deed of gift contravenes the provisions of s. 53 of the T. P. Act. Here again, we must express our dissent from the finding arrived at by the learned Civil Judge. The following observations of Lord Wrenbury in Musahar Sahu v. Hakim Lal (L. R. 43 I. A. 104) (1) provide in our opinion, a sufficient answer to the argument raised with reference to s. 53 of the T. P. Act:

"As matter of law their Lordships take it to be a clear that in a case in which no consideration of the law of bankruptcy or insolvency applies there is nothing to prevent a debtor paying one creditor in full and leaving others unpaid although the result may be the rest of his assets will be insufficient to provide for the payment of the rest of his debts. The law is, in their Lordships' opinion, rightly stated by Palles, C. B. In re Moroney (1881, L. R. 21 Ir. 27, 62) (2) where he says: "The right of the creditors, taken as a whole, is that all the property of the debtor should be applied in payment of demands of them or some of them, without any portion of it being parted with, without consideration or reserved or retained by the debtor to their prejudice. Now it follows from this, that security given by a debtor to one creditor upon a portion of or upon all his property (although the effect of it, or even the interest of the debtor in making it, may be to defeat an expected execution of another creditor) is not a fraud within the statute: because notwithstanding such an act, the entire property remains available for the creditors or some or one of them and as the statute gives no right to rateable distribution, the right of the creditors by such act is not invaded or affected.

The transfer which defeats or delays creditors is not an instrument which prefers one creditor to another, but an instrument which removes property from the creditors to the benefit of the debtor. The debtor must not retain a benefit for himself. He may pay one creditor and leave another unpaid: Middleton v. Pollock (1876, 2 Ch. D. 104, 108) (3). So soon as it is found that the transfer here impeached was made for adequate consideration in satisfaction of genuine debts, and without reservation of any benefit to the debtor, it follows that no ground for impeaching it lies in the fact that the plaintiff who also was a creditor was a loser by payment being made to this preferred creditor—there being in the case no question of bankruptcy."

This statement of law was approved by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ma Pwa May v. S. R. M. M. A. Chettyar Firm (L. R. 56 I. A. 379) (4). Their Lordships added:—

"A debtor is entitled to prefer a creditor, unless the transaction can be challenged in bankruptcy, and such a preference cannot in itself be impeached as falling within s. 53."

In Bansidhar v. Nawab Jahan Begam (1937 O. W. N. 1176) (5) a debtor executed a deed of gift in favour of his wife in lieu of her dower debt and it was found that the dower debt had not been paid and remained due at the time of the execution of the deed of gift and also that the amount fixed for dower was Rs. 40,000 but the property forming subject of the gift was worth Rs. 8,000. It was held that the transfer in question was genuine and that it was not possible to say that the debtor had retained any benefit for himself or that the object of the transfer had been to remove the property from the creditors for the benefit of the debtor, but that it was a case merely of one creditor being preferred to another and consequently the transfer in question did not offend against the provisions of s. 53 of the T. P. Act.

A similar view was taken in Pandit Ram Ratan Lal v. Akhtari Begam (1939 O. A. 375) (6) which was a case of a sale deed executed by a husband in favour of his wife in lieu of her dower debt. The transferee was also held to be a bona fide transferee for consideration.

In Razina Khatun v. Abida Khatun (1936 All. L. J. 1328) (7) it was held that where a Muhammadan husband transfers certain property to his wife in satisfaction of the prompt dower debt due to her and the transaction of sale is a genuine one, it is not open to the other creditors of the husband to avoid the transaction merely on the ground that the effect of it was to give preference to one creditor over the others, even though it be shown that this was a fact known to the wife (transferee). In a case of such fraudulent preference the proper remedy of the other creditors, if there is not sufficient property left to meet their claims, is to approach the insolvency Court within two years of the transfer and get the debtor adjudicated an insolvent, in which case they would be placed on the same footing as the preferred creditor and the transfer would be avoided by the insolvency Court.

Another ground urged on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent is that the gift is fraudulent because it was executed in lieu of a grossly inadequate consideration, the value of the property being much greater than the amount of the dower debt. Under the old unamended s. 53 of the T. P. Act it was laid down :—

"Where the effect of any transfer of immovable property is to defraud, defeat or delay any such person, and such transfer is made gratuitously, or for a grossly inadequate consideration, the transfer may be presumed to have been made with such intent as aforesaid."

This paragraph does not however, find a place in the new s. 53 introduced by the Amendment Act (XX of 1929). As a matter of fact the question of adequacy of consideration is not material in view of the nature of the issue which was framed in the case, namely whether the transaction was fictitious or genuine. Although the old section does not in terms apply to the case, yet the question of the adequacy of the consideration will be relevant in a suit under s. 53 of the T. P. Act.

Upon the merits, however, we are satisfied that this is not a case in which the property converted by the deed of gift was transferred red for a grossly inadequate consideration so as to justify an inference of fraud."

In order to determine this matter we shall have to refer in some detail to the history of this property. One Khuda Bakhsh died in 1895 leaving a number of daughters from his two wives and three sons, Rahim Bakhsh, Karim Bakhsh and Nabi Bakhsh. On February 12, 1904, all the heirs of Khuda Bakhsh, including Karim Bakhsh defendant No. 1, mortgaged the shares inherited by them in Rahimganj property to the Maharaja of Balrampur for Rs. 20,000 (vide Ex. 34). Each of the three brothers owned four annas 10-13/44 krant share of their father in this property. On September 20, 1920, the three sons executed a sale deed of a portion of the Rahimganj property, designated as Block B by the Commissioner's report (Ex. 47) in favour of one Murlidhar and paid off the mortgage debt due to the Maharaja of Balrampur under Ex. 34. The daughters were not parties to this sale deed. They however executed indemnity bond in favour of Murlidhar agreeing to charge their share in the property designated as Block A, if any portion of the property sold to Murlidhar by their three brothers went out of his possession. Murlidhar obtained a decree for Rs. 8,386-3-6 against the three sons on the basis of the security bond which encumbered their share in Block A. Rahim Bakhsh died on December 8, 1923, and the share of Karim Bakhsh was therefore augmented to 5 annas 6 pies 14-55/352 krants. This share was, however, reduced to 4 annas, 14 55/352 krants as a result of the debts left by Rahim Bakhsh. This latter share stood charged with the following encumbrances :—

(1) Karim Bakhsh was liable to pay his proportionate one-third share in the decretal amount of Rs. 8,386, due from all the three sons. This share came to Rs. 2 795-5-4.

(2) On December 15, 1923, Karim Bakhsh mortgaged his entire share to Faqir Bakhsh, defendant No. 4, for Rs. 2,500 at one per cent. per mensem compoundable monthly (vide Ex. 36). The mortgagee was entitled to take possession of the mortgaged property if the principal was not paid within one year. Faqir Bakhsh took possession of the mortgaged property on October 22, 1926, (Ex. 37). The mortgage money due to Faqir Bakhsh up to the date of his possession came to Rs. 3,506-3-3.

(3) On October 2, 1926, Karim Bakhsh made a simple mortgage in favour of Thakur Prasad for Rs. 500 at two per cent. per mensem with six monthly rests of his entire share along with a certain house in Sitapur.

The amount due to Thakur Prasad up to the date of the gift in favour of Mst. Maryam Begam namely October 20, 1930, came to Rs. 1,253-13.

(4) On June 26, 1929, Karim Bakhsh mortgaged his share to Abdullah (defendant No. 6), son of Faqir Bakhsh, in lieu of Rs. 1,000, at one per cent. per mensem. Abdullah obtained a decree against Karim Bakhsh for Rs. 1,582-11-6 on March 10, 1932, (Ex. 40). The interest on the principal sum secured by Karim Bakhsh up to the date of gift however, came to Rs. 1,160 approximately.

The total amount of the encumbrances upon the four annas share came to Rs. 8,715-5-7. The property conveyed by the gift was, however, three annas and 11 pies only. The proportionate amount of the encumbrances on one pie share approximately amounts to Rs. 181, and after deducting the sum from the total amount of the encumbrances, the balance of the encumbrances came to Rs. 8,534 approximately upon the share of three annas and 11 pies. To this may be added the sum of Rs. 1,000 which was the consideration of the deed of gift. Thus the total amount of encumbrances came to Rs. 9,534 approximately. As regards the value of the property, we find that Sultan Mohammad sold one anna share to Abdullah for Rs. 2,400 on January 23, 1935, free from encumbrances. The value of the entire four annas share will therefore amount to Rs. 9,600. It will thus appear that although the deed of gift was executed in lieu of the dower debt of Rs. 1,000 only, the encumbrances existing upon the property, which the donee was bound to discharge, came up to very nearly the value of the property computed according to the sale deed executed by Sultan Mohammad in favour of Abdullah. We therefore, hold that the consideration for the deed of gift, far from being grossly inadequate, represented the full value of the property. This circumstance, therefore, affords no justification for the inference that the transfer by way of gift was fraudulent within the meaning of s. 53 of the T. P. Act.

Even if the value of the property on any other computation had been greater than the consideration of the deed of gift, we do not find any satisfactory evidence on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent to show that the inadequacy of the consideration in the present case was to any material degree.

In Labhu Ram v. Charnu Fauju (A. I. R. 1929 Lahore, 409) (8), it was held that the transfer which defeats or delays creditors is not an instrument which prefers one to the other but an instrument which removes property from the creditors for the benefit of the debtor. This is true even though the debtor intended to defeat the claims of the other creditor and the transferee had knowledge of this, if his only purpose was to secure payment of his own debt, and the property is not worth materially more than his debts.

The cases relied upon by learned Counsel on behalf of the plaintiff, Amina Begam v. Sheo Prasad (8 O. W. N., 794) (9) and Hashmat Begam v. Mohan Lal (1937 O. W. N 391) (10) and Mohammad Haider Kazmi v. Prince Safdar Jah Zahid Ali Mirza (1938 O. W. N., 922) (11), are clearly distinguishable upon the facts.

Our finding therefore, is that the deed of gift in favour of Mst. Maryam Begam was a genuine deed and not a fictitious deed. We also find that the transfer under that deed was not fraudulent and did not offend against the provisions of s. 53 of the T. P. Act. Our conclusion is the same in respect of the three subsequent sale deeds referred to above. As regards the second point, it may be pointed out that the defendants have nowhere specifically raised the question that the suit was not properly framed under s. 53 of the T. P. Act, and that it was not filed by the plaintiff in a representative capacity on behalf of and for the benefit of other creditors. Paragraph 25 of the written statement of defendants Nos. 4 and 6, which we have quoted above, is too vague and too general to indicate what was meant by the defendants and strangely enough no attempt was made on behalf of the plaintiff to seek a clarification of the plea contained in para. 25 of the written statement nor did the Court care to ascertain from the defendants as to the exact scope of the aforesaid plea. Issue No. 7 does not specify what is the allegation of defendants Nos. 4 and 6 upon which the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain the suit.

There were no oral pleadings before the Court on the date of the issues, and as a matter of fact, no facts had been alleged by the defendants in para. 25 of the written statement upon which the plea of non-maintainability of the suit was based. If the parties neglected to perform their duty, it was clearly the duty of the Court to have called upon the defendants to furnish definite particulars of the plea contained in para. 25 of the written statement. It is to be regretted that the rules of pleadings contained in O. VI of the Civil P. O., have not been complied with in this case and we cannot help observing that the practice of introducing obscure pleadings with a view to taking the adversary by surprise is open to grave objection and is not unoften likely to lead to grave miscarriage of justice. From the finding recorded by the learned Civil Judge on Issue No. 7 it appears that the plea under s. 53 of the T. P. Act was raised in course of the argument. The learned Civil Judge rightly points out that it was not specifically pleaded in the written statement and he was not prepared to allow it at the time of the arguments as it took the plaintiff unawares. The learned Judge does not realise that his failure of duty to clarify pleadings imposed upon him by law itself contributed to the unfortunate result. Apart from the fact that the defendants did not definitely raise the question that the suit was not properly framed as contemplated by s. 53 of the T. P. Act, the plaintiff cannot succeed in avoiding the transfers on the ground that they had been made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor unless he succeeds in showing that the transfers, although genuine, were fraudulent within the meaning of the section. Here again we regret to note that we do not find any specific allegations in the plaint that the transfers impugned had been made with a view to defeat or delay the creditors. Reference has been made on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent to paras. 5, 8, 13, 14 and 17 of the plaint. We do not find a single assertion in any of these paragraphs to the effect that the transfers were made with a view to defeat or delay the creditors of Karim Bakhsh. The words "fraudulently" and "in bad faith" have no doubt been used in para. 5 of the plaint but the particulars of the fraud are nowhere mentioned. No fraud against the creditors is pleaded anywhere in the plaint. Throughout the plaint the plaintiff has tried to emphasize that these documents were fictitious and paper transactions and were not genuine; in other words no title passed under these deeds. If the deed of gift is proved to be collusive and fictitious, it is clear that it never took effect and subsequent sale deeds are of no legal effect. Karim Bakhsh retained the ownership of the property, and in that view of the matter the plaintiff's title to the property by virtue of the auction purchase must be held to be unassailable. If, however, the deed of gift is proved to be genuine and not fictitious, the validity of the subsequent deeds will not be affected and the plaintiff will be at once out of Court. It must also be clearly understood that the case set up by the plaintiff in the plaint as regards the fictitious character of the deed of gift and the other deeds is entirely different from the scope of a suit under s. 53 of the T. P. Act, where the plaintiff has to accept the genuineness of the deed as an initial fact and has to prove that the transfer, though genuine, was made with a view to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor. This distinction was clearly emphasised by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhoria (L. R. 44 I. A. 72) (12) where it was observed :—

"First then, as to the alienation in favour of the plaintiff being, as it is termed in the respondent's case, collusive and fictitious. It is there alleged that judgment, Chhatrapat Singh, was, and always remained the real owner of the properties in dispute."

Strictly this means that the transaction was benami and not that it was a fraudulent transfer within the meaning of s. 53 of the T. P. Act. The difference is distinct, though it is often slurred. To the suggestion that the transaction was benami a complete answer is furnished by the admission that the judgment-debtor owed the plaintiff the amount stated to be the consideration for the sale deeds and more. And even if the case for the decree-holder be treated as raising the further plea of a fraudulent transfer, this same admission operates strongly in the plaintiff's favour. The plaintiff in para. 17 of the plaint does not allege that the transfers are voidable at the instance of the creditors and they should therefore be set aside, and the property should be sold for satisfaction of his decretal debt. On the other hand, he asserts that these transfers are void, and consequently he should be declared to be the owner of the property.

We have no doubt in our mind that the plaintiff's suit as framed is not one under s. 53 of the T. P. Act. There is no indication in the plaint or elsewhere that the suit was filed on behalf of or for the benefit of other creditors. On the other hand, there is every indication in the averments of the plaint, to which we have already referred, that the plaintiff wanted to vindicate his personal and individual rights, and not the rights of other creditors. The plaintiff claimed title to the property on the ground of the auction purchase. If the plaintiff succeeds in his action and obtains a declaration of title in his favour, that declaration will not advance the cause of the creditors, as there will be no property available to them for the satisfaction of their claims. Form No. 13 Appendix D, of Sch. I of the Civil P. C. is the form of the decree to be prepared in a case under s. 53 of the T. P. Act to set aside a transfer in fraud of creditors. The form is as follows:—

“No. 13.
Decree to set aside a Transfer in Fraud of Creditors.
(Title.)

It is hereby declared that the _____ dated the _____ day of _____ 19____ and made between _____ and _____ is void as against the plaintiff and all the other creditors, if any, of the defendant.”

Having regard to the reliefs claimed in the suit, it cannot be contended with any show of reason that the suit is one under s. 53 of the T. P. Act and no decree has been sought by the plaintiff to the effect that the transfer is void as against him and all the other creditors, if any, of the defendant.

It has been held that the primary object of an action under s. 53 of the T. P. Act is to make the assets of the transferor available to the general body of creditors. If it would then the action would in substance be an action under s. 53 of the T. P. Act and would have to be instituted by, or on behalf of, all the creditors. If it would not, then the action cannot be regarded as an action under s. 53 of the T. P. Act. The proper test to apply when a question of this nature is raised is to see whether if the plaintiffs succeed in the action, the property claimed in the action would be available to the general body of creditors. (Vide Sri Thakurji v. Narsingh Narain Singh, (A. I. R. 1921 Patna 53) (13) and Vasudeo Raghunath Oka v. Janardhan Sadashiv Apte, (I. L. R. 39 Bom. 507) (14).

Applying this test to the present case, we are quite clear in our mind that the present suit is not one under s. 53 of the T. P. Act. Before the passing the T. P. (Amendment) Act (XX of 1929) there was a conflict of opinion between the Calcutta and the Bombay High Courts on the one hand and the Madras High Court on the other hand on the question whether a suit to set aside the transfer on the ground that it was made with the intent to defeat or delay the creditors should be brought on behalf of all the creditors or whether it is competent to any one of the creditors to institute such a suit. The Calcutta and the Bombay High Courts were of opinion that the suit should be a representative suit to be brought on behalf of all the creditors while the Madras High Court was of opinion that the suit could be instituted by a single creditor. The practice of the Calcutta and the Bombay High Courts was also in accordance with Form No. 13 of Appendix D of Sch. I of the Civil P. C. The Legislature gave statutory recognition to the view of the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts by enacting para. 4 of s. 53 (1) of the T. P. Act, which is as follows:

“A suit instituted by a creditor (which term includes a decree-holder whether he has or has not applied for execution of his decree) to avoid a transfer on the ground that it has been made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transfer, shall be instituted on behalf, or for the benefit of, all the creditors.”

We have already held that the plaintiff's suit was not a representative suit intended for the general body of the creditors, but we do not desire to press into service this point against the plaintiff as the defendants themselves are to blame for not putting forward their objection to the maintainability of the suit on this ground definitely in their pleadings.

Assuming the suit to be one under that section we are of opinion that it is not possible for us to grant any relief to the plaintiff under that section as it is wholly inconsistent and irreconcilable with the relief claimed by him in the suit.

Coming to the third point we find that the defendants Nos. 4 and 6 asserted in para. 9 of their written statement that the defendant No. 4 did not get actual possession for a portion of the mortgaged property in spite of getting a decree for recovery of mortgagee's possession. We also find from the evidence of Maryam Begam that she got possession over two shops after the gift in her favour. She says that the defendant No. 4 was a mortgagee in possession before the date of the gift and that she obtained possession of a certain shop and a house occupied by the tenants who paid rent to her. We accept this evidence as true. Sultan Mohammad, as D. W. No. 1, has also stated that after the deed of gift Mst. Maryam Begam got possession over the shop occupied by Mohan tenant and that she was already in possession of the house. He further says that Mst. Maryam Begam could not obtain possession of the entire property gifted, as it had been mortgaged with possession to Faqir Bakhsh. The plaintiff obtained formal delivery of possession on November 4, 1932, after the auction purchase. There is no evidence that he obtained actual possession of the property. In these circumstances it was open to the plaintiff to ask for a further relief either of possession or redemption before he was entitled to a declaration under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The proviso to that section clearly lays down :

"Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so."

The learned Civil Judge admits that Faqir Bakhsh being the mortgagee of the property was in physical possession, but he holds that the plaintiff was in constructive possession and could, therefore, maintain the suit for declaration. There is absolutely no evidence on the record to show that the plaintiff was in possession through his agents or tenants paying rents to him. It is difficult to see in what way the plaintiff was in constructive possession. We do not agree with the finding of the learned Civil Judge on this point and hold that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the suit for a mere declaration.

The decision in M. Fariduddin Ahmad v. Murtaza Ali Khan (1935 O. W. N. 1071) (15) referred to on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent has no application to the present case. There it was held that as it was impossible for the plaintiff to sue for possession without having the Privy Council decree set aside, and it was not open to the Court to set aside such a decree, no further relief need have been claimed.

The last point which has been urged before us on behalf of the defendants-appellants, is covered by Issue No. 5 in the case, namely, whether the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 are bona fide purchasers for value. It has been contended that the transferees had no reason to consider the gift in favour of Mst. Maryam Begam otherwise than as genuine, that they paid value for the transfers as will appear from the recital of the considerations set out in the respective deeds in their names and that the fact that the plaintiff was taking proceedings in execution in pursuance of his decree did not affect the matter. Having regard to the findings at which we have arrived upon the principal points in the case we do not consider it necessary to express any opinion on this point.

For the foregoing reasons we allow the appeals, set aside the judgment and decree of the trial Court and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

First Appeals Nos. 49 and 50 of 1940

December 16, 1940

ROBERTS, C. J. AND DUNKLEY, J.

U ZAWTIPALA—APPELLANT

U THATDAMA—RESPONDENT

Burmese Buddhist Law—Ecclesiastical law—Sanghika kyaungdaik—Election of presiding monk—Majority of Sangh expressing desire to elect certain monk—Election, if valid—Death of owner of Poggalika property—Effect—Owner of Poggalika property executing deed, declaring property to be dwithantaka of himself and other person—Registration, necessity of—Res judicata—Suit for possession by monk as representative of Sanghas of Kyaungdaik, dismissed—Subsequent suit as presiding monk, if barred.

Where the majority of the Sangha did desire that a monk should be elected presiding monk of Sanghika Kyaungdaik and so expressed their will at the meeting, then it must be held that he was validly elected. [p. 599, col. 2.]

On the death of owner of Poggalika property the property becomes Sanghika property. 168 Ind. Cas. 967 (3), relied on.

A deed by the owner of Poggalika property declaring the property to be dwithantaka property of himself and some other person is the creation of an interest in immovable property and, therefore, it must be registered under the provisions of s. 17 (1) (b), Regis. Act. 45 Ind. Cas. 926 (4), relied on. [p. 600, col. 1.]

Where a suit for possession by a monk as representative of the Sanghas of Kyaungdaik is dismissed, a subsequent suit by him for possession in the capacity of a presiding monk is not barred by res judicata. [p. 598, col. 1.]

F. As. against the decrees of the District Court, Bassein, dated January 16, 1940.

Mr. U Hla Tun Pru, for the Appellant.

Mr. U Ba Sein for Mr. U E Maung (1), for the Respondent.

Roberts, C. J.—One U Pandaisa, who died on October 16, 1933, was the presiding monk of the Nigyawdagon Nyaungbintha kyaungdaik in Bassein town. The kyaungdaik contains eight buildings in all, and U Pandaisa exercised control as presiding monk over all these buildings. In association with this kyaungdaik there were a number of holdings of paddy land, which had been dedicated (by five different registered deeds) by certain pious persons for the use and enjoyment of the monks residing therein. During his lifetime U Pandaisa managed these paddy lands, leased them to tenants and received the rents and profits thereof. After his death, disputes arose between the two parties to these appeals regarding the right of control of the kyaungdaik and the paddy lands, and it appears that the appellant, U Zawtipala, has obtained possession of the paddy lands and that the respondent, U Thatdama, has obtained possession of the kyaungdaik, with the exception of one building which is occupied by a few followers of U Zawtipala. The suits out of which these two appeals arise, being Nos. 8 and 9 of 1939 of the District Court of Bassein, were cross-suits brought by U Zawtipala and U Thatdama against one another. Suit No. 8 of 1939 was a suit by the respondent, U Thatdama, against the appellant, U Zawtipala, for recovery of possession of the paddy lands already mentioned and the mesne profits thereof. U Thatdama sued in the capacity of presiding monk of the Nigyawdagon Nyaungbintha Kyaungdaik, or, in the alternative, a member of the Sangha "suing on behalf of the whole body of Sanghas in general," and the suit was brought as a representative suit, under the provisions of O. I., r. 8, Civil P. C.

There was a previous suit between them for the possession of these paddy lands, being No. 3 of 1937 of the Assistant District Court of Bassein, out of which First Appeal No. 14 of 1938 U Zawtipala v. U Thatdama (1), of this Court arose. That suit was a representative suit in which U Thatdama sued as the representative of the Sanghas of the Nyaungbintha Kyaungdaik. His suit was unsuccessful because it was held by this Court on appeal that neither he nor U Zawtipala was the presiding monk of the kyaungdaik in succession to U Pandaisa and that a suit for possession of the paddy lands brought in a representative character as representative of the residents of the kyaungdaik alone was incompetent. It is now urged on behalf of the appellant that suit No. 8 of 1939 of the District Court of Bassein, out of which First Appeal No. 49 of 1940 arises, was res judicata by reason of the decision in suit No. 3 of 1937 of the Assistant District Court of Bassein and First Appeal No. 14 of 1938 U Zawtipala v. U Thatdama (1), of this Court. So far as the suit in the District Court was brought as a representative suit and the respondent claimed to be entitled to a decree for possession of the paddy lands "suing on behalf of the whole body of Sanghas in general," clearly the claim is res judicata for this is a claim which might and ought to have been made in the prior suit; but, so far as his claim was based on the assertion that he is the presiding monk in succession to U Pandaisa of this kyaungdaik, no question of res judicata arises. In First Appeal No. 14 of 1938 U Zawtipala v. U Thatdama (1), it was held at that time the respondent was not the presiding monk, and judgment in that appeal was delivered on July 28, 1938. Now, in the present suit, the respondent claims to have been elected the presiding monk of the kyaungdaik at a public meeting held on October 3, 1938, i. e., he alleges that he has now acquired the status which gives him the right of action, which status he lacked in the former suit.

Suit No. 9 of 1939 of the District Court, out of which First Appeal No. 50 of 1940 arises, was a suit by the appellant against the respondent for a declaration of ownership of the kyaungdaik and the buildings therein and the paddy lands, and for possession of those of these properties of which the appellant was out of possession at the time when the suit was brought. The appellant claims to be the sole owner in his own right of all these properties. The two suits were heard together and the evidence was recorded in suit No. 8 of 1939. The pleadings in that suit were extremely verbose and contained many unnecessary and untenable allegations of fact and much recital of evidence. The plaint consisted of 24 paragraphs and the written statement contained 15 paragraphs. In that suit the learned District Judge framed no less than 16 issues, which really comprised 20 questions for decision. In suit No. 9 of 1939 the pleadings were somewhat shorter, and the issues framed were only eight in number and were all included in the issues framed in suit No. 8 of 1939. Yet the points on which the parties were at issue in both suits were few and defined, and became quite plain when the respondent had been examined. The learned District Judge would have been well advised if at that stage he had re-settled the issues. As it is, his judgment is overburdened with discussions of evidence and arguments which were really unnecessary to the decision of the suits.

The respondent's case is that the Nyaungbintha kyaungdaik is sanghika property and that the paddy lands are aramika sanghika, dedicated by various donors at different times to the kyaungdaik for the use and enjoyment of the monks residing therein. He claims to be entitled to possession of the paddy lands as presiding monk of the kyaungdaik in succession to U Pandaisa. The appellant's case is that the kyaungdaik and the paddy lands were the poggalika property of U Pandaisa, that by a dwithantaka deed, made on May 14, 1932, by U Pandaisa before his death, he became joint owner with U Pandaisa of all this property and, consequently, on the latter's death they all became his sole poggalika property. During the course of the hearing of these appeals, we framed four questions which we consider to be the only questions which it was necessary to answer for the decision of both suits. They are as follows: 1. Is the respondent entitled to maintain suit No. 8 of 1939 (a) as presiding monk of the kyaungdaik, or (b) as representative of the sangha? 2. Were the properties, sanghika properties, or were they the poggalika properties of U Pandaisa? 3. If the properties were poggalika, did the appellant become the joint owner thereof with U Pandaisa before the latter's death? 4. Did the appellant become the presiding monk of the kyaungdaik by reason of the memorandum executed by U Pandaisa on May 14, 1932, (Ex. 5 in suit No. 3 of 1937 of the Assistant District Court)?

As regards the first question, we have already pointed out that it is not now open to the respondent to sue as a representative of the sangha. His right of action as presiding monk of the kyaungdaik is based on the averment in para. 18 of the amended plaint, to the effect that he was elected as presiding monk of this kyaungdaik at a public meeting convened for the purpose at the kyaungdaik on October 3, 1938. The evidence which he has called concerning this meeting shows that at least 500 pamphlets in Burmese, setting out the object of this meeting, namely the election of the respondent as presiding monk, were distributed in Bassein, inviting members of the sangha and members of the public to attend this meeting, and that at least 30 members of the sangha and 50 members of the public were present at the meeting. The presiding monk of the Tagaung monastery, U Thumana, presided at this meeting, and the respondent was elected as presiding monk of the Nyaungbintha Kyaungdaik without a dissentient voice. The appellant does not seek to say that this testimony is not true, but he sets up that the election was invalid by reason of its informality. It is said that sufficient public notice of the meeting was not given, that the opponents of the respondent were not invited to attend, that no proper chairman of the meeting was elected, that no resolutions were put to the meeting, and no objections were asked for. So far as the objection that the supporters of the appellant were not specially invited is concerned, they were resident in the kyaungdaik at the time and their assertion that they did not know of this meeting until after it had been held cannot be believed. Clearly, they must have known of the meeting and they could have been present if they had desired to do so. They designedly stayed away and, even if they had been present, they are so few in number that their votes could not have affected the result. The contention of the appellant in regard to this election is concluded against him by our judgments in U Thuseitta v. U Eindawuntha (2). As we said in the course of our judgments

"...an impossible position would arise if the will of the majority should not prevail, for a single monk by merely absenting himself from the election could render it impossible for a new presiding monk of a sanghika kyaungdaik to be elected;" and further

"...the only question which it is necessary to ask is this: Has there been a real, valid and true election by the Sangha as such? They may elect, as it seems to us, in any way choose, and the only matter about which we must be satisfied is whether the election was a real election by the whole of the Sangha."

That is, if we are satisfied that the majority of the Sangha did desire that the respondent should be elected presiding monk and so expressed their will at this meeting, then it must be held that the respondent was validly elected. The meeting was no hole and corner business; it was publicly advertised throughout the town of Bassein and every person, either monk or layman, who was really interested in this election, had an opportunity to attend. It is idle for the appellant and his supporters to say that they did not attend because their attendance would not have been welcome to the other side; that is always the position in which an opposition minority finds itself. The desire of the Sanghas that the respondent should succeed U Pandaisa as presiding monk of the kyaungdaik was clearly and unequivocally expressed at this meeting, and therefore it must be held that he was validly elected. This disposes of the first question. As regards the second question, the learned District Judge has found that all the kyaungs within the kyaungdaik except one were aramika sanghika property and that all the paddy lands except one were also aramika sanghika. He has further held that the remaining kyaung and remaining piece of paddy land were the poggalika property of U Pandaisa. He has carefully considered the evidence and no sufficient reason for not accepting his findings has been adduced in argument on behalf of the appellant. It is unnecessary for us to consider this question in detail, because, even if all the properties, were the poggalika property of U Pandaisa it must be held that he made no valid transfer of any of these properties during his lifetime and, consequently, on his death all the properties became sanghika in view of the decision in U Zawtika v. U Kalyana (3).

In regard to the third question, the case of the appellant is based on the memorandum dated May 14, 1932 to which we have already referred. This memorandum sets out that five kyaungdaiks and all the property connected therewith, belonging to U Pandaisa of Nyaungbintha kyaungdaik, are declared to be the dwithantaka properties of U Zawtipala. The memorandum is signed by U Pandaisa and U Zawtipala. The learned District Judge held that it was inadmissible in evidence and did not affect the properties by reason of the fact that it was not registered. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that a dwithantaka deed of this description does not require registration, but no authority for this astonishing proposition has been cited, and the case in U Zayanta v. U Naga (4) is directly opposed to this contention. Clearly, it is the creation of an interest in immovable property and therefore since it has been recorded in the form of a document, it must be registered under the provisions of s. 17 (1) (b), Regis. Act. It is said on behalf of the appellant that the transaction was not a gift but the creation of a joint ownership, that by it U Pandaisa made U Zawtipala a joint owner with him of his property and, on the other hand, U Zawtipala made U Pandaisa a joint owner with him of his property; but that is not what the memorandum itself says. The memorandum is plainly a gift of immovable property by U Pandaisa to U Zawtipala and under the provisions of s. 123, T. P. Act, such a gift can only be made by registered instrument. Moreover, even if the contention of the appellant as to the construction of this memorandum could be accepted, the transaction would then amount to an exchange within s. 118, T. P. Act, and therefore as the property is worth more than Rs. 100 it could only be effected by registered instrument. Hence the third question must be answered in the negative.

As regards the fourth question, it was decided by a Bench of this Court in First Appeal No. 14 of 1938 U Zawtipala v. U Thatdama (1) that U Zawtipala was not the presiding monk of this kyaungdaik, and with that decision and the reasons given therefor we are, with the greatest respect, in complete agreement. There has been no change in U Zawtipala's position since the delivery of the judgment in that appeal, and consequently, it must be held that U Zawtipala did not become the presiding monk of the kyaungdaik by reason of the memorandum of May 14, 1932 and has at no material time been, and is not now, the presiding monk. The result of the answers to these four questions therefore is that the appellant, U Zawtipala, has no interest whatever in the kyaungdaik or in the aramika sanghika properties connected with the kyaungdaik, but that the respondent, as the presiding monk of the kyaungdaik, is entitled to possession of the kyaungdaik and all the paddy lands connected therewith. These are the decisions at which the learned District Judge has arrived, and, consequently, his decrees in the two suits, granting the respondent a decree for possession and mesne profits of the paddy lands in suit No. 8 and dismissing the appellant's suit in suit No. 9 are correct. These appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

Miscellaneous Appeal No. 40 of 1938

AVADH RAJ SINGH—APPELLANT

MANGREY—RESPONDENT

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 4, 53—Question relating to fictitious character of transfer not falling under s. 53—If can be tried under s. 4—Held that gift made by insolvent in favour of his son and nephew was not fictitious and could not be annulled under s. 4—Hindu Law—Debts—Father—Son's liability—Gift by father to son—Son, if absolved from liability to pay father's debts.

It is open to an Insolvency Court to try a question under s. 4 of the Prov. Insol. Act relating to the fictitious character of the transfer even though it does not fall under s. 53 of the Act the petition having been made by the creditor more than four years after the transfer. 157 Ind. Cas. 680 (1), 161 Ind. Cas. 687 (2), 141 Ind. Cas. 667 (3), 131 Ind. Cas. 433 (4) and 113 Ind. Cas. 819 (5), relied on.

A donor who was subsequently adjudicated insolvent had made a gift of his property to his minor son and a nephew. The mutation of names was effected in favour of the donees in respect of the property gifted. No khwat stood in the name of donor after the date of the gift and donor no longer retained possession over the gifted property. The amount of indebtedness admitted by the insolvent did not show that the insolvent was under any pressure from his creditors which led him to make the gift in question. It had not been shown that any of the debts was a decretal debt or that there was any execution of decree pending against the insolvent:

Held, that in the circumstances of the case there was no evidence whatsoever to show that the deed of gift was a fictitious or colourable transaction which was not intended to take effect. Therefore, the insolvent had no interest in the property gifted and the gift could not be annulled under s. 4.

Under Hindu Law a son is under a pious obligation to pay his father's debts, unless they are tainted by illegality or immorality. A transfer of property to the son by means of a gift would not absolve the son from his liability to pay such debts.

Misc. A. against the order of the District Judge of Gonda, dated February 26, 1938.

Mr. S. B. Bajpai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mahabir Prasad Srivastava, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of an order dated February 26, 1938, passed by the District Judge of Gonda allowing the objection of the creditor respondent that the property in dispute belongs to the insolvent. The insolvent has appealed.

The material facts are that Avadh Raj Singh, the appellant, executed a registered deed of gift on December 15, 1932, in favour of his minor son Raj Bahadur Singh and his cousin Bharat Singh, under which he transferred his under-proprietary tenure measuring 6.20 acres, 35 trees without land, a house and a phulwari situate in village Saraiyan and a grove in village Bangaon. The value of the property is stated in the deed to be Rs. 200.

On January 23, 1937, Avadh Raj Singh filed a petition for insolvency. He was declared insolvent on March 13, 1937. On May 18, 1937, Mangrey, one of the creditors—now respondent—filed an application for permission to file a regular suit for cancellation of the deed of gift. This permission was granted on July 13, 1937. Instead of filing a regular suit Mangrey filed an application on October 26, 1937, purporting to be under ss. 4/52 of the Prov. Insol. Act. The Receiver reported upon this application—

“As the petition was presented more than four years after the transfer no action under s. 53 of the Prov. Insol. Act can be taken but the question can be decided by the Insolvency Court under s. 4 of the said Act.”

The learned District Judge framed three issues in the case. The first two issues related to the question whether the deed of gift was a fictitious document which was never given effect to and whether the insolvent remained in possession of the property which the deed of gift purported to transfer. The third issue related to the question whether the deed of gift could be annulled under s. 4 of the Insol. Act.

Issues Nos. 1 and 2 were taken together and the finding on these issues was that the deed of gift was a fictitious document executed by Avadh Raj Singh with the intention of saving his property from the creditors. The learned District Judge also held that the transfer could be set aside where it is found to be fictitious. The result was that he allowed the objection holding that the property in question belongs to the insolvent.

On behalf of the insolvent it has been contended that the finding upon the fictitious character of the gift is not justified by the materials on the record and that there is no finding in respect of the possession of the property covered by the deed of gift. We are of opinion that this contention must prevail. It is in evidence that the mutation of names was effected in favour of the donees in respect of the property gifted. Lalta Prasad, the patwari, states that no khewat stands in the name of Avadh Raj Singh after the date of the gift and Avadh Raj Singh no longer retains possession over the gifted property. According to the patwari, Avadh Raj Singh does not live in Saraiyan since the date of the gift but lives in another village Bangaon. He also states that Avadh Raj Singh does not stay with his minor son who really lives with Bharat Singh's mother. The evidence of the insolvent is also to the same effect. He repudiates the fact that the deed of gift is fictitious and states that he has been living in village Bangaon since the date of the gift away from his wife and son and that he has not been in possession of the gifted property since the date of the gift.

Mangrey also came into the witness box and produced two witnesses in support of his objection. Mangrey admits that Bharat Singh is employed in Karachi for the last five or six years and that the minor son Raj Bahadur Singh lives with Bharat Singh's mother in village Saraiyan. Mangrey professes ignorance of the entries in the khewat and states that he has made no enquiries about it. His two witnesses Bhagwan Das and Mandhata are not reliable witnesses. Bhagwan Das admits that there has been litigation between him and the insolvent. Mandhata belongs to different village.

We have carefully considered the evidence about possession produced by both parties and are satisfied that there is no satisfactory and reliable evidence on behalf of the creditor, which throws any doubt upon the genuineness of the khewat entries and the evidence of the patwari, who definitely states that Avadh Raj Singh has never had possession since the date of the gift over the gifted property. The existence of the khewat entries also shows that the deed of gift has been given effect to. Avadh Raj Singh stated before the Court that excepting a debt of Rs. 50 his debts at the time of the gift in 1932, were the same as given in the schedule attached to his application for insolvency. The total of these debts, minus the debt of Rs. 50, comes to about Rs. 1,130. There is no evidence on the record to show what was the value of the entire property owned by the insolvent at the date of the gift. The learned Judge says that the insolvent was heavily indebted at the time, and he considers the gift of the property by a father in favour of his only minor son as most unusual. The amount of indebtedness admitted by the insolvent does not show that the insolvent was under any pressure from his creditors which led him to make the gift in question. It has not been shown that any of the debts was a decretal debt or that there was any execution of decree pending against the insolvent. The property was transferred in equal moieties between the son and the cousin, and we do not see that there are any circumstances proved in this case to show that the deed of gift was executed merely as a cloak to save the property from the hands of the creditors. It must be borne in mind that a son is under a pious obligation to pay his father's debts unless they are tainted by illegality or immorality. A transfer of property to the son by means of a gift would not absolve the son from his liability to pay such debts.

Having regard to the circumstances of this case, we are satisfied that there is no evidence whatsoever to show that the deed of gift is a fictitious or colourable transaction which was not intended to take effect. We, therefore, hold that the insolvent has got no interest in the property gifted.

As regards the other question whether an Insolvency Court has jurisdiction under s. 4 to go into the question involving the fictitious or genuine character of the transfer executed by the insolvent even though more than two years have elapsed before the date of the insolvency we need only refer to, Raoji Bapuji Pandarkar v. K. L. Bawachekar, (A. I. R. 1935 Bom. 316) (1) Maung Ba E v. Maung Kyi, (A. I. R. 1936 Rang. 54) (2) and Mst. Basantbai v. Ramrao Krishna Bao Kolhekar, (A. I. R. 1934 Nag. 47) (3).

A Bench of this Court in Abul Hasan Khan v. Rajbir Prasad, (A. I. R. 1931 Oudh 124) (4), following the view taken by Sen, J.

(1) A I R 1935 Bom. 316; 157 Ind. Cas. 680; 37 Bom. L R 478; 8 R B 83.

in Anwar Khan v. Muhammad Khan, (I. L. R. 51 All. 550; F. B.) (5), held that where the transfer was intended not to be operative from the beginning and the insolvent had remained in possession of the property, the Receiver may apply for its annulment.

We are of opinion, therefore, that it is open to an Insolvency Court to try a question under s. 4 of the Prov. Insol. Act, relating to the fictitious character of the transfer even though it does not fall under s. 53 of the Prov. Insol. Act.

The result is that we set aside the order of the learned District Judge and allow the appeal with costs.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 10-A—Suit for redemption—Plaintiff must show that he is agriculturist and not merely that his predecessor was agriculturist at time of transaction—Privilege of agriculturist is personal—Mere initiation into ways of husbandry is not enough.

In a suit for redemption, in order to rely on s. 10-A, Dekkhan Agri. Relief Act, the plaintiff must show that he was an agriculturist and not merely that his predecessor was an agriculturist at the date of the transaction.

The proper time when the jurisdiction to inquire into the real nature of the transaction can be assumed by the Court for the purpose of s. 10-A is when the Court is requested to exercise that jurisdiction. That request is contained in the plaint when disclosing the essential cause of action, upon the averment that the plaintiff is an agriculturist and a party to the suit. Therefore, if the plaintiff invokes the Court's jurisdiction under s. 10-A, he must be an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 2, Dekkhan Agri. Relief Act, at the date when the plaint is instituted. 134 Ind. Cas. 703 (3) and 101 Ind. Cas. 140 (4), relied on.

The privilege of an agriculturist is not hereditary but personal. Nor can that privilege be acquired by birth. 93 Ind. Cas. 924 (5) and 120 Ind. Cas. 839 (6), relied on.

In order to claim the status of an agriculturist a person must prove that he is ordinarily engaged personally in agricultural labour, that is, he is regularly and habitually cultivating his fields. Mere initiation into the ways of husbandry is not enough.

S. A. from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Sholapur, in Appeal No. 173 of 1935.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.
Messrs. D. A. Tulzapurkar, S. G. Patwardhan and P. V. Kane, for Respondents Nos. 5 and 4, and 1-3, 6-8, 10, 13, 14 and 18 respectively.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal from a decision of the Assistant Judge of Sholapur. The only question that arises upon this appeal is whether a plaintiff, who is held not to be an agriculturist at the date of the suit purporting to be one for redemption under the Dekkhan Agri. Relief Act, can invoke the provisions of s. 10-A of that Act to show that the original transaction to which his predecessor, an agriculturist, was a party was in reality intended, contrary to the terms of the document, to be treated as a mortgage. The suit was instituted in August 1930, by the plaintiff as the adopted son of one Kashinath, the adoption having been made by Kashinath's widow in 1924. The plaintiff maintained that his father Kashinath, who died in 1909, had executed a formal conveyance of the property in dispute on February 11, 1899, in favour of the defendants, and that, although it was an out and out sale of the entire interest of the transferor, by a contemporaneous agreement it was intended to be treated as a mortgage. As regards the plaintiff's status, it was described in the plaint to be that of an agriculturist. It was also stated that Kashinath was an agriculturist in 1899.

The alleged nature of the transaction, the status of the plaintiff and that of his adoptive father were denied by the defendants, and that denial was upheld by the trial Court. In appeal the learned Assistant Judge took the view that Kashinath was an agriculturist in 1899, that the alleged contemporaneous agreement could be inferred from circumstances, but that as the plaintiff was not an agriculturist at the date of the suit, the suit was incompetent. He however remarked in para. 7 of his judgment that "it appears that, pending the suit, the plaintiff has started working personally in the fields and has taken lands of others on leases;" but, in his opinion, that circumstance did not enable the plaintiff to claim the benefit of s. 10-A, Dekkhan Agri. Relief Act. Accordingly, the trial Court's decree was confirmed; but the defendants, except the Municipality who had acquired a portion of the land, were deprived of their costs. Against that decree the plaintiff has filed this second appeal and the defendants, the transferees under the deed of 1899, have filed cross-objections for costs.

Two contentions have been formulated in support of the appeal by Mr. Desai. He argues, first, that it is not necessary, when calling in aid the provisions of s. 10-A, Dekkhan Agri. Relief Act, for the plaintiff to show in a suit for redemption that he is an agriculturist; for, it is sufficient that a person through whom the plaintiff claims was an agriculturist at the date of the transaction, and, secondly, that even if the plaintiff is not an agriculturist at the date of the suit, and if pending the suit and in the course of the hearing the plaintiff acquires the status of an agriculturist by working personally in the fields, he could be deemed to be a party agriculturist to the suit for the purpose of s. 10-A, for, according to Mr. Desai, that section does not, in terms, require that the suit must be instituted by an agriculturist. In my opinion, the first contention is without any substance. Section 10-A provides as follows:

"Whenever it is alleged at any stage of any suit or proceeding to which an agriculturist is a party that any transaction in issue entered into by such agriculturist or the person, if any, through whom he claims was a transaction of such a nature that the rights and liabilities of the parties thereunder are triable wholly or in part under the Chapter, the Court shall, notwithstanding anything contained in s. 92, Evi. Act, 1872, (or in s. 49, Regis. Act, 1908) or in any other law for the time being in force, have power to inquire into and determine the real nature of such transaction..."

Apart from authority, the plain provisions of that section indicate that, unless an agriculturist is a party to the suit, the Court has no jurisdiction to disregard the provisions of s. 92, Evi. Act. The basis of the plaintiff's claim to disregard the provisions of s. 92, Evi. Act, in order to grant him relief was that as an agriculturist party to the suit, he was entitled to rely on s. 10-A, Dekkhan Agri. Relief Act. That claim could only be sustained if he proved that he was an agriculturist at the date of the suit and not merely that his predecessor was an agriculturist at the date of the transaction. The finding of fact is that the plaintiff was not an agriculturist and there was no other agriculturist party to the suit. Prima facie, therefore the Court has no jurisdiction to apply s. 10-A, Dekkhan Agri. Relief Act. In the consideration of Mr. Desai's alternative argument it will be interesting to note how the Legislature has expressed itself in the different parts of the Dekkhan Agri. Relief Act as to when the privilege can be asserted or established for the purpose of the several reliefs referred to. The language of

s. 10-A, Dekkhan Agri. Relief Act, does not follow the language used in s. 3 or s. 15-B or s. 20 of that Act. In s. 3 (a) the Legislature has stated that the provisions of Chap. II, shall apply to suits for an account "instituted by an agriculturist." The Legislature there expressly lays down that the plaintiff must be an agriculturist at the date of the suit. Section 20 says that "the Court may at any time direct that the amount of any decree, whether before or after this Act comes into force against an agriculturist...shall be paid by instalments with or without interest."

Here, it is obviously intended, that the status must be that of an agriculturist at any time when the question of instalments arises. The provisions of s. 15-B leave it to implication as to when the status has to be established. Although that section does not indicate clearly, as s. 20 does, the time when the claimant to the privilege should be an agriculturist, it has been construed as implying the time when the accounts are claimed, that is at the time of passing the decree: see Devu Jetiram v. Revappa Satappa (1) and Rajaram Padval v. Manekial (2). The language used by the Legislature is not uniform in these two sections, and the proper time for claiming the privilege has to be fixed by reference to the language used and the provisions as to relief. In my opinion, the proper time when the jurisdiction to inquire into the real nature of the transaction could be assumed by the Court for the purpose of s. 10-A is when the Court is requested to exercise that jurisdiction. That request is contained in the plaint when disclosing the essential cause of action, upon the averment that the plaintiff is an agriculturist and a party to the suit. Therefore if the plaintiff invokes the Court's jurisdiction under s. 10 A, he must be an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 2, Dekkhan Agri. Relief Act, at the date when it is instituted. The question is really not of first impression and is covered by the authority of this Court: see Gadadhar v. Gangaram (3) and Sultan Rahim v. Ranchhodji (4). Although the question in the form in which it is presented was not raised in those cases, this Court has held that the provisions of s. 10-A require that there should be an agriculturist plaintiff to a suit for redemption at the time of its institution.

But even upon the assumption of the correctness of the construction suggested by Mr. Desai that the plaintiff's status has to be considered only at the stage of hearing, for, it is then that the question of abrogating the general rule of evidence arises, the plaintiff in this case cannot succeed. There is no warrant for the view that even at that stage the plaintiff was an agriculturist. In fact no such plea was raised in the plaint. All that the plaint stated was that the plaintiff was an agriculturist when the suit was instituted. It was not said that he had changed his original status at any time and acquired a new one. The suit was filed in August 1930, and the plaintiff was not examined till October 1934. At that time in one statement in his deposition it was elicited that in that year he had taken kabuliyats and had started working personally in the fields. Assuming that he had done so, that was insufficient to clothe him with the privileged status. The privilege of an agriculturist is not hereditary but personal; see Martand v. Amritrao (5) and Dharmsey v. Balkrishna (6). Nor can that privilege be acquired by birth: see Gadadhar v. Gangaram (3). If so, it must be assumed that merely upon adoption the plaintiff could not acquire the status which his adoptive father possessed in 1899. He had other landed estate whose income fell in the category of non-agricultural income. If suddenly three years after the suit he began to hold a plough, he could not come within the definition of para. 1 of s. 2, Dekkhan Agri. Relief Act, for he must in order to claim that status prove that he ordinarily engaged personally in agricultural labour, that is, he was regularly and habitually cultivating his fields. Mere initiation into the ways of husbandry is not enough. Consequently, it cannot be said that even pending the suit the plaintiff had acquired the status of an agriculturist. Therefore the plaintiff's appeal must be dismissed with costs (two sets—one set to defendant No. 4). As regards the cross-objections, it seems to me having regard to the view upon the evidence of the lower Appellate Court that the discretion as to costs was properly exercised. The cross-objections are therefore disallowed with costs.

Where after the property of the judgment-debtor is sold in execution of a decree but before the confirmation of sale, the judgment-debtor is adjudicated an insolvent and also obtains an order of discharge and puts in an application that the sale should not be confirmed on the ground that the debt was wiped off as the decree-holder did not prove it in insolvency proceedings the fact that the debt was wiped off on account of the discharge is no reason for setting aside the sale as at the time the sale took place, there was a valid decree. 177 Ind. Cas. 543 (1), distinguished.

Under s. 51, Prov. Insol. Act the decree-holder will not be entitled to the benefit of his execution against the Receiver only, but where the Receiver has laid no claim to the property sold and purchased by the decree-holder the judgment-debtor has no right to say that the sale held in favour of the decree-holder should not be confirmed.

Section 28, Prov. Insol. Act bars the remedy of the creditor only during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings but where the sale was confirmed after they were over the judgment-debtor has no right to ask the Court not to confirm the sale.

Ex. D. A. against the order of the Civil Judge, Melihabad, Lucknow, dated May 11, 1940.

Mr. R. K. Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. N. Asthana, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal in an execution matter.

The facts of this case are as follows. The respondent Ganga Prasad obtained a simple money decree against the appellant Suraj Bali on May 13, 1937, and the decree-holder applied for the execution of the decree on August 16, 1937, by attaching a house of the judgment-debtor. That house was sold on March 7, 1938, and April 8, 1938, was fixed for confirmation of the sale. On March 21, 1938, Suraj Bali, the present appellant applied for insolvency, and he was adjudicated an insolvent on May 9, 1938. He obtained a discharge on December 16, 1938. The sale was not confirmed till then owing to a suit brought by one Nannhun claiming that he was the owner of the house and not the judgment-debtor. The present appellant put in an application on January 23, 1939, that as the decree-holder did not prove his debt in the insolvency proceedings, it was wiped off, and so the sale should not be confirmed. That application was refused and the sale was confirmed on July 26, 1939. The learned Civil Judge on appeal has upheld the order of the lower Court.

It is argued before me that as the appellant obtained the order of his discharge before the confirmation of the sale, and the decree-holder did not prove his debt in the insolvency proceedings, his debt was wiped off, and no decree was left in which the sale could take place. It is also argued that the property vested in the Receiver under s. 28 and was no more the property of the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder. In my opinion it is not material whether the debt was wiped off or not owing to the appellant's obtaining an order of discharge. I assume that the debt was wiped off, as is contended on behalf of the applicant, but what would be the effect. At the time the sale took place, there was a valid decree. If the debt was wiped off at all, it was long after the sale. The case is distinguishable from those in which it is found that the decree had been satisfied before the sale or the decree is set aside in appeal. In those cases there is no valid decree at the date of the sale. Such is not the case here. I think the fact that the debt was wiped off on account of the discharge is no reason for setting aside the sale. If the subsequent satisfaction of the decree can be a ground for setting aside a sale, the provisions of O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C. would be quite negatory because a judgment-debtor can claim to have the sale set aside on paying the decretal amount and not 5 p. c. of the purchase money. Under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C. when the decree-holder is a purchaser, he is also entitled to 5 p. c. of the purchase money. I, therefore, hold that the effect of the decree-holder not proving his debt in the insolvency proceedings was not to set aside the sale. Reliance is placed on Sheo Nath v. Madan Mohan Lal (1938 O. W. N., page 911) (1). In that case the provisions of s. 7 of the U. P. Encum. Estates Act were construed, and it was held that if before the confirmation of the sale an order under s. 7 of the U. P. Encum. Estates Act is made, the decree-holder will not be entitled to have the sale confirmed or take delivery of the property purchased by him. The case is distinguishable.

It is argued that provisions of s. 7 of the Encum. Estates Act are similar to those of s. 28 of the Insolvency Act. Section 28 provides that :

"On making of an order of adjudication the whole of the property of the insolvent shall vest in the Court or in a Receiver, and except as provided by this Act, no creditor, to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable under this Act, shall during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings have any remedy against the property of the insolvent in respect of the debt, or commence any suit or other legal proceeding, except with the leave of the Court on such terms as the Court may impose."

There is another s. 51 which provides that :—

"Where execution of a decree has issued against the property of a debtor, no person shall be entitled to the benefit of the execution against the Receiver except in respect of assets realised in the course of the execution by sale or otherwise before the date of the admission of the petition."

It follows from the latter section that the decree-holder, will not be entitled to the benefit of his execution against the Receiver only, but the Receiver in this case laid no claim to the house sold and purchased by the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor has no right to say that the sale held in favour of the decree-holder should not be confirmed. Section 28 bars the remedy of the creditor only during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings but the sale in this case was confirmed after they were over. I am therefore, of the opinion that the judgment-debtor had no right to ask the Court not to confirm the sale, and his application was rightly disallowed.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council
January 17, 1941

COLLISTER AND BAJPAL, JJ.

Lala RADHEY LAL—APPLICANT

—versus—

NIRANJAN NATH—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 109—Contempt of Court—Refusal of High Court to punish—Jurisdiction exercised is of criminal nature—S. 109 is not applicable—Refusal of High Court to stay criminal complaint—Application for leave to appeal—S. 109 does not apply—Expression "fit one" in Council, meaning of—Refusal to stay criminal complaint—Case cannot be said to be fit for appeal.

The jurisdiction which the High Court exercises in proceedings for contempt of Court is a jurisdiction of a criminal nature and not of a civil nature at all. Where, therefore the High Court has refused to punish a party for contempt the provisions of s. 109, Civil P. C., have no application. 155 Ind. Cas. 188 (1), relied on.

Where the High Court has refused to stay the criminal complaint the jurisdiction it has exercised is of a criminal nature and s. 109, Civil P. C., does not apply to an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

The expression "fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council" in s. 109 (c) means that the question should be either of great general importance to the public at large or of great private importance to the particular litigant and that the matter was not measurable in money. A refusal to stay a criminal complaint cannot be said to be a matter of great private importance to the particular accused in the case.

Mr. C. B. Agarwala, for the Applicant.

Bajpal, J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council and has been filed by one Radhey Lal. He had applied to us praying that one Niranjana Nath should be dealt with and punished according to law for contempt of the Insolvency Court of Agra. On October 2, 1940* we decided the matter and held that Niranjana Nath was not guilty of any contempt and we refused to punish Niranjana Nath. Radhey Lal has filed the present application, and the submission is that the case fulfills the requirements of s. 109 (c), Civil P. C. In Kapildeva Malaviya v. Chief Justice and Judges of High Court, Allahabad (1) a Bench of this Court held that proceedings for contempt of the High Court are in the exercise of the inherent jurisdiction of the Court and are of a criminal nature. Several authorities of various Courts were reviewed in that case and the consensus of opinion was that the sentences passed in such matters amounted in effect to a general committal for contempt and were of a punitive character. We also hold the same view, and so far as the contemplated appeal to His Majesty in Council has reference to our refusing to punish the opposite party, Niranjana Nath, for contempt, it is clear that the jurisdiction that we exercised was a jurisdiction of a criminal nature and not of a civil nature at all. The provisions of the Civil P. C., therefore cannot be applicable.

It is then contended that while we refused to punish Niranjana Nath we further passed an order that the criminal case pending against Radhey Lal in the Court of the Magistrate should not be stayed. We were of the opinion that in the circumstances of the case it was not desirable that the criminal complaint should be stayed. The submission on behalf of the applicant is that the refusal to stay the criminal complaint is a matter of great importance to Radhey Lal and that so far as that order is concerned, the applicant is entitled to obtain leave from us. Here again we are of the opinion that we exercised jurisdiction of a criminal nature and the provisions of the Civil P. C., do not apply. We might further say that the applicant has to satisfy us, even if the provisions of s. 109 (c), Civil P. C., applied, that the matter is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The expression "fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council" has been interpreted in several cases and the meaning is that the question should be either of great general importance to the public at large or of great private importance to the particular litigant; and that the matter was not measurable in money. We fail to understand how it can be said that a refusal to stay a criminal complaint can be said to be a matter of great private importance to the particular accused in the case.

Our attention was drawn to the case in Andre Paul Terence Ambard v. Attorney-General of Trinidad and Tobago (2). In this case their Lordships of the Privy Council on special leave interfered with an order of the Supreme Court of Trinidad and Tobago by which a certain person was directed to pay a fine of £25 for contempt of Court. It was held by their Lordships that there seemed no reason for limiting the general prerogative of the Crown to review all judicial decisions of Courts of Record in the dominions overseas, whether civil or criminal. Their Lordships in that case had not before them the question whether s. 109 (c), Civil P. C., or any analogous provision of any other country was applicable to the facts or not. They held that the general prerogative of the Crown was not in any way limited. If the applicant is in any manner dissatisfied with the order passed by this Court, he can, if he is so advised, apply for special leave. We hold the view that the present application is not maintainable and we accordingly dismiss it.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), s. 19—Order passed under, dismissing application of judgment-debtor—Applicability of—Rules issued by Government providing appeal not retrospective—Nature of order under s. 19.

No appeal lies from an order under s. 19, Mad. Agri. Relief Act, dismissing the application of a judgment-debtor even if an execution petition is pending in any Court. The rules issued by Govt. in October 1939, providing for appeal in such cases, have no retrospective effect. Orders under s. 19 of the Act cannot be deemed to be orders under s. 47, Civil P. C. Application under s. 19 is to be made to the Court which passed the decree, not to the Court which is executing the decree. In this view the fact that an execution petition is pending makes no difference; nor does it make any difference that the executing Court happens to be the Court which passed the decree. C. R. P. No. 1129 of 1939, relied on. Balusu Subbaraidu, In re (1), explained; observations in 186 Ind. Cas. 862 (2), held obiter.

A. against the order of the Court of the Sub-Judge, Tinnevely, dated September 30, 1938.

Messrs. K. S. Srinivasacharya and K. V. Rajagopalan, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Ramaswami Iyer, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—Mr. S. Ramasami Iyer for the respondent raises a preliminary objection that no appeal lies in this case. It is true that in the Mad. Agri. Relief Act no appeal has been provided from orders passed under s. 19. Subsequently (in October 1939) the Govt. have issued rules providing for appeal in such cases, but those rules have no retrospective effect. (C. R. P. No. 1129 of 1939) and therefore those rules do not help the appellant. It has been held (vide Balusu Subbaraidu In re (1)) that no appeal lies from an order under s. 19 dismissing the application of a judgment-debtor when no execution petition is pending in any Court. We are asked to say that it follows from this decision that if an execution petition is pending an appeal will lie, but the fallacy involved in that contention is obvious. We have been referred to the decision in C. R. Ps. No. 224 etc. of 1939 reported in Jami Venkatappadu v. Kannepalli Ramamurti (2) where it has been observed (at p. 855) that all the petitions in that case

"must be deemed to be petitions which raise questions relating to execution, discharge or satisfaction, of the decree and therefore come within the matters covered by s. 47 of the Civil P. C."

That observation is, however, merely an obiter dictum since the learned Judges in that case were dealing with revision petitions, which were in the end allowed. If the orders were passed on matters arising under s. 47, Civil P. C., appeals would lie and revision would be inadmissible.

We think Mr. Ramasami Iyer is right in contending that orders under s. 19 of the Act cannot be deemed to be orders under s. 47, Civil P. C. Application under s. 19 of the Act is to be made to the Court which passed the decree, not to the Court which is executing the decree. In this view the fact that an execution petition is pending makes no difference; nor does it make any difference that the executing Court happens to be the Court which passed the decree. The application under s. 19 has to be made to the Court which passed the decree and it is not a matter relating to the execution of the decree in any sense. If the decree is scaled down, an appeal will lie from the new decree, but if the application is dismissed, no appeal can lie. This appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

We have been asked to allow this appeal to be converted into a civil revision petition but we think there is no question of jurisdiction here. The learned Sub-Judge has exercised his jurisdiction and has decided that this debt is not one in respect of which relief can be granted. We decline to allow conversion.

N.S.

Order accordingly.

Appeal No. 401 of 1939

Sheikh MOHAMMAD NAQIR AND OTHERS—
APPELLANTS

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 182 (3), (2)—"Review of judgment," meaning explained—Review application rejected—Art. 182 (3), if applies—Plaintiff's suit and first appeal dismissed with costs—Second appeal also dismissed with costs for failure to file talbana—Application for restoration also dismissed—Execution of decree for costs of suit and appeals—Time held ran from date of dismissal of second appeal and not from date of dismissal of restoration application—"Appeal" in Art. 182 (2) is not limited to competent appeals—It applies whenever there is appeal—Presentation of memo of appeal is preferring appeal.

The words "when there has been a review of judgment" in Art. 182 (3), Lim. Act must mean a review by some one who can review the judgment, that is to say, by the Court which pronounced the judgment to be reviewed. Hence the article will have no application where an application for review has been rejected, because in that case there has not been a review of judgment. The words "review of judgment" cannot be construed to mean proceedings for review of judgment.

The plaintiff's suit as well as the first appeal, were both dismissed with costs. The second appeal was also dismissed with costs for his failure to file talbana in time. He filed an application for restoration of the second appeal which was also dismissed. The respondents sought to compute the period of limitation for the execution of the decree for costs of the suit and appeals from the date of the dismissal of the plaintiff's application for restoration of the second appeal.

Held, that the restoration application must be treated as an application for review and since it had been rejected, time for execution of the decree for costs of suit and appeals ran from the date on which the second appeal was dismissed. 169 Ind. Cas. 581 (1), dissented from, Kurupam Zamindar v. Sadasiva (2), 44 Ind. Cas. 575 (3), 28 Ind. Cas. 367 (4) and 104 Ind. Cas. 466 (5), relied on.

The reference to an appeal in Art. 182 (2), Lim. Act, is not limited to an appeal which is a competent appeal; the article applies whenever an appeal has been preferred; and the presentation of a memorandum of appeal is preferring an appeal. 44 Ind. Cas. 575 (3), relied on, 134 Ind. Cas. 425 (7), explained, 169 Ind. Cas. 581 (1), not approved.

A. from the appellate order of the District Judge, Purnea, dated August 5, 1939.

Messrs. Naqui Imam and S. M. Siddique, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. C. De, for the Respondents.

Fazl Ali, J.—The only question which arises in this appeal is one of limitation and it arises upon the following facts. In 1932 the appellants brought a title suit against the respondents which was dismissed on August 4, 1933, with costs. Thereupon they appealed to the District Judge but their appeal also was dismissed with costs on December 22, 1934. The appellants then preferred a second appeal to the High Court which was dismissed with costs on September 19, 1935, as talbana was not filed within the time prescribed. The appellants thereupon filed a miscellaneous judicial case for the restoration of the second appeal and this case was dismissed with costs on January 16, 1936. Thereafter, on January 11, 1939, the respondents executed their decree for costs which included the costs allowed to them in the trial Court, in the first and the second appeals and in the miscellaneous judicial case. A question then arose as to whether the period of limitation for the execution of the decree for the costs of the suit and the appeals would run from September 19, 1935, the date when the second appeal was dismissed for default or from January 16, 1936, when the miscellaneous judicial case was dismissed. The first Court came to the conclusion that the appellants' application for execution was barred except in so far as it related to the costs allowed in the miscellaneous judicial case decided on January 16, 1936. The District Judge however held on appeal that the application was not time-barred. In reversing the decision of the Court of first instance the learned District Judge relied on Firm Dedhraj Lachmi Narayan v. Bhagwandas (1), in which Courtney-Terrell, C. J., and James, J., have held (1) that the words "where there has been an appeal" in cl. (2) of Art. 182, Lim. Act, do not mean, in their strict grammatical construction that the appeal must be against the decree in the suit; but they include an appeal against an order made on an application for rehearing under O. XLI, r. 21, Civil P. C., (1908) and (2) that all cases in which the Court reconsiders its own judgment are cases of review within the meaning of cl. (3) of Art. 182, and therefore an order made on an application for restoration under O. XLI, r. 21, Civil P. C., is an order passed on review within cl. (3).

Now, if we had been of the view that the present case is fully covered by Firm Dedhraj Lachmi Narayan v. Bhagwandas (1) we would have referred this appeal to a larger Bench, because both my learned brother and I are agreed that some of the propositions laid down by the learned Judges in that case require further examination. But as I shall presently show the present appeal can be decided on a point which was neither raised nor decided in that case. As both the parties to this appeal have proceeded on the assumption that the application for restoring the second appeal is to be treated as an application for review, the present case must be held to be governed by Art. 182, cl. (3), Lim. Act. Article 182, cl. (3) provides that where there has been a review of judgment the period of limitation begins to run from the date of the decision passed on the review. This provision has been construed in a number of cases wherein it has been held that it does not apply where the application for review has not been granted but rejected, that is to say, in such cases limitation is not enlarged under this clause: see Kurapam Zamindar v. Sadasiva (2), Rai Brijraj v. Nauratan Lal (3), Venugopal Mudali v. C. Venkatasubiah Chetty (4) at p. 1202 and Fakir Chand v. Daiba Charan (5). With this view I entirely agree. It is contended on behalf of the respondent that the words "where there has been a review of judgment" mean "where there has been an application for review of judgment." In my opinion, however there is no justification whatever for inserting the word "application" into this provision.

The learned Advocate for the respondent contended that as there is similarity in the language of cls. (2) and (3), the word 'review' must be construed to mean an application for review. But the answer to this contention is this: the words "where there has been an appeal" must mean where there has been an appeal by the person who is aggrieved by the judgment appealed from, because only such a person is allowed to prefer an appeal. On the other hand the words "when there has been a review of judgment" must mean a review by some one who can review the judgment, that is to say, by the Court which pronounced the judgment to be reviewed. If that is the meaning to be attached to the words, it is plain that the article will have no application where an application for review has been rejected, because in that case there has not been a review of judgment. The learned Advocate for the respondents also contended that the words "review of judgment" may be construed to mean proceedings for review of judgment. Such a construction however has never been placed upon these words and I do not see any justification for doing so. In my opinion, therefore, the time of limitation in the present case began to run from September 19, 1935 in regard to the costs which were awarded in the trial Court as well as in the first and second appeals and so far as the execution in respect of these costs is concerned, it must be held to be time-barred. As to the costs awarded in the miscellaneous judicial case, it was conceded by the learned Counsel for the appellant that these costs are still recoverable and therefore no decision on that point is necessary. In these circumstances I would allow this appeal, set aside the judgment of the learned District Judge and restore the judgment of the Subordinate

Judge. Having regard to the circumstances of the case, we are of the opinion that the parties should bear their own costs here and in the Court of the District Judge.

Rowland, J.—I agree. With regard to the observations in Firm Dedhrāj Lachmi Narayan v. Bhagwandas (1) implying that the Privy Council decision in Nagendra Nath v. Suresh Chandra (6) had had the effect of reversing the current of authority in this Court and in particular overruling Rai Brijraj v. Nauratan Lal (3), I would like to point out that the law as understood and applied in this Court, even before the date of the Privy Council judgment (which was delivered on April 21, 1932), was in the same sense as that declared by their Lordships. The latest pronouncement of this Court before the date of that Privy Council judgment was made on July 15, 1931 in Kameshwar Singh Bahadur v. Beni Madho Singh (7). Kulwant Sahay, J., with whom Khwaja Mohammad Noor, J., agreed, held that the reference to an appeal in Art. 182 (2), Lim. Act, is not limited to an appeal which was a competent appeal; that the article applies whenever an appeal has been preferred; and that presentation of a memorandum of appeal is preferring an appeal. There is therefore no question of the current of authority in this Court being reversed in consequence of what the Judicial Committee decided in Nagendra Nath v. Suresh Chandra (6).

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Appeal No. 813 of 1938

June 7, 1940

TRAILOKHYA NATH BANERJEE—

PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SUKUMAR BOSE—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, Paras. 21, 16, s. 104—No explicit order filing award—Decree upon award—Appeal against whole decision must be treated as one against implied order filing award—Appellate order falls under s. 104 (2)—Decree in accordance with award—Appeal; grounds of—Second appeal from order filing or refusing to file award, competency of.

Where there is no separate order passed filing the award, the appeal from the decision of the Court passing a decree upon the award should be treated as an appeal which is in substance an appeal from an implied order filing the award. In such a case the order passed in the appeal is governed by s. 102 (2), Civil P. C. 88 Ind. Cas. 76 (1), relied on. [p. 612, col. 1.]

Although a decree upon an award which is in accordance with the award is normally not appealable nevertheless an appeal will lie from such a decree where the submission or reference to arbitration is challenged as being invalid. From this, however, it does not follow that a second appeal will lie from an order filing or refusing to file an award when the validity of the reference to arbitration is challenged. An order filing or refusing to file an award not being a decree is appealable only to the extent allowed by s. 104, Civil P. C. which prohibits a second appeal. 130 Ind. Cas. 209 (2), relied on, 5 Ind. Cas. 98 (3), explained. [p. 612, col. 2.]

A. from appellate decree of the Sub-Judge, First Court, Jessore, dated March 14, 1938.

Mr. Shambhunath Banerjee, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Rajendra Bhushan Bakshi and Ram Mohan Bhattacharjya, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The facts giving rise to this appeal are as follows: There was a dispute regarding land between the appellant and the respondent and two others. The dispute was referred by the parties to the arbitration of three gentlemen who are Pleaders of Jessore. They made an award. The appellant applied under para. 20 of Sch. II, Civil P. C., to the Court of a Munsif at Narail in the District of Jessore for an order that the award be filed. The respondent alone objected. His objections broadly were: (1) that there was no valid reference to arbitration, and (2) that the award was liable to be set aside on the ground of misconduct on the part of the arbitrators. The learned Munsif held that the reference was valid and that there was no misconduct. He then passed the following order:

"Ordered that the suit be decreed in terms of the award with costs on contest against defendant No. 1 and ex parte against the rest. The award do form part of the decree."

Defendant No. 1, it may be noted, is the respondent. Against this decision an appeal was taken to the District Judge by the respondent and was heard by the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Jessore. The appeal was treated by the learned Subordinate Judge as an appeal from an order directing an award to be filed. Three points were taken by the respondent in challenging the decision of the learned Munsif. They are: (1) That the award determined matters not referred by the submission to arbitration. (2) That the award was indefinite. (3) That the award was liable to be set aside on the ground of misconduct on the part of the arbitrators. The appellant took the point that the appeal was barred by limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge held against the respondent on the first two points; but he found that the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct and that the appeal was not barred by limitation. On these findings he allowed the appeal in the following terms:

"Ordered that the appeal be allowed with costs. The order of the learned Court below directing the award to be filed is set aside."

Against this order the appellant has filed the present appeal. A preliminary objection is taken by the respondent that no second appeal lies. The argument in support of this objection is as follows: The appeal before the Subordinate Judge was an appeal against an order filing an award passed in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court. An appeal against such an order is permitted by s. 104 (1) (f), Civil P. C., but a second appeal is prohibited by sub-s. (2) which says that no appeal shall lie from any order passed in appeal under this section. The objection is met by the appellant in this way. Learned Advocate for the appellant says, first, that the appeal before the Subordinate Judge was not an appeal against an order filing the award but an appeal against the decree passed upon the award and that therefore a second appeal would lie as the prohibition against second appeals contained in s. 104 (2) is restricted to appeals from orders and can have no application to decrees. Secondly, he says that as the validity of the reference to arbitration was questioned by the respondent a second appeal would lie even though the appeal be held to be one not against the decree upon the award but against the order filing the award.

I shall now take up for consideration the first branch of the argument urged on behalf of the appellant. When an award is made without the intervention of the Court the party who wishes to enforce the award must apply to the Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award for an order filing the award. The Court must give notice of this application to the other parties and they may come and object to the filing of the award. The Court will decide the question and pass an order filing the award or refusing to file it. Any party dissatisfied with this order has the right to appeal from it but there is no second appeal from such an order. This is quite clear from the provisions of s. 104 (1) (f) and s. 104 (2), Civil P. C. Now if the Court passes an order filing the award, it shall pronounce judgment in accordance with the award and upon that judgment a decree shall follow. No appeal shall lie from this decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award. If the decree is of this nature an appeal as well as a second appeal will lie.

There is a clear and fundamental distinction between an appeal from an order filing an award and an appeal from a decree passed on an award. The former is directed against the award itself while the latter accepts the award and attacks the decree on the ground that it is in excess of the award or inconsistent therewith. Bearing this distinction in mind I proceed to decide whether the appeal of the respondent was from an order filing an award or from a decree passed thereon. In the present case, the learned Munsif has not followed the procedure laid down in para. 21 of Sch. II of the Code. He passed no distinct order filing the award. He expressed the opinion that the award should be enforced and passed an order "decreeing the suit in terms of the award." The respondent could not frame his appeal as being one from an order filing the award inasmuch as there was no such order passed formally. He did the only thing that he could do; he appealed against the whole decision of the Munsif. He directed his appeal, however, not against the decree but against the award. The objections urged in the appeal were all directed against the award and not against the decree. The learned Judge has described the appeal as being one "against the order directing an award to be filed under para. 21 of Sch. II, Civil P. C." With this description I entirely agree. The appeal was not against the decree but against the implied order filing the award. In circumstances like these where the Court neglects to pass an explicit order filing the award and passes a decree upon the award what is an aggrieved party to do? He can only appeal from the whole decision. Such an appeal must be treated as an appeal from an implied order filing the award even though a decree upon the award has already been passed. If one were to treat such an appeal as an appeal from the decree, it would result in serious prejudice to a party complaining against an award. The result would be that a Court by failing in its duty to record an order filing the award would be able to deprive the complaining party of all opportunity of contesting the validity of the award. The party would be relegated to the very limited right of appealing from the decree on the award, a right which can be exercised only if the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award.

In Jagat Pande v. Sarwan Pande (1) the position was exactly similar. It was held that as there was no separate order passed filing the award, the appeal from the decision of the Court passing a decree upon the award should be treated as an appeal which was in substance an appeal from an order filing the award. I entirely agree with this view and hold that the appeal before the Subordinate Judge was not an appeal from the decree but an appeal from the implied order filing the award. That being so, the order passed in the appeal by the Subordinate Judge is governed by s. 104 (2), Civil P. C., which says that no appeal will lie therefrom. The next point urged was that a second appeal will lie because the validity of the reference itself was challenged by the respondent before the Munsif. My attention was drawn to paras. 16 and 21 of Sch. II, Civil P. C., which prohibit any appeal from a decree upon an award except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award. Learned Advocate for the appellant next referred me to certain cases where it was held that although an appeal from a decree passed on an award was so prohibited nevertheless, if the reference itself was challenged as being invalid, an appeal would lie against the decree even though it be in accordance with the award. Learned Advocate argues that if the prohibition against an appeal from a decree upon an award contained in paras. 16 and 21 of Sch. II, Civil P. C., is removed if the validity of the reference is questioned, then the prohibition against a second appeal from an order filing or refusing to file an award contained in s. 104 (2), Civil P. C., should likewise be held to be removed when any party questions the validity of the reference.

It would serve no useful purpose to deal with all the cases cited before me where it has been held that an appeal will lie against a decree upon an award if the validity of the reference is challenged even though the decree is in accordance with and not in excess of the award. Some of the cases are under the old Code and in view of the important changes made in provisions of the Code dealing with the subject of arbitration they cannot have any direct application. There is also a divergence of opinion on this point both in this Court and in the Courts of other provinces. Most of these cases are referred to, and dealt with very fully by Mukherjee, J. in Golenur Bibi v. Abdus Samad (2). He gives a very elaborate and lucid history of how the view that an appeal lay from a decree upon an award on the ground that the submission was invalid came to be held and although he held a contrary opinion he felt constrained to follow that view in the case under consideration as the weight of decisions in this Court was in support of it. I am bound by this decision and shall for the purposes of this case accept the position that although a decree upon an award which is in accordance with the award is normally not appealable nevertheless an appeal will lie from such a decree where the submission or reference to arbitration is challenged as being invalid. From this, however, it does not follow that a second appeal will lie from an order filing or refusing to file an award when the validity of the reference to arbitration is challenged.

The status of a decree and an order so far as appealability is concerned is fundamentally different. When a decision amounts to a decree it is invariably appealable unless it is expressly provided that no appeal shall lie from it. This is the effect of s. 96, Civil P. C. An order however, if invariably non-appealable unless it is expressly provided that an appeal shall lie from it. This is the effect of s. 104, Civil P. C. If this important difference between a decree and an order is borne in mind the fallacy in the argument of learned Advocate for the appellant will become apparent. The decree passed on an award would ordinarily be appealable were it not for the provisions of paras. 16 and 21 of Sch. II, Civil P. C., which prohibit an appeal if such a decree is in terms of the award. Now this prohibition is based on the fact that the decree is founded upon an award. If the validity of the reference to arbitration is challenged successfully and the decree is shown to be one which was not based on any award, its appealability will be unaffected by the prohibition contained in paras. 16 and 21 which apply only to a decree based on an award. This I consider is the ground on which it has been held that an appeal would lie from a decree on an award even though it is in accordance with the award when the very reference to arbitration was challenged as being invalid.

An order filing an award or refusing to file it is in quite a different category. It is not a decree. Section 2 of the Code where in a decree is defined says that "any adjudication from which an appeal lies as an appeal from an order" is not a decree. Now an order filing or refusing to file an award is an adjudication from which an appeal lies as an appeal from an order. Section 104 (1) (f) makes this quite clear when it treats such an adjudication as an order and makes it appealable as such. Whatever may have been the view held under the old Code where there was no provision corresponding to s. 104 (1) (f) of the present Code, under the law as it stands at present it must be held that an order filing or refusing to file an award is not a decree. Now if it is not a decree but an order it is appealable only to the extent allowable by any express provision in the Code, i. e. to the extent allowed by s. 104 of the Code and as pointed out before that section prohibits a second appeal. Learned Advocate for the appellant referred me to the case in Rai Charan Purkait v. Amrita Lal Gain (3) where there was a second appeal entertained by this Court from an order refusing to file an award made in a private reference. The case was under the old Code where there was no provision for an appeal from an order filing or refusing to file an award. Under the old Code such an order was treated as a decree and it was appealable as such. Under the present Code, s. 104 alters the position as I have indicated above. The case in Rai Charan Purkait v. Amrita Lal Gain (3), is, therefore, of no assistance to the appellant. In view of what I have said above, the preliminary objection must prevail. The appeal is dismissed with costs. There is an alternative application under s. 115, Civil P. C. that will be dealt with by the Court empowered to deal with such applications.

First Appeal, No. 79 of 1939

TEK CHAND AND BECKETT, JJ.

ALAM KHAN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Mst. BHAG BHARI AND ANOTHER

—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c), Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii)—Suit by G's grandson against G's widow for declaration that he was an adopted son of G under his will—A, a collateral of G not made party —Decree passed—A's suit for declaration that decree in suit by grandson was not binding on him and that suit was collusive and that will set up was not genuine—Suit held fell under Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii).

G's grandson instituted a suit against G's widow for a declaration to the effect that he was the adopted son of G under the will. A who was G's collateral was not made a party to that suit. The suit was decreed. Thereupon, A instituted a suit for a declaration to the effect that the aforesaid decree in the suit instituted by G's grandson against G's widow had been obtained by fraud on wrong facts and against law, without joining the plaintiff (A) as a party, and that it was not binding on him, in other words, that G's grandson was not the adopted son of G and that the will set up by him, on which the decree was obtained, was not genuine.

Held, that the plaintiff (A) not being a party to the decree obtained by G's grandson against widow was in no way bound by it. It could not be said that he was constructively represented in that suit by the widow whose interests were really adverse to his.

Held, also that A's suit was clearly one for a declaration without any consequential relief and fell within Art. 17, cl. (iii) of Sch. II, Court Fees Act. 193 Ind. Cas. 641 (1), distinguished.

F. A. from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Sargodha, dated January 6, 1939.

Messrs. Roop Chand and Hem Raj Mahajan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. R. C. Manchanda and S. C. Manchanda, for the Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The plaintiff is a collateral of one Ghulam Rasul in the fourth degree. Ghulam Rasul died leaving a widow Mst. Bhag Bhari and a daughter Mst. Bahishtan. Mst. Bahishtan had a son Mohammad Sher. On Ghulam Rasul's death Mohammad Sher, alleging himself to be the adopted son of Ghulam Rasul, under a will dated January 1, 1933, applied to the revenue authorities that mutation be effected in his favour. The plaintiff resisted the claim contending that the will was a forgery and that the defendant had not been adopted by Ghulam Rasul. The revenue authorities accepted this contention and holding that the will was not genuine, rejected Mohammad Sher's claim. Thereupon, Mohammad Sher instituted a suit against Mst. Bhag Bhari, widow of Ghulam Rasul for a declaration to the effect that he was the adopted son of Ghulam Rasul under the will dated January 1, 1933. The present plaintiff was not made a party to that suit. The suit was decreed on June 8, 1936 by Chaudhri Mohammad Ali, Subordinate Judge, Sargodha. On the basis of this decree the land left by Ghulam Rasul was mutated in favour of Mohammad Sher. Thereupon, the plaintiff instituted the present suit for a declaration to the effect that the aforesaid decree passed by Chaudhri Mohammad Ali in the suit instituted by Mohammad Sher (defendant No. 2) against Mst. Bhag Bhari (defendant No. 1) had been obtained by fraud on wrong facts and against law, without joining the plaintiff as a party, and that it was not binding on him. The suit was valued for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 5,250, but a court-fee of Rs. 10 was paid, it being stated that the claim was one for obtaining a declaratory decree, pure and simple. The defendants resisted the suit on numerous grounds pleading, inter alia, that the court-fee paid was insufficient. They urged that the suit was for a declaration with consequential relief and that it was governed by s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, and as the plaintiff had himself fixed the value of the relief at Rs. 5,250, he should pay ad valorem court-fee on that amount. The learned Subordinate Judge upheld this plea and directed the plaintiff to make good the deficiency within a certain time. The plaintiff failed to pay the requisite court-fee, and the learned Judge rejected the plaint.

From this decree the plaintiff has come in appeal and it has been contended on his behalf that the suit really fell under Art. 17 (iii) of Sch. II, Court Fees Act, and not under s. 7 (iv) (c) of the said Act, and therefore a court-fee of Rs. 10 had rightly been paid. It may be stated at the outset that the plaintiff not being a party to the decree obtained by defendant No. 2 against defendant No. 1, is in no way bound by it. It cannot be said that he was constructively represented in that suit by Mst. Bhag Bhari, whose interests were really adverse to his. Indeed, that suit had really been brought to defeat the present plaintiff's rights by a collusive decree obtained behind his back. Nor is the plaintiff even if his allegations are true, entitled to possession of Ghulam Rasul's property, so long as his widow Mst. Bhag Bhari is alive. The suit as framed is, therefore, really one for a declaration that the decree obtained collusively by defendant No. 2 against defendant No. 1 in a suit to which he was not a party, does not affect his rights; in other words, that defendant No. 2 is not the adopted son of Ghulam Rasul and that the will set up by him, on which the decree was obtained, was not genuine. In our opinion, that is clearly a suit for a declaration without any consequential relief and falls within Art. 17, cl. (iii) of Sch. II, Court Fees Act.

The learned Counsel for the respondents relied on the recent Full Bench decision in Regular First Appeal No. 459 of 1938, decided on November 4, 1940 Zeb-ul-Nisa v.

Chaudhuri Din Mohammad (1). That case however, is clearly distinguishable. There a mutwalli had alienated waqf property and the suit was brought by certain beneficiaries for a declaration that the property was waqf and the alienation was void. It was held that in the case of a waqf if an alienation is made by the mutwalli, it is binding on all concerned, until and unless it is set aside and therefore when a person sues to have it declared null and void, he can only do so by getting the deed invalidated. The relief claimed in such cases therefore includes consequential relief. But the learned Judges clearly pointed out that while it cannot be laid down as a broad proposition of law that in every case where the plaintiff was not a party to the decree or deed sought to be declared as null and void, he is entitled to sue for a bare declaration, the true rule is that it is only in those cases where the plaintiff is a party to the decree or deed and the declaratory relief, if granted, necessarily relieves him of his obligations under the decree or deed, that the declaration involves a consequential relief. The learned Judges went on to say :

"In cases, where the plaintiff is not a party to the decree or the deed, the declaratory relief does not ordinarily include any such consequential relief. But there are exceptional cases in which the plaintiff, though not a party to the deed or the decree is nevertheless bound thereby."

They then gave the instance of a decree obtained against the manager of a joint Hindu family which is binding on all the other co-parceners and also mentioned the case of an alienation by the mutwalli of a waqf property. It is conceded that the present case does not fall within any of the exceptions mentioned by the learned Judges. The Full Bench decision therefore does not lay down any rule against the appellant. The plaint, read as a whole, shows clearly that the suit is one for pure declaration with no consequential relief. We accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court and holding that the court-fee of Rs. 10 paid is sufficient, remand the case to the lower Court for disposal in accordance with law. Court-fee on this appeal shall be refunded. Other costs will be costs in the cause. Both parties have been directed to appear before the Senior Subordinate Judge, Sargodha, on February 10, 1941, when a date for further proceedings will be given.

U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934), ss. 14, 18, 35—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 72, 77, 76 (h)—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXV, rr. 2, 7, O. VI, r. 17, s. 2 (12)—Mortgagee entitled to get possession in default of payment of interest—Default made and possession not given—Mortgagee suing for possession—Amount spent to obtain possession, if can be recovered in proceedings under Encumbered Estates Act—Provision for pendente lite interest, if retrospective—Mortgagee in possession—Deficiency in profits—Mortgagor personally liable for such deficiency—Mortgagee, if can recover deficiency and interest thereon at time of redemption—Mortgagee in possession—Suits by him to recover arrears of rent—Whether act of management—Costs, if can be recovered by him—Amendment of pleadings—Discretion of Court—Interference with, in appeal—Mesne profits, meaning—Costs of collection.

Where a mortgage bond provides that in case of default of payment of interest by the mortgagor, the mortgagee should obtain possession of the mortgaged property and the mortgagor makes a default and does not deliver possession to the mortgagee, the mortgagee is entitled to sue for possession and the amount thus spent in obtaining the decree for possession can be recovered by him in proceedings under the U. P. Encum. Estates Act as he can do in a suit for redemption by reason of O. XXXIV, rr. 2 and 7, because the amount so spent is spent to make good his title against the mortgagor within the meaning of s. 72, T. P. Act. 87 Ind. Cas. 129 (1) and 26 Ind. Cas. 184 (2), relied on.

The provision for pendente lite interest in s. 14, U. P. Encum. Estates Act, has retrospective effect.

Where the mortgage deed does not provide that the interest be not a charge on the property and by a covenant the mortgagor has undertaken a personal liability to pay the deficiency in profits, the mortgagee in possession is entitled to recover the deficiency in the profits at the time of redemption but not the interest thereon.

[Case-law referred to.]

The filing of suits to recover arrears of rent by a mortgagee in possession is an act of management within the meaning of s. 76 (h), T. P. Act and any expenses incurred in connection therewith are recoverable by the mortgagee. 23 Ind. Cas. 456 (3), relied on. [p. 619, col. 2.]

It is within the power of the Court to allow the parties to add to their pleadings, and where it is done without any objection by the other side, it is too late to question it in appeal. [ibid.]

Mesne profits mean amount realised minus the costs of collections, and in the absence of any evidence the costs of collections should be considered to be 10 per cent. 154 Ind. Messrs. M. Wasim, Ali Hasan and Nawab Ali, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Hyder Husain and H. H. Zaidi, for Respondents, Nos. 1 to 6 and 8 to 10.

Judgment.—These are three connected appeals Nos. 104, 105 and 106 of 1937. We propose to decide them by one judgment.

Syed Mohammad Askari, Mir Syed Hasan and Syed Agha Ali three brothers divided their zemindari property by an agreement, dated June 16, 1902, and Syed Mohammad Askari got 5/9ths shares and the remaining two brothers 2/9ths each. On January 16, 1905, all the three brothers executed a mortgage-deed for Rs. 44,000 in favour of Raja Tasadduq Rasul Khan, Taluqdar of Jehangirabad, who is now represented by the appellant Raja Sir Mohammad Ejaz Rasul Khan Bahadur, Kt., C. S. I. Two villages Daulatpur and Balchhat were mortgaged in this deed. The rate of interest mentioned in the deed was 6 p. c. per annum compoundable every six months, and it was provided that in case two instalments of interest were not paid, the mortgagee after waiting for two months more would be entitled to take possession of the mortgaged property. On February 3, 1906, Syed Mohammad Askari executed another mortgage-deed in favour of the same mortgagee in respect of a share in the village Guthia. The amount borrowed was Rs. 20,000 and there was the same condition of the mortgagee taking possession over the mortgaged property in case two instalments of interest were not paid. The rate of interest was 6½ p. c. Syed Mohammad Askari executed another deed on September 12, 1911, in which a further charge of the amount borrowed under the deed of 1906 was created over his share in villages Daulatpur and Balchhat. There was default in payment of two instalments, and the mortgagee brought two suits for possession, one in respect of Mouzas Daulatpur and Balchhat and the other in respect of village Guthia. Suit No. 16 in respect of Daulatpur and Balchhat was decreed on April 7, 1924, and the other suit in respect of Guthia on February 28, 1924. The mortgagee obtained possession in execution of these decrees on May 15, 1924 over Daulatpur and Balchhat and on July 23, 1924, over Guthia. A sum of Rs. 1,276 was awarded as costs to the decree-holder in the suit relating to Daulatpur and Balchhat and Rs. 646-2 in the other suit. The mortgagee was in possession of subsequent to May 15, 1924, till ejected in course of these proceedings. Three applications under s. 4 of the Encumbrances Act were made, one by Syed Agha Ali who died during the pendency of the proceedings and was liable for 2/9ths share of the money due on the mortgage deed, dated January 16, 1905. Another application was made by Hakim Syed Ali Mohammad, one of the heirs of Syed Hasan, and he is liable for 2/99ths of the money due on the mortgage-deed dated January 16, 1905. The third was made by Mst. Sartaj Fatima who is liable to pay 1/12th of the money due on the mortgage deed dated January 16, 1905, and 1/10th of that due on the deed, dated February 3, 1906. Raja Sir Mohammad Ejaz Rasul Khan, the heir of the mortgagee, put forward his claim in all the three cases. He claimed 2/9ths of Rs. 44,000 principal, Rs. 5,161-11-6 interest and compound interest due on the date he obtained possession, Rs. 1,276 costs of the suit for possession and interest on the two latter amounts from the date he obtained possession till the date of the application amounting to Rs. 4,355-10-6 total Rs. 54,793-6 from Agha Ali. He claimed 2/99ths of this amount from Hakim Syed Ali Mohammad. In the case of Sartaj Fatima he claimed 1/12th of this very amount. He also claimed 1/10th of Rs. 20,000 principal of the bond, dated February 3, 1906, Rs. 2,935 interest and compound interest due on the date he obtained possession of Guthia, Rs. 646-2 as in ought costs of the suit for possession and Rs. 2,679-0-9 interest on the two latter amounts from the date of his obtaining possession over Guthia to the date of the application—total Rs. 26,240-2-9.

A reply to the mortgagee's claim was filed on behalf of Hakim Syed Ali Mohammad in which it was stated that the annual income of Daulatpur and Balchhat was more than the annual interest due on the bond of 1905, and so the mortgagee must account for it. It was also stated that the mortgagee had realised a large sum of money by sale of wood, fish, mango produce and the receipt of nazranas. Various other allegations were made which we do not think it necessary to state here. Similar replies were given by the other applicants. The parties in all the cases agreed that the three cases should be tried together, and the Special Judge accepted their request. On September 18, 1936, the following issues were framed:—

- (1) Is the claimant under the terms of the deeds of mortgage Ex. A-1, (mortgage of 1905) and Ex. A-4

(mortgage deed of 1906) not liable to render accounts of the profits received by him from the property mortgaged during the period of his possession?

Issues Nos. 2 and 3 need not be mentioned?

- (4) Did the mortgagee fail to let out to fresh tenants lands in the mortgaged villages that were given up by old tenants? If so, is he liable to be debited in respect of the profits of those lands in taking accounts?
- (5) Is the mortgagee entitled to charge interest on sums other than the principal amounts advanced by him which were due payable by the mortgagors when the mortgagee took over possession?
- (6) What sums were due to the claimant from the applicants in respect of his share of the debts under Exs. A-1 and A-4 at the date of the present application?
- (6a) Is the mortgagee's claim in respect of the costs decreed to him in suits for mortgagee possession brought by him barred by the law of limitation?

and it was ordered on April 23, 1937, that a Commissioner be appointed to prepare a statement of accounts showing the profits of various kinds, collected and recovered by the mortgagee from the properties mortgaged during the period of his possession and the charges incurred by him. The parties were ordered to produce a sketch form of statement showing the various heads of income and expenditure which the Commissioner should consider. The Commissioner submitted his report on January 15, 1937. The parties filed objections to that report. The Special Judge then proceeded to determine the issues framed by him, and in determining issue No. 6 he also considered the Commissioner's report and the objections preferred to it by the parties. He held that the claimant, that is the mortgagee, was liable to render accounts of the receipts from the mortgaged property that came into his hands during the period of his possession. He also held that it was not proved that any land remained uncultivated owing to the negligence of the mortgagee, that the mortgagee was entitled to interest which was due under the bonds when the mortgagee took possession, and that the mortgagee was not entitled to the costs incurred by him in bringing suits for possession nor to interest on them. He further held that it was not proved that the mortgagee had cut any trees, and that the mortgagee was entitled to 10 p. c. on the collections as collection charge and had realised Rs. 75 as nazar daira, Rs. 66 as nazar shagun, Rs. 144 as nazar salana, Rs. 325-8 as nazar tasfia arazi and for the houses in the abadi and Rs. 117-7 as bisah dues, (customary dues levied from tenants to the extent of one quarter of a seer of wheat for every rupee of the rent). He was of opinion that the mortgagee had realised nothing on account of Payal, Bhunam and Jhankar etc. He ordered the Commissioner to submit a fresh report in the light of his findings and each claim be decreed for the amount due with interest at Rs. 4-4, p. c. per annum, from the date the mortgagee gives up possession. The Commissioner submitted his report on May 25, 1937. The Special Judge passed a decree on the basis of this report but set it aside subsequently on the findings that the parties had not been allowed any opportunity to file objections to the second report, and they had been given that right under the order dated April 23, 1937. The Commissioner in his second report had prepared an account of village Guthia, and in doing it he had added every year to the principal amount the shortage of interest that is, the difference between the amount of interest and the amount of profits. The learned Special Judge held that the mortgagee was not entitled to anything more than the profits, even if they were less than the amount of interest. He ordered that the account be amended, and a decree for the amount due be passed.

Appeal No. 104 has been filed by the mortgagee Raja Sir Mohammad Ejaz Rasul Khan Bahadur and is valued at Rs. 41-9-9. Three points have been taken by him. The first point is that he had incurred Rs. 201-8-3 as costs in the rent suit brought by him against the tenants and is entitled to Rs. 4-1-3 from Hakim Syed Ali Mohammad. The other point taken by him is that he is entitled to recover the proportionate liability of the applicant out of Rs. 1,276 incurred by him in the costs of the suit for possession. The third point taken by him is that he has been wrongly made liable for nazrana. The respondents have filed cross-objections and they are :

- (1) That the Court below was wrong in holding that the appellant was entitled to 10 p. c. as costs on collections, although the actual costs were much less,
- (2) that the Court was wrong in holding that the objectors were not entitled to credit of the arrears of rent which the appellant allowed to be time-barred,

- (3) that the mortgagee ought to have been made further liable for Rs. 22-3-9 on account of different kinds of nazranas. Rs. 172-14-6 on account of the trees cut by the appellant and Rs. 44-2-3 on account of the nazrana of tasfia arazi,
- (4) that the Court below erred in holding that they were not entitled to the credit of Rs. 377-12-6 on account of the land which the appellant allowed to remain fallow, and
- (5) that the Court below should have allowed future interest to the appellant from the date of the application of the objectors and not from the date of the dispossession of the appellant.

The same points are involved in the appeal and the cross-objections in appeal No. 105. In appeal No. 106 the appellant has raised a further point that the lower Court was wrong in not allowing him the amount of interest due on the bond of 1906 which was not realised by the profits of the property, and has also contended that he is entitled to the costs of the suit for possession brought in respect of Guthia. The respondents have raised the same cross-objections, in all the cases. The only difference is about the amounts.

The respondents did not press the objections that the lower Court erred in not crediting them with the arrears of rent which the appellant allowed to become time-barred and in not allowing them credit for the land which the appellant allowed to remain fallow. The claim points which about nazranas was also not pressed. The points which we have now to determine are—

- (1) whether the mortgagee is entitled to recover the amounts spent by him as costs of the suits for possession brought by him,
- (2) is the mortgagee entitled to Rs. 201-8-3 as costs of the rent suits brought by him,
- (3) whether the mortgagee received any nazranas,
- (4) whether the mortgagee is entitled to 10 p. c. costs of collections,
- (5) whether any trees were cut by the mortgagee,
- (6) whether the mortgagee was entitled to interest from the date of the application or from the date of the dispossession of the applicants and

(7) whether the mortgagee is entitled to the portion of the interest of the bond of 1906 not paid by the profits of the property.

The last point arises in appeal No. 106 only.

Point No. 1. The condition in the mortgage-deeds about the mortgagee taking possession is "that if in any year any two instalments of profits (interest) are not consecutively paid by us, the mortgagors, to the mortgagee, and we fail to pay the amount in a lump sum by the end of the year than the mortgagee after waiting for two months more shall have power to take possession of the property mortgaged though Court and we, the declarants, shall get mutation of names effected in the name of the mortgagees. In case of default the mortgagee may himself get mutation of names effected in his favour, and the amount of interest falling in arrears having been included in the principal, interest at the said rate shall be paid thereon also."

There was admittedly as default in the payment of interest, and the mortgagee brought two suits for possession and stated that the mortgagors had not paid interest towards the instalments of December 1922, and June 1923, and did not deliver possession in spite of repeated requests. It appears that the mortgagors not only did not pay the instalments but did not deliver possession to the mortgagee which they were bound to do under the mortgage deeds. The mortgagee had therefore to bring suits for possession to take possession as mortgagee. Under s. 72 of the T. P. Act a mortgagee can spend such money as is necessary for making his own title to the mortgaged property good against the mortgagor. We think that the amount spent by the mortgagee in getting decrees for possession was spent to make good his title against the mortgagor. It appears that he is entitled to these costs under the law in England. Paragraph 618 of the Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 23, p. 413 runs thus—The costs of litigation which are allowed include the following:—

(1).....(2) costs incurred in obtaining possession of the mortgaged property. Thus the mortgagee is allowed expenses of taking possession and the costs of an action to recover possession of the mortgaged property, and these may be included in his accounts as 'just allowances' without special mention in the order. No direct Indian ruling has been brought to our notice, but the principle is laid down in some cases. It was observed in Nadershaw Sheriarji Rabadi v. Shirinbai Bapuji Musa, (A. I. R., 1924 Bombay, page 264) (1), that there is no reason to think that the law in India is different from the law in England, and a mortgagee is allowed proper costs, charges and expenses incurred by him in relation to the mortgage debt or mortgage security including the costs of litigation property undertaken by him. The suit for possession was undertaken by the mortgagee quite properly, because the mortgagor failed to deliver possession. The mortgagor was himself to be blamed, and he should not complain now. In another case Varadarajulu Chetty v. Dhanalakshmi Ammal, (26 Ind. Cas. p. 184) (2), the mortgagee was entitled to add to the mortgage money the costs incurred by him in defending an unsuccessful suit by the mortgagor. We see no reason on principle to differentiate that case from the present one. Dr. Ghosh in his Law of Mortgage, Vol. 1, 5th Edition, p. 573, makes the following observation:—

"The mortgagee is also entitled to spend money for supporting the mortgagor's title to the property, as well as for establishing his own security against the mortgagor."

The suit for possession was surely for establishing the mortgagee's security against the mortgagor. We are clearly of opinion that the mortgagee was entitled to spend money in bringing the suits for possession. The next point that arises is whether he is entitled to recover those costs in these proceedings under the Encum. Estates Act. The Encum. Estates Act altered the ordinary procedure for recovery of the mortgage money. Under s. 14 of the Act all the debtors, secured or unsecured, are bound to put in their claims, and the Special Judge shall exercise all the powers of the Court in which a suit for the recovery of the money would lie and shall decide the questions in issue on the same principles as those on which such Court would decide them. The Special Judge shall determine the claims and pass a simple money decree for the amount found due. Section 18 of the Act provides that the effect of a decree of the Special Judge shall be to extinguish the previously existing rights, if any, of the claimant, together with all the rights, if any, of mortgage or lien by which the same are secured. The mortgagor also becomes entitled to the possession of the property under s. 35 of the Act. The effect of the Encum. Estates Act is that the mortgaged property is redeemed by proceedings under it. We think that we should apply the same principles which would have been applicable, had a suit for sale or redemption been brought. The amendment of the Civil P. C.,

in O. XXXIV, r. 2 and O. XXXIV, r. 7 by Act XXI of 1921 has made it quite clear that before redemption a mortgagee is entitled to costs other than those incurred in the suit itself, costs, charges and expenses properly incurred by him upto the date fixed for redemption together with the interest thereon. It was also held in the Bombay case above referred to "that a mortgagee is entitled at the time of redemption to all the costs incurred by him in making good his title to the property." We are therefore of opinion that the mortgagee is entitled to recover these costs in these proceedings. The costs incurred in the suits relating to Balchhat and Daulatpur were Rs. 1,276. (Their Lordship after mentioning the amounts which the applicants in each of the three appeals were liable to pay proceeded further.)

Point No. 2. There is a list on the file showing that the mortgagee spent Rs. 201-8-3 as costs in suits for arrears of rent brought by him against tenants. These suits were decreed from March 1927, to July 10, 1935. The Commissioner states in his report that the mortgagee at a very late stage in the proceedings when the chart was almost complete and the arguments practically heard wanted to file certain papers showing the amounts spent in litigation, and he could not accept them at that stage and returned them. An objection was taken that the Commissioner had erred in refusing to bring on record the papers filed by the mortgagee, although he got the accounts of legal expenses filed, but he did not award anything on that account. An issue was framed "Were the documents sought to be produced refused by the Commissioner without good grounds." It appears that the learned Special Judge has overlooked this issue, and there is no finding about it. It appears that the Commissioner in determining the income of the property had taken into account the amount of Rs. 97-5, cost of litigation which were realised. It was, therefore, very unfair on his part not to credit the mortgagee with the amount spent by him. The result is that the mortgagor gets credit for the amount which the mortgagee had spent from his own pocket. Section 72 of the T. P. Act before it was amended by Act XX of 1929, provided that when during the continuance of the mortgage, the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property, he may spend such money as is necessary for the due management of the property and the collection of the rents and profits thereof. By reason of the amendment this clause has been deleted but we find a corresponding provision in cl. (h) of s. 76 of the T. P. Act. It provides that when during the continuance of the mortgage the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property, the receipts from the mortgaged property after deducting the expenses properly incurred for the management of the property and the collection of rents and profits should be debited against him. It was held in Basant Singh v. Mata Bakhsh Singh (17 Oudh Cases, page 47) (3), that "In the absence of any foundation for a suggestion of bad faith, the filing of suits to recover arrears of rent by a mortgagee in possession is an act of management and any expenses incurred in connection therewith are recoverable by the mortgagee under s. 72 of the T. P. Act."

In this case certain items had been realised by the mortgagee, and it was held that he was entitled to all the money spent by him. We are of opinion that the mortgagee is entitled to this amount from each applicant in proportion to his liability. He is entitled to Rs. 4-1-3 from the applicants-respondents in appeal No. 104, Rs. 44-12-6 from the applicants-respondents in appeal No. 105 and Rs. 16-12-9 from the applicant-respondent in appeal No. 106.

Point No. 3. The learned Special Judge was satisfied oral by the evidence recorded by the Commissioner that the mortgagee received certain nazranas amounting to Rs. 727-15 in all the villages. We see no reason to differ from him. It is argued that certain sorts of nazranas were not claimed by the mortgagors in their replications to the claims of the mortgagee. The learned Judge has considered this point. He held that after the appointment of the Commissioner the applicants added a number of other heads to those mentioned by them previously under which they alleged the mortgagee had received various sums of money from the tenants, and evidence was given on those points without any objection. It was within the power of the Court to allow the applicants to add to their pleadings, and this appears to have been done without any objection by the other side. We think it is too late for the mortgagee now to argue in appeal that evidence about the nazranas not mentioned in the replications should not have been given. It is said that the learned Judge has found that the mortgagee kept proper accounts, but no nazrana is mentioned in them. The mortgagee owns considerable other property, and it was found that the amount of nazrana is not mentioned in respect of other property, even though it was admittedly realised by him. It appears that as the realisation of these nazranas is not legal they are not mentioned in the account books. We refuse to disturb the finding of the Special Judge on this point.

Point No. 4. It is not denied and cannot be denied in the face of the observations made by their Lordships of the Privy Council in The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Saroj Kumar Acharya (1935 O. W. N. page 261), (4), Hurro Doorga Chowdhurani v. Maharani Surut Soondari Debi (9 Indian Appeals, page 1) (5) and Girish Chunder Lahiri v. Shoshi Shikhareswar Roy, (27 Indian Appeals, page 110) (6) that profits mean amount realised minus the costs of collections, and in the absence of any evidence the costs of collections should be considered to be 10 p. c. It is however argued that there is evidence in this case that the costs of collections are much less, and reliance is placed on the statement of the mortgagee's witness Mohammad Kazim. He did not state anything about these costs in examination-in-chief, but he stated in cross-examination that he was paid Rs. 15 a month and there were two peons under him who were paid Rs. 3 each. It does not follow that the entire costs of collections were the salaries of these three servants. We think that the lower Court was right in allowing 10 p. c. as collection charges.

Point No. 5. The Commissioner and the Court both agreed that there was no reliable evidence to prove that any trees were cut in Purai Ahran, a hamlet of village Balchhat. The Commissioner was of opinion that certain trees were cut in villages Balchhat, Daulatpur and Guthia. The Commissioner relied on his own observation that there were some traces of the trees being cut. It was however, proved that the mortgagor had himself cut some trees before the mortgagee entered into possession. The mortgagee has kept proper accounts, and there is no reason for the price of the trees not being entered in them, had any being really cut. We see no reason to differ from the finding of the Special Judge on this point.

Point No. 6. A provision has been added by the Amending Act of 1939 to s. 14 of the Encum. Estates Act. It is that no pendente lite interest shall be allowed in the case of any debt where the creditor was in possession of any portion of the debtor's property in lieu of interest payable on such debt. It is argued on behalf of the respondents that this provision was added in 1939, and so the lower Court in the absence of it was not entitled in 1937 to award interest from the date of dispossession of the mortgagee. The learned Counsel for the respondents has relied on certain rulings that the amendment should not have a retrospective effect but that very Act which amended s. 14 added s. 20-A cl. (v). Clause (v) of s. 20-A provides that any order passed otherwise than in accordance with the proviso to sub-s. 7 or s. 14 shall be cancelled. It is thus clear that the legislature meant to give this amendment a retrospective effect, and we see no reason to make any alteration in this order. If we were to allow pending interest the order is liable to be cancelled under the Amending Act of 1939.

Point No. 7. The Commissioner in his report dated May 25, 1937, found that Rs. 26,904-8-0 were due to the mortgagee on the bond of 1906. The amount to due on July 24, 1924, when the mortgagee took possession was Rs. 22,935. In the year 1924-1925 the income was Rs. 3,186-7-6 and the interest and expenses amount to Rs. 3182-2-2, and so the mortgagee got Rs. 4-5-4 more than the interest. This amount was deducted from the principal and the amount remaining due on July 24, 1925 was Rs. 22,930-10-8. In most of the subsequent years the income was less than the amount of interest and other expenses. The Commissioner found the amount due to the mortgagee at the end of each year and added it to the principal beginning from the second year. The learned Judge held that the mortgagee was not entitled to get any amount more than that received by him even if the amount of interest and other expenses were more. He has relied on two points—

(1) that the mortgagee never claimed the deficiency in profits in his claim, and

(2) that he was not legally entitled to it. We think that the learned Judge is wrong on both the points. The mortgagee's claim was that there should be no accounting and he was entitled to the possession of the property in lieu of his interest. The applicants themselves pressed for account and the Court accepted their contention in its order dated April 23, 1937. The Commissioner was then appointed to prepare accounts and he did it as claimed on behalf of the mortgagee. The applicants then objected to it and their objection was allowed by the Court. The mortgagee had never any opportunity to state before the applicants objected that they were entitled to the portion of the interest which was not paid by the profits. The accounting denotes the idea that the mortgagee would be entitled to his interest and would give account of the money received by him after deducting the legal expenses. We are of opinion that the learned Judge was not justified in not awarding the shortage of interest to the mortgagee on the ground that it was not claimed by him in his claim.

The second point taken by the learned Judge is that there is a covenant in the deed that the mortgagor would make up this deficiency out of his other property. The reference is to para. 7 of the mortgage deed of 1906 which runs thus—

"That if at the time of taking possession over the property by the said mortgagee or at any time in future there occurs a deficiency in the profits of the property noted in the deed, I, the declarant shall make up the deficiency out of my other property, and I, the declarant, shall have nothing to do with the enhanced amount of rent."

It is clear that the mortgagor was liable if the entire amount of interest was not realised from the profits of the property. The question is whether by reason of his taking a personal liability to pay the deficiency in profits the mortgagee is not entitled to recover it from the mortgaged property. It was held by the Privy Council in Ganga Ram v. Natha Singh (I. L. R. 5 Lahore, page 425), (7), that "a mortgagee is entitled to treat interest due under a mortgage as a charge upon the mortgaged property in the absence of any contract to the contrary."

There is no provision in the deed that the interest be not a charge on the property. In 10 O. W. N. 299 Bachulal v. Syed Mohammad Mah (8) there was a covenant in the deed that if any portion of the mortgaged property was acquired for Govt. purposes and any decrease in the profits payable to the mortgagee occurs for that reason or if the mortgagee has to pay any other kind of new Govt. cess with regard to the mortgaged property and the same cannot be realised from the tenants, then the mortgagor will pay the deficit in the annual profits out of his own pocket. It was held that notwithstanding this covenant the mortgagee was not prevented from claiming the deficiency in the profits at the time of redemption. The case of Ganga Ram v. Natha Singh (I. L. R. 5 Lahore, page 425) (7) has been followed in several cases by the Courts in India. It was held in Raj Raj Singh v. Sheonarain Lal (A. I. R. 1928 Patna, page 398), (9) that "a mortgagee in the absence of any contract to the contrary is entitled to treat the interest due under the mortgage as a charge on the property, and the mere fact that there is an express reference to interest in the personal covenant and no express reference to interest in the hypothecation clause is not evidence to the contrary."

The Lahore High Court in Manghi v. Dial Chand (96 Ind. Cas., page 477) (10) held that "in the absence of any contract to the contrary a mortgagee is entitled to treat interest due under the mortgage as a charge on the property, and the fact that the mortgagor has made himself personally liable makes no difference."

Several cases are cited in Mitra's Transfer of Property Act, 9th Edition, para. 331 in support of this view.

The learned Counsel for the respondents has relied on Farzand Ali v. Mirza Sadiq Hussain Khan (22 O. C. page 270) (11). In that case there was a stipulation that if the mortgagee had to pay enhanced revenue, he was entitled to realise it from the mortgagor by bringing a suit against him, and it was held that this stipulation was incompatible with the mortgagee having a right to add the excess to the mortgage money. We cannot follow this case in the face of the subsequent rulings cited above. The other case relied upon by the respondents is Mirza Abid Hussain v. Kaniz Fatima, (27 O. C., page 72) (12). In that case the case was of the liability of the mortgagor to pay enhanced revenue, and it was held that he was not liable at all, so there was no question whether the property was liable or not. The third case relied upon by the respondents is Said Ahmad v. Raja Barkhandi Mahesh Pratap Narain Singh, (1932 O. W. N., page 253) (13). In that case money was left with a mortgagee to pay off a prior mortgage, and there was a stipulation that if the mortgagee had to pay more than the money left, the mortgagee would be personally liable. That case is quite distinguishable from the present one. We are of opinion that the mortgagee is entitled to recover the deficiency in the profits at the time of redemption.

We have shown above that the mortgagee is entitled to get a decree for all the amounts which he could claim at the time of redemption. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the mortgagee is also entitled to interest on the deficiency, that is compound interest. Reliance is placed on para. 2 of the mortgage deed, dated February 3, 1906. It provides that the period of mortgage is 20 years but the mortgagor shall have power after the expiry of 5 years from the date of the deed to pay off in a lump sum the entire mortgage money with interest which may be due up to the date with one six monthly instalment of interest more than may be due in future, than the property noted in the deed shall be redeemed. Reliance is also placed on para. 4 which provides that in case any two instalments of interest be not paid the mortgagee will be entitled to possession and the amount of interest falling in arrears having been included in the principal interest at the said rate shall be paid thereon also and on the last portion of para. 7 quoted above. We do not think that the mortgage deed entitles the mortgagee to claim compound interest after taking possession of the property. We are of opinion that he is entitled to claim deficiency in the profits but not interest thereon. According to the report of the Commissioner dated May 25, 1937, the amount due on July 24, 1925, was Rs. 22,930-10-8, and there was a deficiency of Rs. 20-12-11. We do not add this deficiency to the mortgage money then due and thus the amount due on July 24, 1926 was Rs. 22,930-10-8. One year's interest on that amount comes to Rs. 1,547-13-1. The profits were Rs. 31-13-8 more and that amount has to be excluded from Rs. 22,930-10-8. The balance is Rs. 22,898-13-0. This was the mortgage money due on July 24, 1927. The account ought to be as follows : (After stating the account their Lordships proceeded further.)

The mortgagee is entitled to get Rs. 22,898-13-0 plus Rs. 3,261-14-10 total deficiency in profits plus Rs. 122-8-0 interest from July 24, 1935, to August 24, 1935 total Rs. 26,283-3-10. Out of this amount Rs. 147-7-0 will be deducted on account of nazranas. The balance is Rs. 26,135-12-10.

Sartaj Fatima is liable to pay 1/10th of it i. e. Rs. 2,611-9-3.

The result is that appeal No. 104 is allowed to the extent of Rs. 4-1-3 costs of rent suits and Rs. 25-12-6 costs of the suit for the recovery of possession—total Rs. 29-13-9. The rest of the appeal and the cross-objections are disallowed. Appeal No. 105 is allowed to the extent of Rs. 44-12-6 costs of rent suits and Rs. 283-9-0 costs of the suit for recovery of possession—total Rs. 328-5-6. The rest of the appeal and the cross-objections are disallowed. Appeal No. 106 is allowed to the extent of Rs. 336-7-0, (difference between Rs. 2,611-9-3 found by us and Rs. 2,275-2-3 allowed by the lower Court), deficiency in profits allowed by us on account of the bond, dated February 3, 1906, Rs. 16-12-9 costs of the suits for arrears of rent, Rs. 106-5-4 costs of the suit for recovery of possession of the mortgaged property on the basis of mortgage-deed, dated January 16, 1905, and Rs. 64-9-0 costs of the suit for recovery of possession of the mortgaged property on the basis of deed, dated February 3, 1906—total Rs. 524-2-0. The rest of the appeal and the cross-objections are disallowed. The parties will get and pay costs of the appeals in proportion to success and failure. The respondents will pay to appellant costs in respect of the cross-objections. The appellant will also get proportionate costs in the lower Court on the amounts decreed in each appeal.

s.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 198 of 1940

December 4, 1940

ROWLAND AND SHEARER, JJ.

MAHADEO NATH KHETRI AND OTHERS

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 302, 201 to 203, 107, 114—Murder—Common intention—Four persons taking part in commission of murder—No evidence to prove which of accused committed crime—All if can be convicted of murder—Abetment, what amounts to—Presence of abettor—He must be deemed to have committed crime—Ss. 201 to 203, applicability of—Offender committing crime and causing evidence of its commission to disappear, if can be convicted under ss. 201 to 203.

Mere presence without proof of any act or omission done to facilitate the offence or at least without proof of the existence of a common intention will not be sufficient under s. 34, I. P. C., to support a conviction. [p. 625, col. 2.]

Where however four persons were inside the house in which a murder was committed and although the victim was crying out loud enough to be heard by the neighbours as well as those inside the house none of them did anything to prevent the commission of the crime :

Held, that the statutory duty was cast upon the persons who were inside the house, by s. 44, Criminal P. C., to take measures to prevent the completion of the crime and as none of them did any such thing all of them must be held either to have taken an active part or by wilful acquiescence to have furthered the intention of all that the crime should be carried to its completion and that no outsider should have a chance to interfere. [ibid.]

Held, further that in the circumstances of the case even if there was no evidence to prove as to which of the persons present in the house committed the murder all the four could be convicted of murder. [p. 624, col. 1.]

Where the intention to cause death has been present it will make little or no difference that the Court cannot determine at what precise point in the course of a series of acts of violence the victims of the crime expired. 186 Ind. Cas. 256 (1), referred to. [p. 626, col. 1.]

Per Rowland, J.—The true principle is that there is no law preventing the main offender being convicted under ss. 201 to 203, but in practice no Court will convict an accused both of the main offence and under these sections. [p. 629, col. 1.]

[Case-law discussed].

Per Shearer, J.—A person who, having committed an offence, subsequently causes evidence of the commission of that offence to disappear, does not in so doing, commit another separate and distinct offence for which the Courts have in strict law jurisdiction to impose a separate punishment. R. v. Watson (23), referred to. [p. 630, col. 1.]

Quere.—Whether s. 201, I. P. C., applies to the accused who has committed an offence and caused the evidence of its commission to disappear with the intention of screening himself from legal punishment.

It amounts to abetment within s. 107, I. P. C., if a person intentionally aids by any act or illegal omission the doing of a criminal act and if a person is present, who if absent would be liable to be punished as an abettor, he is deemed under s. 114 to have committed the crime. [p. 625, col. 2.]

Cr. A from a decision of the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated August 27, 1940.

Sir M. N. Mukherji and Mr. K. K. Banerji, for the Appellants.

The Govt. Pleader, for the Crown.

Rowland, J.—The four appellants, Mahadeo, Sahdeo who are brothers and Chhatu and Anand who are uncles of the former two all live in the same house. Chamni a widowed sister of Mahadeo and Sahdeo was also living in the same house with them. It was the prosecution case that Maheshwar Nath was carrying on an intrigue with this Chamni which the four appellants resented; that on February 14, 1940, at night Maheshwar had entered the house of the accused and was caught in Chamni's room by the appellants who inflicted numerous injuries on him and threw his body into a well in the village. They were charged along with Chamni and another woman of the house, Sucha, with offences of murder s. 302/34 of the I. P. C. and causing disappearance of evidence of an offence-s. 201/34 of the I. P. C.

The two women were acquitted, but the four appellants have been convicted of both offences and sentenced on the former charge to transportation for life and under the latter to rigorous imprisonment for three years each, the sentences being directed to run concurrently.

The facts have been stated with clearness and precision in the judgment of the learned Judicial Commissioner. There is no eye-witness of the murder, and the case rests on circumstantial evidence which it is contended for the appellants does not establish the case against the accused. Moreover, appellant No. 2 Sahdeo has pleaded alibi. The evidence is quite clear that the relations between Maheshwar and the men of the accused's household were unfriendly. In June 1938, Maheshwar had occasion to report, at the Police Station an assault on himself by Mahadeo in which Maheshwar's umbrella was broken and Mahadeo threatened Maheshwar. Witness Deopal father of the deceased has spoken as to the intrigue between Maheshwar and Chamni and as to quarrels arising at different times in the last two years between Maheshwar and Mahadeo, Sahdeo and Anand respectively. This evidence is not seriously challenged. On the last occasion referred to by Deopal, Maheshwar had entered the house of Sahdeo at night and was caught by accused Anand who beat him with a lathi, but Maheshwar managed to escape. There is no reason to doubt the fact of the motive set up by the prosecution and it is a motive sufficient to account for the crime alleged against the accused, particularly when coupled with the fact that Maheshwar had entered the house of accused on the night in question. As to that there is no witness who saw him enter, but during the night three witnesses Manu Lal, P. W. No. 2, Mohan Lal, P. W. No. 5 and Ramsewak, P. W. No. 10 heard the voice of Maheshwar from within the house of Mahadeo cry out that he was being killed. These three witnesses are very near neighbours whose evidence the Judicial Commissioner has accepted and we have been shown no reason why it should be doubted. In fact Manu and Mohan later on the same night told Deopal what they had heard and Deopal after first looking to see whether Maheshwar was in his own room and finding him missing went to the house of Mahadeo with some neighbours and called out to those inside. There was no answer, although they could see lights and could hear sounds of movement which they have described as resembling the rattling of buckets.

Deopal was so alarmed that he went to Police Station Bero and reported his son's absence and the circumstances at 7 A. M. on the morning of February 15, 1940. On investigation the body of Maheshwar was found in a well in the village. Three of the accused, Mahadeo, Anand and Chhatu were found in the house, but Sahdeo was missing. Blood stains were found in several of the rooms such as satisfied the Sub-Inspector, the Judicial Commissioner and in fact leave no doubt that the rooms inside the house and particularly the room in the occupation of Chamni had been the scene of bloodshed. The body had been disposed of by throwing in a well in the village after drawing up over the head of the victim his vest, shirt and pull-over and then tying a comforter round them and the head. Medical evidence was that death was due apparently to suffocation and the injuries on the person of the deceased, though fairly numerous were not individually sufficient to account for the death and collectively the witness would not have expected them normally to cause death. No witness was found who had seen the body being thrown into well, but there is one witness Jalia Oraon, P. W. No. 21 a near neighbour who says that during the night getting up to ease himself he saw four persons carrying something in a direction from north-west to south-east, but that seeing him they turned back towards north-west. It is the case for the prosecution that this party was the party of the accused carrying the body of the deceased. Jalia has said that he heard Mahadeo say: "Uncle a man is there" which led to the party reversing their direction. The Judicial Commissioner accepted the evidence of Jalia and found that the materials before him established that the murder was committed inside the house of the accused, that all four of the appellants were in the house at the time when the assault on Maheshwar was being committed and that the murder could not have been carried through without the concurrence and connivance of them all and that it may be said with reasonable confidence that Jalia saw the four appellants removing the dead body. On this view he has convicted the appellants as above stated. Sir M. N. Mukherji before us has not attempted to dispute that the deceased died as a sequel to an assault made on him within the house of the appellants and probably by some one or more of the appellants; but it is said that there is no means of proving which of the persons present in the house committed the murder and therefore none of the appellants can in the absence of better evidence than the Crown has been able to produce be convicted at all. Sir M. N. Mukherji has also argued that there is not sufficient material to support a finding of the presence of Sahdeo in the house on that night. As regards the evidence of Jalia, he has argued that the witness is thoroughly unreliable and that his story should have been discarded as utterly worthless. Sahdeo's statement was that he had left the village on the morning of the 14th, but there are numerous witnesses Deopal, Chabindra, Ramséwak, Ramdeo, Debendra and Gurindra by whom he was seen and who prove his presence in the village up to the evening of the 14th; but he on the other hand has adduced no evidence of his absence. Taking the evidence along with the medical evidence of marks of injury still present on his person when he was examined on March 12, after his arrest, it may fairly be said that the probabilities are strongly in favour of his having been in the house and participating in some violent action.

As regards Jalia, the learned Judicial Commissioner accepted his evidence without much criticism; but it is pointed out that this witness may have some hostility against the accused. In a litigation between Padam Kuer and Kausilla, Jalia was a witness for the defendants, but Mahadeo was on Padam Kuer's side. Jalia also gave evidence against Mahadeo in a case in which a decree-holder had applied to prosecute him and others for cutting attached paddy. It is further pointed out that the witness himself is not a person of very high standing, and it is suggested that he has had a chequered career. He was an amin in the cadastral settlement. The circumstances under which he left that service are not explained, but he repudiates the suggestion that he was dismissed for his misconduct. He had some land on saika lease from the Maharaja and it seems he defaulted in paying rent and a decree was obtained against him which he, did not satisfy, but that he says was 25 or 30 years ago. Later he became clerk of a Pleader whose services also he has left; but he denies the suggestion that he was accused of embezzling the clients' money and there is no evidence to support the suggestion. He is working now as clerk of another Pleader Kunja Babu of Ranchi and he admits that before he obtained this post, he was unemployed for three years. He has been in debt to Kirpal Munshi who got a decree against him in satisfaction of which he executed a handnote. He was also in debt to Khwaja Moinuddin for cycle hire and executed a handnote in his favour. These matters transpired in his own evidence and there is nothing to show that he has not been candid. It is further suggested that his statements do not agree with those of other witnesses in respect of the time of occurrence. He told the Sub-Inspector that when he went to ease himself the moon was about setting. That would put the time as near midnight, it being about 7 or 8 days after the full moon. He however, in Court says that it was dark and does not mention the moon at all, no question being asked in cross-examination as to whether the moon had set. According to the other witnesses it was between 2 and 3 a.m. when Deopal was informed by Mohan and Manu; and Manu has described it as being after midnight when he heard the cries of Maheshwar. Some difference in estimates of time can be reasonably expected in dealing with incidents which occur in the night and time for those who have not a watch can only be estimated by guess. I do not think that the discrepancies in the matter of time are fatal to the evidence. The significance of the story that Jalia told can best be understood by reference to the sketch map Ex. 15. In this the house of accused is at A. that of Jalia is at S and there is a well between the house of Jolia Christian at N and S into which it might well have been convenient for the murderers to throw the body of Maheshwar. To do so they would proceed a short distance southward from A and then in a south-easterly direction to the well marked in pencil O. Jalia coming out to ease himself would be likely to do so quite near this well and his story is that seeing him they turned back on their tracks. The well at B in the sketch map in which eventually the body was found is considerably further from the place of occurrence than the other well of which I have been speaking, and the fact that the body was taken to this well a longer distance and passing more than one house on the way is well accounted for if Jalia's story is accepted. After considering Jalia's evidence carefully, I am of opinion in agreement with the Judicial Commissioner that the fact deposed to by him is true. If that is so, and if it was the body which was being carried, it proves that the persons who were disposing of it were four in number and this goes to corroborate the prosecution case that not only the other three accused but Sahdeo also was in the house of the appellants on the night, in question. I conclude that Sahdeo was there. The question then remains whether the evidence suffices to bring the crime home to individual accused or merely as contended by the defence to support a finding that the murder must have been done by one or more of their number, but that the evidence will not show which is the guilty one and therefore they ought to be acquitted. I am prepared to accept the proposition advanced by Sir M. N. Mukherji with reference to s. 34 of the I. P. C. and mere presence without proof of any act or omission done to facilitate the offence or at least without proof of the existence of a common intention will not be sufficient to support a conviction. Certainly if common intention is proved it will be no answer to say that the prosecution have not established which of the acts done in the commission of a crime was done by each individual accused. We may also refer to the sections dealing with abetment. It amounts to abetment within s. 107, I. P. C., if a person intentionally aids by any act or illegal omission the doing of a criminal act, and if a person is present, who if absent would be liable to be punished as an abettor, he is deemed under s. 114 to have committed the crime. Now in the present case it has been found by the Judicial Commissioner, and I would accept the finding, that all the persons within the house must have known what was going on. Maheshwar was crying out loud enough, to be heard by the neighbours as well as those inside the house. If murder was about to be done or was being done by one or two of the appellants, the others hearing Maheshwar's cries and knowing what was happening or about to happen had the statutory duty cast upon them by s. 44 of the Criminal P. C. forthwith to inform the Magistrate or Police Officer. If that could not be done in time to prevent the completion of the offence any of them could by opening the door and calling in the neighbours have saved the life of Maheshwar. Not one of the four accused did any such thing and all of them must be held either to have taken an active part or by wilful acquiescence to have furthered the intention of all that the crime should be carried to its completion and that no outsider should have a chance to interfere. With this we have also to consider that injuries were found on the person of every one of the appellants which though not conclusive indicate a probability that they had all taken part in a violent struggle. I think, therefore that we ought to uphold the finding of the Judicial Commissioner that all four appellants had taken part in the crime and in the disposal of the body. It is possible that the murder was not completed inside the house. The medical evidence as already observed suggests that the direct cause of death was suffocation which may have supervened when it was thrown into the well. If they threw him in the well believing that he was dead and did not know that by so throwing him they were causing his death, would they be guilty of murder? That is a position similar to the one considered in King-Emperor v. Nehal Mahto (1) in which it was held that the test is whether the intention to cause death has been present and if it is, it will make little or no difference that the Court cannot determine at what precise point in the course of a series of acts of violence the unfortunate man expired. The appellants are, therefore, guilty of murder.

As they must for the offence suffer the sentence of transportation for life, and as no separate sentence has been imposed under s. 201, the accused in this case are not personally affected by whatever we may decide on the question whether they are liable at the same time to be convicted for the offence under s. 201 of concealing evidence; but the Judicial Commissioner has convicted them and it is for consideration whether that order should stand. It has been found that the offence of murder had been committed, that the accused caused the evidence of its commission to disappear and that their intention was to screen themselves and each other from legal punishment. Prima facie, no ingredient mentioned in s. 201 of the I. P. C. would appear to be absent; but in Ratanlal's Law of Crimes the section is paraphrased thus: Whenever an offence has actually been committed, any person other than the offender knowing or having reason to believe that it has been committed and intending to screen the offender from legal punishment causes any evidence of the commission to disappear shall be punished. The words "other than the offender" do not appear in the section itself. The paraphrase however represents a view of the law which has been often taken by Courts in India. This line of Judicial opinion can be traced back to Reg v. Kashinath (2). This was a trial arising out of some frauds and the accused it seems had caused the disappearance of evidence which would have proved the fraud against them. The submission in the memorandum of appeal of the petitioners had been

"That according to the I. P. C., s. 201, it is necessary for the commission of the offence that the evidence against a third person should be made to disappear, which has not been done in this case."

The argument adduced was that the law (s. 201) applies to the causing the disappearance of evidence of an offence committed by another and not by the person who is charged with causing the disappearance. This argument was rested on something to be found in Mayne's Commentaries and to Bengal rulings to the effect that "the section applies to the causing the disappearance of evidence of an offence committed by another, not by oneself", and that "the person who commits an offence, and afterwards conceals the evidence of it, cannot be punished on both heads of charge." The case of Queen v. Ramsunder (3) appears to be one of those rulings: Ramsunder had been convicted of causing hurt and also of concealing evidence of the commission of that offence under s. 201, I. P. C.; for the two offences he had been awarded separate and consecutive sentences. I quote the whole of the reasoning in the judgment:

"The conviction under s. 201 we hold to be illegal. That section refers to prisoners other than the actual criminals who by their causing evidence to disappear, assist the principals to escape the consequences of their offences. But the person who commits an offence and afterwards conceals the evidence of it, cannot be punished on both heads of the charge according to the terms of the I. P. C."

The other pronouncement is not in a judgment of the Court, but in a letter from the Registrar commenting apparently on a sessions statement. It is reproduced in 5 W. R. Cr. Letters p. 5 and runs as follows:

"With reference to the case of Jangeea Tantee and others (Case No. 2 of Statement No. 4), the Court observe that the prisoner Jangeea Tantee has been convicted of grievous hurt under s. 325 of the I. P. C., and causing the evidence to disappear to screen himself from legal punishment (s. 201 of the I. P. C.), and has received separate sentences for each offence. This does not seem to the Court proper, as s. 201 applies to the causing the disappearance of evidence of an offence committed by another, not by oneself. At any rate, in the present case, the commission of grievous hurt and the offence under s. 201 were not distinct acts, but were part of one continuous transaction and, as such, should not have received separate punishments though the acts of the prisoner, subsequent to the causing of grievous hurt (vide illustration), may be matters which may properly be taken into consideration in awarding punishment. As the sentence is not excessive, the Court will not interfere, unless on appeal it may be found necessary to do."

There is nothing to show that arguments were heard for the party or for the Crown before issuing this letter.

Returning to Dinkar's case, the Bombay Judges reasoned thus:

"as there is no law which obliges a criminal to give information which would convict himself, it is evident that ss. 202 and 203 (intentionally omitting to give information; giving information known to be false) could not apply to the person who committed that offence i. e., the offence which he knew had been committed; and s. 201 should, we think, be construed in a similar manner; and looking at the only illustration which follows s. 201, it would appear that the law was intended to apply exclusively to 'another' and we are, therefore, of opinion that the conviction of the accused, as accessories to an offence known or believed to have been committed by themselves is illegal".

Following this decision a similar view has been taken in Empress of India v. Kishna (4) in the Empress v. Behala Bibi (5) in Queen-Empress v. Lalli (6) in Queen-Empress v. Dungar (7) in Torap Ali v. Queen-Empress (8) in Samata Dhupi v. King-Emperor (9) and in Teprinessa v. Emperor (10). All these are either based on Dinkar's case or simply follow one another. The decision in Torap Ali v. Queen-Empress (8) is the limit; this has been described as "an example of how justice is defeated" in one of the cases I shall be quoting later, and in the two succeeding Calcutta decisions the Judges show uneasiness and try to find an intermediate position. But logically there is no intermediate position. If Dinkar's case was rightly decided so was Torap's; if Torap's is wrong, so is Dinkar's.—Dinkar's case is direct authority for the proposition that a man could not lawfully be charged with any substantive offence and in the alternative with the offence under s. 201; it follows that he could not lawfully, on a charge of murder, be convicted of the other offence s. 201 because the section is not meant to apply to criminals, but only to the innocent. But ought the Courts to engraft on a section in this manner words of qualification or exception which the Legislature has not seen fit to put there? When the section forbids any man to do away with evidence of any crime, is it open to a Court by a stroke of the pen and without hearing argument to say it does not forbid a man to do away with the evidence of his own crime?

I cannot find that this method of construing a Statute has ever been approved by the Privy Council. They say in Ramnandi Koer

v. Kalawati Koer (11).

"It has often been pointed out by this Board that where there is a positive enactment of the Indian Legislature the proper course is to examine the language of that Statute and to ascertain its proper meaning, uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law or of the English Law upon which it may be founded".

The word "often" in the passage cited shows that pronouncements to the same effect are numerous and I do not propose to multiply references to them. I may refer to a decision of the House of Lords in Vacher & Sons v. London Society of Compositors (12), in which Lord Atkinson said:

"a Court of Law has nothing to do with the reasonableness or unreasonableness of a provision of a statute, except so far as it may help it in interpreting what the Legislature has said. If the language of a statute be plain, admitting of only one meaning, the Legislature must be taken to have meant and intended what it has plainly expressed, and whatever it has in clear terms enacted must be enforced though it should lead to absurd or mischievous results".

Other noble and learned Lords expressed themselves in similar terms. I may cite also one more decision of the Privy Council in Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor (13), where it is said:

"in truth when the meaning of words is plain it is not the duty of the Courts to busy themselves with supposed intentions".

The principles have been consistently asserted; and with great respect to the learned Judges I would hardly expect the interpretation placed on s. 201, by the above line of authority to receive the approval of the Privy Council in any case which came before their Lordships. Such a case arose in Begu v. King-Emperor (14), with the result that was expected by those most conversant with the fundamental principles of construction consistently and repeatedly laid down by their Lordships.

Some of the High Courts had already realized the inconvenience, the absurdities to which the decision in Dinkar's case logically must lead; some of these were denounced by the High Courts which had not fallen into them and renounced by those which had in Calcutta for instance, in Umed Sheikh v. King-Emperor (15), approved and followed in Durlav Namasudra v. Emperor (16), in Lahore in Bulagi v. Crown (17), and Ditta v. Crown (18), in Oudh in Mata Din v. King-Emperor (19). A Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Har Piar (20), addressed themselves to the construction of the actual words s. 201 and said:

"we are unable to agree with the view that a person who has actually committed a crime himself whether murder or any other crime—is any of the less guilty of removing traces thereof, if it is proved against him that he has done so, because he was the person who actually committed the offence. If the Legislature intended to provide such an exception, they would undoubtedly have said so in express language".

In that case, however, the Bench though dissenting from two of the earlier decisions based on Dinkar's case did not examine that case itself. That was done by a Bench of the Madras High Court in re Chinna Gangappa (21), where the Judges point out that the ratio decidendi of Reg v. Kashinath (2), has nowhere been examined in the succeeding cases; and they say: "It seems to us to rest on a petitio principii." The reason given is that as there is no law now which obliges a criminal to give information which would convict himself, it is evident that ss. 202 and 203 could not apply to a person who committed that offence, that is, the offence which he knew had been committed. Obviously, if there is no law to that effect, then ss. 202 and 203 will not apply. The question rather is whether ss. 201 to 203 do not embody such a law. On the face of them there is nothing to show that they do not apply to the main offender himself. Section 44 of the Criminal P. C. which is the generic section relating to the duty of persons to give information about grave offences including murder, and s. 45 (d) of that Code which lays on any owner or occupier of land the duty of giving information regarding the occurrence in his village of any sudden or unnatural death, do not in terms exclude the offender himself. These sections of the Criminal P. C. would be relevant in a case under s. 202, I. P. C. where it is necessary that the accused should be legally bound to give information regarding the offence; but even this qualification does not appear under s. 201 or s. 203. What is required there is merely that there should have been an offence and that the accused has given false information about it, with the added intention in the case of s. 201, I. P. C. of screening the offender. We can not, therefore, see wherefrom comes the proposition which is the foundation of Reg. v. Kashinath (2), that there is no law which obliges a criminal to give information which would convict himself. There is such a law in the case of grave offences and sudden deaths, and in theory the offender himself could be convicted for breach of that law under ss. 201 to 203, I. P. C. In practice, no doubt, if he has been convicted of the offence itself, no Court will think it worthwhile to convict him also under ss. 201 to 203, I. P. C. If the proposition laid down in Reg. v. Kashinath (2), is carried to its logical conclusion, it would appear that it is improper to try an accused person as the present accused has been tried, in the same trial under both ss. 302 and 201, I. P. C., because a perfect defence to s. 201, would be a plea and proof that he himself was the murderer, and an accused would be entitled to say that the plea he proposes to make to the charge under s. 201 will depend on whether he is acquitted or convicted of the principal offence; and that to call upon him to plead to the charge under s. 201, before and until he knows what the verdict on the murder charge is, would be to deprive him of his legitimate defence. It would also in a case where the Court regards proof of his complicity in the actual offence as insufficient to establish his guilt compel the Court to let him go free, even though it is satisfied that he gained his acquittal on the main offence by his own concealment of the traces of the crime. This was exactly what happened in Reg. v. Kashinath (2), and it is hardly compatible with justice that the actual offender should escape conviction under ss. 201 to 203 because he is the actual offender in the main crime, while those who merely witnessed it but gave false information about it are punishable under ss. 201 and 203. This means that the more successful a criminal is in concealing his own offence, the more the law will assist him in escaping justice altogether, and, unless the Court holds without reasonable doubt that the accused did not take part in the murder, the Court is bound to give him the benefit of the doubt and acquit him of offences under ss. 201 to 203. The case reported in Torap Ali v. Queen-Empress (8), is another practical example of how justice is defeated by such a theory of the law. The true principle seems to be that there is no law preventing the main offender being convicted under ss. 201 to 203, but in practice no Court will convict an accused both of the main offence and under these sections.

The matter came before a Division Bench of this High Court in Rup Narain Kurmi v. King-Emperor (22), when the Judges Fazl Ali and Scroope, JJ., were agreed that there was no bar to the conviction under s. 201 of persons charged with a murder, but not convicted of it, but whereas Fazl Ali, J. would not go further than this, Scroope, J. accepted in its entirety the reasoning of the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Har Piari (20). The headnote to the report is misleading. It includes the statement: Held that the section does not relate to the principal offender but to persons other than the actual criminal who, by causing the evidence of the offence to disappear, assist the principal to escape the consequence of his crime, thus representing wrongly that this was the view of two Judges; whereas it was only the view of one and the contrary opinion of Scroope, J. is absolutely and entirely ignored in the headnote. It is not a fact as represented in the headnote that there is an agreed decision of two Judges on the point before us. The matter is open for our independent opinion.

The learned Judges who decided the Patna case on June 11, 1930, had not before them the decision In re Chinna Gangappa (21), which was decided on April 8, of the same year and arrives from another point of view at the same conclusion as the Allahabad decision relied on by Scroope, J., and we are entitled, I think, to read s. 201 and express our own opinion on its meaning read in accordance with the principles laid down by the Privy Council. As to the application of these principles to the particular section we have to consider, I have not been able to find any more recent authority directly bearing on it; but some light on the general method of construction can be had by examining a case already referred to, namely, Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor (13). Their Lordships had occasion to construe s. 162 of the Criminal P. O. which provided in sub-s. 1:

"No statement made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter shall if reduced into writing be signed by the person making it, nor shall any such statement or any record thereof whether in a Police diary or otherwise or any part of such statement or record be used for any purpose (save as hereinafter provided at any inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such trial was made)".

The majority of the High Courts had held that this sub-section did not apply to a statement made by a person who, at the time it is tendered in evidence, is an accused person; and their Lordships say: "that the words in their ordinary meaning would include any person though he may thereafter be accused" and they say:

"that if the statement is to be admitted at all it can be by limiting the words 'used for any purpose' by the addition of such words, as 'except as evidence for or against the person making it when accused of an offence'. If such an exception were intended one would expect to find it expressed; and their Lordships cannot find sufficient grounds for so departing from the plain words used".

and their Lordships make the pronouncement already cited that "in truth when the meaning of words is plain, it is not the duty of the Courts to busy themselves with supposed intentions," and they say

"in this case the words themselves declare the intention of the Legislature. It therefore appears inadmissible to consider the advantages or disadvantages of applying the plain meaning whether in the interest of the prosecution or the accused".

I am impressed by the reasoning in Emperor v. Hari Piari (20) and In re Chinna Gangappa (21) and I think it is not improbable that if Fazl Ali, J. had had before him this latter decision and that of the Privy Council in Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor (13), he would have found himself in agreement with the opinion of Scroope, J. and would have followed the Allahabad decision. Apart from the reasoning in the Madras case, so acute and experienced a lawyer, so eminent a Judge as Fazl Ali, J. whose opinion I regard, as I ought, with the greatest respect, would not fail to take notice that the ratio decidendi in Har Piari's case is the same as in the later decision of the Privy Council. Their Lordships say "if such an exception were intended one would expect to find it expressed"; and I find it difficult to suppose that the learned Judge would question the correctness of that line of reasoning.

It is possible however to support the decision of the Judicial Commissioner in the case before us on another ground. The intention of each of the appellants was to screen his companions as well as himself from legal punishments; and on this view the convictions under s. 201 seem not to be objectionable, even if the words of the section require that a man should screen an offender other than himself.

I would dismiss the appeal.

Shearer, J.—I regret that I am unable to concur in the view which my learned brother takes of the meaning and scope of s. 201 of the I. P. C. In my judgment, a person who, having committed an offence, subsequently causes evidence of the commission of that offence to disappear, does not in so doing, commit another separate and distinct offence for which the Courts have in strict law jurisdiction to impose a separate punishment. The words in the section over which the difficulty arises are : Whoever.....causes any evidence.....to disappear with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment.....". The word "whoever" may be taken as equivalent to "any person who". Now, in the sentence "any person who causes any evidence to disappear with the intention of screening the offender" the words "any person" appear to me to exclude by necessary implication the offender himself. The words immediately after "whoever" or "any person who" are "knowing or having reason to believe that an offence has been committed". These words quite certainly pre-suppose a person other than the offender himself. The marginal note to the section and the illustration appended to it also suggest that it was the intention of the Legislature to exclude the offender from the scope of the section. Any one reading the section would, I think, at first sight at least assume that it was intended to cover the case of a person who had not taken part in the commission of a crime himself but had, subsequent to the commission of it, endeavoured to prevent justice being done by removing evidence of it. In order to make it cover also the case of the offender himself it is necessary, in the first place, to substract from the section the words "knowing or having reason to believe that an offence has been committed" which become wholly unnecessary and to add after the word "offender" some such words as "even if the offender be himself". On the ordinary principles of construction it is not, in my judgment, permissible to do this.

The most recent decision which can be cited in support of the view taken by my learned brother is In re Chinna Gangappa

(21). That was a case in which a man reported to the Police that his wife had been stung by a scorpion or bitten by a snake when in point of fact, she had been killed, in all probability by himself. Possibly for that reason the somewhat novel argument which was put forward and eventually commenced itself to the Court was based on s. 44 of the Criminal P. C. The argument proceeds on the assumption which in my opinion is unwarranted, that the word "whoever" in s. 201 of the I. P. C., and the words "every person" in s. 44 of the Criminal P. C. can, without doing any extreme violence to the language used in the remainder of the sections, be made to include the offender himself. Immediately after the words "every person" in s. 44 come the words "aware of the commission of" which impliedly exclude the offender or at least are, so far as he is concerned, wholly unnecessary. Then come the words "intention of any other person to commit" which make it I submit with great respect, clear that the words "every person" do not include a person intending to commit an offence and therefore make it extremely unlikely, to say the least of it, that they were intended to include a person who had committed one. Finally there occur the words "without reasonable excuse". What weight or meaning can be given to these words in the case of the offender himself? Wallace and Jackson, JJ. in In re Chinna Gangappa (21) criticised an observation in Reg. v. Kashinath (2), that "there is no law now which obliges a criminal give information which would convict himself". "Nemo tenetur accusare seipsum". In 17th century in England this maxim was thought to embody the law of God and Nature; such was the odium which had been excited by the practice of the Court of Star Chamber in administering the ex officio oath to prisoners and compelling them to answer incriminating questions. The revulsion of feeling persisted and eventually in 1848 Parliament enacted a statute which absolutely prohibited any judicial questioning of the prisoner either before or during the trial. When, thirteen years later the law of criminal procedure in India was for the first time systematised and codified, this characteristic feature which gives to the English system a dignity and an apparent humanity which other systems lack, was, it is true, not exactly reproduced. But if the power of the Criminal Courts to question accused persons was not taken away altogether it was at least provided that they were not to be bound to answer questions and were to be exempt from punishment if they answered questions falsely. In my opinion, the substantial truth of the observation made in Reg v. Kashinath (2), is not open to doubt and the ratio decidendi in In re Chinna Gangappa (21) is, on the other hand, radically unsound.

The other decisions relied on are those of Walsh and Pullan, JJ. in Emperor v. Har Piari (20), and that of Scroope, J. in Rup Narain Kurmi v. King-Emperor (22). In the former it is remarked:

"We are unable to agree with the view that a person who has actually committed a crime himself—whether murder or any other crime is any the less guilty of removing traces thereof, if it is proved against him that he did so, because he was the person who actually committed the offence. If the Legislature intended to provide such an exception they would undoubtedly have said so in express language".

In order to make s. 201 apply to the case of the offender himself, it is necessary as I have already shown, to substract from it words that are there and to add to it words that are not. That being so, is it not more reasonable to assume that if the Legislature had intended to make the act of causing evidence of the commission of a crime to disappear punishable in every case, there would have been two sections and not one in the I. P. C., one the section now there to cover the case of the accessory after the fact and the other a section to cover the case of the principal offender in some such terms as:—

"Whoever, having committed an offence intentionally causes any evidence of the commission of that offence to disappear or gives any information respecting the offence which is false"

The authors of the I. P. C., in dealing with the offence of resistance or obstruction to lawful apprehension found it necessary to insert two sections, viz:—Sections 224 and 225, the former covering the case of the person sought to be apprehended and the latter the case of other persons who assisted him to resist. Moreover, they added an explanation to s. 224 to make it clear that resistance or obstruction to lawful apprehension was an act for which a punishment might be imposed in addition to any punishment to which the offender might be liable in respect of the offence on account of which he was sought to be apprehended. Why did they not take the same simple and obvious course in dealing with the offence of causing evidence of the commission of a crime to disappear, if they wished to make such an act, when done by the offender himself, punishable? The principal author of the I. P. C., was one of the great masters of the art of lucid expression and his object in adopting a style which, it has been well said, is as unlike that of an Act of Parliament as it is unlike that of an Indian Regulation was to prevent the law being misunderstood by Courts which were often presided over by laymen. Would he and his co-adjusters have left s. 201, as it now stands, if they had intended it to apply to the case of the principal offender? On the other hand, if they had intended it not to apply to the case of the principal offenders, could they reasonably be expected to have foreseen that the Courts might so apply it and to have realised the necessity or desirability of adding an explanation to the section and making their meaning still more abundantly clear? It is obvious that in framing s. 201 and certain other sections which occur in the same chapter, the authors of the I. P. C., were endeavouring to reproduce the English Law relating to accessories after the fact. If they had anything else before them, it, was probably the sections in the French Penal Code which deal with the same matter. In other words, they were not considering then, whether cases might not arise in which a person should be punished for removing traces of an offence he had himself committed. But Legislature has since considered and provided for this in at least one specific instance. In or about 1895 one Shama Charn Sen was tried on a charge of defrauding a bank of three lakhs of rupees and had to be acquitted apparently, if the Commentary in Ratanlal is correct, on the ground that it could not be shown on what particular occasions or in what particular sums the amount had been abstracted. This acquittal was followed by the enactment of s. 477-A of the I. P. C. It is interesting to note that in Reg v. Kashinath (2), the accused persons had entered into a conspiracy to defraud, and had defrauded, the Public Works Department of large sums of money. The facts of the case do not appear very clearly from the report and it is scarcely possible to say that if s. 477-A had then been in existence the accused persons could and would have been prosecuted under it rather than under s. 201. A clerk or servant who misappropriates money and in order to conceal this destroys papers and books of account, in effect causes evidence of the commission of his crime to disappear. It is reasonable that such an act should itself be made an offence as it may conceivably be the means of his successfully avoiding punishment for the misappropriation. But there does not seem to be any very good ground on which every attempt on the part of any offender to remove traces of his crime should be made punishable. It is as natural for an offender to try and conceal his crime as it is for him to try and avoid apprehension. Human nature being what it is, it would plainly be futile to endeavour to prevent a criminal trying to conceal his crime by the threat of further punishment while to make such an act punishable would put it in the power of the Courts to be vindictive.

My learned brother has referred to Begu v. King-Emperor (14). That was a case in which two men were convicted under s. 302 and three other men, who had been tried along with them on the same charge, were ultimately convicted under s. 201. The question, or rather one of the questions, that arose, was whether in the absence of a charge under s. 201 the conviction could be maintained. It has to be remembered that at one time in England an accessory after the fact could not be tried until after the conviction of the principal felon and even now a person indicted as a principal cannot be convicted and sentenced as an accessory after the fact: R. v. Watson (23). Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee came to the conclusion that in India the law was otherwise and that ss. 236 and 237 of the Criminal P. C., rendered the conviction valid. These sections were set out in the judgment and were critically examined. Section 201 of the I. P. C., was not set out or discussed and after reading and re-reading the judgment I am bound, with the greatest respect, to say that I am unable to find anything in it to support the view that s. 201 punishes the principal offender as well as the accessory after the fact. On the contrary, the point was one which did not at all arise and which it was quite unnecessary for their Lordships to consider. If it had been, the observations of so distinguished a lawyer and philosopher as Viscount Haldane would, no doubt, have been illuminating.

It has been satisfactorily proved that the appellants were jointly concerned in the commission of this murder and in the removal of the dead body of the victim. It may be said that the intention of each of the appellants in removing the dead body was to screen his companions as well as himself from punishment and on that ground perhaps the convictions under s. 201 as well as under s. 302 can in this particular case be supported. But if they can, that is a purely accidental result of the language used in the section. In my judgment, the law in India does not, any more than does the Common Law of England, ordinarily visit the act of an offender in endeavouring to remove traces of his crime with a punishment separate and distinct from any punishment to which he may have rendered himself liable by committing the offence. With these observations I would concur in the order of my learned brother dismissing the appeal.

VITHALDAS BHAGWANDAS DARBAR

TUKARAM VITHOBA KSHATRI

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 92—A getting tagai loan of Rs. 1,000 from Government under Land Improvement Loans Act and making it charge on land No. 1 and offering lands Nos. 2, 3 and 4 as collateral security—A subsequently mortgaging lands Nos. 2 and 3 to B and selling lands Nos. 1 and 4 to P and leaving Rs. 1,000 with him for paying off Government loan—Few days before aforesaid sale C attaching land No. 1 in execution of his decree and purchasing it at execution sale—Suit by P claiming charge over lands Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and recovery of amount paid by him to Government from A, B and C—Neither s. 92, Transfer of Property Act nor s. 69, Contract Act (IX of 1872), held applied—P held not entitled to reliefs claimed—Proper remedy was by suit for damages against A.

One A obtained from Govt. under Land Improvement Loans Act in 1927 a sum of Rs. 1,000 as tagai loan. It was made a charge on his land No. 1 for the improvement of which the loan was taken. His other lands Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were offered as collateral security. In 1929 A mortgaged lands Nos. 2 and 3 to B and on January 25, 1932, sold lands Nos. 1 and 4 for Rs. 5,000 to P and kept Rs. 1,000 with P out of the purchase-money for paying off the Govt. loan. On January 21, 1932, that is four days before the sale, C attached land No. 1 in execution of his money decree and purchased it himself at the execution sale. In 1935 P filed a suit claiming that he was entitled to a charge on lands Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and to recover the amount paid by him to Govt. from A, B and C.

Held, (1) that if P came within the terms of s. 92 he would have the same rights as Govt. not only against A who borrowed the money from Govt. but also against B and C who derived their rights from A. But P did not fall under s. 92 as there was in fact no mortgage to Govt. but only a statutory charge under Land Improvement Loans Act, on the lands;

(2) that part of the consideration for sale of land No. 1 retained by P for the discharge of Govt. loan must be regarded as the money of A and therefore P was not entitled to subrogation under para. 1 of s. 92. Nor could P come under para. 3, because there was no registered agreement giving him the right of subrogation. 171 Ind. Cas. 153 (1) and 160 Ind. Cas. 137 (2), relied on.

(3) that the same reasoning which ruled out s. 92,

T. P. Act, rendered s. 69; Contract Act, also inapplicable. If the repayment of the tagai loan to Govt. was to be regarded as the act of the vendor, A and not the act of P, the purchaser P, obviously did not come within the terms of s. 69. Moreover, even if it were possible to say that there was a payment by P within the meaning of s. 69, it was a payment which he was bound to make under the terms of his agreement with A and it would not therefore be open to him to say that it was a payment which some other person was bound to make. *Dakshina Mohun Roy v. S. A. from the decision of the District Judge, Bijapur, in Appeal No. 145 of 1936.

Messrs. H. C. Coyajee and G. R. Madbhavi, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. R. Parulekar, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

Broomfield, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a decree of the District Judge of Bijapur confirming a decree of the joint Subordinate Judge of Bijapur, who dismissed a suit brought by the plaintiff for reimbursement or contribution. The plaintiff's claim was put forward in the following circumstances. One Ramappa who was the father of defendant No. 1 was the owner of four fields, survey Nos. 5/2, 381, 382 and 124. In October-November 1927, Ramappa borrowed Rs. 1,000 from Govt. under the Land Improvement Loans Act for the improvement of survey No. 5/2. By virtue of s. 7 of the Act, Govt. therefore has the right to recover the money with interest from the borrower personally, or out of the land for the benefit of which the loan was granted, or out of properties given as collateral security that is in the present case survey Nos. 381, 382 and 124. It is provided in the same section that it is in the discretion of the Collector to determine the order in which he will resort to the various modes of recovering the moneys which are recoverable as if they were arrears of land revenue. On November 26, 1929, Ramappa mortgaged survey Nos. 381 and 382 to defendant No. 3. On January 25, 1932, he sold survey No. 5/2 and 124 to the plaintiff. The consideration for the sale was Rs. 5,000, and the sale deed (Ex. 28) provided that out of this sum Rs. 1,000 was to be kept with the purchaser (plaintiff) for discharging the tagai debt. Prior to this in 1930 defendant No. 2 had obtained a money decree against Ramappa and he attached survey No. 5/2 four days before the plaintiff's purchase. Subsequently on February 4, 1933, defendant No. 2 purchased that survey number in execution proceedings.

The tagai debt due to Govt. was paid off by the plaintiff in three instalments—one of Rs. 150 paid on May 27, 1932, one of Rs. 150 paid on March 18, 1933, and the final instalment of Rs. 600 paid on November 13, 1934. On March 23, 1933, the plaintiff brought a suit against defendant No. 2 to recover possession of survey No. 5/2, but the suit failed because it was held that defendant No. 2 had a prior claim in view of the fact that he had attached the land before the sale of it to the plaintiff. The suit in which the present appeal arises was filed by the plaintiff in June 1935. He claimed to have a charge on survey Nos. 5/2, 381 and 382 and to be entitled to recover the amount paid by him to Govt. from defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. As I have mentioned, the plaintiff failed in both the lower Courts. He there relied partly on s. 92, T. P. Act, and partly on s. 69, Contract Act. Section 92 deals with the rule about what is called subrogation. In s. 91 certain persons other than the mortgagor are stated to be entitled to redeem a mortgage; and s. 92 provides that if any of these persons does in fact redeem a mortgage, he has the same rights as regards redemption, foreclosure or sale as the mortgagee whose mortgage he has redeemed has against the mortgagor or any other mortgagee. That is provided in para. 1 of s. 92, and para. 3 provides this:

"A person who has advanced to a mortgagor money with which the mortgage has been redeemed shall be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage has been redeemed, if the mortgagor has by a registered instrument agreed that such persons shall be so subrogated."

By virtue of s. 59-A of the Act the word "mortgagor" includes "persons deriving title from a mortgagor," so that if the plaintiff comes within the terms of s. 92 he would have the same rights as Govt. not only against defendant No. 1 who borrowed the money from Govt. but also against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 who derived their rights from defendant No. 1. There are however obvious difficulties in the way of the application of s. 92 to this case. In the first place there was in fact no mortgage to Govt. There was a statutory charge in favour of Govt. in respect of survey No. 5/2 and also the three fields given as collateral security. But it was not a mortgage. Assuming however that that difficulty could be got over, it has been held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Hira Singh v. Jai Singh (1) that where part of the consideration for sale of land is retained by the purchaser for the discharge of incumbrances on the land that money is to be regarded as the money of the vendor, and, therefore, the purchaser is not entitled to subrogation under para. 1 of s. 92. He may or may not come under para. 3, but in the present case it is clear that the plaintiff cannot come under para. 3 because there is no registered agreement giving him the right of subrogation. The same view of the construction of s. 92 has been taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Lakshmi Amma v. Sankara Narayana Menon (2). In view of these authorities the learned Counsel for the appellant has conceded that he cannot rely on the doctrine of subrogation. He does not now claim that his client has any charge over the lands in suit and argues merely that he is entitled to a personal decree against the defendants by reason of the equitable principle enunciated in s. 69, Contract Act. According to that section "a person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay, and who therefore, pays it, is entitled to be reimbursed by the other".

But the same reasoning which rules out s. 92, T. P. Act appears to render s. 69, Contract Act, also inapplicable. If the repayment of the tagai loan to Govt. is to be regarded as the act of the vendor Ramappa, and not the act of the plaintiff, the purchaser, the plaintiff, obviously does not come within the terms of s. 69. Moreover, even if it were possible to say that there was a payment by the plaintiff within the meaning of s. 69, it was a payment which he was bound to make under the terms of his agreement with Ramappa, and it would not, therefore, be open to him to say that it was a payment which some other person was bound to make. Mr. Coyajee relied on Dakshina Mohun Roy v. Saroda Mohun Roy (3), where Lord Macnaghten said in the course of his judgment (p. 163):*

".....it seems to their Lordships to be common justice that when a proprietor in good faith pending litigation makes the necessary payments for the preservation of the estate in dispute, and the estate is afterwards adjudged to his opponent, he should be recouped what he has so paid by the person who ultimately benefits by the payment.....".

Section 69, Contract Act, was not mentioned in the judgment, but the principle relied upon seems to be the same, and that principle does not apply if the legal effect of the transaction tion between the plaintiff and Ramappa was that Ramappa paid the money and not the plaintiff. Incidentally I may say that the plaintiff's good faith is by no means clear, since all the payments which he made to Govt. were made after the attachment of the survey No. 5/2 and the final payment was made after defendant No. 2 had actually got possession of the land. We were also referred to Muhammad Siddiq Khan v. Muhammad Nasir-ullah Khan (4). In that case part of the consideration for a sale of land was retained by the vendees for the purpose of partially discharging the encumbrances on the land, the vendor being bound to supply the rest of the money necessary for the purpose. Their Lordships held that the money retained by the vendees was not to be regarded as a deposit of the vendor's money on which the vendor was entitled to get interest. They did not say that the money was not the vendor's money, and I think that there is nothing in this case inconsistent with the view taken by the Full Benches of the Allahabad and Madras High Courts. The Privy Council case, therefore, appears to be of no material assistance to the plaintiff. It may be a case of some hardship as the plaintiff has not got the full benefit of his repayment of the tagai loan to Govt., whereas the other defendants have benefited by it in proportion to the land in which they are interested. But in our opinion the lower Courts were clearly right in holding that the plaintiff's suit was misconceived and that his only legal remedy was to sue defendant No. 1, his vendor, for damages. The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

The validity of objections under s. 9, Punjab Debtors' Protection Act can be decided by the Court which passed the decree or order that is, the executing Court. The Collector has no jurisdiction to decide such objections. The executing Court, however, has no jurisdiction to deal with objections under s. 9 regarding the attachability of the land after it has actually been alienated by the Collector in full satisfaction of the decree. 184 Ind. Cas. 393 (1), referred to.

When a special jurisdiction is conferred it must be taken as strictly limited to the terms in which it is created and cannot be extended to cover matters to which no express reference has been made or which do not have to be decided in order to carry out the purpose for which the special jurisdiction has been created.

Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din, for the Respondent (Aulia Khan).

Beckett, J.—The facts of this case are as follows. On January 31, 1934, a decree was passed in favour of the petitioner against the property of Amir Khan in the hands of the respondents, his brothers. The decree was in respect of a sum of Rs. 285 due on a bahi account. On January 5, 1937 the petitioner asked for execution by way of attachment and sale or farm of a certain land. This application was consigned to the record room for non-prosecution on February 19, 1937. A second application was put in on the same day but was dismissed on May 21, 1937 by request. On June 11, 1937 there was a third application to the same effect. An order of attachment was at once passed. It appears that there was some difficulty in serving the respondents with a copy of the order but a copy was pasted on their house on August 9, 1937. On October 15, 1937, the proceedings were transferred to the Collector of that district for the purpose of arranging for a farm of the land. The Collector then transferred the proceedings to the Sub-Divisional Officer of the Pindigheb Sub-Division, where the property was situated. The parties appeared on July 3, 1938, before the Tahsildar who took down their statements. The Tahsildar submitted his report and the parties were directed to appear before the Collector on July 22. Issues were struck with regard to the number of the dependants who had to be maintained from the land and with regard to other sources of income besides the produce of the land. After taking evidence, the Collector came to the conclusion that there would still be sufficient land to support the respondents and their dependants if the whole of the land under attachment was farmed out, and decided that this land should accordingly be farmed out to the decree-holder for a period of 12 years in full satisfaction of the decree.

At the time of arguments before the Collector, Counsel for one of the respondents took the objection that the land was not liable to attachment on the ground that it was ancestral. The Collector, however, took the view that this question should have been settled by the Civil Court before the proceedings came to him. Further, on the assumption that he had jurisdiction, he held that he would have no option but to dismiss the objections since there was nothing on the record to show the nature of the property. The proceedings were then returned to the Civil Court.

On August 13, 1938, the judgment-debtors presented an application to the Civil Court, raising the same objection. The executing Court held that, though the land was ancestral, it was not protected by s. 9, Punjab Protection of Debtors' Act, 1936, and further that since the decree had been wholly satisfied under the order of the Collector, it had no further jurisdiction to deal with the matter. On appeal to the Senior Subordinate Judge, this order was set aside and the land was released under s. 47, Civil P. C. The decree-holder has presented a petition for revision of this order. As the question of jurisdiction is one of some general importance, the case has been sent to a Division Bench.

The principal argument advanced by the learned Counsel on behalf of the decree-holder is that an executing Court is functus officio when once a decree is fully satisfied and has no power to deal with the objections which may be raised subsequently. In this connexion reliance is placed on a judgment of this Court reported in Ram Chandar v. Sarupa (1) in which it was held that an executing Court can take notice of any objection under s. 47 of the Code relating to property until the sale has been confirmed. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has met this argument by holding that the Collector had no power to deal with any objections under s. 47, so that the objections could only be decided after the proceedings had been returned by the Collector. As against this view, and in support of the view that the executing Court has no further power to entertain the objections after the Collector has passed final orders it was urged that s. 4, Punjab Debtors' Protection Act, contemplates a complete transference of the execution proceedings as a whole to the Collector, who is then competent to deal with all questions which may arise, and has not merely to submit proposals for the satisfaction of the decree which must be confirmed by a Civil Court. The first question to be decided, therefore, is whether the executing Court and the Collector continue to exercise some sort of concurrent jurisdiction or whether the jurisdiction of the Collector ousts that of the Civil Court and enables him to deal with any questions that may arise, more particularly objections, as to the attachability of the land under s. 9 of the Act.

Section 4 of the Act provides that whenever a Civil Court orders that land be attached and alienated temporarily in the execution of a decree for the payment of money the proceedings of such attachment and alienation shall be transferred to the Collector. On proceedings being transferred to him, the Collector has then to decide the period of alienation. Section 5 provides for the exemption from temporary alienation of such land as is, in the opinion of the Collector, sufficient to provide for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his dependants. In s. 6 it is provided that the Collector when acting under ss. 4 and 5 shall be deemed to be acting judicially, and shall act in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to the Court from which the proceedings have been transferred. There is a provision for appeal to the Commissioner, who is also to be deemed to be acting judicially when hearing appeals under this section.

Section 9 deals with the exemption of ancestral property where custom is the rule of decision. The section provides that such property in the hands of a subsequent holder shall not be liable in the execution of a decree or order of a Court relating to a debt incurred by any of his predecessors-in-interest. This provision is made subject to certain provisos. When the debt has been expressly charged by way of mortgage by a predecessor-in-interest, the Court is to determine the liability as if this section had not been passed. In respect of old debts ancestral property may still be liable if the decree-holder is able to establish certain conditions to the satisfaction of the Court and if the judgment-debtor is unable to establish certain other conditions.

In our opinion, the intention of the Act with regard to jurisdiction is sufficiently clear from the wording of these sections. It is the executing Court which has to pass an order for the alienation of the land and must therefore have power to determine, if necessary, whether the land is liable to attachment or not. The proceedings are then to be transferred to the Collector, but the proceedings to be transferred are only those which relate to the attachment and temporary alienation. The Collector has then to decide the period of limitation for the purpose of carrying out the order of the executing Court; and for this purpose, he may have to decide in a judicial capacity certain other questions which may arise under s. 5, such as whether the judgment-debtor possesses an independent source of income. When a special jurisdiction of this kind is conferred however it must be taken as strictly limited to the terms in which it is created and cannot be extended to cover matters to which no express reference has been made or which do not have to be decided in order to carry out the purpose for which the special jurisdiction has been created.

The immediate question is whether s. 9 can be interpreted as in itself conferring any jurisdiction on the Collector to deal with objections arising under that section. We think that this question must be answered in the negative. The wording of the section shows that such objections are to be taken before some authority described as the "Court." The word "Court" is not defined in the Act. The sections begin by referring to a decree or order of a Court relating to a debt, and then goes on to provide certain conditions relating to attachment afterwards to be determined by the Court in accordance with the provisions of that section. Ordinarily, this would mean the Court by which the decree or order was passed, that is, the executing Court. The mere fact that the Collector is to be deemed acting judicially when determining the period of alienation is not in itself sufficient to lead to the supposition that he is to be regarded as the Court which has to decide the validity of objections under s. 9. In the second place, the question whether the land is altogether exempt from attachment is not one which is necessarily connected with the questions which the Collector is called upon to decide under ss. 4 and 5. As already remarked, this is a question which has to be decided by the Civil Court before an order of attachment can be passed and before the proceedings can be transferred to the Collector. If it is raised before the transfer, it has to be decided by the Civil Court; there is no reason to suppose that the Act intended that the same question should be decided by the Civil Court if raised before the transfer but by the Collector if raised subsequently. For these reasons we consider that the Collector was correct in holding that the objection as regards the ancestral nature of the property could not be raised before him in the course of proceeding which related only to the amount of the property which should be alienated and the period of alienation.

The next question is whether the objection could be raised before the executing Court after the Collector had decided on the period of the alienation. Even if the objections were to be raised before the executing Court after the transfer of the proceedings to the Collector, this would give rise to a certain amount of difficulty, inasmuch as the section lays down that the whole of the proceedings relating to the attachment are to be transferred to the Collector, who is then to act independently; and it would hardly be possible for the Civil Court to decide contested objections relating to proceedings which have been transferred elsewhere. These difficulties may not be insuperable. It is possible that there might be circumstances in which the executing Court might have to hold that the order of attachment should never have been passed and that the order ought to be cancelled, in which case the Collector would presumably cease to have jurisdiction and the proceedings would return to the Civil Court. It seems evident, however, that the Act contemplated that in normal circumstances the liability of the land to attachment would be decided before the proceedings were transferred to the Collector, who would then have nothing to do but decide how much of the land should be alienated and for how long.

For the purposes of the present petition, it is unnecessary to consider in what circumstances the executing Court would have power to reverse an order of attachment after the proceedings have been transferred to the Collector. If such a power exists at all, it seems clear that it could only be exercised before the alienation has been effected, and an objection as to the attachability of the land cannot be raised after that has taken place. When the proceedings have been transferred, the alienation of the land becomes a matter entirely within the province of the Collector, and he is required to carry it out, provided sufficient land is left for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family. In the present instance, the judgment-debtors appear to have been avoiding the jurisdiction of the Civil Court at the time when objections should normally have been put in. They became aware of the attachment soon afterwards, however, when they appeared before the Tahsildar and they could in any case have raised the objections long before the date of the Collector's final order. Whatever the position may be as regards the result of such objections before the executing Court between the date of the transfer and the date of the alienation, we consider that the executing Court is correct in holding that it had no power to deal with an objection regarding the attachability of the land after it had actually been alienated in full satisfaction of the decree. The petition for revision is accordingly accepted and the order of the executing Court is restored with costs throughout.

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX,

MADRAS—RESPONDENT

Income-tax—Agricultural income—Sum collected by Receiver held not agricultural income—Amount held, constituted profits of mortgage transaction and, therefore, no deduction could be allowed in respect thereof.

In the year 1913, the assessee's father advanced Rs. 2,15,000 under a simple mortgage on the security of the zamin-dari. The loan was not repaid and in 1925, the assessee was compelled to file a suit in the Court to enforce payment of the amount then due. A compromise was eventually agreed upon and a decree was passed by embodying the terms of settlement. Under this decree the debtor was to pay to the assessee a sum of Rs. 3,75,000, in full settlement of all claims on or before July 31, 1931. In the meantime this sum was not to carry interest. In the event of the amount not being paid by the due date, the zamin-dari was to become the absolute property of the assessee's family. By this decree a Receiver was appointed and it was a term of the compromise that any moneys which the assessee received from the Receiver should be set off against the Rs. 3,75,000, and that the debtor should only be responsible for the balance. It was, however, stipulated that in the event of the balance not being paid, the whole of the zamin-dari would still become the property of the assessee's family. From July 28, 1928, the date of the compromise decree, to July 31, 1931, Rs. 42,000 was paid into Court by the Receiver as the net rent collectors for that period. This amount was later on paid to the assessee. The sum due to be paid to the assessee under the terms of the compromise decree on July 31, 1931, was not paid and in consequence his family became the absolute owners of the zamindari. The estate was not, however, handed over to the assessee until February 2, 1933. But in that year the assessee's title to the zamindari was challenged. The litigation did not end until September 2, 1936, when the title of the assessee's family to the property was finally decided. The assessee, however, had induced the income-tax authorities to agree to the assessment being made when the mortgage transaction was closed. In assessing the assessee as the manager of the family for the year 1937-38, the income-tax authorities included the profit which they calculated had been made out of this mortgage transaction. The assessee contended that as the amounts paid to him in cash were received by him more than three years before the year of account they were not assessable:

Held, (1) that Rs. 42,000 representing rents which the Receiver collected from the tenants of the agricultural lands of the zamindari could not be regarded as agricultural income inasmuch as the assessee was neither the owner of the zamindari when monies were collected, nor in the position of a usufructuary mortgagee. 157 Ind. Cas. 289 (1), distinguished.

(2) that the assessee was not entitled in law to escape assessment on the profit which was made out of this mortgage transaction. On his own showing this transaction did not close until the High Court had given its decision in 1936, and, therefore, it was not until that year profits could properly be calculated. In these circumstances the income-tax authorities were fully entitled to assess on that basis;

(3) that under the terms of the compromise decree the assessee got the whole of the zamindari plus the Rs. 42,000. The Rs. 42,000 was part of the profit which was made out of the transaction, and, therefore, no deduction could be allowed in respect of that amount.

Messrs. P. Kesava Aiyangar and Krishna-machariar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—The petitioner is the managing member of an undivided Hindu family and as such he has been assessed to income-tax for the year 1937-38. The family belongs to the Nattukottai Chettiar community and carries on a money-lending business. In the year 1913, the petitioner's father advanced Rs. 2,15,000 to Bangaru Ammal, the Zamindarini of Thevaram, on the security of the zamindari. The loan was not repaid and in 1925 the petitioner was compelled to file a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dindigul to enforce payment of the amount then due. Accumulations of interest, it was said, had brought the figure upto Rs. 5,49,683 but this was denied. A compromise was eventually agreed upon and a decree was passed by the Subordinate Judge embodying the terms of settlement. Under this decree the debtor was to pay to the petitioner a sum of Rs. 3,75,000; in full settlement of all claims on or before July 31, 1931. In the meantime this sum was not to carry interest. In the event of the amount not being paid by the due date the zamindari was to become the absolute property of the petitioner's family. By this decree a Receiver was appointed and it was a term of the compromise that any moneys which the petitioner received from the Receiver should be set off against the Rs. 3,75,000, and that the debtor should only be responsible for the balance. It was however stipulated that in the event of the balance not being paid the whole of the zamindari would still become the property of the petitioner's family. From July 28, 1928, the date of the compromise decree, to July 31, 1931, Rs. 42,000 was paid into Court by the Receiver as the net rent collections for that period. This amount was later on paid to the petitioner. The sum due to be paid to the petitioner under the terms of the compromise decree on July 31, 1931, was not paid and in consequence his family became the absolute owners of the zamindari. The estate was not however handed over to the petitioner until February 2, 1933.

The zamindarini died on December 14, 1930, and her heir was her mother Errammal. Errammal died on February 2, 1933, leaving a will by which she purported to bequeath the zamindari to one Thangaswami Naicker, who with two others challenged the right of the petitioner to obtain possession of the estate. The case was carried to this Court and the litigation did not end until September 2, 1936, when the title of the petitioner's family to the property was finally decided. Until this had happened, the account books of the petitioner showed the zamindarini as the debtor, but the title of the petitioner's family having been confirmed he closed this account and opened one under his own name transferring to that account the moneys which he had received in connection with the loan. In assessing the petitioner as the manager of the family for the year 1937-38 the income-tax authorities have included the profit which they calculated has been made out of this mortgage transaction. The profit has been calculated at the sum of Rs. 2,57,998, less Rs. 84,700, which had been received towards the loan before 1924. The petitioner objected to an assessment being made on this basis and he requested the Commissioner of Income-tax to refer to this Court, under the provisions of s. 66, Income Tax Act, the questions raised by him. In accordance with this request the Commissioner has referred the following questions:

"(1) Whether the sum of Rs. 42,000 deposited in the Court between July 1928 and July 1931, and withdrawn by the petitioner and adjusted as income in the year of account is agricultural income."

(2) Whether the entire income excluding the sum of Rs. 84,700 interest realized in 1915 to 1923 from this transaction as a whole can be said to have accrued arisen or been received in the year of account."

The petitioner's case with regard to the first question is this. He says that as the Rs. 42,000 represents rents which the Receiver collected from the tenants of the agricultural lands of the zamindari this cannot be taxed, income from agriculture being exempt. If the petitioner were the owner of the zamindari when these moneys were collected there would be force in the contention, but he was not, nor was his family. These moneys were paid into Court by the Receiver in reduction of the amount due under the mortgage and the total sum was paid over to the petitioner for this purpose. The petitioner was not even in the position of a usufructuary mortgagee. He held a simple mortgage and the title to the estate claimed by him did not vest until after all these moneys had been collected and paid into Court in reduction of the mortgage debt. There is no substance at all in the petitioner's contention here. It has been suggested that the decision of the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Maharajahdhiraj of Dharbhanga (1), has application, but this cannot be accepted. That case had reference to a usufructuary mortgage and, as I have already mentioned, the petitioner was never in the position of a usufructuary mortgagee.

The second question also must be answered in favour of the income tax authorities. Year by year from 1926-27 until the year of assessment 1937-38 the petitioner was pressing the income-tax authorities not to take into account any sums received by him on account of this mortgage, but to leave the position open until the matter had been concluded. When the petitioner's agent produced before the Income-tax Officer the accounts in respect of the year 1926-27 it was found that no interest in respect of the loan to the Zamindarini had been debited and it was contended by the assessee that as the loan was the subject-matter of litigation no payment of interest should then be taken into account. This contention was accepted. In the year of assessment 1929-30 the Income-tax Officer discovered that the petitioner had obtained a decree against the Zamindarini, but the Income-tax Officer was induced to stay action by the statement that no execution proceedings had been taken and that when the decretal amount was realized the income thereby received would be accounted for in his books. In the assessment year 1930-31 no accounts were produced for the year of account. The petitioner's agent here represented that proceedings for the recovery of the decretal amount had not been taken and that it would be sometime before any money was realized on the loan. The accounts for the assessment year 1931-32 showed that a sum of Rs. 38,865 had been received in the previous year. The contention then raised was that unless the decretal amount was realized in full no part of the realization could be taken as profit. For the assessment years 1932-33 and 1933-34 the accounts again showed receipts on account of this mortgage. Thereupon the petitioner's agent represented that there was an understanding between the department and the petitioner that interest should be taken into account only when the entire amount was repaid. On this representation the Income-tax Officer took no portion of the moneys received in these two years as income assessable in those years.

Notwithstanding that the petitioner induced the income-tax authorities to agree to the assessment being made when the transaction was closed, he now says that as the amounts paid to him in cash were received by him more than three years before the year of account they are not assessable to tax. To say the least, it is not an honest contention to put forward in view of the representations made by him from year to year. But without taking into consideration the honesty or dishonesty of the petitioner or the effect of his representations, it is clear that he is not entitled in law to escape assessment on the profit which was made out of this mortgage transaction. On his own showing this transaction did not close until the High Court had given its decision in 1936 and therefore it was not until that year profits could properly be calculated. In these circumstances the income-tax authorities were fully entitled to assess on that basis. The question whether the profit calculated by the department is excessive does not arise in this reference, but the Court has been given to understand that in other proceedings the petitioner intends to challenge the figure arrived at by the income-tax authorities.

There is one other point which requires to be dealt with. The petitioner says that in any event he should be allowed to deduct the Rs. 42,000 referred to in the first question as that sum was paid into Court in reduction of the Rs. 3,75,000. In raising this point the learned Advocate for the petitioner overlooks the fact that under the terms of the compromise decree his client got the whole of the zamindari plus the Rs. 42,000. The Rs. 42,000 is part of the profit which was made out of the transaction, and therefore no deduction can be allowed. For the reasons indicated we answer the first question referred in the negative, and the second question in the affirmative. The petitioner must pay the costs of this reference, Rs. 250.

Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926), ss. 80, 253—Order of ejectment made before expiry of 15 days' notice under s. 80—Appeal—Conditional order if can be passed—S. 253, scope of—Order of ejectment passed before expiry of 15 days' notice—Appeal and then revision from order—Judgment-debtor not making attempt to pay amount in meanwhile—If can take advantage of technical irregularity—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Applicability to proceedings Agra Tenancy Act.

In an appeal against an order of ejectment passed before expiry of 15 days required by notice under s. 80, it is not possible for the Appellate Court to pass a conditional order saying that it set aside the trial Court's order on the condition that the whole amount was paid within certain time.

Once the High Court is seized of the revision, then, it becomes its duty to cast its eye not merely on one part of the proceedings but the whole of them. What come under the review of the High Court are the proceedings as a whole from start to finish and the object of the scrutiny of the High Court is that so far as possible justice may be done in the proceedings as a whole.

A landlord obtained a decree for arrears of rent against the tenant. The notice under s. 80 (2) was served on the judgment-debtor on July 23, 1937. On August 7, 1937, the Assistant Collector, treating the matter as if there had been a default in complying with the notice, made an ejectment order, although 15 days required by notice had not expired at the time of such order. There was an appeal and also a revision to the High Court and the tenant although he had ample time to pay the amount made no attempt to pay it.

Held, that though the order of the Assistant Collector was technically irregular there was no injustice to the judgment-debtor and he could not be allowed to take advantage of the technical irregularity upon an application for revision.

Though s. 115, Civil P. C., is inapplicable to a proceeding under the Agra Ten. Act, s. 253, Agra Ten. Act is applicable.

C. R. and Ex. S. A. against an order of the Additional District Judge, Meerut, dated January 12, 1938.

Mr. S. B. L. Gour, for the Applicant.

Mr. B. Mukerji, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application in revision arising out of a Second Appeal No. 610 of 1938, in which I made an order on April 10, 1940. The facts are very simple. It seems that a decree was obtained against the applicant by the opposite party for arrears of rent. On July 23, 1937 a notice, purporting to be a notice under s. 80, sub-s. (2), Agra Ten. Act, 1926, was served upon the applicant. The Act requires that notice to be a 15 days' notice. The Assistant Collector, however, on August 7, 1937, treating the matter as if there had been a default in complying with the notice, made an ejectment order against the applicant. It must be admitted that technically that order was irregular. The fifteen days had not expired at 4 p. m. on August 7, when the Assistant Collector made his order. On that ground in January 1938 the applicant went before the Additional District Judge of Meerut in appeal to complain of the ejectment order.

The Additional District Judge appears to have appreciated that the order of August 7, was technically improper and he realized that it had to be set aside on that account. But he also equally appreciated—and I entirely agree with him—that by that time the applicant had had a considerable period in which he could have paid the arrears of rent if he had been minded to do so. It is really no answer to say that there was certain legislation introduced in September 1937 under which he need not have paid. On this revision application what I am considering on the merits, that is to say the real merits of the matter, is whether any injustice has been done. The learned Additional District Judge in the end gave the applicant three months' time in which to pay. He put it in a rather careless form by saying that he set aside the Assistant Collector's order "on the condition that" the whole amount was paid within three months. I do not think it is possible to make a conditional order of that kind. What he really meant was that he set aside the Assistant Collector's order and substituted another order that, in the event of the whole amount not being paid within three months, the applicant should then be ejected.

There was then a second appeal to this Court which came before me in April last year and in which I passed the order to which I have already referred. It was conceded that no appeal lay and, by what appears to me now to have been a great concession to the applicant, I refrained from dismissing the second appeal then and there and gave him time to launch the present revision application. This revision application was, accordingly, set on foot on May 7. Two preliminary objections were first taken by Mr. Mukerji on behalf of the respondent. He says first that even this revision application is entitled under s. 115, Civil P. C., and, inasmuch as that section is wholly inapplicable to a proceeding under the Agra Ten. Act, this revision is already 'out of Court.' I see the force of that, but I feel that 'so to hold' would be taking a rather technical view, because, even if s. 115, Civil P. C., does not apply, s. 253, Agra Ten. Act, itself clearly does. Mr. Mukerji then says that, if this is to be considered as a revision application under s. 253, Agra Ten. Act, it still is defective, because what is being sought to be revised is not the judgment of the Assistant Collector but the judgment of the Additional District Judge. I do not think that there is any real force in that, because once the High Court is seized of the revision, then, in my view, it becomes its duty to cast its eye not merely on one part of the proceedings but the whole of them. What come under the review of the High Court are the proceedings as a whole from start to finish and the object of the scrutiny of the High Court is that so far as possible justice may be done in the proceedings as a whole. Again, I feel that the point is a technical one.

I should not be prepared to accede to either of these preliminary objections as I take a somewhat broad view upon the revisional function of the Court. But that has two edges to it and, if I take a broad view in the matter of the preliminary objections, I have also to take a broad view of my functions in examining the merits of the matter. What I feel I have to do is primarily to see whether, in the events which have happened, there has been an injustice. In my view, there certainly has not and I think that, if I were now to interfere with the decree, I should be doing a far greater injustice to the respondent or the opposite party than any injustice to the applicant which at present exists. It may be that there were certain technical irregularities but the substance of the matter seems to me to be this. The applicant was in arrears with his rent and a decree was passed against him for it. He did not pay, but on the contrary he continued to accumulate arrears of rent in respect even of a subsequent year. Then the applicant sought to enforce his right under s. 80, Agra Ten. Act, by getting possession of the property. This he undoubtedly would have succeeded in doing but for a technical slip on the part of the Judge in relation to the length of the notice.

Then a further substantial period until January 1938 elapsed while the appeal proceedings were pending and during the whole of that time no effort was made by the applicant to pay what was due from him. In considering the merits of the matter, it seems to be immaterial to say that there was in force a certain statute which prevented him from being sued for it. But that is not the end of the matter. Two years later, it comes here, and still the applicant has made no effort to pay. Meanwhile the decree-holder has gone into possession. There has been a long period of time during which the applicant, had he been an honest man, could have paid this money and the matter is made no better by the offer, which when pressed he seems willing now to give, that if allowed a short further period he will pay. He had a very long time in which he could have paid this money and, for one reason or another, has failed to do so. Looking at it broadly, as I think I must, it seems to me that I shall be working an injustice on the opposite party by allowing the applicant to take advantage of some technical irregularity upon a revision application of this kind. In the result therefore the Second Appeal No. 610 of 1938 and the Civil Revision No. 304 of 1940 will both be dismissed with costs.

Order accordingly.

Res judicata — Applicability — Order on execution application, when can be res judicata on point whether it is "in accordance with law" — Ambiguous order, construction of—Order held not res judicata — Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 11 (2) (b), (h), (e) (j) and rr. 12, 13, s. 100—Order under O. XXI, r. 2 (b), not specifying addresses of judgment-debtors, is in accordance with law — Execution

(2)(e) not specifying date of payment, if in accordance with law—Particulars of movables to be attached not shown—Validity of application—Objection that execution application is fraudulent cannot be raised in second appeal for first time—Similarly, objection that execution application was defective as not mentioning previous application, cannot be raised for first time in second appeal.

*If there is a previous order of the Court operating as res judicata which holds that the application under consideration was not made in accordance with law, then clearly that matter cannot be reargued at a subsequent stage of the execution. But before an order can operate as res judicata it must clearly decide that the application in question was not in accordance with law. If it merely rejects or dismisses the application on some other ground as, for instance, the non-appearance of the decree-holder, then there is no decision on the merits and when there is no decision on the merits, there is of course no res judicata. Where it is ambiguous whether an order is on merits, then the ambiguity must be construed in favour of a person against whom the order is made. Where the order is: "Decree-holder absent. Application incorrect. He is awaited for November 2, 1933", or "decree-holder absent. He has not yet turned up as yet though he was awaited till to-day. Application is therefore rejected with costs" the order will not operate as res judicata. [p. 642, col. 2; p. 643, col. 1.]

All that O. XXI, r. 11 (2) (b), Civil P. C., requires is that the names of the parties should be specified in the application. It says nothing about the addresses. Consequently even where the application does not specify addresses of judgment-debtors, the application is in accordance with law. [p. 643, col. 2.]

If the decree-holder asks for more costs than are actually due to him, that might be another matter, but where, when he asks for something less, and the difference is of a trivial character, it is impossible to hold that the application is so vitiated as to be incapable of execution at all. [p. 644, col. 1.]

All that sub-cl. (e) of r. 11, O. XXI, requires is that the payments made should be specified in the application. It says nothing about the dates of these payments. Therefore application not specifying such dates is in accordance with law. [ibid.]

Order XXI, r. 11 (2) (j), Civil P. C., states nothing about the specification of the property. All that the decree-holder is required to set forth is the mode in which he seeks the assistance of the Court. This mode is sufficiently indicated when he states that he seeks attachment of the movables of the judgment-debtor. From the perusal of rr. 12 and 13 of O. XXI, it is clear that the Code has drawn a distinction between movables in the possession of the judgment-debtor and movables belonging to him but not in his possession and immovable property in his possession. When the Code itself draws such a distinction and does not ask for a list of movables when they are in the possession of the judgment-debtor, it is impossible to state that an application which does just what the Code requires is not in accordance with law. Consequently an application not specifying particulars of movables to be attached is in accordance with law. [p. 644, cols. 1 & 2.]

An objection raised in the High Court which was not raised in either of the Courts below to the effect that the present application is fraudulent in that the decree-holder has suppressed certain particulars with the intention of misleading the Court must be disallowed. [ibid.]

Similarly an objection which was not taken in the Courts below, namely that the present application for execution is defective in that it does not refer to the previous application and also does not mention the results of the previous applications to which it refers must be disallowed. [ibid.]

Misc. A. from an order of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Wardha, dated January 13, 1937.

Mr. M. R. Indurkar, for the Appellant.
Messrs. A. V. Khare, W. B. Pendharkar, S. P. Gole and K. P. Vaidya, for the Respondent.

Order.—The main question here is whether the execution application, dated March 14, 1936, out of which this appeal arises, is within time. That depends upon the construction to be placed upon a previous application, dated October 25, 1933, and upon the two orders, dated October 28, 1933, and November 2, 1933, passed on it.

The first Court held that the application of October 25, 1933, was an application for execution made in accordance with law and that consequently the present application was within time. The lower Appellate Court reversed this finding and came to the conclusion that the previous application was not in accordance with law because it did not mention either the place of residence of the judgment-debtor or the correct amount of costs due in execution. Consequently it has thrown out the present application and the decree-holder appeals.

Now I do not think there can be much doubt about the law. Under Art. 182 of the Indian Lim. Act an execution application is within time if it is filed within three years from the date of a previous application "made in accordance with law" to the proper Court or within three years of the date of the final order passed on such an application. The question then is whether the application of October 25, 1933 was "made in accordance with law."

It has been decided in Pilivasao v. Khairunnissa (1) that a liberal construction must be placed upon Art. 182 (5) of the Lim. Act. The objection of limitation is at all times a technical one and there is no reason why a Court of justice should endeavour to throw out a just claim unless the judgment-debtor can bring himself strictly within the four corners of the technicality upon which he relies. If he is technical, then there is no reason why he should not be met with technicality.

Of course if there is a previous order of the Court operating as res judicata which holds that the application under consideration was not made in accordance with law, then clearly that matter cannot be reagitated at a subsequent stage of the execution. But before an order can operate as res judicata in the present circumstances it must clearly decide that the application in question was not in accordance with law. If it merely rejects or dismisses the application on some other ground as, for instance, the non-appearance of the decree-holder, then there is no decision on the merits and when there is no decision on the merits, there is of course no res judicata. This has been decided by a Full Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in Gulamali v. Rai Kumar Chatterji (2) and also by a single Judge in Hanumanlala v. Sheonarayan (3). Therefore what I have to see is whether there was a decision on the merits in respect of the application of October 25, 1933.

The first order passed in connection with that application is dated October 28, 1933, and is to this effect :

"Decree-holder absent. Application incorrect. He be awaited for November 2, 1933."

There is clearly no decision in this order. All it states is that the application is incorrect and therefore the decree-holder be awaited, that is to say, the Judge did not decide the question but made up his mind to await the explanation of the decree-holder and to withhold his decision until he had heard what he had to say. That order therefore clearly does not operate as res judicata in respect of this matter.

The next order is dated November 2, 1933, and is in these terms :

"Decree-holder absent. He has not yet turned up as yet though he was awaited till to-day. Application is therefore rejected with cost."

Here it is clear that the learned Judge has not rejected the application because it was not in accordance with law or because it was incorrect but because though he waited for the decree-holder to return up, he did not do so. That is to say the application was dismissed in default. It is unnecessary for me to decide whether a Judge in execution has power to dismiss an application in default or not. What I have to consider at the moment is whether there was a decision on the merits. It is clear from that order that there was not, and consequently it cannot operate as res judicata on this point.

At the outset all that can be urged in connection with the order of November 2, 1933, is that it was ambiguous but if that is so, then the ambiguity must be construed in favour of the person against whom the order is made. It would be unjust to place a party at a disadvantage because a Court uses language capable of two meanings. However as I have said, in my opinion, there is no ambiguity. The application was clearly rejected not because it was incorrect but because the decree-holder did not turn up after he had been given an opportunity to do so. That being so, it is the duty of the Courts now to decide whether the previous application was in accordance with law or not. I fully agree with the learned Counsel for the respondent that merely because an application of some sort is put in at a previous stage and nothing more is done about it, that would not serve to operate as a step-in-aid of execution.

As I have said the application was attacked in the lower Appellate Court on the two grounds set forth above. Two additional grounds were also urged in the arguments before me, namely that though there were repayments, the dates of those repayments have not been mentioned in the application, and also that the movable property of which attachment is sought has not been described. I will deal with these objections one by one.

First of all, as regards the address of the judgment-debtor, all that O. XXI, r. 11 (2) (b) requires is that the names of the parties should be specified in the application. It says nothing about the addresses. If this is compared with O. VII, r. 1 dealing with the particulars required in a plaint, it will be seen that in the case of a plaint not only is the name of the defendant necessary but also his place of residence. Therefore, if a decree-holder complies precisely with the terms of O. XXI, r. 11, it is impossible to say that his application is not in accordance with law, especially when the Code itself draws the distinction to which I have referred between plaints and applications for execution. It may be that in a given case the particulars required by the Code would be insufficient but in that case it is always open either for the Court or for the other side to ask for further and better particulars. The point is that an application which complies strictly with the terms of O. XXI, r. 11 cannot be said to be not in accordance with law.

Turning next to the question of costs, this is dealt with in O. XXI, r. 11 (2) (h). The amount of costs awarded in the present case amounted to Rs. 16-4 and the amount shown was Rs. 14. The question is whether this mistake or inaccuracy is enough to make the application so wrong as to be not in accordance with law. Now these particulars are required to enable the Court to get on with the execution and to further the ends of justice, so I do not think they should be used in such a way as to frustrate justice. If the decree-holder had asked for more costs than were actually due to him, that might have been another matter, but here, when he asks for something less, and the difference is of such a trivial character, I find it impossible to hold that the application is so vitiated as to be incapable of execution at all. Therefore although there has been a slight inaccuracy, there has, in my opinion, been a substantial compliance with the provisions in this behalf.

Turning next to the objection about the omission to give the dates of payments, all that sub-cl. (e) requires is that the payments made should be specified in the application. It says nothing about the dates of these payments. Therefore, as I have said, technicality can be met with technicality, and so long as the requirements of the Code have been complied with, it is impossible to hold that the application is not in accordance with law.

The same remarks apply to the objection that the property against which execution is sought has not been specified. As a matter of fact, it has been specified in a general manner. The application asks that the movable property be attached. It is true it does not state whose movable property, but since execution is sought against the judgment-debtor alone, it can only mean the movable property of the judgment-debtor. Therefore what remains to be determined is whether this property must be particularised. I have no doubt that it is desirable that this should be done and I have no doubt that when it is not done, it will ordinarily be necessary to ask for further and better particulars. But that is not the point. The question is whether the Code requires it in the first instance.

All that the clause in question of r. 11 states is :

"The mode in which the assistance of the Court is required, whether—

(i) by the delivery of any property specifically decreed;

(ii) by the attachment and sale, or by the sale without attachment, of any property, etc."

It will be noticed that it states nothing about the specification of the property. All that the decree-holder is required to set forth is the mode in which he seeks the assistance of the Court. This mode is sufficiently indicated when he states that he seeks attachment of the movables of the judgment-debtor.

Turning now to rr. 12, and 13 of O. XXI, when the application is for attachment of movable property belonging to a judgment-debtor but not in his possession, the decree-holder is required to annex to the application an inventory of the property to be attached containing a reasonably accurate description of the same, and so also when an attachment is sought of immovable property; a description of it is required. It is clear then that the Code has drawn a distinction between movables in the possession of the judgment-debtor and movables belonging to him but not in his possession and immovable property in his possession. When the Code itself draws such a distinction and does not ask for a list of movables when they are in the possession of the judgment-debtor, it is impossible to state that an application which does just what the Code requires is not in accordance with law. Consequently, I agree with the first Court that this application was made in accordance with law and disagree with the lower Appellate Court. It follows the present application is within time.

An objection was raised in this Court which was not raised in either of the Courts below to the effect that the present application is fraudulent in that the decree-holder has suppressed certain particulars with the intention of misleading the Court. Since no plea of fraud was raised, I decline to allow it to be raised at this stage.

Another objection is also taken which was not taken in the Courts below, namely that the present application for execution is defective in that it does not refer to the previous application of October 25, 1933, and also does not mention the results of the previous applications to which it does refer. It is stated that both were necessary under the provisions of the Civil P. C.

I agree that those details are necessary but they are details which are mere matters of procedure and therefore an omission can be rectified in the course of the proceedings. When the judgment-debtor appeared in this case, the only objection he raised was an objection about limitation and he himself furnished the necessary particulars in respect of the missing application. This was on July 4, 1936. If the present objection had been taken at that stage, the decree-holder could easily have amended his application and the application would then have been within time even if regarded as having been filed on July 4, 1936. Since these objections were not taken at that stage and have been taken for the first time in second appeal, I disallow them.

The appeal is allowed. The order of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and that of the first Court restored. Execution will now continue. Costs here and in the lower Appellate Court will be paid by the respondent. Counsel's fee Rs. 25.

D. Appeal allowed.

Contract—Consideration—Wife forbearing to sue for maintenance on her husband's agreeing to pay her monthly allowance—Contract, if supported by consideration.

Where a wife has foreborne to sue her husband for maintenance allowance on his agreeing to pay her monthly allowance by way of maintenance, the contract is supported by consideration, as wife's forbearance to sue amounts to consideration for husband's agreement for payment of a monthly maintenance allowance to her.

[Case-law relied on.]

A. from the appellate decree of the Sub-Judge, Patna, dated April 29, 1940.

Messrs. B. N. Mitter, Rai Paras Nath and Sambhu Barmeshwar Prasad, for the Appellant.

Dr. D. N. Mitter and Mr. A. B. N. Sinha, for the Respondent.

Varma, J.—This is an appeal of the plaintiff, who is the wife of the defendant. The suit was for realization of arrears payable under an ekrarnama, which was executed on August 8, 1931. From that ekrarnama it appears that the husband agreed to pay the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 15 a month and a lump sum of Rs. 800 at the time of the daughter's marriage. The parties were married about 26 years before the date of the suit. There were two issues to the marriage, one son and one daughter and after the son died in the year 1928, misunderstandings arose between the parties and there are allegations of cruelty towards the plaintiff by her husband, as a result of which she went and stayed with her father. The defendant took a second wife. The defence was that the ekrarnama was executed by the defendant as a result of undue influence and coercion, inasmuch as there was at the time pending a criminal case under ss. 323 and 504, I. P. C., between the defendant and the defendant's father-in-law, that is to say, the father of the present plaintiff. From the plaint it appears that the cause of action arose on August 10, 1931, the date of the execution of the ekrarnama and on the 30th of each month, from May 1932 to May 1938, at Mithapur, Thana Kotwāli, within the jurisdiction of the Court. The actual amount to be paid was a sum of Rs. 1,095 plus damages to the extent of Rs. 65-12-0 for the years in suit.

The lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that it cannot be held that the registered agreement (viz., the ekrarnama) was executed under any coercion or undue influence. The next point that the lower Appellate Court formulated for determination was whether the agreement was valid under the Contract Act as well as under the Hindu Law, and the rest of its judgment is devoted to a consideration of the circumstances under which a Hindu wife is entitled to claim maintenance. The point of view from which the learned Subordinate Judge approached the case indicates that he has fallen into an error. As already mentioned in the earlier part of the judgment, the cause of action arose not on the non-payment of maintenance to the plaintiff as a Hindu wife but on the non-observance of the terms of the ekrarnama which came into existence on August 10, 1931. It is argued before us that there was no consideration for this agreement. I shall refer to the terms of the ekrarnama to show how far this point succeeds in favour of the defendant, the husband of the plaintiff. Reliance has been placed upon the decision in Sm. Rajlukhy Debee v. Bhootnath Mookerjee (1) in which the wife sued her husband to recover the arrears of allowance which the husband agreed to pay. Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court decided that case on the ground that the recitals contained in the agreement in question did not show any consideration moving from the wife for the agreement by the husband. It appears from the judgment in that case that there was no promise on the part of the wife to do, or abstain from doing anything; she gave up no right. It was held in that case that there was no consideration and therefore the agreement was not binding. Now, let us see if there was a consideration in this case or not. A translation of the ekrarnama has been handed over to us by the learned Advocate for the appellant and its correctness has not been questioned. There, after narrating that the wife had become displeased with the husband on account of difference and discord and had as a result gone away to her father's place the executant states as follows :

"Consequently the said my wife is about to sue me in the Civil Court for her maintenance allowance. I therefore think that the institution of a suit will put me to loss and disgrace and that it would be better if I made some provision for the maintenance of my aforesaid wife so as to enable her to lead a contented and happy life and so that she may not have any grievance, I, the executant, therefore made her agree to the proposal that I would give her a monthly allowance of Rs. 15 every month for life whether she lived with her father at her father's place or with me. . . . To this proposal of mine my aforesaid wife agreed and I, the executant, thought it meet and proper to execute in her favour a deed of maintenance so that she may be satisfied and may not be put to any trouble and inconvenience whatever."

The learned Advocate for the appellant (the wife) urges this forbearance to sue amounts to consideration under the Contract Act. As the document itself indicates, the wife was prepared to sue and forbore because this contract was entered into. In support of his proposition the learned Advocate has referred to the decision in Gulab Chand v. Kamal Singh (2), where it was held that "if a person believes that he has a bona fide claim to enforce, his forbearance from trying to put that claim in a Court and to have it decided will be a good consideration for a contract, however the claim, if brought, may be decided."

In that case reference was made to Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co. (3), a case on which reliance has also been placed by the learned Advocate for the respondent. A similar view was expressed in Crears v. Hunter (4) the placitum of which is as follows :

"For the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to give time to the defendant's father for payment of a debt, the defendant signed a promissory note whereby the defendant's father and the defendant jointly and severally promised to pay to the plaintiff the amount of the debt with interest half yearly at the rate of five per cent. per annum until the amount was paid. The plaintiff having forbore to sue for several years — held that the plaintiff having forbore from suing the defendant's father at the defendant's request, there was a good consideration for the defendant's liability on the note, although there was no contract by the plaintiff to forbear from suing."

In support of the same principle the decision in A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 485 corresponding to 116 Ind. Cas. 312 Mangal Singh v. Ghasita (5) has also been cited at the bar. There it was held that :

"Disputed and doubtful claims to legal or equitable rights will support the consideration for a compromise, and forbearing to sue for or releasing a bona fide claim, which is reasonably doubtful in fact or in law, though no proceedings have been commenced, is a good consideration."

As against this Dr. Mitter has, on behalf of the respondent, urged that forbearance to sue may amount to consideration ; but if the claim is fictitious on the face of it, then in that case forbearance to sue cannot be said to amount to consideration for the contract. For that proposition Dr. Mitter has referred us to various passages from Mayne's Hindu Law and Mulla's Hindu Law and has pointed out the circumstances under which these commentators say that a Hindu wife is entitled to maintenance. As I have already said before, the present suit is based on the ekrarnama and, if it were a suit for maintenance, the plaintiff might have led evidence to bring the case well within the circumstances entitling her to maintenance as a Hindu wife. But the suit was one on the ekrarnama and the incidents previous to the ekrarnama have not naturally been fully gone into nor was evidence led on those points. It is not possible to say in the present case that the plaintiff's claim for maintenance for which she was prepared to sue her husband was a fictitious one. In these circumstances I am of opinion that the judgments of the Courts below should be set aside and the plaintiff's suit should be decreed with costs throughout. Mr. A. B. N. Sinha on behalf of the respondent has raised the question that as the amount of the decree is a large one, and that, as his client is drawing a poor pay, instalments should be fixed by this Court. That is, however, a matter which can well be agitated before the executing Court. The result therefore is that the appeal is allowed with costs throughout.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 14.—Plaint returned for presentation to proper Court for want of pecuniary jurisdiction—Plaintiff striking off part of claim to bring it within jurisdiction and representing amended plaint on date when suit was time-barred—Suit held must be deemed to have been instituted on date of representation and was barred—Plaintiff held could not claim benefit of s. 14.

A Court which has no jurisdiction cannot pass orders in the suit beyond directing the plaint to be presented to the proper Court and giving a direction with regard to the costs incurred upto the time of the return of the plaint.

A plaint was presented within limitation to the Court which had no pecuniary jurisdiction to try it and was, therefore, returned by the Court for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff amended the plaint by striking out a part of his claim in order to bring his claim within jurisdiction and represented it to the same Court. On the date of such representation the claim had become time-barred. The amendment was allowed by the Court and the plaint was treated as a continuation of the original plaint :

Held, that the suit must be deemed to have been instituted on the date of the representation of the plaint which the Court had jurisdiction to accept and was, therefore, barred by limitation. The plaintiff could not claim the benefit of s. 14, Lim. Act, because he deliberately undervalued his relief in the first instance.

[Case-law discussed.]

L. P. A. against the judgment and decree of Wadsworth, J. dated November 14, 1938.

Messrs. G. Lakshmana and G. Chandra-sekhara Sastri, for the Appellants.

Messrs. V. Viyanna and Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—The question which arises in this appeal is one of limitation. The suit was filed by respondent No. 1 in the Court of the District Munsif of Ramchandrapur. He was the reversioner to the estate of one Ramanna, which after Ramanna's death devolved upon his daughter Pullamma. The reversion opened on July 3, 1916, when Pullamma died. Respondent No. 1 was born on November 1, 1908 and therefore attained his majority on November 1, 1926, which gave him until November 1, 1929, in which to file the suit. On October 30, 1929, he filed a plaint in the Court of the District Munsif and asked for possession of the suit properties from the appellants who were in possession under the alienations created by Pullamma. In the plaint the properties were described in two Schs. A and B. The properties in Sch. A were valued at Rs. 693 and the mesne profits thereof at Rs. 2,040. The properties in Sch. B were valued at Rs. 250. In their written statement the appellants challenged the correctness of the valuation of the properties in Sch. B. They contended that there had been gross undervaluation. The consequence was that the District Munsif directed the appointment of a Commissioner to estimate the value of the properties. But the plaintiff deliberately abstained from taking out the commission and from this conduct the District Munsif drew the legitimate inference that the aggregate value of the properties mentioned in the plaint was over Rs. 3,000 and he therefore held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

On August 6, 1930, the District Munsif accordingly returned the plaint to respondent No. 1 for presentation to the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Respondent No. 1 took the plaint away, amended it by striking out his claim for possession of the properties mentioned in Sch. B, and later in the day represented it to the District Munsif. On August 11, 1930, the District Munsif again returned the plaint to respondent No. 1 as he considered that it was a new suit and which necessitated the filing of a new vakalat. On August 14, 1930, respondent No. 1's Pleader re-presented the plaint without filing a fresh vakalat. He contended that the plaint was a continuation of the plaint which was presented on October 30, 1929. On August 15, 1930, the Court once more returned the plaint to respondent No. 1, intimating that it must be treated as a fresh suit. On that date respondent No. 1's Pleader re-presented it with an application that the amendment which he had made might be allowed and the plaint approved. He also asked that the plaint should retain its old number. The District Munsif agreed to this course and passed a formal order of the nature indicated.

The only question which arises now is whether the suit must be deemed to have been instituted on October 30, 1929, when the original plaint was presented, or on August 6, 1930, when the plaint was re-presented after it had been returned by the District Munsif for filing in the proper Court and had been amended by the elimination of Sch. B and the relief claimed in respect of the properties therein mentioned. The District Munsif held that the suit must be deemed to have been filed on August 6, 1930, and therefore was barred by the law of limitation. On appeal the Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry held that the suit was in time, as in his opinion the correct date was October 30, 1929. On Second Appeal, Wadsworth, J. agreed with the Subordinate Judge, but gave a certificate for a further appeal under cl. 15, Letters Patent. The learned Judge considered that the filing of the amended plaint on August 6, 1930, must be deemed to be a continuation of the suit which was filed on October 30, 1929, and therefore was in time. We are of the opinion, that the District Munsif was right and that the date of the institution of the suit must be taken to be August 6, 1930. In Kannaswami Pillai v. Jagathambal (1), Sadasiva Ayyar, J. held that when a Court of first instance has decided that a suit is beyond its jurisdiction it has no power to pass any other judicial order, except those which statute expressly empowers it to pass, such as an order returning the plaint for presentation to the proper Court under O. VII, r. 10, Civil P. C., or an order awarding costs under s. 35 of the Code. We agree with this statement. A Court which has no jurisdiction cannot pass orders in the suit beyond directing the plaint to be presented to the proper Court and giving a direction with regard to the costs incurred upto the time of the return of the plaint. The opinion of Sadasiva Ayyar, J. was shared by Venkatasubba Rao, J. in Govindaraja Naicker v. Kasim Sahib (2).

In Nayinakamen Bhattar v. Madureswara Bhattar (3), a Bench of this Court, consisting of Collins, C. J. and Parker, J. had to deal with a case on all fours with the present one. The Court there held that the date of the suit was the date when the plaintiff presented to the Court a plaint which accorded with its jurisdiction. In that case the plaintiffs filed their suit in the Court of the District Munsif for certain offices in a temple and their emoluments. The case was carried to this Court which ordered the plaint to be returned for presentation to the proper Court, namely, the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Instead of presenting the plaint to the Subordinate Judge, the plaintiffs abandoned part of their claim so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the Munsif's Court and re-presented the plaint to the District Munsif's Court. The Bench agreed with the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the benefit of s. 14, Lim. Act, in the circumstances of the case. The first plaint was returned as the suit as framed was beyond the jurisdiction of the District Munsif's Court. The plaintiffs had then abandoned part of their claim and had sued again in the same Court which they might have done at first. In the circumstances it was held that the suit was barred.

In the course of his judgment, Wadsworth, J. referred to Karumhar Pandrapandaram v. Audimula Ponnappandaram (4), Ramachandrayya v. Venkataratnam (5) and Varada Pillai v. Govindaraja Pillai (6). The judgment in these cases are not really in point. In Karumhar Pandrapandaram v. Audimula Ponnappandaram (4), the plaintiff filed a plaint in the District Munsif's Court and it was returned to him as he had undervalued the properties claimed. If they had been properly valued the value would have exceeded the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court. After the plaintiff had obtained possession of the plaint he struck out part of the relief claimed, and in this way brought the value of the suit within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the District Munsif's Court. He then presented it to the District Munsif who accepted it. On an application for revision, Abdur Rahim, J. held that there was nothing illegal in the amendment and that it was competent to the Court to accept the amended plaint. But in this case there was no question of limitation. The Court was not called upon to decide whether the date of the presentation was the date when the plaint was originally filed or when the plaint was represented after amendment. Therefore we cannot regard this decision as conflicting with the opinion which I have just expressed. In Ramachandrayya v. Venkataratnam (5), the plaintiff was allowed to amend his plaint to bring it within the jurisdiction of the District Munsif's Court where he had filed it, instead of having the plaint returned to him for presentation to the Court of the Subordinate Judge. The District Munsif allowed the plaint to be amended, and the question was whether his order was passed without jurisdiction. Odgers, J. held that the District Munsif had jurisdiction. It is unnecessary to consider whether this decision is right. Here again there was no question of limitation. Varada Pillai v. Govindaraja Pillai (6), calls for no comment.

On behalf of the respondent a further case has been quoted to us, namely, the decision of Jackson, J. in Neelachalam v. Narasingha Dass (7). There the plaintiff had not paid the proper court-fee and he was ordered to provide the additional stamp required. Instead of doing so he reduced the amount of his claim. By doing this the relief claimed was covered by the stamp. The question was whether the date of the suit should be taken to be the date of the filing of the plaint in the first instance or the date when it was amended and re-presented by the plaintiff. Here the Court had jurisdiction throughout and the only question was whether the plaintiff should pay the additional court-fee or whether he should reduce his claim and thus avoid the necessity of paying additional court-fee. We do not regard this case as having any bearing, but even if it has, it is not binding on us. We hold that the suit was instituted on August 6, 1930, when the Court was presented with the plaint which it had jurisdiction to accept. The hardship which respondent No. 1 is now experiencing is of his own making. He cannot claim the benefit of s. 14, Lim. Act, because he deliberately undervalued his relief in the first instance. If he had not done this we should have had no hesitation in granting relief under that section. He has however put himself out of Court. We have to decide the case on the technical objection which the appellant have raised. The objection is sound in law and therefore must be accepted. The appeal will be allowed with costs throughout.

Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), s. 11—Order fixing instalments—Appealability—Notification of July 19, 1939, if includes Banks registered under old Act VI of 1882.

No appeal lies against an order fixing instalments under s. 11, Bihar Money-lenders Act, 193 Ind. Cas. Act VI 670 (1), followed.

The Govt. of Bihar Notification No. 1000-VIA-7/39-Com. issued on July 19, 1939, refers in specific terms to joint stock Banks registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, and no others. This cannot be taken to include Banks which were registered under some other Act e. g., registered under the old of 1882.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Purulia, dated July 20, 1939.

Mr. B. C. De, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. C. Mazumdar and Ramanugrah N. Sinha, for the Respondents.

Meredith, J.—This is an appeal by the Chota Nagpur Banking Association, decree-holder, against an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Purulia fixing instalments under s. 11 of the Money Lenders Act.

It has been held by this Court in Dhanukdhari Singh v. Ramratan Singh (1), that no appeal lies against such an order. Apart from that, however, there appears to be no merit in the appeal. The point raised is that on the date when the order was passed namely, July 20, 1939, the Banking Association together with other Banks had been exempted from the operation of s. 11 of the Money Lenders Act and consequently the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to make an order fixing instalments under s. 11 of that Act. Actually on July 19, 1939, the Govt. of Bihar issued Notification No. 1000-VIA-7/39=Com. in the following terms:—

“In exercise of the power conferred by s. 3 of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939 (Bihar Act VII of 1939) as applied to the Chota Nagpur Division by Notification No. 736-VIA-32 Com., dated May 29, 1939, issued under sub-s. (1) of s. 92 of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, the Governor of Bihar is pleased to exempt in all areas of the Chota Nagpur Division the money-lenders or class of money-lenders or class of loans specified in col. 1 of the Schedule below from the provisions of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939 (Bihar Act VII of 1939) mentioned against them in col. 2 of the said Schedule, for the reasons mentioned against them in col. 3 of the said Schedule.”

In the schedule to the Notification the third item in col. 1 is “Joint Stock Banks registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1913” and in col. 2 is “ss. 4, 7, 8, 10, 11 and 12.” It, therefore, follows that at the time of the order the appellant Company must be taken to have been exempted from the Money Lenders Act if it is a Joint Stock Bank registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1913. The difficulty in the appellant’s way however, is that the Chota Nagpur Banking Association was not registered under the Act of 1913 but under the old Act, VI of 1882. Mr. De for the appellant contends that the Company must be deemed to be one registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, and he relies upon the definition of “Company” in that Act. Section 2 (2) of the Act of 1913 says “‘Company’ means a company formed and registered under this Act or an existing company.” Clearly, therefore, the word “Company” when used in the Act of 1913 will cover a company registered under the old Act such as the appellant Company. But the fact that the provisions of the Act of 1913 are made applicable to such a company does not in my view render that company one actually registered under the Act of 1913. On the contrary, it is apparent from the very definition cited by Mr. De, that a distinction was drawn between companies registered under the Act and previously existing companies.

The Notification of July 19, refers in specific terms to joint stock Banks registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, and no others. In my opinion this cannot be taken to include Banks which were registered under some other Act. It is argued that if the Notification is interpreted in this way it will lead to an absurd result, which could not have been intended by Govt. That may or may not be so; but this is a point with which we are not concerned, for when the language is perfectly clear, no other interpretation is possible. There is no ambiguity in the language used and no absurdity in the wording itself. We understand that an application has already been made to Govt. to secure a correction of the Notification and if that be so, it clearly implies that the appellant Bank itself feels that a correction is necessary. In my view it must be held that the appellant Bank was not exempted from the Money Lender's Act by the Notification referred to. The order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge was, therefore, not without jurisdiction.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Fazi Ali, J.—I agree.

Appeals Nos. 71 of 1937 and 6 of 1938

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XL, r. 1—Partition suit—Appointment of Receiver under O. XL—Title to property does not vest in Receiver—Court sanctioning loan on mortgage—Receiver can validly bind shares of parties by execution of mortgage—Mortgagee from Receiver held not entitled to first charge.

The title to properties does not vest in the Receiver, appointed under O. XL, Civil P. C., for the management and preservation of the properties in suit. The parties therefore have power to deal with their shares without reference to Court provided that their acts do not interfere with possession of the Receiver. The Receiver can exercise the powers of the owners in the matter of execution of documents and if the Court sanctions a loan on mortgage he can validly execute the mortgage instrument so as to bind the shares of the parties. [p. 653, col. 1.]

In those cases where the order of the Court simply sanctions a loan by the Receiver on a first charge of the properties, but does not indicate the purpose for which the loan is sanctioned, the creditor who advances the money is entitled to assume that everything was in order and so he ought to get what the Court had promised to give him, namely precedence over earlier encumbrances created by the parties. In such cases the Court cannot break faith with him. He is not bound to look beyond the order. [p. 653, cols. 1 & 2.]

If the purpose of the loan as set out in the order is for preservation or protection of the property committed to the care of the Receiver, or is an order in an administration suit or one in a partition suit made for working out the rights, liabilities and obligations of the co-sharers of the joint properties in the course of partition, the mortgagee from the Receiver would have first charge in accordance with the order. Herumboo Nath v. Satish Chandra (1) and Greenwood v. Algeciras (Gibraltar) Ry. Co. (2), relied on.

The power of the Court to sanction a loan for protection or preservation of the property is incidental to and necessary for the performance of its duty to protect and preserve the subject-matter of the suit, which it has taken upon itself by appointing a Receiver, and must be measured and limited by its duty, where its exercise comes into conflict with the rights of third parties which are not before it and to whom no notice had been given, or who had not consented. In such a case the principle of breach of faith cannot, be the decisive factor. It is a question of power or jurisdiction of the Court. If the Court arrogates to itself a power which it does not possess—and such usurpation appears on the face of the order—and does an act affecting persons not parties to the suit, its acts cannot prejudice the rights of such persons. In such a case the mortgagee from the Receiver cannot protect himself on the presumption that the Court had acted within its powers, for the order on the basis of which he acted ex facie would indicate want of power in the Court. [p. 653, col. 2; 654, col. 1.]

In a suit for partition the Court sanctioned a loan to be raised by the Receiver on a mortgage, for payment to one of the parties. The order originally did not mention the purpose of the loan nor made it a first charge. The Receiver who was personally interested in raising the loan on the basis of the order raised an amount in excess of that sanctioned by the Court on the basis of promissory notes and on the assurance to the creditor that the loan would be a first charge on the property. The parties subsequently agreed that their property should be mortgaged for the loan and by suppressing the fact that it was already heavily encumbered misled the Court into making the mortgage by Receiver a first charge on the property. No notices were issued to the prior mortgagees. On the basis of the second order the Receiver mortgaged the aforesaid property to the creditor already mentioned on two mortgages for amounts far in excess of that sanctioned by the Court.

Held, that no priority could be claimed by the mortgagee from the Receiver, over the prior mortgagees. Giridhari Lal v. Dharendra Krista (3), distinguished.

Dr. S. C. Basak and Mr. Kamalaksha Basu (in both appeals), and Messrs. Atul Chaudhury Gupta and Apurba Charan Mukherji (in No. 71), for the Appellant.

Messrs. Apurbadhan Mukherji and Rash Behari Mitra (in No.6), for the Respondents.

Judgment.—These two appeals are in two suits, Nos. 222 of 1935 and 1 of 1937 of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan. The appeals were heard together by consent of the parties. The first suit was filed by Jiban Mull and Dhanraj against ten defendants. In the suit they claimed to recover Rs. 57,748-4-0 by the enforcement of a mortgage executed in their favour on February 13, 1929, by defendants Nos. 1 to 6 and by defendant No. 8 on behalf of her ward defendant No. 7. Defendant No. 9, Mr. Nilmoni Kumar Chatterjee is a Receiver appointed by the Court in a suit (No. 142 of 1923 of the said Court) for partition between defendants Nos. 1 to 7, the sons of Rajendra Nath Dutt, and their co-sharers. Defendant No. 10, is Bhadrabati Devi, wife of Dinabandhu Tewari. The plaintiffs have impleaded her on the allegation that she was at best a puisne mortgagee in respect of some of the properties mortgaged to them. Defendants Nos. 1 to 7, of this suit will hereafter be designated as the heirs of Rajendra Nath Dutt. The second suit was filed by Girindra Nath Mitter and others, the legal representatives of Mr. Debendra Nath Mitter, to recover Rs. 39,999-15-1 by the enforcement of a mortgage executed by Anadi Nath Dutt on January 17, 1928, in favour of Debendra Nath Mitter. The defendants to the suit are (1) Anadi Nath Dutt, (2) Nilmony Kumar Chatterjee, the Receiver appointed in the said suit for partition (No. 142 of 1923). Defendant No. 3 is Bhadrabati Debi. She was impleaded by the plaintiffs on the same footing as in the other suit. In both the suits Bhadrabati Debi claims priority over the mortgages of the plaintiffs though her mortgages are later in point of time. Her claim has been negatived by the same learned Subordinate Judge by his judgments dated September 28, 1936, and August 3, 1937. She has accordingly preferred these two appeals. The point is the same in both the appeals, namely, whether she is entitled to priority in respect of her mortgages. It arises on the same set of facts, which we now proceed to recite.

In 1923, suit No. 142 of the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Burdwan was instituted for partition of the joint properties of the parties to that suit, who were Anadi Nath Dutt, the heirs of Rajendra Nath Dutt and Bibhuti Bhusan Dutt and others. In that suit Mr. Nilmony Kumar Chatterjee, a Pleader, was appointed Receiver on June 17, 1926. The two mortgages sought to be enforced in the two suits were executed after the appointment of the Receiver. It appears from the record that the said Receiver was directed by the learned Subordinate Judge, who appointed him, to realise the arrears of rent of the properties committed to his charge that fell due before his appointment (that is before 1333 B. S.) but to keep those collections separate from the collection of arrears of rent which fell due after his appointment. This direction was given with a view to payment to the parties according to their shares of such moneys as would be collected by the Receiver on account of arrears of rent for years prior to his appointment. The Receiver, however, disregarded the directions of the Court. He mixed the two funds in a general account and spent the whole of it, it is said, for the benefit of the estate. On November 21, 1929, the parties moved the Court for a direction on the Receiver to pay them according to their shares what had been collected from the tenants on account of those arrears. The Receiver represented to Court that he had no funds from which he could satisfy the demand. The parties present thereupon asked the Court to authorise the Receiver to raise a loan by mortgaging some joint property and to pay them from out of the money so raised. We will indicate hereafter in what way the Receiver had a personal interest in that proposal. On the said application the Court recorded order No. 596 on the same date. The order is not happily worded, but the meaning of the said order is apparent. The Court suggested one of two alternatives : (1) either the raising of a loan at 12 per cent. on mortgage of some joint property or (2) raising the required sum by letting out in darpatni some of the khas lands. The Court, however, expressly directed the Receiver to let it know beforehand what property he proposed to mortgage. One would expect from the spirit of the order that the Receiver was first to try the second alternative, and if that alternative failed then to raise a loan on mortgage but after informing the Court.

It does not appear from the record that the Receiver ever made any serious attempt to raise money by letting out in darpatni some of the khas lands. The evidence rather points out that he rushed to raise the loan without making any attempt to raise money by sub-letting khas lands. In this order (order No. 596) there was no indication that if the loan had to be raised the loan was to be a first charge on the property to be given as security. What the Receiver did appear from what has been brought out in his cross-examination by the plaintiffs in suit No. 222 of 1935. He at once borrowed Rs. 11,060 from Bhadrabati Debi, on two promissory notes. This was in November or December 1929. He took the loan without further reference to Court. He justifies his action on the ground that he took the said loan on basis of order No. 596, dated November, 21, 1929. We have already pointed out that the order did not justify such action on his part, for the Court made it clear that he was to inform it as to what property he proposed to mortgage before concluding the negotiations for loan. The reason for the great haste on his part to raise the loan appears from his cross-examination. His mother Sreemutty Krishna Kumari Debi had money-lending business and she had lent money to the parties. He raised the money from Bhadrabati and paid out of the money so raised the money due to his mother from the parties. He is the only son of his mother and we cannot countenance his attempt to take shelter behind the thin screen of loss of memory.

He says in his deposition given in suit No. 1 of 1937 that he assured Dinabandhu Tewary, the husband of Bhadrabati, that for the loan his wife would have priority and that if priority was not given to it by the Court the money advanced on the promissory notes would be refunded and it was on this assurance that Bhadrabati advanced the money. Even if he had misunderstood order No. 596, and took it to mean that he was authorized straightway to raise a loan on mortgage without being required first to make an attempt to raise money by letting out khas lands in darpatni there was no justification on his part to give that assurance. The unauthorized assurance was, in our judgment, given for the purpose of securing the money with the least delay so that his own mother may get satisfaction of her dues from the parties quickly. The aforesaid answer given by the Receiver indicates that he had at least suspicion that there were prior charges created by the parties on their properties, for, otherwise the question of priority of charge would not have entered his mind. He must have also disclosed at or before the time of the advance to Dinabandhu Tewary who was his friend and client the fact of the possibility of there being prior charges.

The matter of raising loan again came for consideration of the Court on January 11, 1930. On that date, Anadi Nath Dutt and the heirs of Rajendra Nath Dutt suppressed from Court the fact that they had already mortgaged their shares of the joint properties including the patni taluq in Chichuria. Touzi No. 12 of the Burdwan Collectorate.

Some of the parties did not agree to the Receiver raising money by mortgaging their shares but Anadi Nath Dutt and the heirs of Rajendra Nath Dutt consented to have their shares mortgaged. The Court by its order No. 603 passed on that date directed the Receiver to mortgage separately the shares of Anadi Nath Dutt (1/12) and of the heirs of Rajendra Nath Dutt (1/3) and directed the Receiver to pay Rs. 1,600 to the former. This obviously meant that a loan of Rs. 1,600 only was to be raised by mortgaging Anadi's 1/12 share in some property. The Court also directed the Receiver to raise the moneys by mortgaging the shares of joint properties other than patni taluq Chichuria if that was possible. The parties, that is Anadi Nath Dutt and the heirs of Rajendra Nath Dutt, proposed that the mortgages by the Receiver were to have precedence over other prior mortgages and on the basis of the said proposal the order was made to the effect that the Receiver's mortgages were to have precedence over other mortgages. The order was made in the absence of the plaintiffs and in ignorance of the fact that heavy amounts had been borrowed from them by Anadi Nath Dutt and the heirs of Rajendra Nath Dutt on mortgages. There cannot be any doubt on these facts that the Court was deliberately misled. But, as no case of fraud was pleaded by the plaintiffs and there was no issue of fraud we leave the matter there. If such a case of fraud had been made, possibly, Bhadrabati could have answered it by showing that she or her husband was unaware of the device by which the Court was induced to make the order in that form. In pursuance of this order, the Receiver executed two mortgages in favour of Bhadrabati, one on January 31, 1930, by which he mortgaged one-third share belonging to the heirs of Rajendra Nath Dutt in patni taluq Lot Chichuria, and in $4\frac{1}{2}$ bighas of land held in mokarari mourasi right at a rental of Rs. 11-8-1 in Khas Began in the town of Burdwan (items Nos. 1 and 14 of the schedule to the plaint of suit No. 222 of 1935), and the other on May 6, 1930, by which he mortgaged the 1/12th share of Anadi Nath Dutt in patni taluq Chichuria, the same share in some Chaukidari Chakran lands in that taluq and in mehal Bhutagore (items Nos. 14, 27 and 31 of the schedule attached to the plaint of suit No. 1 of 1937). The last mentioned mortgage was for Rs. 5,530 although the Court's order apparently was for raising a loan of Rs. 1,600 only. The mortgages in favour of the plaintiffs included those properties as also other properties. Both the mortgages executed in favour of Bhadrabati recited the Court's orders Nos. 596 and 603, and stated that the said mortgages were to have precedence over other mortgages.

It is conceded by the parties that the mortgages in favour of the plaintiffs are valid notwithstanding the fact that the parties to the partition suit executed them after the appointment of the Receiver without any reference to the Court. The title to properties did not vest in the Receiver, he being a Receiver appointed under O. XL, Civil P. C., for the management and preservation of the properties it suit. The parties therefore had the power to deal with their shares without reference to Court provided that their acts did not interfere with possession of the Receiver. The Receiver could exercise the powers of the owners in the matter of execution of documents and if the Court sanctioned a loan on mortgage he could validly execute the mortgage instrument so as to bind the shares of the parties. These propositions have not and cannot be disputed, but the question is under what circumstances the Court appointing a Receiver can direct a mortgage to be executed by him which is to have precedence over earlier mortgages executed by the parties. In considering this question, we have to take into consideration the fact that sanctions for loans by Receivers are generally given in the absence of such prior incumbrancers and without notice to them. In most cases they have no knowledge of applications for loan, and in many cases the Court acts, as was in the case before us, without being apprised of such prior incumbrances. In these circumstances we think that a principle must be laid down which would not unduly infringe upon the rights of such third parties who had no notice of the application of the Receiver to raise loan on first charge and who had no opportunity to present their case before the Court. We must also on the other hand take into consideration the position of the mortgagee who advances money to the Receiver on the basis of the Court's order. Such a mortgagee is under a duty to see and usually sees the Court's order sanctioning the loan before he advances money. He is not bound to look beyond the order.

In those cases where the order of the Court simply sanctions a loan by the Receiver on a first charge of the properties, but does not indicate the purpose for which the loan is sanctioned, the creditor who advances the money is entitled to assume that everything was in order and so he ought to get what the Court had promised to give him, namely precedence over earlier encumbrances created by the parties. In such cases the Court cannot break faith with him. In cases however where the order itself recites the purpose of the loan, different considerations should, in our judgment, apply, and the observations which we make hereafter must be taken to apply to such cases only and not to those cases where the order is silent as to the purpose of the loan and is simply one sanctioning a loan on first charge. If the purpose of the loan as set out in the order is for preservation or protection of the property committed to the care of the Receiver, or is an order in an administration suit or one in a partition suit made for working out the rights, liabilities and obligations of the co-sharers of the joint properties in the course of partition, the mortgagee from the Receiver would have first charge in accordance with the order. In the case where the purpose is the last mentioned one the principle has been formulated in Herumboo Nath v. Satish Chandra (1), at p. 1176. Where the purpose of the loan is for the protection or preservation of the properties committed to the care of the Receiver the principle seem to us to be this. By the appointment of the Receiver the Court takes upon itself the duty of protecting and preserving the subject-matter of the suit, which it discharges through its own office, namely the Receiver. It must therefore have all powers which are incidental and necessary for the discharge of that duty. It will have therefore the power to sanction loan to be raised by the Receiver, and if necessary, to direct the mortgage to be executed by him for securing it to have precedence over earlier mortgages executed by the parties. It may be unaware of such prior mortgages or even if aware may not give notice to those mortgagees.

This in our judgment is the principle underlying the practice in such cases. In Greenwood v. Algeciras (Gibraltar) Ry. Co., (2), no reason was given but the judgment proceeded on established practice. All the cases cited at the Bar to illustrate the established practice were cases where the loan sanctioned on a first charge was for protection or preservation. This power of the Court being thus incidental to and necessary for the performance of its duty to protect and preserve the subject-matter of the suit, which it has taken upon itself by appointing a Receiver, must be measured and limited by its duty, where its exercise comes into conflict with the rights of third parties which are not before it and to whom no notice had been given, or who had not consented. In such a case the principle of breach of faith cannot, in our judgment, be the decisive factor. It is a question of power or jurisdiction of the Court. If the Court arrogates to itself a power which it does not possess—and such usurpation appears on the face of the order—and does an act affecting persons not parties to the suit, its acts cannot prejudice the rights of such persons. In such a case the mortgagee from the Receiver cannot protect himself on the presumption that the Court had acted within its powers, for the order on the basis of which he acted ex facie would indicate want of power in the Court. The case in Giridhari Lal v. Dhirendra Krista (3), was a case where the purpose of the loan sanctioned was for the protection and preservation of the properties. The decision of the third Judge, Harrington, J., was based on two grounds namely, (1) that the loan was taken by the Receiver for the preservation of the property, (2) that the order made therein was not a nullity and had not been set aside.

In our judgment, the first ground was the governing one and the second ground followed from it. Harrington, J., however made an observation agreeing with Woodroffe, J., that there would be breach of faith on the part of the Court if the mortgagee from the Receiver be not given precedence but that observation must be read in our judgment with the facts of that case. In the case before us the order on the face of it indicated the purpose of the loan, which was not for the preservation or protection of the properties in suit. The proposed loan by the Receiver was also not for the purpose of settling the rights, liabilities and obligations of the co-sharers of the joint properties in the course of partition. We have also indicated, though the point is not material in the view we have taken that Bhadrabati Debi did not advance the money on the faith of the order of the Court giving the Receiver's mortgages precedence over prior mortgages, for she made the advance before order No. 603 was passed. We accordingly hold that the plaintiffs in both the suits have priority over the mortgages of Bhadrabati Debi. We are informed that all the properties included in the mortgages of the plaintiffs and of Bhadrabati Debi have been sold; so no question of marshalling arises now. The appeals are dismissed, but in the circumstances without costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110 (2) —Suit for declaration that property could not be attached and sold in execution of certificate as same belonged to plaintiff—Suit valued at Rs. 7,699 for which certificate was issued—Suit decreed but on appeal dismissed by High Court—Appeal also valued at Rs. 7,699—Property in respect of which certificate was issued worth more than Rs. 10,000—Case held covered by s. 110 (2).

The plaintiffs brought a suit for a declaration that a certain property could not be attached and sold in execution of the certificate. They rested their claim in the suit on the ground that they had purchased it in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by them against the persons who owned the property. The suit was valued at Rs. 7,699 odd, because that was the amount for which the certificate was issued. The suit was decreed by the trial Court but on appeal the High Court dismissed it. The appeal was also valued at Rs. 7,699. But the property in respect of which the certificate was issued was worth more than Rs. 10,000 :

Order.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council by the plaintiffs in a suit which was decreed by the trial Court but has been dismissed on appeal by the High Court. The suit was valued at Rs. 7,699 odd and the appeal bears the same valuation. It is contended on behalf of the applicants that they are entitled to leave as a matter of right, because the case falls under para. 2 of s. 110, Civil P. C., that is to say, the decree sought to be appealed from involves a claim or question to and respecting property of more than Rs. 10,000. The plaintiffs brought the suit for a declaration that a certain property could not be attached and sold in execution of the certificate, in certificate case No. 1009 of 1934-35. They rested their claim in the suit to this property on the ground that they had purchased it in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by them against the persons who owned the property. The suit was valued at Rs. 7,699 odd, because that was the amount for which the certificate was issued. It has, however, been asserted in the applicants' petition that the value of the property itself which is liable to be sold is Rs. 52,000 odd. This statement is supported by an affidavit and has not been controverted in this Court on behalf of the proposed respondents. It must therefore be assumed that the property in respect of which the certificate was issued is worth more than Rs. 10,000.

The only question which is to be decided is whether that being so, the present case comes under para. 2 of s. 110, Civil P. C. In my opinion, this question must be answered in the affirmative. It is plain that if the plaintiffs do not succeed in this litigation the property which they have purchased in execution of their mortgage decree will be liable to be sold, and that property is worth much more than Rs. 10,000. That being so, it is difficult to hold that the decree which is sought to be appealed from does not involve indirectly a question respecting property more than Rs. 10,000. This view seems to us to be fully supported by the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Nadir Husain v. Municipal Board, Agra (1). In that case the plaintiff wanted a decree for the sale of the entire mortgaged property which was owned by the defendants for the realisation of Rs. 7,625. The property itself however was worth more than Rs. 10,000. The learned Judges who decided the case observed in dealing with it that they found it difficult to hold that the decree of the High Court did not directly or indirectly involve some claim or question to or respecting property to the value of Rs. 10,000. In our opinion, the present case is fully covered by para. 2 of s. 110, Civil P. C., and we think that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decree of this Court. Let the usual certificate issue. We therefore allow this application with costs : hearing fee four gold mohurs.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), ss. 8, 9—Debt incurred before October 1, 1932, ripened into decree after such date—Scaling down is governed by s. 8 and not by s. 9.

Clause (1) of s. 8, Mad. Agri. Relief Act clearly contemplates the debt incurred before October 1, 1932, as the original debt which ultimately ripened into a decree, and consequently it must be the date of the original debt which is the governing factor and not the date of the decree. When, therefore, there is a debt incurred before October 1, 1932, which has ripened into a decree after October 1, 1932, the scaling down must be governed by s. 8 and not by s. 9. Sreenivasachariar v. B. Krishniah Chetty (5), referred to.

C. R. P. to revise the order of the Sub-Judge, Masulipatam, dated August 9, 1939.

Mr. A. Lakshmayya, for the Petitioner.

Mr. D. Narasaraaju, Amicus Curiae.

Wadsworth, J.—This revision petition raises the question of the meaning of the words "debts incurred before October 1, 1932" in s. 8 of the Mad. Act, IV of 1938. The transaction with which we are concerned is a decree dated August 21, 1936 which itself is passed on the basis of a promissory note of 1928 which promissory note was in renewal of an earlier promissory note of 1925. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the debt to be scaled down is the decree itself and not the antecedent debt which formed the basis for the decree. He bases his decision on the definition of the word "debt" in s. 3 of the Act which contains the words:

"'debt' means any liability in cash or kind . . . due from an agriculturist, whether payable under a decree or order of a Civil or Revenue Court or otherwise."

He holds that since the definition of the word "debt" covers one payable under a decree we must regard the decree as the starting point and since the decree was passed in 1936, it must be scaled down under s. 9 of the Act and not under s. 8. The learned Subordinate Judge has not however considered two provisions in the Act which in our opinion render it impossible to hold the view which he expresses. Firstly, we have Part II of s. 7 which says;

"No sum in excess of the amount as so scaled down shall be recoverable from him or from any land or interest in land belonging to him; nor shall his property be liable to be attached and sold or proceeded against in any manner in the execution of any decree against him in so far as such decree is for an amount in excess of the sum as scaled down under this Chapter."

This provision seems to contemplate the scaling down of the original debt notwithstanding a decree and it is difficult to give any meaning or purpose to this clause if the process of scaling down is to start with the decree. Secondly, we have cl. (1) of s. 8 which in dealing with the way in which debts incurred before October 1, 1932 shall be scaled down, speaks of interest outstanding on October 1, 1937 :

"whether the same be payable under law, custom or contract or under a decree of Court and whether the debt or other obligation has ripened into a decree or not."

It seems to us impossible to give any effect to the words "whether the debt or other obligation has ripened into a decree or not," if the debt contemplated in the initial words of the section is the decree itself. On the other hand this cl. (1) of s. 8 seems quite clearly to contemplate the debt incurred before October 1, 1932 as the original debt which ultimately ripened into a decree, and consequently it must be the date of the original debt which is the governing factor and not the date of the decree. The inclusion of a decree in the definition of "debt" in s. 3 (iii) of the Act is quite consistent with this view. For, obviously, there are many debts which start with the decree, as for instance, when there is a decree for damages which of itself creates a debt bearing interest and liable in certain circumstances to be scaled down. Clearly, the idea underlying these provisions is that when the decree merely enforces the payment of a pre-existing debt bearing interest that pre-existing debt shall be regarded as the liability the date of which shall govern the section to be applied.

The subject has come already before this Court, though there is apparently no considered decision of a Bench hitherto. In Montina Kanakaraju v. Datta Atchutharamanaraju (1), there is a very brief judgment of one of us, adopting the view which we have just adumbrated though it deals with another point which does not arise here. In Narayanasami Naidu v. Rajamanickam Pillai (2). Horwill, J. has taken the same view even with reference to a compromise decree. We are not now concerned with compromise decrees which may possibly be affected by different considerations. But it is to be noted that the learned Judge definitely regards the debt incurred before October 1, 1932 as the original liability which has ripened into the decree and does not treat the decree itself as the starting point. Other cases have been quoted before us in which this view has been tacitly assumed to be correct without any argument or consideration of the point involved: vide Anandam v. Muthukumaraswami Mudai (3) and the decision of the Bench in Perianna Goundan v. Sellappa Goundan (4) at p. 222.

Unfortunately the respondent in the present case is not re-presented, but we have to express our gratitude to Mr. D. Narasaraju who has given us the benefit of his argument for the respondent as amicus curiae, he having gone into the subject with reference to another case posted for hearing by us in which a similar question arises. The only authority which he has been able to cite on behalf of the respondent is contained in a mere observation of Venkataramana Rao, J. in Sreenivasachariar v. B. Krishniah Chetty (5), where the learned Judge merely remarks that there is a good deal of force in the contention that when the decree has been passed after October 1, 1932 it is governed by s. 9 of the Act. He gives however no decision to this effect and the matter does not appear to have been argued at length before the learned Judge. We are clearly of opinion that when there is a debt incurred before October 1, 1932 which has ripened into a decree after October 1, 1932 the scaling down must be governed by s. 8 and not by s. 9. We therefore allow the petition and remit the matter to the lower Court with a direction to scale down the debt in accordance with this decision. The petitioner is entitled to costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 72—Payment made under mistake of fact, if voluntary—Voluntary payment of money under mistake of fact, whether can be recovered under s. 72—Person paying tax to Panchayat Board under mistaken notion that property for which tax was paid lay within jurisdiction of Board—Payment is under mistake of fact and can be recovered under s. 72 as money had and received for payer's use.

If money is paid under a mistake of fact, it cannot be said to have been voluntarily paid. If money is paid voluntarily under a mistake of fact, viz., in regard to the territorial limits of the Panchayat Board's jurisdiction, it is recoverable under s. 72, Contract Act. The payment need not arise out of contractual relation between the parties. The payer's ignorance and even forgetfulness would not by themselves disentitle him from claiming a refund unless he can be held to have been estopped or guilty of laches. Nor is it necessary that the mistaken payment must be of such a nature that if such payment were not rectified, the liability would be created against the persons paying. O. R. P. to revise the decree of the Sub-Judge, Vizagapatam, dated July 28, 1936.

Messrs. K. V. Gopalaswami Rao and G. Balaparameswari Rao, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Kasturi Seshagiri Rao, for the Respondents.

Order.—This is a revision from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam acting as a Judge of the Court of Small Causes in a suit instituted by one Pantakota Adi Narayana Naidu against the Panchayat Board of Mangapaka for the refund of money alleged to have been paid by him for profession and house taxes and in regard to the licensing fee for his rice mill and brick kiln under a mistaken belief that the properties or business in respect of which he had paid the license fees or other taxes were situated within the jurisdiction of the Panchayat Board. The levy of the profession tax was also questioned on the ground that the notice issued to the plaintiff by the Panchayat Board did not comply with the requirements of law and the demand was therefore illegal. The Subordinate Judge disallowed the plaintiff's claim in regard to the refund of house tax and license fee as he held the payments made by the plaintiff to have been voluntary and not under a mistake of fact that arose out of contractual relation, although to use the Sub-Judge's words "there was an error in understanding the limits of this jurisdiction owing to ignorance of all parties concerned." In regard to the profession tax however, he passed a decree for the refund of the tax paid for the year 1934-35 as he found the notice served by the Board on the plaintiff to be illegal and the levy of the same consequently ultra vires. The claim for refund of the profession tax for prior years was not allowed as it was held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the notices in regard to them were defective and the demand by the Board unjustified. This has led the plaintiff to file the present revision.

Although conceded by the trial Court, learned Counsel on behalf of the respondent contended in this Court that the mistake found to have been committed by the parties was one of law and not that of fact and would not therefore entitle the plaintiff to sue the Board on that basis. Mr. Bala Parameswari Rao (learned Counsel for the petitioner) denied this and contended on the other hand that s. 72, Contract Act, made no distinction between mistakes of fact and those of law and alleged that the money paid erroneously was refundable whether it was paid under one kind of mistake or the other. It must be admitted that the words of this section are very general and capable of bearing the interpretation which was attempted to be put upon them; but in view of s. 21, Contract Act, which provides that a contract is not voidable because it was caused by a mistake as to any law in force in British India, it has been decided in some cases that the mistake, to entitle a party to get the relief, must be one of fact and not of law: see A. M. Appavu Chettiar v. S. I. Ry. Co. Ltd. (1), Sethupati Adergal v. Secretary of State (2) and Wolf & Sons v. Dadiba Khimji & Co. (3) at p. 648. It may be argued that since the term 'coercion' used in

s. 72, Contract Act, has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kanhaya Lal v. National Bank of India Ltd. (4) to have been used in the ordinary sense and the definition in s. 15 held not to control the meaning of that word in this section, the word mistake might similarly be construed in the ordinary sense and should not be controlled by s. 21 of the Act. It is unnecessary, however, for me to consider this question in this case as there is no doubt that the payments were made by the plaintiff to the defendant Board under the mistaken notion that the properties in regard to which those were made were situated within the local jurisdiction of the Board and not beyond it. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover them on the ground of failure of consideration or on the basis of an express or at least an implied request of the defendant, there can be no doubt that they were made under a mistake of fact and the plaintiff is entitled to recover them as money had and received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use. The observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Tom Boevey Barrett v. African Products Ltd. (5) are helpful and may be cited. They observed :

"It follows that in the absence of such proof, the payment made to the appellant in respect of his 1000 shares was, on the interpretation of the facts most favourable to himself, a payment made under a mistake of fact common to himself and the company, viz., that he was a share-holder for 1000 shares, when in truth he was not, and money so paid can be recovered as money had and received to the use of the company and this was the form of the action."

The lower Court's suggestion that even if the mistake under which the money was paid to the Board was one of fact, it was "not one that arose out of any contractual relation" and the money could not therefore be refunded was not justified. It is quite possible to conceive of cases where a payment may have been made by a party under a mistake of fact although there may have been no contractual relation between him and the person to whom the money was paid. The case in Anrudh Kumar v. Lachmichand (6) may be cited as one of the instances in which money paid by mistake was held to be recoverable although there was no contractual relation between the parties to that suit.

Since the main ground, on which the plaintiff's claim for refund was disallowed by the lower Court, was that the payments made by the plaintiff were voluntary in character, the next question to decide is how far the conclusion arrived at by the lower Court in this connection is correct. Money paid under a mistake of fact would only be recoverable when it is found that it was not paid by the plaintiff with the intention of making a gift or with an idea that the party receiving the money may have the benefit of the same whether the reason which led to the payment was correct or otherwise. Since the remedy under the section is of an equitable nature, it may also not be recoverable if the person who paid the money is found to be estopped from recovering it or even when the Receiver's rights in relation to third parties have been prejudiced. But where the position is not altered or the plaintiff has not been guilty of any laches, he would be entitled to recover the money paid by him under a mistake of fact even if he had been careless or negligent and failed to exercise due diligence to enquire into the facts or to remember them. If the money were paid under compulsion of legal process, it might have been a different matter, but when it was paid under the mistaken notion of fact that the defendant was entitled to receive this money from the plaintiff, there is no reason why he should not be entitled to recover it after the mistake was discovered. The following statement of law made by Lord Reading, C. J. in Maskell v. Horner (:), is if I may say so with great respect to that high authority correct in so far as it goes. It was to the following effect :

"If a person pays money, which he is not bound to pay, under the compulsion of urgent and pressing necessity or of seizure, actual or threatened, of his goods he can recover it as money had and received."

But this does not mean that the money not paid under compulsion of urgent and pressing necessity is not recoverable. A payment made under a mistake as provided in s. 72, Contract Act, is a case in point. If money is paid under a mistake of fact, it cannot be said to have been voluntary in the sense in which that term was used in law in connection with payments although there may have been no actual compulsion of urgent or pressing necessity. To be voluntary it must have been made by a person of one's own free will; but if it is made under a mistake of fact, how can it be said to have been so? There is no scope here for the application of decisions in cases such as Munici- pal Council, Tuticorin v. Ralli Brothers (8) and Chairman, Municipal Council, Rajahmundry v. Subba Rao (9), where no question in regard to a mistake of fact was raised or considered. Indeed in the first of the above cases Krishnan Pandalai, J. observed :

"It has not been contended and very properly that the right to recover can be put upon any ground of mistake because if mistake there was it was a mistake of law and that is not sufficient."

This would show that the learned Judge was not considering cases where the mistake committed was one of fact. If money is paid voluntarily under a mistake of fact, such as the parties were under in this case, viz., in regard to the territorial limits of the Panchayat Board's jurisdiction, it is recoverable under s. 72, Contract Act. That a mistake like this was purely a mistake of fact cannot be doubted. It was so held by Lord Alverstone, C. J. in Meadows v. Grand Junction Water Works Co. (10). It must therefore be held that a payment under a mistake of fact cannot be regarded as a voluntary payment and the decision of the case against the plaintiff on that ground was erroneous. The decision in Manilal Lalubhai v. Chandulal Tribhovandas (11), does not decide that a voluntary payment, even if made by mistake, cannot be recovered from the party receiving it. The learned Subordinate Judge has however in refusing the reliefs prayed for by the plaintiff based his decision on certain other circumstances. These were firstly that the plaintiff was the President of the Board at the time when he made these payments and he did not care to read the notification limiting the jurisdiction of the Board to certain areas carefully, and secondly that the condition mentioned in Lloyds Bank Ltd. v. Administrator-General of Burma (12), which was to the effect that the mistaken payment must be of such a nature that if such payment was not rectified, the liability would be created against the persons paying, was not complied with. Both these grounds are, in my opinion, incorrect and do not disentitle the plaintiff from recovering the money. As to the first one I have already observed that the plaintiff's ignorance and even forgetfulness would not by themselves disentitle him from claiming a refund unless the plaintiffs can be held to have been estopped or guilty of laches. This is borne out by the very case on which the Subordinate Judge relied in support of the second ground. The learned Judge of the Rangoon High Court expressed himself in the following words :

"The rule governing the recovery of money paid under a mistake of fact seems to be this. That the person paying under a mistake of fact however ignorant he may be and however forgetful he may have been, is entitled to recover such money unless he has at any time waived his claim or has been estopped by reason of conduct by which the payee has altered the position by parting with the money."

Learned Counsel for the respondent has cited Raghunath Rithkaran v. Imperial Bank of India Ltd. (13), in support of his contention that since the plaintiff was negligent in ascertaining the truth, s. 72, Contract Act, would be of no help to him. A reference to the decision would however show that it does not support the proposition for which it has been cited. It was found in that case that the persons who had paid a hundi on presentation were not entitled to recover the money, although they were not the drawees and had paid it under a mistake of fact. In recording his opinion the learned Chief Justice observed as follows :

"It would seem contrary to principles of common law that in cases of negotiable instruments mistakes of this kind should not be notified within a reasonable time. The fact that the party assumed the liability which was not cast upon him by the document which was presented to him for payment must be taken as a ground for holding that he was bound to notify the mistake within a reasonable time to the holder of the document."

The learned Chief Justice was, it must be remembered, dealing with a negotiable instrument in that case, and it would be wrong to extend its application to cases where considerations special to that type of cases are not to be taken into account. He held that in the circumstances of that case a duty was cast upon the plaintiffs to inform the bank within a reasonable time that they had accepted the position under a mistake of fact. The real reason for disallowing the claim was brought out by the other learned Judge when he observed :

"In this case however the plaintiffs have by their conduct made it impossible to restore the parties to their original position and this fact in my opinion affords a good defence to the suit."

This gives the real clue to the reason why the plaintiffs were held disentitled to recover the money paid by them under a mistake of fact. They were held to have been estopped on account of their silence, and estoppel, even if it is by conduct, is, as already observed, a good defence to a suit of this kind. The mere fact, therefore, that the plaintiff was himself the President of the Board during the period when he paid this amount and was ignorant of the limits of its jurisdiction could not, without anything else, justify the Court in disallowing his claim. As for the second ground, reliance was placed by the lower Court in its judgment and by the learned Counsel for the respondent here on an observation in Lloyds Bank Ltd. v. Administrator-General of Burma (12) appearing at p. 39*. It reads as follows :—

"But it has been laid down that the mistaken payment must be of such a nature that if such payment is not rectified a liability will be created against the person paying. This requirement is present here as any Administrator-General who parts with money belonging to an estate of which he has charge is obviously accountable for the loss thus sustained."

It would not be easy to assent to the proposition if the learned Judge was proposing to lay down a general rule applicable to all cases of payments under mistakes of fact. If the learned Judge was on the other hand giving an additional ground which was taken by him into consideration in granting the equitable relief, the observation would be innocuous but perhaps unnecessary. One cannot expect to find a circumstance like this in every case. In a large number of cases moneys paid by persons under mistakes of fact will be found to have belonged to themselves only and no further liability found to have been created if the money is not refunded to them; while in other cases although a liability may be found to come into existence if the money paid by a person is not refunded to him, yet it may not be possible to pass a decree in his favour; I am thus constrained to hold that a condition such as stated by the learned Judge in Lloyds Bank Ltd. v. Administrator-General of Burma (12) cannot be held to be a sine qua non for ordering a refund of money paid under a mistake of fact. There is nothing else which was said at the bar or which would point to the conclusion that the plaintiff had either waived his right to claim or was estopped from claiming this amount. Learned Counsel for the respondent seemed to suggest at one time that the money, after it was received by the Board, was utilized towards discharging certain liabilities and could not, therefore be recovered but the suggestion was not pressed seriously. It is immaterial if the money paid under a mistake is spent by the recipient in works or things for which he would have paid anyhow whether the money paid under a mistake was received by him or not. It cannot be said in a case like this that the defendant has altered his position on account of the receipt of this payment and this could be no ground to disallow the plaintiff from recovering the money paid by him under a mistaken notion.

So far as the profession tax is concerned, the lower Court had disallowed the refund of payment for prior years only because it found that the plaintiff had not produced any notice like Ex. G in respect of those years. In doing so the Subordinate Judge appears to have overlooked para. 4 of the additional written statement filed by the defendant where it was admitted that the form employed in Ex. G was employed by the Board for all the notices sent during the period when the plaintiff was the President of the Board. This would show that the other notices sent to the plaintiff suffered from the same illegality as from which Ex. G was suffering and the same decree should therefore have been passed in regard to the other payments as well. There seems to be no force in the question of limitation so far as the payments other than those relating to profession tax are concerned. The suit was instituted by the plaintiff very shortly after the discovery of the mistake as found by the Court below and since the limitation under Art. 96 started from the date when the mistake became known to the plaintiff, his suit cannot be held to be beyond time. As to the profession tax the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree for such payments as he had made during the three years prior to suit. The revision must therefore be accepted and the plaintiff's suit decreed accordingly. In view however of the fact that the plaintiff's conduct had been negligent, I would leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Criminal trial—Jurisdiction—Magistrate cannot try Sessions case by leaving out more serious charges and confining charges to minor ones—Magistrate held could not try case by framing charge under ss. 147 and 325 read with s. 149, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439 (2)—Revision against acquittal—Acquittal of persons whose names do not appear in application, cannot be touched.

Where a number of accused persons participate in rioting in the course of which grievous hurt and death are caused to some persons, it is not open to the Magistrate to bring the case within his jurisdiction by charging the accused with offences under ss. 147 and 325 read with s. 149, I. P. C. The fact that the accused charged with causing death is absconding is no ground for not framing charges against the accused under s. 302, I. P. C., or at least s. 304 read with s. 149. A case exclusively triable by a Court of Session cannot be brought within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate by leaving out the more serious charges and confining the trial to minor charges.

Where the names of certain persons who have been acquitted do not appear in the revision application against acquittal, their acquittal cannot be touched in revision.

Cr. R. against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Motihari, dated March 1, 1940.

Mr. G. P. Shahi, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. K. P. Varma and Hareshwar Prasad Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—In this case 22 persons were sent up by the Police on a charge of rioting in the course of which grievous hurt was caused to two persons and death to a third. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate who tried the case charged the persons sent up with offences under ss. 147 and 325 read with s. 149 and also framed an individual charge under s. 435 against one of them, namely Motia Kalwar. At the end of the trial he did not consider that a "clear case" had been made out against any of the accused "under any head" and therefore, acquitted them all under s. 258, Criminal P. C. Ramlakhan Dhobi, on whose first information the case had been investigated and sent up by the Police has moved in revision against this order of acquittal, and it has been contended on his behalf that the order is without jurisdiction. The contention seems irresistible. According to the prosecution one Ramparichhan Dhobi was killed in the riot by Parmeshwar Kalwar with a bhala blow. The defence version of the occurrence was of course different. But even according to the accused Parmeshwar had struck and killed Ramparichhan with a bhala after the latter had given a garasa blow to one of the accused. Parmeshwar has been absconding, but his fatal bhala blow was as much a part of the riot alleged by the prosecution as the grievous hurt that was caused to Thag Dhobi and Ramlakhan Dhobi and led the learned Magistrate to frame his charge under s. 325 read with s. 149. His absence was no justification for the failure of the learned Magistrate to frame a charge against the accused under s. 302 or at least s. 304 read with s. 149. But such a charge is exclusively triable by the Court of Session, and if the learned Magistrate had framed it, it would not have been open to him to pass any order of acquittal in the case, for the authorities are agreed that a case exclusively triable by a Court of Session cannot be brought within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate by leaving out the more serious charges and confining the trial to minor charges. The learned Advocate for the opposite party is not prepared to contend that the law is otherwise, the position being so clear. How this escaped the notice of the Magistrate does not appear. It follows therefore, that the application in revision must be allowed and the order of acquittal set aside.

Section 439 (2) lays down that no order shall be made under s. 439 to the prejudice of the accused unless he has had an opportunity of being heard either personally or by a Pleader in his own defence; and this raises another question on the present application made as it is ostensibly against 21 persons as the opposite party, while the number of persons dealt with by the Magistrate was 22. The names of the opposite party as given in the application for revision have been compared by the Bar with those given in the charges framed by the Magistrate; and the learned Advocates have agreed that three of the 22 names before the Magistrate, namely Malikchand, Birja and Sheogovind, do not clearly appear in the revisional application. The acquittal of Malikchand, Birja and Sheogovind cannot therefore be touched. As regards the other 19 persons before the Magistrate he must now be asked to take up the case again, consider the question whether a charge under s. 302 read with s. 149 ought not to be framed against these 19 persons, and proceed with the case in accordance with the law.

U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXVII of 1934), s. 39—Question whether particular receipt was a written document evidencing "loan", determination of—Court's decision, if open to revision—Question of jurisdiction—Receipt drawn up on printed form showing that defendant received certain sum of money from plaintiff in consideration of promissory note—Whether document furnishing evidence of loan—Scope of s. 39.

It is open to the Courts to determine the question whether the receipt upon which a suit is filed for the recovery of the amount was a written document evidencing the "loan" within the meaning of s. 39 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act. In coming to a decision upon that question the Courts do not act illegally or with material irregularity. In such a case no question of the exercise of a jurisdiction not vested in the Courts by law, or failure to exercise jurisdiction so vested, or the exercise of jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity arises. In this view of the matter the revision application against its decision is incompetent and cannot be entertained.

Receipt, drawn up on a printed form showing that the defendant had received Rs. 150 from the plaintiff in consideration of a promissory note which he had executed in his favour, furnishes evidence of the loan taken by the defendant from the plaintiff. Section 39 does not prescribe any particular form of a written document to evidence the loan. The words "written document" used in the section are wide enough to cover any writing which would unmistakably show that a loan was taken by the debtor, and no particular form of writing is necessary to evidence the transaction of the loan. The intention of the section is that loans taken by agriculturists shall be evidenced by a writing and should not be made dependent upon parole testimony. It is only to guard against an oral or parole transaction of loan that the section insists that the transaction shall be evidenced by a document.

App. for the revision of the order of the Civil Judge of Bara Banki, dated April 25, 1940.

Mr. Bhawani Shanker, for the Applicant.
Mr. B. K. Dhaon, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This revision petition by the defendant arises out of an appellate judgment and decree passed by the Civil Judge of Bara Banki decreeing the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of Rs. 150 on the basis of a promissory note dated June 22, 1936, executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff. On the same date a receipt was also executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff. Both the promissory note and receipt bear postage stamps. The plaintiff alleged in the plaint that Rs. 150 were due to him on the principal amount of the promissory note and Rs. 60 on account of interest upto the date of the suit. He gave credit to the defendant for a sum of Rs. 20 alleged to have been paid to him, relinquished his claim in respect of Rs. 40 and sued for the balance of Rs. 150.

The defence to the suit was a denial of the loan. It was also pleaded that the promissory note and the receipt were not admissible in evidence as they were not properly stamped. There was a further plea that the plaintiff had obtained the defendant's thumb-impression upon the promissory note and receipt by fraud. Lastly, it was pleaded that the defendant is an agriculturist and the suit could not be decreed under s. 39, of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act against him.

The trial Court held that the promissory note was inadmissible in evidence for want of proper stamp but admitted the receipt in evidence upon payment of the necessary penalty. The trial Court further held that Ex. 2, the receipt, evidenced the loan in question within the meaning of s. 39, of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act. It, therefore, decreed the suit against the defendant.

The learned Civil Judge dismissed the appeal. It is against this decision that the present revision petition has been preferred.

Learned Counsel on behalf of the defendant, applicant argued that the Courts below were wrong in holding that the loan was evidence by a written document within the meaning of s. 39, of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act. It was also argued that the provisions of s. 39 (1) and (2), have not been complied with and consequently the plaintiff was not entitled to charge any interest on the alleged loan. The contention was that no copy of the written document evidencing the loan had been given to the defendant and there was no entry made upon the written document specifying the date by which repayment must be made. No copy of the written document having been furnished to the debtor, it was argued that the plaintiff was not entitled to charge any interest within the meaning of cl. (3) of s. 39, of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act. Lastly it was urged that the Courts below had omitted to give credit for the payment of Rs. 20 which the defendant had made to the plaintiff.

I am of opinion that no question of the exercise of a jurisdiction not vested in the Court below by law, or failure to exercise jurisdiction so vested, or the exercise of jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, arose in the present case. It was open to the Court below to have determined the question whether the receipt (Ex. 2) was a written document evidencing the loan within the meaning of s. 39 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act. In coming to a decision upon that question it cannot be contended that the Courts below acted illegally or with material irregularity. In this view of the matter the revision application is incompetent and cannot be entertained.

I have, however, examined the merits of the case and I quite agree with the finding arrived at by the Courts below that Ex. 2 is such a written document evidencing the loan as is contemplated by s. 39, of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act. Exhibit 2, the receipt, is drawn up on a printed form and shows that the defendant had received Rs. 150 from the plaintiff in consideration of a promissory note which he had executed in his favour. Upon a reasonable interpretation of the language used in the receipt it seem to me clear that the document furnishes evidence of the loan taken by the defendant from the plaintiff. Section 39, does not prescribe any particular form of a written document to evidence the loan. The words "written document" used in the section in my opinion are wide enough to cover any writing which would unmistakably show that a loan was taken by the debtor, and no particular form of writing is necessary to evidence the transaction of the loan. The intention of the section appears to be that loans taken by agriculturists shall be evidenced by a writing and should not be made dependent upon parole testimony. It is only to guard against an oral or parole transaction of loan that the section insists that the transaction shall be evidenced by a document. I uphold the decision of the Courts below that Ex. 2 evidences the loan by a written document as required by s. 39 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act.

As regards the other question raised, it appears that no plea was raised in the written statement, that no copy had been furnished to the defendant and no issue was framed on that point. The point has not been raised in the ground of revision to this Court. I am unable to entertain this plea in revision at this late stage. If the plea had been raised at the proper stage in the trial Court, the plaintiff would have been in a position to produce evidence. It cannot be allowed to be raised at this stage now.

As regards the last point that Rs. 20 were not credited towards the account of the defendant, the plea has no substance. It is quite clear from the account given in the plaint that a credit was given to the defendant for Rs. 20 and the plaintiff relinquished Rs. 40 out of the total amount of Rs. 60 as interest. This plea also has no force.

The result is that the application fails and is dismissed with costs.

Bihar Agricultural Income Tax Act (VII of 1938), ss. 2 (a), 3, 4—Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 2 (1)—Bengal Cess Act (IX of 1880), ss. 4, 41, 100, 105—Government of India Act, 1935, (25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42), ss. 108, 299, 109 (2) (a), 52 (2), 44—Permanent Settlement Regulation (I of 1793)—Bihar Act whether ultra vires as a whole because definition of "agricultural income" given in Act is wider or narrower than that given in Income Tax Act—Definition of "agricultural income" in Bihar Act and Income Tax Act compared—Word 'local rate' in s. 2 (1), Income Tax Act, if covers cess—Collector acting under Cess Act acts as officer of Crown, as such and not as agent of 'local authorities'—Bihar Act is ultra vires only in so far as it covers income from revenue free agricultural land in a Municipality—Income of raiyats and tenure-holders of revenue free land, if covered by definition of "agricultural income"—Regulation I of 1793, construction—Effect of—Tax under Bihar Act, if infringement of rights granted to zemindars by Permanent Settlement Regulation—Bihar Act not invalid due to non-compliance with s. 299, Government of India Act or Para. XVIII of Instrument of Instructions—Regulation I of 1793 is not Act of Parliament—Bihar Act is not therefore invalid by reason of s. 108 (2), Government of India Act—Bihar Agricultural Income Tax Act repeals by necessary implication provisions of Regulation I of 1793 which are inconsistent with it.

The omission to include cl. (c) of the definition contained in the Income Tax Act in the definition contained in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act cannot make the latter Act ultra vires. In effect the Bihar Govt. are proposing to tax less than they are entitled to do. The greater must include the less, and if the Provincial Govt. are entitled to tax all agricultural income as defined in s. 2 (1), Income Tax Act, then they are clearly entitled to tax a part only of such income. It is impossible to hold that the omission to tax some forms of agricultural income could render the whole of the Bihar Act ultra vires and of no effect. [p. 667, col. 2.]

The word "revenue" in s. 2 (1), Income Tax Act is used to denote income or a revenue receipt as opposed to a capital receipt and, therefore, covers all income from agricultural land other than rent. No real distinction can be drawn between the expressions "rent or revenue" in Income Tax Act and "rent or income" in—

Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, and it cannot be said that by the use of the words "rent or income" the Provincial Govt. are taxing something more than is permissible by the definition in the Income Tax Act. [ibid.]

The expression "local rate" used in Income Tax Act in the definition of "agricultural income" is wide enough to cover cess which is a term used in Bihar for local rates levied on immovable property for the benefit of local authorities. Hence the addition of the words "local cess" in the definition of "agricultural income" given in the Bihar Act does not affect the matter in any way and does not in any way extend the field of taxation. [p. 668, col. 1.]

Under the Ben. Cess Act, 1880, the rate of cess to be levied is fixed by the District Board and the proceeds are paid into a district fund. The assessment and collection of cess is however, ordinarily made by the Collector, and the Collector, when he performs his duties under the Cess Act is in no way a servant of the District Boards. He does not act under their supervision but under the supervision of the higher Govt. authorities. Hence when the Collector performs the duties cast upon him by the Ben. Cess Act he performs them as Collector that is, as an officer of the Crown and not as an agent of the local authorities. [p. 669, cols. 1 & 2.]

What s. 100 of the Ben. Cess Act empowers the Board of Revenue to do is to invest a person with the powers of a Collector under the Act. Once such a person is invested with such powers, he is, as far as those duties are concerned, a Collector, and he performs his duties not as a servant or agent of the District Boards but as a Collector. Even such a person must be regarded as a Collector and he performs his duties as a Collector, that is, as an officer of the Crown as such. The cess in Bihar is therefore assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such and that being so there is no real difference between the two definitions of the "agricultural income" in the Income Tax Act and the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act as far as the assessment and collection of cess is concerned. [p. 669, col. 2.]

Revenue free agricultural land in a Municipality is subject to a local rate collected under a Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act, and, therefore, comes within the definition given in the Agri. Income Tax Act. As the local rate, however, is collected by the servants of the Municipality and not by the officers of the Crown as such, the income derived from such lands is not within the definition of agricultural income given in the Income Tax Act. Hence, in so far as the definition of "agricultural income" in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, covers income from revenue free agricultural land in a Municipality it is ultra vires but this does not make the whole Act ultra vires. [ibid.]

It is open to the High Court so to limit the definition given in the Bihar Act as to bring it within the competence of the local Legislature. [p. 671, col. 1.]

The income of a raiyat does not fall within s. 2 (a) (1) of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act but rather falls within s. 2 (a) (2) (1) of that Act. His income is derived from land by agriculture and clearly falls within the definitions given in both the Bihar Act and the Income Tax Act. [p. 670, col. 1.]

The income of tenure-holders of revenue free land falls within the definition given in both the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act and the Income Tax Act and, therefore, the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act cannot be held to be ultra vires upon this ground. [p. 670, col. 2.]

Regulation I of 1793 contains no assurance or undertaking to the zemindar that he would for ever thereafter be immune from taxation such as that imposed by the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. The Regulation merely contains an assurance that the jama or land revenue payable by the zemindar would never be increased. [p. 675, col. 2.]

The tax imposed on agricultural income by the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, 1938, is in no way an infringement of the rights granted to zemindars by the Permanent Settlement Regulations. 125 Ind. Cas. 871 (9), relied on. [p. 677, col. 1.]

The tax imposed by the Bihar Act is a tax on income though limited to income derived from agricultural sources. It is in no sense a tax on the land or payment in the nature of jama because it is imposed on the income derived from the land and not on the land itself. It cannot therefore be said that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax does in any way purport to affect, vary or repeal any provision in the Permanent Settlement Regulations particularly Ben. Regulation I of 1793. [p. 677, col. 2; p. 678, col. 1.]

The Bihar Act cannot be held to be invalid on the ground of failure to comply with s. 299, Govt. of India Act by reason of the provisions of s. 109 (2) (a) of that Act. So also it cannot be held to be invalid by reason of the Governor's failure to reserve the bill as directed by para. XVIII of the Instrument of Instructions in view of s. 52 (2), Govt. of India Act. [p. 678, col. 2.]

The Ben. Regulation I of 1793 is an enactment of the Governor-General in Council and not an enactment of the Parliament in England, and hence the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, is not invalid by reason of the provisions of s. 108 (2) (a), Govt. of India Act. [p. 680, col. 2.]

The expression "Governor-General's Act in [s. 108 (2) (b)] refers to Acts which are contemplated in s. 44, Govt. of India Act, 1935, that is, to Acts enacted by the Governor-General after the Govt. of India Act came into force. The Permanent Settlement Regulation was in no sense an Act of the Governor-General but was an Act of the then Governor-General in Council. That being so, s. 108 (2) (b), Govt. of India Act, can in no way render the legislation invalid. [ibid.]

A subsequent general Act will repeal the provisions of an earlier special Act if the provisions of the subsequent Act are clear and unambiguous and clearly apply to the matters dealt with by the earlier special legislation. Under the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, all agricultural income is made taxable without distinction, and that being so, any protection afforded to agricultural income by any earlier Act is repealed by this subsequent Act. The Court is therefore bound to hold that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act repeals by necessary implication any provision in the earlier Regulation I of 1793 which is inconsistent with it. 102 Ind. Cas. 845 (10) and 84 Ind. Cas. 31 (19), referred to. [p. 281, col. 2; p. 782, col. 1.]

The Advocate-General and Mr. Phulan Prasad Verma, for the Defendants.

Harries, C. J.—The plaintiffs are zamin-dars holding a permanently settled estate in the District of Patna in this Province.

On March 17, 1939, a notice was served on them by the Agricultural Income-tax Authorities of this province under s. 17 (2) and other sections of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act calling upon them to make a return of their agricultural income for the previous year to enable an assessment to agricultural income-tax to be made. The plaintiffs have declined to make such a return and claim that the provincial Agricultural Income-tax Authorities have no power to call for such a return. The present suit has been filed claiming declaratory relief to that effect.

The suit was originally instituted in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge, Patna. The points involved are difficult and of very great importance and with the consent of all the parties the case was transferred to this Court for hearing and disposal. In view of the importance of the case to all persons interested in agriculture in this Province, this Special Bench has been constituted to hear the matter.

In para. 1 of the plaint it is stated that the plaintiffs are zamindars holding a permanently settled estate. Then follow a number of paragraphs purporting to describe the position of zamindars before and after the Permanent Settlement Regulation (Regn. I of 1793). In para. 6 it is said that the Permanent Settlement Regulation is an Act of Parliament, and in para. 7 it is pleaded that as the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act is repugnant to a Governor-General's Act or a Parliamentary Statute and purports to alter the character of the Permanent Settlement the previous sanction of the Governor-General was necessary to the introduction of the bill in the Legislature and further that the bill should have been reserved for signification of His Majesty's pleasure. In para. 8 it is stated that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act directly infringes the rights granted by Regn. I of 1793 and as it repeals either directly or indirectly such regulation it is ultra vires. In para. 9 it is pleaded that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act is ultra vires as the previous sanction of the Governor under s. 299, Govt. of India Act, 1935, and of the Governor-General under s. 108 (2) (b) of that Act was not obtained before the introduction of the bill before the local legislature. In para. 10 it is stated that the powers given in Art. 41, List II, Seventh Schedule, Govt. of India Act, 1935, enable the Provincial Govt. only to tax agricultural income from estates other than those permanently settled. In para. 11 the fact that a return was demanded from them by the Income-tax Authorities is stated, and in para. 14 it is said that the necessary notice under s. 80, Civil P. C., was served on April 18, 1939, on the defendants, the Provincial Govt. through the Collector of Patna. The reliefs claimed by the plaintiffs are as follows:—

"(i) That the Court be pleased to declare that the Provincial Legislature of Bihar has or had no jurisdiction to enact the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act (Act VII of 1938) and the Bihar "Agricultural" (Amendment) Act (Act V of 1939) imposing agricultural tax on estates settled under Permanent Settlement Regn. I of 1793 so long as the said Regulation stands unrepealed. (ii) That the Court be further pleased to declare that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax (Amendment) Act (Act V of 1939) being repugnant to the Permanent Settlement Regn. I of 1793 and other cognate regulations of 1793 and to other existing Indian Laws are ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature in that they seek to impose agricultural tax on permanently settled estates and are not binding on and wholly ineffective against the plaintiffs or other estates and that any act done under these acts by any officer including the issuing of and serving of notice on plaintiffs under ss. 17 (2) and 30 of Act VII of 1938 and also assessment of agricultural income-tax, as aforesaid is without jurisdiction, illegal invalid and ineffective. (iii) That the Court be pleased to grant the plaintiffs any other relief to which they in the opinion of the Court, be entitled to get."

The defendants in their written statement deny the plaintiffs' allegations and plead that the Act was validly enacted under the provisions of the Govt. of India Act, 1935. They deny that it affects in any way the terms of the Permanent Settlement Regulation and plead that the plaintiffs were rightly called upon under the provisions of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act to render a return of their income for the previous year for the purposes of assessment to Agricultural Income-tax. The defendants deny that the plaintiffs are entitled to any relief whatsoever. Certain other pleas were taken in the written statement, but as those pleas were not pressed before us it is unnecessary to set them out in this judgment.

In the Court of the Subordinate Judge the following issues were framed:—

- "1. Is the suit as framed maintainable?
2. Is the suit bad for any want of or defect in the notice under s. 80, Civil P. C.?
3. Does the impugned Acts require the previous sanctions of the Governor and the Governor-General under ss. 299 (3) and 108 (2) of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, or should they have been reserved for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure under the said Act? Was the previous sanction and approval of the Governor obtained?
4. Were the impugned Acts illegal, inoperative, repugnant and ultra vires?
5. Can the impugned Acts be questioned in the Civil Court?
6. Does Art. 41 in List II of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, empower the Provincial Legislature to make laws with respect to taxes on agricultural income arising out of estates settled under Regn. I of 1793 and other cognate regulations?
7. Are the impugned Acts an invasion on the rights of the landlords under the Permanent Settlement? If so, are they ultra vires of the Provincial Legislatures?
8. Whether the notices and the assessment under the impugned Acts are legal; operative and binding on the plaintiffs?
9. Does the Permanent Settlement create a new right or merely recognise a pre-existing right?

10....What other relief, if any, the plaintiffs are entitled to?

No evidence was called at the hearing of the suit as the defendants through the Advocate-General admitted that the plaintiffs were holders of a permanently settled estate in this Province and that they had been served with a notice by the Agricultural Income-tax Authorities calling upon them to make a return of their income under the Act. It was conceded that no such return had been made and the defendants further admitted that a valid notice under s. 80, Civil P. C., had been served upon them through the Collector of Patna as alleged by the plaintiffs. It is common ground that the plaintiffs' estate is a revenue paying one. No questions of fact are, therefore, involved in this suit and the questions to be decided are pure questions of law. I shall now deal with the issues raised in the case :

Issue No. 1.—It was not contended on behalf of the defendants that the suit was not maintainable in its present form and that being so this issue must be decided in favour of the plaintiffs.

Issue No. 2.—The defendants now admit receipt of the notice in question and, therefore, this issue must be decided in favour of the plaintiffs.

Issue No. 5.—The defendants did not contend that the validity of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act could not be questioned in a Civil Court and, therefore, this issue is decided in favour of the plaintiffs.

Issues Nos. 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10.—These issues raise the questions involved in the case and the contentions of the plaintiffs can be shortly summarised as follows :—

(1) The whole of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, 1938, is ultra vires and not binding on the plaintiffs by reason of the fact that it purports to tax a wider range of income tax than is permissible under the powers given to the Provincial Legislature by the Govt. of India Act, 1935, and further because it does not tax all agricultural income as defined in the Govt. of India Act, 1935.

(2) The said Act purports to deal with rights and privileges relating to land revenue and repeals or modifies the terms of the Permanent Settlement and as the previous sanction of the Governor was not obtained to the introduction of the bill as required by s. 299, Govt. of India Act, the Act was not validly enacted and is not binding on the plaintiffs. Further, the bill was not validly enacted as it was not reserved for the consideration of the Governor-General as required by the Instrument of Instructions issued to the Governor of the Province.

(3) The said Act purports to repeal or modify the Permanent Settlement Regulations and in particular Regn. I of 1793 which is a Act of Parliament or a Governor-General's Act. The said Act was not validly enacted by reason of the fact that the previous sanction of the Governor-General was not obtained for the introduction of the bill as required by s. 108 (2), Govt. of India Act, 1935.

(4) Even assuming the said Act to be validly enacted it does not on its true construction purport to tax agricultural income derived from permanently settled estates. The Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act is a General Act whereas the Regn. I of 1793 is a special Act and the former should not be held to repeal any provisions in the latter.

The plaintiffs' first contention is that the whole of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act of 1938 and the Amending Act of 1939 are ultra vires the powers of the Provincial Legislature because they purport to tax a wider range of income than is permissible under the powers granted to Provincial Govts. by the Govt. of India Act, 1935. The Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, 1938, purports to define "agricultural income" and it is contended that the definition contained in the Act is too wide and consequently the whole Act which deals with taxation of such income is ultra vires null and void and of no effect.

The power to impose a tax on agricultural income is given to the Provincial Govt. by s. 100, and Art. 41, List II, Seventh Schedule Govt. of India Act. Section 100 (3), Govt. of India Act is in these terms :

"Subject to the two preceding sub-sections, the Provincial Legislatures has, and the Federal Legislature has not, power to make laws for a province or any part thereof with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List II, in the said schedule (hereinafter called the Provincial Legislature List.)"

The schedule referred to is the Seventh Schedule of the Act. Article 41, List II, Seventh Schedule of the Act empower a Provincial Govt. to impose "Taxes on Agricultural Income."

Section 311 (2), Govt. of India Act, 1935, provides that unless the context otherwise requires the expression "agricultural income" means agricultural income as defined for the purposes of the enactments relating to Indian income-tax. In the Indian Income Tax Act which relates to Indian income-tax the phrase "agricultural income" is defined in s. 2 (1), of the Act. The definition is as follows:

"(a) 'Agricultural income' means any rent or revenue derived from land which is used for agricultural purpose and is either assessed to land revenue in British India or subject to a local rate assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such :

(b) Any income derived from such land by (i) agriculture, or (ii) the performance by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind of any process ordinarily employed by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind to render the produce raised or received by him fit to be taken to market, or (iii) the sale by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind of the produce raised or received by him, in respect of which no process has been performed other than a process of the nature described in sub-cl. (ii) ;

(c) any income derived from any building owned and occupied by the receiver of the rent or revenue of any such land, or occupied by the cultivator, or the receiver of rent-in-kind, of any land with respect to which, or the produce of which, any operation mentioned in sub-cl. (ii) and (iii) of cl. (b) is carried on :

Provided that the building is on or in the immediate vicinity of the land, and is a building which the receiver of the rent or revenue or the cultivator or the receiver of the rent-in-kind by reason of his connection with the land, requires as dwelling house, or as a store-house, or other out-building."

Section 110 (b) (ii) prohibits a Provincial Legislature except in so far as is expressly permitted by any subsequent provisions of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, to make any law amending any provision of the said Act.

In the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, 1938, agricultural income is defined in s. 2 (a), ss. 3 and 4 charge agricultural income derived from land in Bihar to agricultural income-tax. By s. 5, however, incomes not exceeding Rs. 5,000 are exempted. Sections 6 and 7 deal with modes of determining agricultural income, and s. 17 requires persons to render a return of their agricultural income. Section 18, deals with assessment to tax, and by s. 31 the tax assessed is made payable by the assessee in four instalments. Other sections deal with matters which are incidental to the assessment and collection of the tax which are not material for the purposes of this judgment.

"Agricultural income" is defined in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act in s. 2 (a) which is in these terms :—

" 'Agricultural income' means—

(1) any rent or income derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes, and is either assessed to land revenue in Bihar or subject to a local cess or rate assessed and collected under any Ben. Act or under any Bihar and Orissa Act or under any Bihar Act ; (2) any income derived from such land by (i) agriculture, or (ii) the performance by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind of any process ordinarily employed by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind to render the produce raised or received by him fit to be taken to market, or (iii) the sale by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind of the produce raised or received by him, in respect of which no process has been performed other than a process of the nature described in sub-cl. (ii) ;"

It will be noted, in the first place, that cl. (c) of the definitions of "agricultural income" contained in the Indian Income Tax Act is entirely omitted from the Bihar Agri.

Income Tax Act, and it was contended that such omission rendered the whole of the Act ultra vires. It was urged that the Provincial Govt. could only tax agricultural income as defined in the Indian Income Tax Act and as they had not purported to do so the Act was ultra vires. In my view the omission to include cl. (c) of the definition contained in the Indian Income Tax Act in the definition contained in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act cannot possibly make the latter Act ultra vires. In effect the Bihar Govt. are proposing to tax less than they are entitled to do. The greater must include the less, and if the Provincial Govt. are entitled to tax all agricultural income as defined in s. 2 (1), Indian Income Tax Act, then they are clearly entitled to tax a part only of such income. It is impossible to hold that the omission to tax some forms of agricultural income could render the whole of the Bihar Act ultra vires and of no effect.

In the Indian Income Tax Act definition the words used are :

" 'Agricultural income' means (a) any rent or revenue derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes....."

In the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, the words used are :

" 'Agricultural income' means any rent or income derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes....."

It was argued that there was some difference in this part of the definition, though it was not stated with any clearness as to what that distinction was. In my view the word "revenue" in the Indian Income Tax Act is used to denote income or a revenue receipt as opposed to a capital receipt, and, therefore, covers all income from agricultural land other than rent. No real distinction can be drawn between the expressions "rent or revenue" and "rent or income", and in my view it cannot be said that by the use of the words "rent or income" the Provincial Govt. are taxing something more than is permissible by the definition in the Indian Income Tax Act.

In the definition in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act the word "Bihar" is substituted for the expression "British India" which appears in the definition in the Indian Income Tax Act. This alteration was, of course, necessary to limit the application of the Provincial Act to this province and can in no way affect the validity of the Act.

It was next urged that there was a material difference in the two definitions in that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act purported to tax income from land which is either assessed to land revenue or subject to a local cess or rate assessed or collected under any Bengal Act or under any Bihar and Orissa Act or under any Bihar Act, whereas the Govt. of India Act only permitted taxation of agricultural income as defined in the Indian Income Tax Act, namely income from agricultural land which is either assessed to land revenue or subject to local rate assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such.

In the definition of "agricultural income" in the Indian Income Tax Act the land must be assessed to land revenue or must be subject to a local rate, whereas in the definition in the Bihar Act the land may be either assessed to land revenue or subject to a local cess or rate. In my judgment the addition of the word "cess" in the definition in the Bihar Act does not widen the range of income taxable. The expression "local rate" is wide enough to cover cess which is a term used in this province for local rates levied on immovable property for the benefit of local authorities. That being so, the addition of the words "local cess" in the definition of "agricultural income" given in the Bihar Act does not affect the matter in any way and does not in any way extend the field of taxation.

A more substantial point urged on behalf of the plaintiffs is that income from revenue free agricultural lands may be taxable under the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act though such would not be agricultural income within the definition given in the Indian Income Tax Act. Under the Indian Income Tax Act income from revenue free agricultural land can only be regarded as "agricultural income" if the land is subject to a local rate assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such, whereas under the Bihar Act income from revenue free agricultural land would be agricultural income if it was derived from land subject to a local rate or cess assessed and collected under the provisions of certain local acts, no matter how such local rate or cess was assessed or collected or by whom. In other words, in the definition contained in the Indian Income Tax Act the local rate must be assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such, whereas under the Bihar Act the local rate or cess may be assessed or collected by persons other than officers of the Crown. It is said that cess in this province is not assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such.

As I have stated earlier, the lands in this case are revenue paying lands and are clearly within both the definitions; but it is contended that if it is established that the definition in the Bihar Act is wider than that given in the Indian Income Tax Act, the whole Act must be declared ultra vires and, therefore, would not be applicable even to this case where the lands are revenue paying lands.

In order to ascertain whether definition of "agricultural income" in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act is wider in its scope than that given in the Indian Income Tax Act, it will be necessary shortly to consider the provisions of the Cess Act (Ben. Act IX of 1880) under which local cess is collected in this province. If under the provisions of that Act local cess is assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such, then there would be no material difference between the two definitions. Section 5 of the Cess Act makes all immovable property in the province liable to a local cess. Part II of the Act deals with the mode of assessment. By s. 12 the Board of Revenue may order a valuation or re-valuation of property and then follow provisions as to returns to be rendered by holders of such immovable property. If returns are not furnished, the Collector is required under s. 21 of the Act to make such valuation. Where returns are untrue or incorrect the Collector can value under s. 22 and may recover the expenses of such valuation under s. 23. Sections 24 and 25 et seq further deal with the Collector's powers in relation to valuation and by s. 37 the Collector may reduce a valuation and make a valuation and assess and levy cess upon any estate or tenure which for any reason whatever has been omitted from the valuations and assessments for the time being in force or which was not in existence when such valuation or assessment was made.

Chapter III of Part II of the Act deals with the rate and levy of cess. Section 38 provides that the local cess shall be levied at such rate as may be determined for such year by the District Board, and s. 40 provides for the publication of the rate and the levying of the cess.

By the terms of this section it is clear that this duty devolves upon the Collector. Section 41 deals with payment of cess by holders of estates. Section 98 provides that every amount due or which may be due to the Collector under the provisions of the Act in respect of any arrears of cess may be realized by such Collector in the manner provided for the realisation of a public demand.

Section 4 defines "Collector" and the term includes any person specially invested with the powers of a Collector for the purposes of this Act. By s. 100 the Board of Revenue may at any time invest any person with the powers of a Collector under the Act such powers to be exercised by such person under the control or supervision of the Collector or independently of such control and supervision, as the Board of Revenue shall direct.

Section 9 of the Act provides that the proceeds of the local cess in each district shall be paid into the district fund of the district, and "district fund" is defined in s. 4 as meaning the fund formed under s. 52 of the Ben. Local Self-Govt. Act of 1885.

From these provisions it is clear that the rate of cess to be levied is fixed by the District Board and the proceeds are paid into a district fund. It is, however, clear that the assessment and collection of cess is ordinarily made by the Collector, and it is conceded that a Collector is an officer of the Crown. It is, however, urged that when the Collector is acting under the Cess Act he is not acting as an officer of the Crown but as an officer or servant of the District Board. What he collects he pays not into any Crown or Govt. fund but into the district fund, and that being so, it is urged that he is acting not as a Collector and not as an officer of the Crown as such but as an officer of the local authorities. In my judgment, however, the Collector, when he performs his duties under the Cess Act is in no way a servant of the District Boards. All the latter have to do is to determine the rate of cess, and when once that is done they appear to have nothing further to do with the matter. Questions of valuation, assessment and collection are matters entirely for the Collector, and the act makes him in no way responsible to the District Boards. He does not act under their supervision but under the supervision of the higher Govt. authorities: see s. 105 (b). This sub-section places the Collector under the supervision of the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue. There appears to be no definition of the expression "officer of the Crown", but that expression as used in the Indian Income Tax Act clearly covers a Collector. The latter is in one sense an officer of the Provincial Govt., but there can be no doubt that in India he is also an "officer of the Crown." Under the present administration at least all the senior "Officers of Govt." are "officers of the Crown" as that expression is understood in this country. In my judgment when the Collector performs the duties cast upon him by the Cess Act he performs them as Collector that is, as an officer of the Crown and not as an agent of the local authorities.

The Act, however, does provide that persons other than Collectors can perform the duties of a Collector under the Act. Section 100 empowers the Board of Revenue at any time to invest any person with the powers of a Collector under Part II of the Act which includes powers of assessing and collecting cess, such persons, it is said, cannot possibly be officers of the Crown and are not acting as such when performing their duties under the Act. What s. 100 of the Act empowers the Board of Revenue to do is to invest a person with the powers of a Collector under the Act. Once such a person is invested with such powers, he is, as far as those duties are concerned, a Collector, and he performs his duties not as a servant or agent of the District Boards but as a Collector. In my view, even such a person invested by the Board of Revenue must be regarded as a Collector and he performs his duties as a Collector, that is, as an officer of the Crown as such. That being so, it appears to me that cess in this province is assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such and that being so there is no real difference between the two definitions as far as the assessment and collection of cess is concerned.

Cess, however, is not payable in respect of any estate within the limits of a municipality—see the present proviso to s. 2 of the Cess Act. Such lands however are assessed to local rates—see s. 98 and the following sections of the Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act (Act VII of 1922). These rates are not collected by the Collector but are collected by officers or servants of the municipality—see s. 120 and the following sections of the Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act. It is, therefore, contended, that the definition of "agricultural income" in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act covers income from revenue-free agricultural land in a municipality, whereas the definition in the Indian Income Tax Act does not. This contention is well-founded. Revenue free agricultural land in a municipality is subject to a local rate collected under a Bihar and Orissa Act, and, therefore, comes within the definition given in the Agri. Income Tax Act. As the local rate, however, is collected by the servants of the municipality and by the officers of the Crown as such, the income derived from such lands is not within the definition of agricultural income given in the Indian Income Tax Act.

No evidence has been led before us with a view to showing that there is any revenue free agricultural land within municipalities in this Province though doubtless there must be such land. However, the income arising from such land must be small, and it seems clear that the framers of the definition in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act have overlooked this matter.

As the definition of the "agricultural income" given in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act may include income which is not included in the expression "agricultural income" as defined by the Indian Income Tax Act, it is argued that the whole of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act is ultra vires and, therefore, not binding upon the plaintiffs who are themselves clearly within both definitions as they pay revenue for their lands.

It was also contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the Act was ultra vires because it purported to tax the agricultural income of tenure-holders and raiyats of revenue free lands upon which cess was payable. It was urged that such income did not fall within the ambit of the definition of "agricultural income" in the Indian Income Tax Act but that it was within the definition of such income given in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. The argument was that tenure-holders and raiyats of revenue free lands pay cess not to the Collector but to the person from whom they hold their interests.

Section 41, Cess Act, makes tenure-holders and raiyats liable to pay cess but in their case the cess is not collected by the Collector but is payable by the tenure-holder to the proprietor and by the raiyat to the proprietor or tenure-holder as the case may be. Such cess, therefore, can be said to be assessed and collected under a Ben. Act, but it cannot be said to be cess collected by an officer of the Crown as such. That being so, it is contended that agricultural income of such tenure-holders and raiyats is taxable under the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act though such income is not within the definition given in the Govt. of India Act, 1935, and the Indian Income Tax Act.

The income of a raiyat does not fall naturally within s. 2 (a) (1) of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act but rather falls within s. 2 (1) (a) (2) of that Act. His income is derived from land by agriculture and clearly falls within the definitions given in both Acts.

A tenure-holder of revenue free land not himself cultivating lands does derive income from land used for agriculture upon which cess is payable by the proprietor and that cess is assessed and collected by the Collector who is an officer of the Crown, and, as I have already held, it is assessed and collected by the Collector as such. Therefore, income of tenure-holders of revenue free land falls within the definition given in both the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act and the Indian Income Tax Act and, therefore, the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act cannot possibly be held to be ultra vires upon this ground.

The only instance, therefore, where the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act taxes income not within the definition of agricultural income given in the Indian Income Tax Act is in the case of revenue free lands in a municipality. Can this render the whole Act ultra vires? As I have stated, there can be but little of such income, but that is said to be wholly immaterial. The definition of "agricultural income" it is argued, permeates the whole Act affects all its provisions. It is contended that it is impossible to separate such part of the definition in the Bihar Act as offends against the provisions of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, from the remainder and that being so the whole Act must be held to be ultra vires. The Court, it is urged, cannot substitute the definition of "agricultural income" given in the Indian Income Act for that given in the Bihar Act, as, such definition was never made part of the Act by the Local Legislature and was never assented by the Governor. The definition of "agricultural income" is so inextricably mixed up with the other provisions of the Act that is impossible to sever the offending portion of the definition, and that being so, the whole Act must be declared ultra vires.

Reliance was placed on two recent cases of the Privy Council, the first of which is Attorney General of Canada v. Attorney General for Ontario (1), in which it was held that the Employment and Social Insurance Act, 1935, of the Parliament of Canada, which in substance provided for a system of compulsory unemployment insurance throughout Canada, was ultra vires of the Dominion Parliament. In pith and substance the Act was an Insurance Act affecting the civil rights of employers and employed in each province and was accordingly within the exclusive competence of the Provincial Legislature under s. 92, head 13, of the British North America Act, 1867 which provided that, 'in each Province the Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to... (13) Property and civil rights in the Province'. It was held that the Act was ultra vires by reason of the fact that the other parts of the Act were so inextricably mixed up with the insurance provisions of Part III that it was impossible to sever them.

The other case relied upon by the plaintiffs was Attorney-General for British Columbia v. Attorney-General of Canada (2), in which it was also held that the offending portion of the Natural Products Marketing Act, 1934, as amended by the Natural Products Marketing Act, 1935, was so inextricably interwoven with the other portions of the Act that the whole Act must be held to be ultra vires.

In my view, however, it is possible in the present case to hold that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, in so far as it taxes agricultural income falling within the definition given in the Indian Income Tax Act, is intra vires and only ultra vires in so far as it taxes income which falls outside the definition of "agricultural income" given in the Act. It is in my judgment, open to this Court so to limit the definition given in the Bihar Act as to bring it within the competence of the local Legislature.

In Macleod v. Attorney-General for New South Wales (3), their Lordships of the Privy Council construed a definition of "bigamy" given in s. 54 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1883, so as to bring the Act within the competence of the New South Wales Legislature. Section 54 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1883, enacted that "Whosoever being married marries another person during the life of the former husband or wife, whosoever such second marriage takes place, shall be liable to penal servitude for seven years."

Their Lordships held that these words must be intended to apply to those actually within the jurisdiction of the Legislature, and consequently that there was no jurisdiction in the Colony to try the appellant for the offence of bigamy alleged to have been committed in the United States. Their Lordships construed the words "whosoever being married" as meaning "whosoever being married, and who is amenable at the time of the offence committed, to the jurisdiction of the Colony of New South Wales" and construed "whosoever" as meaning "where-soever in this Colony the offence is committed".

The Advocate-General who appeared for the Province also relied on Great West Saddlery Co. v. The King (4) and the New Castle and Humber River Steamship Co. Ltd. v. Attorney-General for the Commonwealth (5) in which it was held that when the offending portions of an Act were severable only such portions should be held to be ultra vires and the remainder of the Act should be held to be intra vires.

Further, it seems clear from a recent decision of the Federal Court that in a case such as the present one the whole Act should not be held to be ultra vires. In Subrahmanyam Chettiar v. Muthuswamy Goundan (6) the question arose whether the Mad. Agri. Relief Act, 1938, was ultra vires the powers of the Provincial Legislature. By the terms of that section the Courts were entitled to interfere with and reduce interest on loans granted to agriculturists. It was contended that the Act was ultra vires by reason of the fact that it empowered Courts to reduce interest on bills of exchange and promissory notes which were subjects in the Federal list and which could not be affected in any way by legislation of a Provincial Legislature. The Federal Court (Sulaiman, J. dissenting) held that on the facts of that particular case the question whether the Act was ultra vires or not did not arise. Sulaiman, J., however, held that the Act was ultra vires in so far as it purported to deal with interest on negotiable instruments but only to that extent. The Act applied to all debts payable by an agriculturist and "debt" was defined as meaning any liability in cash or kind, whether secured or unsecured, due from an agriculturist, whether payable under a decree or order of a Civil or Revenue Court or otherwise. The definition of debt was wide enough to cover debts due on negotiable instruments, and Sulaiman, J. was of opinion that in so far as it dealt with such debts the Act was ultra vires but only to that extent. Varadachariar, J., though he held that the point did not strictly arise, observed at p. 192* :

"The argument of total invalidity need not be dealt with at any length, not only because it was not seriously pressed, but also because there is little force in it. If an enactment deals in part with matters beyond the competence of the Legislature which enacted it, it must be held to be wholly invalid only in cases which the valid and invalid provisions are inseparably intermixed or the 'innocent' provisions are merely ancillary to the offending provisions. This cannot be said to be the position in the present case. Further, as there is no provision in the Act dealing in terms with negotiable instruments, any objection based on the wide scope of the Act may be obviated by so interpreting the general terms used in the Act as to limit them to cases with which alone the Legislature was competent to deal."

From these observations it would appear that Varadachariar, J. would also have been prepared to hold that even if the provisions of the Mad. Agri. Relief Act dealt with matters upon which the Provincial Legislature could not legislate, nevertheless the whole Act would not be invalid upon that ground. The Act would only be ultra vires in so far as it purported to deal with matters outside the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislature.

In Shyama Kant Lal v. Rambhajan Singh (7) Sulaiman, J. observed :—

"It is a well-established principle that if the invalid part of an Act is really separate in its operation from other parts and the rest are not inseparably connected with it then only such part is invalid, unless of course the whole object of the Act would be frustrated by the partial exclusions. If the subject which is beyond the legislative power is perfectly distinct from that which is within such power the Act can be ultra vires in the former while intra vires in the latter.

The test is said to be whether a statute with the invalid portions omitted would be a substantially different law as to the subject-matter dealt with by that remained from what it would be with the omitted portions forming part of it." See King v. Commonwealth Court of Conciliation (8).

It appears to me that these principles should be followed in this case. A Court might be bound to hold that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act was ultra vires in so far as it purported to tax income from revenue free estates in a Municipality, but, on the other hand, the Court could and should hold that in so far as it deals with other agricultural income the Act is intra vires. To hold that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, 1938, does not tax agricultural income from revenue free lands in a Municipality, would not affect the remainder of the Act which would apply to all other income rightly within its scope.

For these reasons I am satisfied that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, 1938, and the amending Act cannot be held to be ultra vires because the definition given in that Act does cover some income not falling within the definition of "agricultural income" in the Indian Income Tax Act.

The next contention urged by the plaintiffs was that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, 1938, was ultra vires in so far as it purported to tax income of zamindars holding permanently settled estates and in the alternative it was argued that if the Act is not ultra vires it should be held that on its true construction it did not tax income of zamindars holding permanently settled estates but only the income of zamindars holding estates temporarily settled. Shortly stated, the argument was that the rights and privileges of permanently settled zamindars are governed by the Permanent Settlement Regulation, Regulation I of 1793, which is an Act of Parliament or a Governor-General's Act. By s. 108 (2) no Provincial Legislature can enact Legislature which repeals, amends or is repugnant to any provision of an Act of Parliament or any Governor-General's Act with the previous sanction of the Governor-General. As the previous sanction of the Governor-General was not given in this case, the Provincial Legislature had no power to legislate in a manner affecting the rights and privileges of permanently settled zamindars. It was also contended that by reason of s. 299, Govt. of India Act, no bill affecting the zamindars' rights or privileges in respect of land revenue could be introduced in the Local Legislature without the previous sanction of the Governor and as no such sanction was given the Act was not validly passed.

Further, it was argued that in assenting to the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act His Excellency the Governor had acted contrary to the instalment of instructions issued to him and therefore the Act had not been validly passed.

In dealing with these contentions, it will be necessary to consider what is the true meaning of the Permanent Settlement Regulation in order to see whether the provisions of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act are in conflict with the provisions contained in such Regulations and whether the Act repeals, varies or modifies those provisions in any way.

Mr. P. R. Das who appeared for the plaintiffs in a detailed and elaborate argument on this part of the case invited us to come to a finding as to the precise legal position of zamindars before the Permanent Settlement Regulations came in to force. Mr. Das cited passages from numerous authoritative works and original documents such as Field's Regulations of the Bengal Code, Phillips's Land Tenures of Lower Bengal, Minutes of the Marquis Cornwallis and Sir John Shore. In my view it is not necessary to consider whether the zamindars were or were not proprietors of the land in the true sense of the term before the Permanent Settlement Regulations, and I am fortified in this view by an observation of Lord Russell in the case of Prabhatchandra Barua v. King-Emperor (9), in which their Lordships were called upon to consider the effect of the Permanent Settlement Regulations. I shall have to deal with this case at some length later in the judgment, but at this stage it is only necessary to refer to Lord Russell's observation relating to this historical argument. At p. 440* he observed :

"Incidentally to this argument, the Board was invited to consider and, indeed, pronounce upon the question, mainly historical, of the position of the governing authority immediately before the Permanent Settlement in regard to ownership of the land or of some proprietary interest therein. The attention of their Lordships was called to the various views expressed in such works and documents as Field's 'Regulations of the Bengal Code' Phillips's 'Land Tenures of Lower Bengal' and Shore's Minutes. Their Lordships were also referred to certain reported decisions of the Courts. Their Lordships, however, are of opinion that there is here no occasion for any pronouncement by them upon the question of the exact nature of the rights and interests in relation to the land which existed in the Governing Authority before 1793, but that this appeal falls to be determined upon a consideration of the language of the Regulations and of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922."

It will appear later that their Lordships of the Privy Council were called upon in the case of Prabhatchandra Barua v. King-Emperor (9) to consider much the same argument as that addressed to us in this case, and in my judgment it is unnecessary in this case to come to any definite conclusions as to the respective rights of the Governing Authority and the zamindars in the land before the Permanent Settlement Regulations, and this case as Prabhatchandra Barua's case (9) falls to be decided upon a consideration of the Regulations themselves.

The state of affairs immediately preceding the Permanent Settlement Regulations is clearly described by Ghosh, J. in the case of Emperor v. Prabhat Chandra Barua (10). At p. 895 he observed :

Bihar and Orissa by the Dewany Grant of 1765, one settlement of land revenue only, that of 1772, was concluded by Warren Hastings for a term of five years and this was made chiefly with farmers, to the exclusion of the hereditary land-holders. With this exception, the settlements of revenue, mal and sayer, were in general adjusted from year to year, in some instances with the land-holders and in others with farmers, e. g. the settlement for 1777, 1778, 1779 and 1780. When the zemindars or land-holders declined to enter into managements in respect of the revenue demanded from them, the rents payable by the under-tenants were collected immediately from them under what was known as khas management by the officers of Govt., an allowance, usually one-tenth of the actual receipts from the lands, when held khas, being given to the dispossessed zemindar or land-holder. It was a system which was described by the Court of Directors as inimical to the general prosperity of the country and a striking provision in Pitt's India Act of 1784 (24 Geo. III, C. XXV) declared that 'and whereas complaints have prevailed, that divers Rajas, zemindars polygars, taluqdars and other native land-holders within the British territories in India have been unjustly deprived of or compelled to abandon and relinquish their respective lands, jurisdiction, rights, and privileges, or that the tributes, rents, and services required to be by them paid or performed for their respective possession to the said united Company, are become grievous and oppressive; And whereas the principles of justice, and the honour of this country, require that such complaint should be forthwith enquired into and fully investigated, and if founded in truth effectually redressed. Be it, therefore, enacted that the Court of Directors of the said united Company shall, and they are hereby accordingly, required forthwith to take the said matters into their serious consideration, and to adopt take and pursue such methods enquiring into the causes, foundation and truth of the said complaints, and for obtaining a full and perfect knowledge of the same and of all circumstances relating thereto, as the said Court of Directors shall think best adapted for that purpose; and thereupon, according to the circumstances of the respective cases of the said Rajas, zamindars etc. to give orders and instructions to the several Govts. and Presidencies in India, for effectually redressing, in such manner as shall be consistent with justice and the laws and customs of the country, all injuries and wrongs which the Rajas, zamindars, polygars, talukdars and other native land holders, may have sustained unjustly in the manner aforesaid and for the settling and establishing upon principles of moderation and justice, according to the laws and constitution of India, the permanent rules by which their respective tributes, rents and services shall be in future rendered and paid to the said united Company."

Thereafter enquiries and investigations followed and in 1790-91 a complete Code of Regulation for the conclusion of a new settlement of the land revenue for Bengal, Bihar and Orissa was promulgated by Lord Cornwallis, Decennial Settlement of 1790-91 was made permanent by Regn. I of 1793. The settlement embraced, roughly speaking, the tracts of the country now comprised in the divisions of Burdwan, the Presidency, Rajshahi, Dacca, Chittagong, Patna and Bhagalpur, exclusive of part of the Santal Parganas. It also extended to Hazaribagh and Manbhum districts in the Chhota Nagpur Division and to Jalpaiguri and Goalpara, then forming part of the Rangpur Collectorate.

From the above it will be seen that conditions were somewhat chaotic before the Permanent Settlement Regulations were enacted. The zamindar was never certain as to what revenue would be demanded from him. Whenever it was thought that his position had improved, re-assessment was made and a larger sum demanded from him as revenue. In cases where the zamindar refused to pay he was dispossessed and the land given to farmers or administered directly by Govt. Officers, the zamindar being given a small sum for his maintenance. This state of affairs was regarded by the British Parliament and by the Court of Directors of the East India Company as inimical to the best interests of the Company itself and of the inhabitants of the territory administered by the Company. In order to remedy the matters, Lord Cornwallis came to this country in 1786 and immediately caused investigation to be made into the question of land revenue. As a result of prolonged and detailed investigation he came to the conclusion that it was desirable that the lands in Bengal, Bihar and Orissa should be permanently settled with the zamindars which would give them fixity of tenure and render certain the jama to be thereafter payable by them. Lord Cornwallis appears to have been determined that zamindars should no longer be penalised by increased assessments whenever they were able to improve their estates and their financial condition.

In the year 1793 a large number of Regulations were enacted giving effect to this policy of Permanent Settlement, but the most important Regulation I of 1793. In argument before us other Regulations have been referred to; but it appears to me that this case must be decided upon the construction to be given to Regulation I of 1793 and particularly Art. 6 thereof as observed by Lord Russell in the case of Prabhatchandra Barua v. King-Emperor (9) at p. 444*.

"In regard to this part of the case, their Lordships desire to make this observation. The Ben. Regulations of 1793 are lengthy and numerous. In the course of the arguments before the Board attempts were made to support the respective arguments by a phrase picked from one Regulation or a passage chosen from another, even though the particular Regulation only purported to deal with some matter incidental to the Permanent Settlement. In the opinion of their Lordships, this part of the case falls to be determined primarily upon a consideration of the language of Regulation I of 1793. While bearing in mind the passages in order Regulations, to which their attention was drawn, their Lordships feel that the above mentioned Regulation is the master Regulation for the immediate purpose before the Board, and that its provisions constitute the overriding feature in the present case."

• In that case their Lordships were called upon to consider what was the precise assurance or undertaking given to the zamindars by the Permanent Settlement; and in the view of their Lordships such would have to be gathered from Regulation I of 1793. In my judgment the observations of Lord Russell apply with equal force to the present case, and this case also falls to be decided primarily upon a consideration of the language of Regulation I of 1793.

Regulation I of 1793 bears date May 1, 1793, but is retrospective and operates as from March 22, 1793. The last mentioned date was the date of a proclamation, to certain articles of which the Regulation gave legislative effect.

The material provisions of Regulation I of 1793 are as follows :

"I. The following articles of the proclamation relative to the limitation of the public demand upon the lands, addressed by the Governor-General in Council to the zemindars, independent talukdars, and other actual proprietors of land paying revenue to Govt., in the Provinces of Bengal Bihar and Orissa, are hereby enacted into a Regulation, which is to have force and effect from March 2, 1793, the date of the proclamation.

II. Article I.—In the original Regulations for the decennial settlement of the public revenues of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, passed for those provinces, respectively on September 18, 1789, November 25, 1789 and February 10, 1790, it was notified to the proprietors of land, with or on behalf of whom a settlement might be concluded, that the jama assessed upon their lands under those Regulations would be continued after the expiration of ten years and remain unalterable for ever, provided such continuance should meet with the approbation of the Honourable Court of Directors for the affairs of the East India Company, and not otherwise.

III. Article II.—The Marquis Cornwallis, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, Governor-General in Council, now notified to all zemindars, independent talukdars and other actual proprietors of land paying revenue to Govt., in the provinces of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, that he has been empowered by the Honourable Court of Directors for the affairs of the East India Company to declare the jama, which has been or may be assessed upon their lands under the Regulations above mentioned, fixed for ever.

IV. Article III.—The Governor-General in Council accordingly declares to the zemindars, independent talukdars and other actual proprietors of land with or on behalf of whom a settlement has been concluded under the Regulations above mentioned, that at the expiration of the term of the settlement no alteration will be made in the assessment which they have respectively engaged to pay, but that they and their heirs and lawful successors will be allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever.

V. Article IV.—The lands of some zemindars, independent talukdars and other actual proprietors of land, having been held khas, or let in farm, in consequence of their refusing to pay the assessment required of them under the Regulations above mentioned the Governor-General in Council now notifies to the zemindars, independent talukdars and other actual proprietors of land whose lands are held khas, that they shall be restored to the management of their lands, upon their agreeing to the payment of the assessment which has been or may be required of them, in conformity to the Regulations abovementioned, and that no alteration shall afterwards be made in that assessment, but that they and their heirs and lawful successors, shall be permitted to hold their respective estates at such assessment for ever; and he declares to the zemindars, independent talukdars and other actual proprietors of land, whose lands have been let in farm, that they shall not regain possession of their lands before the expiration of the period for which they have been farmed (unless the farmers shall voluntarily consent to make over them the remaining term of their lease, and the Governor-General in Council shall approve of the transfer), but that the expiration of that period, upon their agreeing to the payment of the assessment which may be required of them, they shall be reinstated, and that no alteration shall afterwards be made in that assessment, but that they, and their heirs and lawful successors, shall be allowed to hold their respective estate at such assessment for ever.

VI. Article V.—In the event of the proprietary right in lands that are, or may become, the property of Govt. being transferred to individuals, such individuals and their heirs and lawful successors, shall be permitted to hold the lands at the assessment at which they may be transferred for ever.

VII. Article VI.—It is well known to the zemindars, independent talukdars and other actual proprietors of land, as well as to the inhabitants of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, in general, that from the earliest times until the present period the public assessment upon the lands has never been fixed, but that according to established usage and custom, the rulers of these provinces have from time to time demanded an increase of assessment from the proprietors of land; and that, for the purpose of obtaining this increase, not only frequent investigations have been made to ascertain the actual produce of their estates, but that it has been the practice to deprive them of the management of their lands, and either to let them in farm or to appoint officers on the part of Govt. to collect the assessment immediately from the raiyats. The Honourable Court of Directors, considering these usages and measures to be detrimental to the prosperity of the country, have with a view to promote the future ease and happiness of the people, authorised the foregoing declarations; and the zemindars, independent talukdars and other actual proprietors of land, with or on behalf of whom a settlement has been or may be concluded, are to consider these orders fixing the amount of the assessment irrevocable, and not liable to alteration by any persons whom the Court of Directors may hereafter appoint to the administration of their affairs in this country.

The Governor-General in Council trusts that the proprietors of land, sensible of the benefits conferred upon them by the public assessment being fixed for ever, will exert themselves in the cultivation of their lands under the certainty that they will enjoy exclusively the fruits of their own good management and industry, and that no demand will ever be made upon them, or their heirs or successors, by the present or any future Govt. for an augmentation of the public assessment in consequence of the improvement of their respective estates."

It was contended that this Regulation contains a promise, undertaking or assurance that the public demand would never be increased. According to the plaintiffs; this public demand was in the nature of a tax and as the agricultural Income-tax is a tax on such profits, the passing of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act is a breach of the assurance or undertaking given by Lord Cornwallis and is an attempt to repeal or modify the provisions of the Permanent Settlement Regulation. It is true that the amount of the jama fixed at the time of the Permanent Settlement was fixed after a consideration of the profits or income then derived from the land, but in my view Regn. I of 1793 contains no assurance or undertaking to the zamindars that he would for ever thereafter be immune from taxation such as that imposed by the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. The Regulation merely contains an assurance that the jama or land revenue payable by the zamindar would never be increased. It must be remembered that Regn. I of 1793, as its name implies, was a Settlement Regulation. The decennial settlement had been made for ten years, and Lord Cornwallis by the Regulation made that settlement permanent. The jama which the zamindar had engaged to pay in the decennial settlement was made permanent and was not to be increased in consequence of the improvement of the zamindars' estates. What was to be fixed for ever was the annual payment which the zamindars had undertaken to pay as a condition of holding their estates. The zamindars were recognized as proprietors, and the payment which was a condition of such recognition was declared to be for ever fixed. The effect of the Regulation is that re-assessment and re-settlement of the lands should be for ever barred and the Govt. would no longer be entitled to increase the jama by reason of an increase in the zamindar's income.

There was a considerable conflict of legal opinion in this country as to the effect of the Permanent Settlement Regulation, Regn. I of 1793; but in my view that conflict has now been set at rest by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Prabhatchandra Barua v. King-Emperor (9). In this case the income-tax authorities had assessed the appellant to income-tax under the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, in respect of income, profits and gains other than agricultural income derived from his zamindari. The assessee objected to such assessment, and the matter came before a Bench of the Calcutta High Court. As there were conflicting decisions in that Court, the matter was referred to a Full Bench consisting of five Judges. The main question to be decided in the case was whether, having regard to the terms of the Permanent Settlement Regulation, income derived from land in permanently settled estates subject to the exemption provided by the legislature was liable to assessment to income-tax. Ghose, Buckland and Panton, JJ. held that such non-agricultural income was liable to be assessed under the Indian Income Tax Act, whereas Mukerji and Suhrawardy, JJ. took a different view. On appeal to His Majesty in Council their Lordships held that while the Bengal Regulations contained assurances against any claim to an increase of the jama, based on an increase of the zamindari income, they contained no promise that zamindar should in respect of the income which he derived from the zamindari be exempted from liability to any future general scheme of property taxation, or that the income of a zamindari should not be subjected with other incomes to any future general taxation of incomes. Accordingly they held that under the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, the zamindar of a permanently settled estate was assessable to tax under the Act in respect of income, profits and gains derived from his zamindari, subject to the exemptions in s. 4 sub-s (3) of the act (agricultural income), and the assessment should be computed after making proper allowance under s. 12, sub-s. (2) in respect of the jama assessed and paid. In this case their Lordships had to consider the effect of the Permanent Settlement Regulation, Regn. I of 1793, which they pointed out was the master regulation and which contained the provisions most favourable to the assessee, the zamindar. At p. 446* Lord Russell, who delivered the opinion of the Board, observed :—

"Their Lordships, after careful consideration of the Regulations, have arrived at the conclusion that the argument of the appellant cannot succeed. They are unable to find in the Regulations any statement or assurance that a zamindar will never be liable to taxation in respect of the income derived from his zamindari, or (to put the matter from another point of view) that a zamindar will, as to so much of his property as consists of income derived from his zamindari, be exempt from schemes of taxation applicable generally to the incomes of the inhabitants of British India.

The language used in Regulation I, Art. VI, does not, in their Lordships' opinion, mean anything other than this :—"You have in the past been liable to have the amount of the jama increased according as the actual produce of the estate increased: to enable the Govt. to obtain this you have been subjected to frequent investigations to ascertain the actual produce and you have even been deprived of the management of your estates. All this shall cease. You shall have fixity of payment and fixity of tenure. If you improve the revenue of your zamindari, you shall enjoy the fruits of your improvements without fear of the Govt. claiming that because the revenue produced by the estate has increased the payment you make to Govt. as a condition of holding that estate shall be increased also.

Their Lordships have ventured to paraphrase Art. VI, but they think that their paraphrase expresses with sufficient accuracy the true intent and meaning of the article. In their Lordships' opinion, while the Regulations contain assurance against any claim to an increase of the jama based on an increase of the zamindari income, they contain no promise that a zamindar shall in respect of the income which he derives from his zamindari be exempt from liability to any future general scheme of property taxation, or that the income of a zamindari shall not be subjected with other incomes to any future general taxation of incomes.

Their Lordships agree with the views expressed by Ghose, J. in the following passage from his judgment : "There was no promise or engagement of any description whatsoever by which the Govt. of the day surrendered their right to levy a general tax upon incomes of all persons irrespective of the fact whether they are zamindars with whom the Permanent Settlement was concluded or not."

It is to be observed that a very similar view as to the true meaning of Regulation I of 1793 had been expressed in earlier cases. In Freeman v Fairli (11), the Lord Chancellor at p. 342 observes :—

"I think it is to be collected from those Regulations that the proprietors of and in India had an absolute ownership and dominion of the soil; that the soil was not vested generally in the Sovereign; that the proprietors did not hold at the will of the Sovereign; but held the property as their own with the power of disposing of it absolutely; and if not disposed of, that it descended to their families. It is liable, indeed to a tribute to the Govt. but it appears that the tribute was not fixed but was increased at the arbitrary will of the Govt. and it appears further that if the tribute was not paid Govt. had the power of taking possession of the lands for the purpose of obtaining payment. Still notwithstanding these circumstances and these charges I think it impossible to read those Regulations which were prepared obviously with great caution and consideration by persons well acquainted with the subject and possessing every means of obtaining the most accurate information on it, and as far back as 1793, without coming to the conclusion that the zamindars and the talukdars were owners of the soil subject only to a tribute such as I have stated to Govt., and it was the object of those Regulations of 1793 to make the tribute which had been considered as dependent on its amount on the will of the governing power fixed and permanent."

In Haradas Acharjya Chowdhuri v. Secretary of State for India (12), Lord Buckmaster, who delivered the judgment of the Board, at p. 601* observes : "The object of the Permanent Settlement was to confirm the zamindars in their holdings at a fixed and immovable rent." Lord Buckmaster here was, I think, using the word "rent" not in its strict sense but rather as meaning as payment which was a condition of holding the estate. In both these cases the jama is not regarded as a tax as that term is usually used but rather as a tribute or payment which was a condition of holding the estate as owners. It appears to me that the decision of their Lordships in Barua's case (9), concludes the matter and compels me to hold that the tax imposed on agricultural income by the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, 1938, is in no way an infringement of the rights granted to zamindars by the Permanent Settlement Regulations.

Counsel for the plaintiffs attempted to distinguish Prabhatchandra Barua's case (9), on the ground that it dealt with the non-agricultural income of a zamindar and not with his agricultural income, and it was urged that the case would have been decided otherwise if agricultural income was sought to be taxed. It must be remembered, however, that under the provisions of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, agricultural income as defined in that Act was expressly exempted from taxation—see s. 4 (3), of the Act; but it is clear from the question propounded that no distinction was made between agricultural and non-agricultural income. I have already set out the question which the Courts were called upon to answer, and that question was in the most general terms whether income derived from land in permanently settled estates subject to the exemptions provided by the Legislature was liable to assessment to income-tax. In their judgment their Lordships draw no distinction whatsoever between the two classes of zamindari income and hold that a tax on zamindari income is no breach of any undertaking or assurance contained in the Permanent Settlement Regulation. But for the express exemption of agricultural income contained in s. 4 (2), Indian Income Tax Act, the case would have applied with equal force to agricultural income. Counsel for the plaintiffs was compelled to concede that if the exemption of agricultural income from taxation in the Indian Income Tax Act was removed, Prabhatchandra Barua's case (9) would apply, and we would be bound to hold that agricultural as well as non-agricultural income would be taxable. It was contended however, that different principle applies when an act was passed which purported to tax agricultural income only.

It was argued that as the Bihar Act taxes agricultural income only it imposes not a tax on income but a tax on land in the nature of a public demand as that expression is used in the Permanent Settlement Regulations. It was said that income-tax is a tax on income generally without reference to its source and that a tax on income with specific reference to its source is not in reality a tax on income from that source but rather tax on the source itself. Reference was made in support of the argument to London County Council v. Attorney-General (13), in which Lord Macnaughten observed:

"Income-tax, if I may be pardoned for saying so, is a tax on income. It is not meant to be a tax on anything else. It is one tax, not a collection of taxes essentially distinct. There is no difference in kind between the duties of income-tax assessed under Schedule D and those assessed under Schedule A or any of the other schedules of the charge. One man has fixed property another lives on his wits; each contributes to the tax if his income is above the prescribed limit. The standard of the assessment varies according to the nature of the source from which taxable income is derived. That is all."

I must confess that I am unable to follow this contention. The charging section of the Indian Income Tax Act is s. 6 and that in terms charges all income from five sources, and it is clear that the tax is not a tax on each of these five sources but a tax on income derived from any one or more of the sources. The tax imposed by the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act is a tax on income though limited to income derived from agricultural sources. It is in no sense a tax on the land because it is imposed on the income derived from the land and not on the land itself. If there is no income, there is no tax, and the greater the income the greater the yield from the tax, whereas if the tax was imposed on the land itself it would be payable irrespective of the rise or fall in income. A tax on land which is based on valuation or such like is not like the present tax which is a variable one rising and falling with the income which is derived from the land. In my judgment the present Act clearly imposed a tax on income and is in no sense a land tax or any payment in the nature of a jama.

It was further argued that even if the tax could be regarded as a tax on income the principles laid down in the Prabhatchandra Barua's case (9) could have no application to the present case. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have held that the Permanent Settlement Regulation contained no assurance that zamindars would be immune from any general scheme of property taxation or would not be liable with other citizens to a general tax on income. It is urged that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act imposes a tax on the assesses in their capacity as zamindars and not as members of the public. The tax, it is said, is a tax on a particular class of persons and is in short a zamindar's tax. As it is specifically directed at the zamindars the principles of Barua's case (9) cannot apply, and the tax must be regarded as a breach of the assurance contained in the Permanent Settlement Regulations.

It is clear, however, that the tax imposed by the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act is not a tax on zamindars only. It imposed a tax on income derived from lands used for agriculture and from agriculture. Tenure-holders and rai-yats are liable to taxation just as much as zamindars and zamindars of non-permanently settled areas are in the same position as zamindars holding permanently settled estate. The Act applies generally to persons deriving income from agriculture and lands used for agriculture. It does not create a special tax upon the income of permanently settled zamindars. Further this Act merely abolishes the exemption in favour of agricultural income contained in the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922. What was specifically exempted from taxation is now made liable to taxation, and persons deriving income from agriculture and lands used for agriculture are placed on a similar footing to persons deriving income from other sources. There is only one difference, and that is that the tax on agricultural income is to be imposed under the terms of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, not by the Central Govt. which imposes income-tax generally but by Provincial Govts. The result of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act is that zamindars in this province like all other citizens, are now liable to income-tax on all their income, though the tax on such portion of their income as is derived from agriculture or from lands used for agriculture is levied and collected not by the Central authority but by the province. In my view no valid distinction can be drawn between the present case and Barua's case (9) and that being so, it cannot be said that the Bihar Agricultural Income-tax does in any way purport to affect, vary or repeal any provision in the Permanent Settlement Regulations. That being so, plaintiffs' claim for the declarations set out in their plaint must fail.

Assuming, however, I am wrong in holding that the Bihar Agricultural Income-tax does not modify or vary in any way the terms of the Permanent Settlement Regulations, can it be said that the Act is invalid?

Section 299 (3), Govt. of India Act, 1935, requires the previous sanction of the Governor of a Province for legislation extinguishing or modifying rights or privileges in respect of land revenue, and it is common ground that no such previous sanction was obtained. The Governor of the Province, however, assented to the bill, and by reason of s. 109 (2) (a) Govt. of India Act, an Act cannot be held to be invalid by reason of the failure to obtain the Governor's sanction before the bill was introduced. That subsection expressly provides that no Act of a Provincial Legislature and no provision in any such Act shall be invalid by reason only that some previous sanction of the Governor was not given if the Governor subsequently assented to such Act. It is, therefore, clear that the Act cannot be held to be invalid by reason of s. 299, Govt. of India Act.

Paragraph XVIII of the Instrument of Instructions to Governors requires a Governor to reserve for consideration of the Governor-General any bill which would repeal or be repugnant to any provision of law in British India or any bill which would alter the character of the Permanent Settlement. It is conceded that the Governor of this Province did not reserve this bill for the consideration of Governor-General; but even assuming that the bill does alter the character of the Permanent Settlement, such failure to reserve the bill for consideration would not make the present Act invalid. The Instrument of Instructions to Governor was issued under the provisions of s. 53, Govt. of India Act, and sub-s. (2) of that section provides that "the validity of anything done by the Governor of a Province shall not be called in question on the ground that it was done otherwise than in accordance with any Instrument of Instructions issued to him."

There is no provision in the Govt. of India Act itself requiring such a bill to be reserved for the consideration of the Governor-General, and that being so the Act cannot be held to be invalid by reason of the Governor's failure to reserve the bill as directed by para. XVIII of the Instrument of Instructions.

On the other hand, however, if the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, 1938, varies, modifies or repeals any portion of the Permanent Settlement Regulation I of 1793 the Act would require the previous sanction of the Governor-General if the Permanent Settlement Regulation I of 1793 is an Act of Parliament. Section 108 (2), Govt. of India Act provides that

"unless the Governor-General in his discretion thinks fit to give his previous sanction there shall not be introduced into, or moved in a Chamber of Provincial Legislature any Bill or amendment which (a) repeals, amends, or is repugnant to any provisions of any act of Parliament extending to British India....."

It is argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that Regulation I of 1793 is an Act of Parliament extending to British India. On behalf of defendant, however, it was pointed out that British India is defined in s. 311 (1) Govt. of India Act, in these terms:—

"British India" means all territories for the time being comprised within the Governor's Provinces and Chief Commissioners' Provinces.

The Permanent Settlement Regulation of 1793 applies in the main to Bengal, Bihar, Assam and Orissa and does not apply to very large tracts, territory within other Governors' Provinces and Chief Commissioner's Provinces. That being so, it was argued that even if the settlement was an Act of Parliament s. 108 (2) (a) would have no application whatsoever. The plaintiffs contended that the expression "British India" in s. 108 (2), Govt. of India Act, must mean British India or any part thereof; but when such was intended the Legislature has in other sections used appropriate language. In s. 110, for example, it is provided that "nothing in this Act shall be taken (a) to affect the power of Parliament to legislate for British India, or any part thereof."

If the expression British India meant British India or any part thereof, it would be necessary to add the words "or any part thereof" in this particular section. It may, therefore, be argued that previous sanction of the Governor-General is only necessary when a Provincial Act is repugnant to the provisions of an Act of Parliament affecting the whole of the British India and that such sanction is not necessary if the Act of Parliament applied to a province or some of the provinces only in British India.

I do not find it necessary to decide this question because I am unable to hold that Regulation I of 1793 is an Act of Parliament. "Act of Parliament" is not defined in the Govt. of India Act, and Regulation I of 1793 cannot be said to have been enacted in the usual manner in which an Act of Parliament is passed. In the ordinary meaning of the expression an "Act of Parliament" is an act which has been passed by the House of Commons, the House of Lords and assented to by the King, Regulation I of 1793 was an enactment of the Governor-General in Council in India and was never before Parliament in England. It is clear, however, that this Regulation together with the other Permanent Settlement Regulation were enacted pursuant to the provisions and directions contained in s. 39, Pitt's India Act of 1784 (24 Geo. III, c. 25). That section, which I have, earlier in this judgment quoted at length, required the authorities in India to give orders

"for settling and establishing upon principals of moderation and justice, according to the laws and constitution of India, the permanent rules by which their respective tributes, rents and services of the Rajas, zamindars, polygars, talukdars and other native holder should be in future rendered and paid to the United Company."

As I have already stated, the Marquis Cornwallis arrived in India in 1786 and immediately instituted enquiries into the land system and the assessment of revenue, and in 1793 the Permanent Settlement Regulations, including Regulation I of 1793 were promulgated by the Governor-General in Council, Regulation I of 1793 is headed

"A Regulation for enacting into a Regulation certain articles of a Proclamation, bearing dated March 22, 1793, passed by the Governor-General in Council, on May 1, 1793."

In para. 1 of the Regulation it is stated that "the following articles.....are hereby enacted into a Regulation which is to have force and effect from March 22, 1793, the date of the proclamation."

It is clear, therefore, that the Regulation purports to be an enactment of the Governor-General in Council and not an enactment of the Parliament in England.

The Governor-General in Council did have legislative powers which had been granted by s. 36, East India Company Act 1773 (13 Geo. III, c. 63). By that section the Governor-General in Council was empowered "to make and issue such rules, ordinances, and regulations for the good order and civil Government of the said United Company's settlement at Fort William aforesaid, and other factories and places subordinate or to be subordinate thereto, as shall be deemed just and reasonable, (such rules, ordinance, and regulations, not being repugnant to the laws of the realm), and to set, impose, inflict and levy, reasonable fines and forfeitures for the breach or non-observance of such rules, ordinances and regulation; but nevertheless, the same or any of them, shall not be valid or of any force or effect, until the same shall be duly registered and published in the said supreme Court of Judicature, which shall be, by the said new charter, established with the consent and approbation of the said Court....."

It is said that this provision only empowered the Governor-General in Council to legislate for the actual settlement in Calcutta; but it is to be observed that the power was given not only to legislate for the settlement at Fort William but also other factories and places subordinate or to be subordinate thereto. It may be that this English Act did not empower the Governor-General to enact the Permanent Settlement Regulations, and such appears to be the view of any authors of works on the Indian Constitution.

It must be remembered however, that at this time the East India Company were de facto sovereign if not de jure. It has been said that the Company exercised sovereign powers in trust for the Crown. Be that as it may, they were in fact the sovereign of the territories affected by the Permanent Settlement and as such undoubtedly claimed the right to legislate for such territory and its inhabitants.

It appears to me that the Marquis Cornwallis must have enacted these Regulations by virtue of the powers of legislation given to or assumed by the Governor-General in Council, and that being so, it cannot be said that the Permanent Settlement Regulation I of 1793 is in any sense an Act of Parliament. The plaintiffs, however, contended that the Governor-General in Council have no such power to legislate as to enable him to enact Regulation I of 1793, consequently that Regulation must be regarded as an executive order or as a kind of Regulation or by law made in pursuance of powers given by an Act of Parliament. If such was the case, it is urged that the Regulation forms part of the Act of Parliament itself. Reliance was placed on the case of Willingale v. Noris (14) in which it was held that where a statute gives power to an authority to make regulations, a breach of the regulation so made is an offence against the provisions of the statute. In that case the Commissioners of Police were empowered to make regulations under an Act of Parliament, and it was held that a breach of those regulations was a breach of the provisions of the Act. Bigham, J. at p. 66* observed: "In my opinion to break the regulations made under the authority of a statute is to break the statute itself" and Walton, J. at p. 67* observed:

"That action gives power to make regulations and I think there is involved in this that regulations so made must be obeyed, and if so it follows that a breach of such regulations is a breach of the law contained in that section."

Another case relied upon by Counsel for the plaintiffs was Powell v. Appollo Candle Company (15) in which their Lordships of the Privy Council, held certain duties levied by an Order in Council under s. 133, Customs Regulation Act, were levied by authority of the Legislature and not of the executive. Here the section in question expressly empowered the Governor to direct a duty to be levied on substitute for dutiable articles.

In my judgment there is little in common between these cases and the enactment of the Permanent Settlement Regulation by the Governor-General in Council. The latter did have or assumed power to legislate and did legislate, though it may be that the validity of such legislation was questionable at the time it was enacted. The Permanent Settlement Regulations, however, have been regarded as validly enacted for a century and a half, and it is now too late to question their validity. As the regulations cannot be regarded an Act of Parliament, the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act is not invalid by reason of the provisions of s. 108 (2) (a) Govt. of India Act.

It was faintly argued that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act was invalid by reason of the fact that it was repugnant to a Governor-General's Act, and reliance was placed on s. 108 (2) (b) Govt. of India Act. In my view the expression Governor-General's Act in s. 108 (2) (b), refers to Acts which are contemplated in s. 44, Govt. of India Act, 1935, that is, to Acts enacted by the Governor-General after the Govt. of India Act came into force. The Permanent Settlement Regulation was in no sense an Act of the Governor-General but was an Act of the then Governor-General in Council. That being so, s. 108 (2) (b), Govt. of India Act, can in no way render the legislation invalid.

Lastly, it was contended that assuming that the provisions of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act are repugnant to Regulation I of 1793 and assuming further that the Bihar Act was validly enacted the latter Act on its true construction should not be held to repeal or affect in any way the provisions of Regulation I of 1793. It was argued that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act is general Act, whereas Regulation I of 1793 is a special Act dealing with permanently settled estates. On a true construction of the Bihar Act it was contended that this Court should hold that it applied to non-permanently settled estates only and not to permanently settled estates. In the view I have taken of the effect of Regulation I of 1793 the question as to the true construction of the Bihar Act does not really arise, but I refer to the question shortly in deference to the elaborate argument which has been addressed to us.

Regulation I of 1793 is undoubtedly a special enactment dealing with permanently settled estates, whereas the Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act deals generally with income derived from agricultural lands and from agriculture within the Province of Bihar. It must be remembered, however, that Bihar was one of the areas which was permanently settled under the Permanent Settlement Regulation and that most of the zamindars of this Province hold permanently settled estates.

The Govt. of India Act, 1935, empowers all provinces to tax agricultural income, and no distinction is drawn between Bengal, Bihar and Orissa in which lands are permanently settled and other Provinces in which lands are temporarily settled. Each province is given the right to tax agricultural income. It is clear from the provisions of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, that the British Parliament had the Permanent Settlement in mind. As I have already pointed out s. 299 affords some protection to persons enjoying privilege relating to revenue and permanently settled zamindars do enjoy such privilege, though not to such an extent as zamindars holding revenue free lands. Again the Instrument of Instructions issued to the Governors expressly provides that Governors of Provinces should reserve for the consideration of the Governor-General any bill purporting to affect the Permanent Settlement and the rights thereunder. As it is clear that the Legislature had not overlooked the Permanent Settlement, can it be said that it was not the intention of the Legislature to permit the Provincial Govt. of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa to tax agricultural income of zamindars holding permanently settled estates? Did the Legislature merely intend that in Provinces in which land had been permanently settled, the Provincial Govt. should only have the right to tax the income of temporarily settled zamindars who would be few in number?

The rule that general words in a later statute should not be held to repeal earlier legislation upon a particular matter is clearly laid down by Lord Selborne in Seward v. Vera Cruz (16). He observed:—

“Now if anything be certain it is this, that where there are general words in a later Act capable of reasonable and sensible application without extending them to subjects specially dealt with by earlier legislation, you are not to hold that earlier and special legislation indirectly repealed, altered, or derogated from merely by force of such general words, without any indication of particular intention to do so.”

Counsel for the plaintiffs also relied on Associated News Papers Ltd. v. Corporation of the City of London (17). In that case the occupiers of certain hereditaments situate in the city of London and forming part of the area reclaimed from the river Thames, were rated to so much of the general rate levied under the City of London (Union of Parishes) Act, 1907, as represented the consolidated rate and the Police rate, which was imposed by the City of London Police Act, 1939. The land had been re-claimed under the provision of 7 Geo. III, c. 37 and under s. 51 of that Act owners of such re-claimed lands were to be “free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever.” The City of London Sewers Act, 1848, which provided for the levying of the sewer rate and the consolidated rate, enacted by s. 169 that every such rate shall be made upon every occupier of any house or building in the city

“whether such person shall be now liable in respect of such house or building to be assessed to the relief of the poor, or be not liable to be assessed to the relief of the poor in respect thereof by reason of such house or building being situate in my precinct or extra-parochial place, or otherwise.”

It was held (Lord Sumner dissenting) that s. 169 of the City of London Sewers Act, 1848, did not impliedly repeal the exemption from all taxes and assessments so far as the consolidated rate was concerned.

Another case relied upon by the plaintiffs was Pole Carew and St. Levan (Lord) v. Creddock (18). A ferry was established and maintained upon Act of 1790, which was to be deemed to be public Act, and which contained provision that the then proprietors, or their respective heirs or assigns, “shall not be rated or assessed for or towards the payment of any tax, rate or assessment whatsoever, parliamentary or parochial, for or in respect of the said ferry.....”

The owners of the ferry were assessed to income-tax, but the Court of Appeal held that the exemption granted by the statute extended to parliamentary taxes whether in existence at the date of the Act, or not, and therefore, included income-tax, although that tax was first imposed subsequently to the passing of the Act of 1790.

It was contended that the principles laid down in these cases apply to the present case and that this Court must hold that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act does not repeal or modify any of the provisions of the Permanent Settlement. In my view, however, the Court would be bound to hold that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act repeals by necessary implication any provision in the earlier Regulation I of 1793 which is inconsistent with it. The Provincial Govt. of Bihar which is province made up in the main of permanently settled estates has been specifically given the power to tax income derived from agricultural land. When that power was given to Bihar, it seems to me clear that it was intended that the Provincial Govt. of this Province should be able to tax income derived from agricultural land whether such land was permanently settled or not. A subsequent general Act will repeal the provisions of an earlier special Act if the provisions of the subsequent Act are clear and unambiguous and clearly apply to the matters dealt with by the earlier special legislation. In the present case all agricultural income is made taxable without distinction, and that being so, any protection afforded to agricultural income by any earlier Act is repealed by the present Act. The view which I have expressed is in accordance with the view expressed by Rankin, C. J., in Emperor v. Prabhat Chandra Barua (19) and by the majority of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Emperor v. Prabhat Chandra Barua (10). As I have stated, however, the point does not really arise in this case.

For the reasons which I have given, I am satisfied that the plaintiffs are not entitled to the relief claimed, and would dismiss their suit with costs.

The question as to whether the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act is ultra vires the powers of the Provincial Legislature or is ultra vires in so far as it purports to tax agricultural income of permanently settled zamindar involved substantial points of construction of the Govt. of India Act, 1935 and I would, therefore, grant a certificate to the plaintiffs under s. 205 (1) of that Act.

Fazl Ali, J.—The plaintiffs who are the proprietors of a permanently settled estate in the District of Patna have brought this suit against the "Province of Bihar" as defendant, for a declaration that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act (VII of 1938) and the Bihar Agri. Amendment Act (V of 1939) are ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature and that at any rate they cannot affect the permanently settled estates of the Province including the plaintiffs' estate. According to the plaint every step taken by the defendant to promote this piece of Legislation between the date of the introduction of the Bills in the Provincial Assembly and the date when they became law constituted a distinct cause of action for the plaintiffs but apparently their principal cause of action was the service upon them of a notice dated August 4, 1939, by which they were assessed with agricultural income tax and which they wish to be pronounced as being "without jurisdiction, illegal and invalid".

The suit was originally instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Patna, but on the application of the plaintiffs it was transferred to this Court. Before it was transferred a written statement had been filed on behalf of the defendant and no less than ten issues had been framed by the Subordinate Judge. In the written statement the defendant contested the view of law set forth in the plaint and asserted that the Act was in no sense an invasion of the rights enjoyed to the zamindars under the Permanent Settlement Regulations; and, even if it were so that would not make the Act void. The defendant also pleaded that the court-fee paid by the plaintiffs was insufficient; that the plaintiffs had no cause of action; that the notice required by s. 80 of the Civil P. C. had not been properly served and that the Acts challenged by the plaintiffs could not be questioned in the Civil Courts; but these pleas have been abandoned and the parties have confined their dispute before us to issues Nos. 3, 6 and 7 which embrace two main questions, namely, (1) whether the whole Act is ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature and (2) whether the Act even if intra vires, affects the permanently settled estates.

Section 100, cl. (3) of the Govt. of India Act provides that "subject to the two preceding sub-sections, the Provincial Legislature has and the Federal Legislature has not power to make laws for a province or any part thereof with respect to any of the matter enumerated in Sch. II hereinafter called the Provincial Legislative List."

As agricultural income is Item No. 41 of the Provincial list otherwise called list No. 2, the Provincial Legislature of Bihar purporting to act under this section enacted what is known as the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act in 1938 and some time later it passed another small Act slightly amending the provisions of the former Act. The Bihar Act VII of 1938 which is the main Act, received the assent of the Governor of Bihar on August 20, 1938 and was published in the Bihar Gazette of October 12, 1938. Section 2 of the Act defines agricultural income and s. 3 provides that the agricultural income tax at the rate or rates specified in the schedule to the Act shall be charged for each financial year in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the Act on the total agricultural income of the previous year, of every person. Sections 5 to 15 which are the remaining sections in Chap. II contains provisions as to the limits of taxable income and other cognate subjects such as what class of owners of agricultural property are to be exempted and how the tax on other class of persons is to be assessed. Chapter III enumerates the class of Income-tax Authorities appointed under the Act and ss. 17 and 18 of Chap. IV provide respectively for the submissions of return of agricultural income and assessment of tax upon such income by the Agricultural Income Tax Officer. The other provisions of the Act deal with a number of other matters with which we are not concerned in the present case.

With these introductory remarks I shall now proceed to state the principal points which were urged on behalf of the plaintiffs before this Court. These points were as follows—:

(1) That inasmuch as the definition of agricultural income, as given in the Bihar Act, is in some respects narrower and in some respect wider than the definition adopted by the Govt. of India Act, the Provincial Act must be held to be ultra vires.

(2) That the Agri. Income Tax Act is also ultra vires for the following reasons :—

The Permanent Settlement Regulation (I of 1793) and other connected Regulations of that year have fixed the public demand on the agricultural lands of all permanently settled estates and provided that there shall be no augmentation of the demand in future. The agricultural income tax now imposed under the Provincial Act is substantially augmentation of the demand and therefore it virtually repeals the regulation. But as the Permanent Settlement Regulation (I of 1793) must, having regard to the circumstances under which it was passed, be regarded as an Act of Parliament, no measure repealing the Regulation could be introduced into the Provincial Legislature without the previous sanction of the Governor-General and in any event the Governor-General's assent not having been obtained to the Act, the Act must be declared to be ultra vires.

(3) That Item No. 41 in list 2 of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, does not empower the Provincial Legislature to make laws with respect to taxes on agricultural income arising out of estates settled under Regulation I of 1793 and on the true construction of the Bihar Act, all that can be held is that it does not affect permanently settled estates but applies to such agricultural income only as does not arise out of such estates.

For the purpose of dealing with the first point it is necessary to refer to s. 314 cl. (2) and s. 141 (1) of the Govt. of India Act respectively. In s. 311 (2) the expression "agricultural income" is defined as follows :—

"Agricultural income means agricultural income as defined for the purposes of the enactments relating to Indian income-tax."

Section 141 (1) provides that no Bill of amendment varying the meaning of the expression "agricultural income" as defined above shall be introduced or moved in either chamber of the Federal Legislature except with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in his discretion.

Now in order to appreciate the argument which was advanced before us it will be useful to set out the definition of "agricultural income" as given in the Indian Income Tax Act side by side with the definition of that expression as given in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act :

Section 2 (1) of the Indian Income Tax Act

" 'Agricultural income' means—(a) any rent or revenue derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes, and is either assessed to land revenue in British India or subject to a local rate assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such : (b) any income derived from such land by—(i) agriculture, or—(ii) the performance by a cultivator or receiver of rent in kind of any process ordinarily employed by a cultivator or receiver of rent in kind to render the produce raised or received by him fit to be taken to market, or—(iii) the sale by a cultivator or receiver of rent in kind of the produce raised or received by him, in respect of which no process has been performed other than a process of the nature described in sub-cl. (ii); (c) any income derived from any building owned and occupied by the receiver of the rent or revenue of any such land, or occupied by the cultivator, or the receiver of rent in kind, of any land, with respect to which, or the produce of which, any operation mentioned in sub-cl. (ii) and (iii) of cl. (b) is carried on : Provided that the building is on or in the immediate vicinity of the land and is a building which the receiver of the rent or revenue or the cultivator or the receiver of the rent in kind by reason of his connection with the land, requires as a dwelling house, or as a store house, or other out building.

Section 2 (a) of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act.

" 'Agricultural income' means—(1) any rent or income derived from land which is used for agricultural purpose, and is either assessed to land revenue in Bihar or subject to a local cess or rate assessed and collected under any Bengal Act or under any Bihar and Orissa Act or under any Bihar Act. (2) Any income derived from each land by (i) agriculture, or (ii) the performance by a cultivator or receiver of rent in kind of any.....process ordinarily employed by a cultivator or receiver of rent in kind to render the produce raised or received by him fit to be taken to market, or (iii) The sale by a cultivator or receiver of rent in kind of the produce raised or received by him, in respect of which no process has been performed other than a process of the nature described in sub-cl. (ii).

It will be noticed that the definition given in the Bihar Act differs from the definition given in the Indian Income Tax Act in two important respects; firstly, cl. (c) of the Indian Income Tax Act which deals with the income derived from any building owned and occupied by receiver of rent etc. has been wholly omitted in the Bihar Act; secondly (a) of the Indian Income Tax Act is not couched exactly in the same terms as the latter provision.

It is quite clear that as the result of the omission of cl. (c) the definition given in the Bihar Act is somewhat narrower than the definition given in the Indian Income Tax Act, but in my opinion this fact by itself will not make the Act ultra vires. If it is assumed that the Bihar Legislature, having regard to the terms of the Govt. of India Act, is competent to levy tax on income derived from land as well as buildings of certain description, it is clearly competent to tax income from land only for the present it being open to it to tax the income from buildings referred to in cl. (c) of the Indian Income Tax Act, if and when it chooses to do so in future. The Legislature has therefore, in no way exceeded its power and am not prepared to hold that it has contravened the provisions of the Govt. of India Act by merely adopting a definition which is narrower than the definition given in that Act.

The second contention, however, is a more serious one, because the substance of that contention is that cl. (i) of the Bihar Act is wider than cl. (a) of the Indian Income Tax Act and so the definition enables the Bihar Legislature to tax income which it has not been empowered to tax under the Govt. of India Act. For the purpose, therefore, of determining whether this contention is correct, we have to compare carefully the two corresponding provisions.

The first difference which has been pointed out to us between the two provisions is that the Bihar Act substitutes the word "income" for revenue in cl. (i). But as revenue in cl. (a) of the Indian Income Tax Act is used in the same sense as income, the difference in the two provisions is merely a difference in phraseology and not a difference in substance. The Bihar Legislature was also perfectly justified in substituting the word "Bihar" "for British India" in the following sentence—"land which is assessed to land revenue in British India". The real difference however, between the two provisions is to be found in the concluding lines and may be summarised as follows:—

(i) Whereas the Indian income-tax uses the expression "subject to a local rate only" the Bihar Act has used the word "subject to a local cess or rate" and (2) whereas the Indian Income Tax Act make it necessary that the local rate to which the agricultural land is to be subject, should be assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such, all that the Bihar Act requires is that the "local cess or rate should be assessed and collected under any Bengal Act or under Bihar and Orrisa Act or under any Bihar Act". It omits the words "by officers of the Crown as such" and substitute the words "under any Bengal Act" etc. The contention put forward on behalf of the plaintiffs is that this change is a vital one and unduly widens the scope of the definition.

The plaintiffs object to the word "cess" on the ground that it is neither assessed nor collected by officers of the Crown as such, though they concede that it may be regarded as a local rate which presumably means a rate or tax for the benefit of local authorities such as District Boards and Municipalities etc. The case in Bihar is levied under Act IX of 1880 which was an Act :

"To amend and consolidate the law relating to rating for the construction, charges and maintenance of district communications and other works of public utility and of provincial public works."

Section 5 of the Act provides that from the commencement of the act all immovable properties in any district shall be liable to the payment of a local cess.

The other provisions show that the cess is to be levied on lands as well as on mines, railway and other immovable property. As we are concerned with the cess levied on land only in the present case, it will be necessary to refer to some of the provisions relating to this subject. Mr. P. R. Das, who appears on behalf of the plaintiffs relies upon ss. 9 and 38 of the Act in support of his contention that "cess" is not assessed by Officers of the Crown but by the District Board. Section 9 provides that the proceeds of local cess in each district shall be paid into the local funds of the district and s. 38 provides that the cess shall be assessed and levied at such rate as may be determined for such year by the District Board. This last provision seems at the first sight to support the contention of Mr. Das, but when the other provisions of the Act are taken into consideration it becomes manifest that the authority which assesses the cess is not the District Board but the Collector. The District Board has merely an advisory function and its knowledge of the local conditions is utilised for the purpose of determining the rate, but after the rate is so determined, the collector publishes the rate in the Gazette and otherwise and specifies from which date it will take effect. The Collector then fixes the amount of the cess payable by each person or estate upon the valuation of the lands. This shows that the final act of assessment rests with the Collector though the assessment is made according to the rate determined by the District Board.

There can also be no doubt that the cess payable under the Act is collected by the Collector. This is clear from a number of Provisions which are to be found in the Act, e. g., s. 98 which provides that every amount due or which may be due to any Collector under the provisions of this Act in respect of any arrears of cess etc. may be realised by such Collector by any process provided by law for the realisation deemed to be a public demand under such law.

The difficult question, however, which is raised on behalf of the plaintiffs is whether the Collector in assessing and collecting the cess acts as an Officer of the Crown as such Mr. P. R. Das refers us in this connection to s. 100 of the Cess Act which runs as follows :—

"The Board of Revenue may be any time invest any person with the powers of a Collector under this part to be exercised by such person under the control or supervision of the Collector or independently of such control or supervision as the Board of Revenue shall direct".

Mr. Das contends that this section shows that the powers of the Collector are derived from certain specific provision in the Cess Act and are not exercised by virtue of his being an Officer of the Crown. It is further contended by him that inasmuch as s. 100 provides that any person, whether he be an Officer of the Crown or not, may be appointed to exercise the function of the Collector by the Board of Revenue, the Act does not contemplate that the power exercised under its provision should necessarily be exercised by an Officer of the Crown. Mr. Das in support of his argument refers us to Gilbert v. The Corporation of Trinity House (20) and Metropolitan Meat Industry Board v. Sheedy (21). In the former case it was held that the Corporation of Trinity House in whom the superintendence and management of all light-houses and beacons in England were vested not by virtue of the Act constituted servants of the Crown. In the latter case it was held that a debt due to the Metropolitan Meat Industry Board who were entrusted with the maintenance and control of the slaughter house and meat markets in Sydney and adjoining Districts was not a debt due to the Crown. In my judgment both the cases relied on by Mr. Das are distinguishable and the cess payable under the Cess Act must be held to be assessed as well as collected by Officer of the Crown. The Corporation of Trinity House was, as pointed out in the case relied on by Mr. Das, nothing more than an amalgamation by the authority of the State of a vast number of bodies having general authority over the light-houses and beacons throughout the country for the general convenience. Thus in view of its nature and origin the Corporation of Trinity House could be regarded as an emanation from the Crown. Similarly the Meat Industry Board could not be regarded as a representative of the Crown, because the powers conferred upon it were to be exercised at its own discretion and without consulting the direct representatives of the Crown, and also because the charges it levied went to its own fund. The position in this case, however, is not the same. I think that inasmuch as in India both the Govt. at the centre and in the province, is carried on in the name of the Crown, the expression "Officers of the Crown" occurring in an Indian Statute may be taken to be synonymous with the expression "Officers of the Govt.". The Collector of the District undoubtedly exercise his authority as a representative of the Govt. and the cess is also levied by the Govt., though what is collected under the Act is allotted to the District Board for the purpose of maintaining roads etc. If any person other than the Collector is appointed under the Act, to assess and collect cess, he must be deemed also to act as a representative of the Govt. and the powers which are given to him are to be exercised not at his own discretion, but under the supervision of the Board of Revenue which is a department of the Govt. In my opinion the test is whether the cess is a levy by a private or local body or whether it is Govt. levy. If it is levied and collected on behalf of the Govt., then, no matter how the money is spent, the persons who levy and collect it must be regarded as officers of the Crown.

So far the definition of agricultural income as given in the Agri. Income Tax Act may be supported, but it appears to me that the omission of the words 'assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such' was unfortunate, because it is conceivable that in some cases at least a local rate may be assessed and collected under a Bengal or Bihar Act and yet it may not be assessed and collected by Officers of the Crown as such. Such is the case with a local rate levied by the Municipality to which the Cess Act does not apply. The rate levied by the Municipality is assessed and collected under the Municipal Act by the officers of the Municipality and not by Officers of the Crown as such. If therefore there are any estates in Bihar which are revenue free and which are not liable to pay cess, being situated within a Municipality, and because they are liable to Municipal rates under the Municipal Act, the income from the lands of such estates will clearly be agricultural income under the Bihar Act though it is not such "income" under the Indian Income Tax Act. It has not been pointed out to us that there are in fact any such estates in Bihar, but assuming that there may be such estates we have still to consider whether that fact alone will make the whole Act ultra vires.

We must remember that one of the objects of defining agricultural income in the Govt. of India Act was to ensure that expression may not be differently understood by the Central and Provincial Authorities. Therefore it would be going too far to say that the framers of the Bihar Act had not power to introduce even verbal changes in the definition of agricultural income adopted in the Govt. of India Act. All that they were required to guard against was that there was no change in the meaning or scope of the expression "agricultural income" and the definition in the Bihar Act was not wider than that to be found in the Indian Income Tax Act. If, however, the definition is found to be wider, it does not, in my judgment, necessarily follow that the whole Act thereby becomes ultra vires.

We have on this point for our guidance a number of authoritative pronouncements which laid down that if a part of an Act can be held to be valid and another part invalid, then if the offending provisions are so interwoven into the other scheme of the Act they are not severable from the other provision, the whole Act is ultra vires, but if the two parts are severable then the Act will be partly valid and partly invalid, it being invalid only in regard to the offending provisions. This view has been clearly set out in the judgment of Sulaiman, J. in Subrahmanyam Chettiar v. Muthuswami Goundan (6), at pp. 179 and 180* and in Shyama Kant Lal v. Rambhajan Singh (7) at pp. 487 and 488†. In the last mentioned case his Lordship stated the principle in these terms :—

"It is a well established principle that if the invalid part of an act is really separate in its operation from the other parts, and the rest are not inseparably connected with it, then only such part is invalid, unless, of course the whole object of the Act would be frustrated by the partial exclusion. If the subject which is beyond the legislative power is perfectly distinct from that which is within such power, the act can be ultra vires in the former, while intra vires in the latter."

In my opinion the principle enunciated above must govern this case. I have already stated that it has not been shown to us that there are any revenue free estates situated within the limits of a Municipality in Bihar, but if there are such estates it will be legitimate to hold that no agricultural income tax can be imposed on their income. The plaintiffs, however, are the proprietors of a revenue paying estate and it cannot be said that the definition of agricultural income does not cover their estate.

Mr. P. R. Das relied in this connection on Attorney-General for British Columbia v. Attorney-General for Canada (2) and Attorney-General for Canada v. Attorney-General for Ontario (1). In the first case the Natural Products Marketing Act, 1934, of the Parliament of Canada as amended by a later Act was held to be ultra vires and Lord Atkin who delivered the judgment in that case summed up the view of the Privy Council as follows :—

"In the result, therefore, there is no answer to the contention that the Act in substance invades the provincial field and is invalid. It was, however, urged before us that portion of the Act, notably s. 9 in the first part, and the whole of part II, are within the competence of parliament.....There appear to be two answers. In the first place, it appears to their Lordships that the whole texture of the Act is inextricably interwoven, and that neither s. 9 nor Part II can be contemplated as existing independently of the provisions as to the creation of Board and the regulation of produces.....In the second place, both the Dominion and the British Columbia in their cases filed on this appeal assert that the sections now said to be severable are incidental and ancillary to the main legislation. Their Lordships are of opinion that this is true, and that as the main legislation is invalid as being in pith and substance an encroachment upon the provincial rights the sections referred to must fail with it as being in part nearly ancillary to it."

In the second case another Act was held to be ultra vires of the Dominion Parliament of Canada on similar grounds, it being held that in pith and substance the Act was an encroachment upon the Provincial field and that part of the Act which did not encroach were so inextricably mixed up with the offending provisions, that it was impossible to sever them. In my opinion neither of these cases can be of help to the plaintiffs. Agricultural income being one of the subjects mentioned in List II otherwise called the Provincial List of the Govt. of India Act, it cannot be said that in pith and substance this Act is an encroachment upon the rights of the Central Govt. It is true that the definition has been somewhat carelessly drafted, but all that can be said is that if there is any estate the income of which cannot be regarded as agricultural income according to the definition of that expression as given in the Indian Income Tax Act then much part of the Act as purports to be income of such estate shall be held to be invalid. The learned Advocate General in meeting the argument of P. R. Das referred us to Macleod v. Attorney-General for New South Wales (3) and Geat West Saddlery Co. v. The King (4) and New Castle and Humber River Steamship Co. Ltd. v. Attorney-General for the Commonwealth (5), but it seems to me that the principles of "pith and substance" and "severability" are so well established and their application to the present case is so clear that it is wholly unnecessary to discuss these.

Before concluding this topic I might mention that according to Mr. P. R. Das, owing to the omission of the words "cess assessed and collected by the Officers of the Crown as such", the tenure-holders and raiyyats holding lands within the estates of Bihar cannot also be taxed under the Bihar Act, because it is contended that this lands are neither subject to the payment of land revenue nor subject to cess assessed and collected by Officers of the Crown as such. The argument, however, cannot be accepted because the income of these persons clearly comes within cl. (2) sub-cl. (i), (ii) and (iii) of the definition of agricultural income as given in the Bihar Act which correspond exactly to cl. (b) sub-cl. (i) and (ii) and (iii) of the definition to be found in the Indian Income Tax Act. The argument further overlooks an important fact. If the lands in possession of tenure-holders and raiyyats are situated within a revenue paying estate, then there can be no doubt that inasmuch as the revenue is payable upon all the lands within that estate, their lands also must be held to be assessed to land revenue. If, however, the estate is revenue free, then unless the estate is situated within a Municipality, the zamindar must pay the cess for all the lands of the estate including those in possession of the tenure-holders and raiyyats under him. The mere fact that the tenure-holders and raiyyats pay cess into the hands of the zamindar does not alter the position. What we have to see is whether the land which they hold is subject to cess or not. In my opinion, therefore, the argument that tenure-holders and raiyyats cannot be taxed under the Act is untenable. The point, however, is not material, because the plaintiffs are neither tenure-holders nor raiyyats but are admittedly the proprietors of a revenue paying estate.

The second point urged on behalf of the plaintiffs was that the Agri. Income Tax Act in so far as it affects the permanently settled estates is ultra vires of the Bihar Legislature because that legislature had no power to pass an Act inconsistent with the Permanent Settlement Regulation without following the procedure laid down by the Govt. of India Act. In urging this point Mr. P. R. Das, Counsel for the plaintiffs, read out to us extracts from certain despatches which had passed between Lord Cornwallis and the Directors of the East Indian Company and from the Minutes recorded by Sir John Shore before the enactment of Regulation I of 1793 in order to show firstly, that the Permanent Settlement was made on the footing that the landlords were the petitioners of the soil and secondly, that the jama or the revenue which was fixed at the time of the Permanent Settlement was a land tax. Learned Counsel also read to us all the relevant sections of the Permanent Settlement Regulation and certain other Regulations to support his contention that these Regulations had declared in clear terms that, beyond the jama which was already fixed, there shall be no new or additional demand or assessment upon the permanently settled estates. His next argument was that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act being passed in violation of the terms of the Permanent Settlement Regulation had in effect repealed the latter enactment. Lastly, he argued that inasmuch as the Act was passed without following procedure laid down by ss. 108 and 299 of the Govt. of India, it is wholly ultra vires.

Section 108 cl. (2) provides among other things that unless the Governor-General in his discretion thinks fit to give his previous sanction, there shall not be introduced into or moved in Chamber of Provincial Legislature any Bill or amendment which repeals, amends or is repugnant to any provisions of any act of Parliament extending to British India; or repeals, amends or is repugnant to any Governor-General's Act or any Ordinance promulgated in his discretion by the Governor-General. Section 299 cl. (3) provides that no Bill or amendment making any provisions for the extinguishment or modification of rights in any land including rights or privileges in respect of land revenue shall be moved in a Chamber of Provincial Legislature without the previous sanction of the Governor in his discretion. It was recognised by Mr. Das that these sections are to be read with s. 109 (2) of the Act which provides that no Act of Provincial Legislature and no provision in any such Act shall be invalid by reason only that some previous sanction or recommendation was not given, if assent to that Act was given (a) where the previous sanction or recommendation required was that of the Governor, either by the Governor, by the Governor-General, or by His Majesty; (b) where the previous sanction or recommendation required was that of the Governor-General, either by the Governor-General or by His Majesty. It is, however, contended that in the present case the subsequent consent of the Governor does not cure the defect, because the Permanent Settlement Regulation was an Act of Parliament and, therefore, required at least the assent of the Governor-General under s. 109 cl. (a) after the measure had been enacted.

The first question which arises for consideration is whether the Agri. Income Tax Act in any way affects the Permanent Settlement Regulation or, as Mr. Das put it, whether the imposition of the tax under the Act amounts to an augmentation of the jama. In my opinion, this is the most important question in the case, because if it is answered in the negative no further question arises. I am also of the opinion that it has to be answered in the negative, because it is also answered by the Privy Council in Barua's case (9), which must be regarded as the last word on the subject and which I accordingly propose to discuss at some length. It appears that prior to 1926 conflicting view had been expressed by the Calcutta High Court as to whether income derived from permanently settled estates was liable to income-tax notwithstanding the Permanent Settlement Regulation: Emperor v. Probbhat Chandra Barua (19) and King-Emperor v. Indu Bhusan Sarkar (22). In May 1926, Barua's case (10) came up before a Bench consisting of Sanderson, C. J. and Rankin, J. who referred the following question among others for decision to a Full Bench.

"Whether having regard to the terms of the Permanent Settlement Regulation, income derived from land in permanently settled estates subject to the exemptions provided by the legislature is liable to assessment to income tax."

This question was answered by the majority of the Judges constituting the Full Bench in the affirmative and their view was upheld by the Privy Council after referring to certain provinces of the Indian Income Tax Act summarised his conclusion as to the effect of these provisions as follow :—

"Upon this part of the case therefore their Lordships are of opinion that the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, by ss. 6 and 12 brings into charge for the purposes of income-tax the income derived from a zemindari and that a zemindar is assessable in respect of incomes, profits and gains derived from that source."

His Lordships then proceeded to consider whether the imposition of income-tax in respect of the income derived from zamin-dari was to any and what extent inconsistent with the provisions of the Regulation. On the subject his Lordship thought that Regulation I of 1793 was the master Regulation though a number of other Regulations also had been referred to before the Privy Council and that the case fell to be determined primarily upon the consideration of the language of that Regulation and specially the third sentence of Art. VI of the Regulation which clearly set out the promise on which the assessee based his cases. This sentence runs as follows :—

The Governor-General in Council trusts that the proprietors of land, sensible of the benefits conferred upon them by the public assessment being fixed for ever, will exert themselves in the cultivation of their lands, under the certainty that they will enjoy exclusively the fruits of their own good management and industry, and that no demand will ever be made upon them or their heirs or successors by the present or any future Govt. for an augmentation of the public assessment in consequence of the improvement of their respective estates."

His Lordship having reproduced this sentence proceeded to paraphrase it in these words :—

"You have in the past been liable to have the amount of the jama increased according as the actual produce of the estate increased, to enable the Govt. to obtain this you have been subjected to frequent investigation to ascertain the actual produce and you have even been deprived of the management of your estate. All this shall cease. You shall have fixity of payment and fixity of tenure. If you improve the revenue of your zamindari you shall enjoy the fruit of your improvements without fear of the Govt. claiming that because the revenue produce by the estate has increased, the payment you make to Govt. as a condition of holding that estate shall be increased also."

His Lordship then summarised his conclusion thus:—

"In their Lordships' opinion, while the Regulations contain assurances against any claim to an increase of the jama, based on an increase of the zamindari income they contain no promise that a zamindar shall in respect of the income which he derives from his zamindari be exempt from liability to any future general scheme of property taxation, or that an income of a zamindari shall not be subjected with other incomes to any future general taxation of incomes."

His Lordship also quoted with approval the following passage from the judgment of Ghose, J. in the Full Bench case:—

"There was no promise or engagement of any description whatsoever by which the Govt. of the day surrendered their right to levy a general tax upon income of all persons irrespective of the facts whether they are zamindars with whom the Permanent Settlement was concluded or not."

In my opinion the decision of the Privy Council establishes the following points:—

(1) That for the purpose of deciding the matter in controversy it is not necessary to decide whether the landlords were proprietors of the soils or what was "the exact nature of the rights in relation of the land which existed in the Govt. Authority before 1793". (2) That the jama was payment by the zamindars to the Govt. as a condition of holding the estate, or, in other words, it is more like rent than a tax on income. (3) That though there was a clear assurance given in the Regulation I of 1793 that there would be no increase of jama based on the increase of the zamindari income, it contained no promise that should there be any scheme of taxing income generally in future, the zamindari income will not be brought into the general scheme and will be exempt from taxation, even though other income may be subjected to taxation.

The last two propositions clearly imply that jama is not a tax on income and if a statute was enacted by competent authority in India to tax income from zamindari such statute could not be regarded as being inconsistent with or repugnant to the Permanent Settlement Regulation.

Both Mr. P. R. Das and Sir Sultan Ahmad, who appeared on behalf of the plaintiffs, tried to show that the decision of the Privy Council is not applicable to the present case, but in my opinion they have not succeeded in doing so. Sir Sultan Ahmad pointed out to us that the case before the Privy Council did not relate to agricultural income but certain classes of non-agricultural income such as "jalkar or rent received from fisheries; ground-rent from land used for potteries; ground-rent for land used as brickfields, fees received from tying of boats against the assessee's land, fees received from cart stands" etc., etc. His contention was that their Lordships of the Privy Council intended to draw a distinction between zamindari income by which they meant agricultural income and income derived by a zamindar from his zamindari which according to him was a wider expression including non-agricultural income. In my opinion, however the two expressions have the same meaning and I do not agree with his contention that their Lordships intended to draw any distinction between them. Their Lordships, however, did recognise the distinction between agricultural income and other income derived from zamindari, because as was pointed by them, though in s. 4 (3) of the Income Tax Act, 1922, which enumerates the incomes to which the Act shall not apply, agricultural income is included, the wider expression "income derived from a zamindari" is not included in the section. The decision of the Privy Council, in my opinion, is fully applicable to this case, because the chief point to be decided in Barua's case (9) was the same as in this case and the argument for the assessee as reproduced in certain reports and as summarised in the judgment of the Privy Council was more or less the same as the argument advanced in the present case.

Mr. P. R. Das tried to distinguish the Privy Council case by following a different line of argument. He conceded that notwithstanding the Permanent Settlement Regulation, the state may impose a tax on income, but he strenuously contended that the tax which is imposed under the Agri. Income Tax Act is not a tax on income but is a land tax, or in other words, a tax of the same description as the jama or revenue payable by the zamindar. According to Mr. Das the land tax is different from the income-tax, because whereas the former is referable to the land which is being taxed, the income tax is a tax levied on income in general irrespective of and without any reference to the sources from which the income may be derived. This, say, Mr. Das is sufficient to distinguish the present case from Barua's case (9) for that case only lays down that the zamindari income may consistently with the Permanent Settlement Regulation be charged to income-tax.

In my opinion at least one of the main premises upon which this argument is based is not correct. Even assuming for the sake of argument that the jama is a kind of land tax, it is difficult to say that the tax imposed under the Bihar Act is not an income-tax but a land tax. Whatever may be the origin of the jama it is quite clear that it has no longer any reference to the income of the estate, because such income may rise or fall, but the jama remains the same. On the other hand the tax which the Bihar Act proposes to levy is to be assessed in proportion to the income of the estate and it has a direct reference to that income. Mr. Das in the course of his argument referred to the following observations made by Lord Macnaghten in London County Council v. Attorney-General (13):

"Income-tax if I may be pardoned for saying so, is a tax on income. It is not meant to be tax on anything else. It is one tax, not a collection of taxes essentially distinct. There is no difference in kind between the duties of income-tax assessed under Sch. D and those assessed under Sch. A or any of the other schedules of charge. One man has fixed property, another lives by his wits; each contributes to the tax if his income is above the prescribed limit. The standard of assessment varies according to the nature of the source from which taxable income is derived. That is all."

According to Mr. Das this passage supports the view that an income-tax in the true sense of the term must bear no reference to the source from which the income is derived and the moment there is a reference to the source, it ceases to be an income-tax and because in the present case the source of the alleged income is land, so it is land tax. The argument is a novel one, to say the least about it, and I have to deal with it only in deference to Mr. Das and because he has asked us to record our opinion about it. In my judgment all that Lord Macnaghten wished to emphasise was that though income may be derived from different sources, the income-tax was one tax and not a collection of taxes in the sense that in every case you have to tax income only and nothing else which does not answer the description of income. He never meant to suggest that an Act which purports to tax income should not refer to the sources of income or as soon as there is a reference to the source the tax would cease to be an income-tax. In the Indian Income Tax Act no less than five definite sources of income are set out and agricultural income-tax is defined and expected. It will be fantastic to suggest that the tax levied under the Act is not an income-tax, because the sources of the income are indicated. As the Provincial Legislature has now been empowered to tax agricultural income may for the purpose of taxation be divided under two broad heads (1) agricultural income and (2) non-agricultural income is taxed by the Central Govt. whereas the agricultural may be taxed by the Provincial Govt. We have therefore first to have a clear notion as to what is the meaning of 'income' and then to find out whether the agricultural income-tax is a tax on income or otherwise. As to what is income, though the word is not defined in the Indian Income Tax Act we have the most authoritative pronouncement about its meaning in Shaw Wallace [case Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co.] (23) and "agricultural income" has been defined in the Indian Income Tax Act, that definition being also adopted by the Govt. of Indian Act. Thus all that we have to see is whether the income which the Bihar Act purports to tax comes within the definition of agricultural income as defined in the Indian Income Tax Act. If it does, then there can be no doubt that it can be taxed by the Provincial Legislature.

I have already indicated that in view of the observations made by the Privy Council in Barua's case (9). It is unnecessary to discuss what was exactly the status of the zamindars and the nature of the jama payable by him at the time of the Permanent Settlement but as Mr. Das persists in his contention that the present case is not covered by Barua's case (9) and asks us to record our views in regard to these two matters also, I shall as briefly as possible, summarise my conclusions in regard to them. As to the status of the zamindar I shall only quote an extract from a judgment delivered by Saunders, J. and myself in Rani Sonabati Kumari v. Raja Krityanand Singh (24). The passage occurs at pp. 110 and 112* of the report and runs thus:—

"In 1889, the E. I. Co., adopted an important measure which is known as the Decennial Settlement. Before this settlement was concluded an extensive enquiry was held as to, a month or other matters, the persons with whom the settlement should be made and the amount of assessment to be fixed on the land. A keen controversy then arose as to whether the zamindars had been treated as proprietors of the soil or not under the Moghul rule. Mr. Shore who subsequently became Lord Reigmoth quoted in his Minute of 1788, the common expression of the people, which according to him from its universality was pro-verbal, 'that the land belongs to the zamindar and the rent to the King.' This view was supported by 2 Indian experts Ghulam Husain, the author of Sairul-Mutakhirin and Roy Royan in their answer to the questions put to them (see Harrington's Analysis, Vol. III page 328). The answer of the former to the Twentyninth question which asked why the King purchased lands since he was the lord of the country was. "The Emperor is proprietor of the revenue issuing out of the territory under his authority; but he is not the proprietor of the soil." On the other hand Mr. Grant maintained that it was the fundamental principle in all the native estates of Asia 'that the Sovereign is sole universal proprietary lord of the land; and the ryots, who are husbandmen or peasantry, hold directly of the prince, by immemorial usage, as perpetual tenants in capite: subject to the annual payment of a certain fixed portion of the gross produce of the soil in money or kind.....' (ibid, page 360). Colonel Wilks thought that the fact which settled the controversy was that the share of the produce which went to the proprietor was an infinitesimal one as compared with the share which went to the King and he expressed himself thus: 'It is absurd to distinguish as proprietor the person entitled to one-tenth' (Colonel Wilks subsequently attempted to show that the real share of the zamindar was one-twentieth) while the remaining nine-tenths are called a 'duty, a tax, a quit rent' (ibid, p. 377.) Confronted with these divergent views the Directors of the East India Company pronounced no decision on the historical question but dealt with the matter on grounds of expediency. We read in the fifth report Vol. I, p. 30 that 'Whatever might be the difference of opinion among those who were officially consulted on the critical question of proprietary right in the soil a general concurrence prevailed in favour of the settlement being made with the zamindari.' The report then goes to state (ibid p. 32.)

In the progress and conclusion of this improvement transaction, the Govt. appeared willing to recognise the proprietary right of the zamindars in the land; not so much from any proof of the existence of such right, discernible in his relative situation under the Moghul Govt. in its best form, as from the desire of improving their condition under the British Govt., as far as it might be done consistently with the permanency of the revenue and with the rights of the cultivators of the soil'. Whatever may have been the position of the zamindar in theory under the Moghul Govt., there is no doubt, that great dignity attached to his office by reason of his being in a sense a Govt. official having charge of the maintenance of peace and order in the area under his control as well as of the zamindari, and the practice of making successive settlements with the same person or his heirs fostered the growth of the conception of ownership. The East India Company for political reasons confirmed him in the position which he had already substantially attained by a formal recognition of his proprietary rights in the soil. So in the Regulations passed on September 18, and November 25, 1789, and February 10, 1790, 'It was notified to the proprietors of the land on behalf of whom the settlement might be concluded that the jama assessed upon the lands under these Regulations would be continued after the expiration of the tenures and remain unalterable for ever, provided such continuance should meet with the approbation of the Hon'ble Court of Directors for the affairs of the East India Company and not otherwise'."

In the same judgment I also quoted at p. 187* the following observations of Lord

Parker in Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Kali Dassi Debi (25).

"Passing to the settlement of 1793 it appears to their Lordships to be beyond controversy that whatever doubts be entertained as to whether before the English occupation the zamindars had any proprietary interest in the lands comprised within their respective Districts, the settlement itself recognises and proceeds on the footing that they are the actual proprietors of the land for which they undertook to pay the Govt. revenue. The settlement is expressly made with zamindars, independent taluqdars and other actual proprietors of the soil"—see Regulation I, s. 3 and Regulation VIII, s. 4. It is clear that since the settlement the zamindars have at least a prima facie title to all lands for which they pay revenue such lands being commonly referred to as malguzari lands."

The above passage states very clearly the effect of the Permanent Settlement Regulation of 1793. But in the famous case of Thakooranee Dasse v. Basheshur Mookerjee (26) which was heard by fifteen Judges of the Calcutta High Court Trevor, J., expressed the opinion that though Regulation I of 1793 recognised the zamindars as proprietors of the soil, it never recognised them as being possessed of an absolute estate in their zamindari. The actual passage in his judgment in which this opinion is expressed runs as follows:—

"That, though recognised as actual proprietors of the soil, that is owners of their estates, still zamindars and others entitled to a settlement were not recognised as being possessed of an absolute estate in their several zamindarees; that there are other parties below them with rights and interests in the land, requiring protection just in the same way as the Govt. above them was declared to have a right and interest in it which it took care to protect by law: that the zamindar enjoys his estate subject to, and limited by, those rights and interests; and that the notion of an absolute estate in land is as alien from the Regulation law as it is from the old Hindu and Muhammadan Law of the country."

The view taken by Trevor, J., is confirmed to some extent by the fact that at the time of the Permanent Settlement the zamindars had to execute kabuliyats in favour of the governing authority in respect of the estates settled with them; but the matter need not be pursued any further because for the purpose of this case it is not necessary to qualify the statement made in the Permanent Settlement Regulation as to the zamindars being the proprietors of the soil.

There remains now the question as to the nature and origin of the payment which is called "jama" in the Regulations and "Govt. revenue" in the later documents. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the jama is nothing but a tax on the land of each particular estate and this argument was supported by reference to certain despatches which passed between Lord Cornwallis and the Court of Directors prior to the enactment of the Permanent Settlement Regulation. In one of these despatches Lord Cornwallis is reported to have written as follows :—

"We think this is an appropriate opportunity to observe that if at any future period the public exigencies should require an addition to your resources, you must look for this addition in the increase of the general wealth, and commerce of the country and not in the augmentation of the tax of the land."

Similar expressions were used in regard to "jama" by the Court of Directors as well as other contemporary writers on the subject one of whom Colonel Wilks called it "a duty, tax or quit rent". It must also be conceded that the word "tax" would not be an inappropriate description of jama, if it is assumed that the zamindar was a proprietor of the soil. If he was a proprietor of the soil, he was entitled to retain the entire produce of the soil and if the Govt. took from him any part of the produce that was prima facie in the nature of tax. At the same time if one were to examine the matter historically, one might feel inclined to doubt whether 'tax' is an appropriate expression. The Moghul authorities quoted in Harrington's Analysis called it a tribute or rent and in Freeman v. Fairlie (11), the Lord Chancellor is reported to have said :—

"Zamindars and Taluqdars were owners of the soil, subject only to a tribute such as I have stated, to Govt. and it was the object of those regulations of the year 1793, to make that tribute which had been considered as dependent in its amount on the will of the governing power, fixed and permanent."

Again in Field's Regulation of the Bengal Code we find that zamindari tenure is described as follows :

"It is an absolute right of proprietorship in the soil subject to the payment of a fixed amount of revenue to the Govt. If this revenue falls into arrears, the estate may be put up to auction and sold to the highest bidder. The purchaser acquires the estate free from all encumbrances created since the time of the Permanent Settlement and obtains statutory title."

Such consequences are described above are seldom attached to the non-payment of a mere tax and I think it will not be incorrect to say that the jama is more like rent than a tax. It is, as Lord Russell has pointed out, a payment made by the landlord from ancient times to the sovereign authority as a condition for holding the land.

Now assuming that the zamindar is a proprietor of the soil and the jama is a land tax the question still remains whether the imposition of the agricultural income-tax amounts to an augmentation of the jama. It seems to me that though in both cases payment has to be made to the Crown, the two payments are historically and in essence of a different description and it will not be correct to say that the imposition of the agricultural income-tax is an augmentation of the Govt. revenue.

I will now assume for the sake of argument that the jama is a tax and the tax imposed under the Agri. Income Tax Act is essentially a tax of the same kind as the jama. I will also assume that the Agri. Income Tax Act, in so far as it affects the permanently settled estates, has the effect of repealing the Permanent Settlement Regulation. These assumptions, however, can be of no assistance to the plaintiffs, unless as was contended by Mr. Das, the Permanent Settlement Regulation I of 1793 is deemed to be an Act of Parliament and the case falls under s. 108 (2), read with s. 109 (1) (2), for otherwise the subsequent assent of the Governor is sufficient to validate the Act. The plaintiffs as I have already said, relied in this connection on ss. 108 (2) and 299 (3), and therefore if, as Mr. Das contends, the Permanent Settlement Regulation I of 1793 is to be regarded as an Act of Parliament, the Act should have been introduced into the Legislature with the previous sanction of the Governor-General or it should have at least received the assent of the Governor-General or His Majesty.

Now, I must frankly confess that I find it difficult to hold that Regulation I of 1793 was an Act of Parliament. This Regulation was never considered by the two Houses of Parliament nor did it receive the assent of His Majesty the King. It was enacted in India by the Governor-General, there being nothing in its preamble or any where else to show that it was enacted under any authority delegated to the Governor-General by the British Parliament. Mr. Das contends that it became an Act of Parliament, because it was enacted in obedience to Pitt's India Act of 1784, but in my opinion there is no warrant for such a conclusion. The Act of 1784 after reciting certain complaints made on behalf of a number of Rajas, zamindars etc., states that such complaints should be investigated and if founded in truth, should be redressed. It directed the Court of Directors of the East India Company :

"to adopt, take and pursue such methods for enquiring into the causes, foundation and truth of the said complaints, and for obtaining a full and perfect knowledge of the same and of all circumstances relating thereto as the said Court of Directors shall think best adopted for that purpose, and thereupon, according to the circumstances of the respective cases was of the said Rajas, zamindars etc., to give orders and instructions to the several Govt., and Presidencies in India, for effectually redressing, in such manner as shall be consistent with justice and the laws and customs of the country, all injuries and wrongs which the Rajas, zamindars polygars, talugdars, and other native landholders, may have sustained unjustly in the manner aforesaid, and for the settling and establishing upon principles of moderation and justice according to the laws and constitution of India, the permanent rules by which their respective tributes, rents and services shall be in future rendered and paid to the said united Company."

This Act was passed in 1784 whereas the Regulation in question was enacted in 1793. The Act, as we have seen, gave a free hand to the Court of Directors and merely directed them to redress the grievances, if founded in truth. It is true that the Directors held an elaborate enquiry in pursuance of the Act but they exercised their own independent judgment in devising measures for the redress of such grievances as appeared to them to be legitimate. As a constitutional point it is difficult to say whether the Parliament exercised any sovereignty over Bihar and Orissa at the time the enactment was passed, but as by virtue of the grant of Diwani in 1765 the task of administering the land revenue of a part of India had devolved upon the East India Company, it seems that it could enact the regulation in question through the Governor-General even apart from any authority derived from British Parliament. How can the Regulation be regarded in these circumstances as an Act of Parliament it is difficult to understand. Mr. Das has referred us to many writers who have dealt with the constitutional history of India relating to the period during which the regulation was passed but none of the writers has said that it was an Act of Parliament. Mr. Das also relied on Willingale v. Norria (14) and Powell v. Apollo Candle Co. Ltd. (15) in support of his contention, but in my opinion these cases have very little bearing on the question before us. In the first of these cases it was held that where a statute gives power to an authority to make regulations, a breach of the regulations so made is an offence against the provisions of the statute. The point which arose in that case was this: Under s. 4 of the London Hackney Carriages Act, 1850, the then Commissioners of Police were authorised to make regulations in regard to the boundaries of standings for hackney carriages and the number of carriages to be allotted on a standing and certain other matters. They did make certain regulations in pursuance of the authority conferred upon them by the Act and one of these regulations being broken, it was held that the breach of regulations made under the authority of the statute was a breach of the statute itself. In the second case it was held that certain duties levied by an order in Council issued under s. 133 of Customs Regulation Act of 1879 must be deemed to have been really levied under the authority of the Act under which the order was issued, because the Legislature had not parted with its perfect control over the Governor and had the power at any moment of withdrawing or altering the power which they had entrusted to him. These decisions are not applicable, because the Permanent Settlement Regulation did not consist of mere bye-laws or rules made under an Act of Parliament, but was an independent measure enacted in India by a de facto governing authority.

It was contended in this connection by the learned Advocate-General that even if it is assumed that Regulation I of 1793 is an Act of Parliament, s. 108 cl. (2) (a) does not apply to the present case, because it is not an Act of Parliament extending to British India. The expression "British India" has been defined in s. 311 of the Govt. of India Act as follows:—"British India" means all territories for the time being comprised within the Governor's Provinces and the Chief Commissioners' provinces." The learned Advocate-General emphasised the expression "all territories" in this definition and contended that British India means the whole of British India and not a part of British India. He also argued that where the Act contemplates any reference to a part of British India, it says so expressly as will appear from the language of s. 110 and certain other sections of the Act. Finally he argued that inasmuch as the Permanent Settlement Regulation related only to a part of British India, that is to say, the Provinces of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, this Regulation cannot be said to be an Act of Parliament extending to British India and so s. 108 (2) (a) has no application to the present case. Now all I wish to say in regard to the argument is that prima facie the construction put by the learned Advocate-General appears to be rather narrow, but it is really unnecessary to decide whether the construction is correct or not because, as I have already stated, Regulation I of 1793 cannot by any stretch of reasoning be described as an Act of Parliament.

The last point urged by Mr. P. R. Das was that even if it be assumed that the Agri. Income Tax Act is not ultra vires of the Bihar Legislature yet if the Act is construed according to certain well recognised principles, it must be held that it cannot affect the permanently settled areas. The principle of construction upon which Mr. Das relied is that if there is an earlier statute on a special subject and also a subsequent enactment of a general nature, the Court will not hold that the earlier and the special legislation has been indirectly repealed or altered merely by force of the general words used in the subsequent legislation without any indication of a particular intention to do so [see Seward v. Vera Cruz (16). at p. 69*] This principle was applied by Mr. Das to the present case in the following manner. According to Mr. Das, Regulation I of 1793 which was an earlier and special legislation contained a promise that there shall be no further tax on the income of estate of which the jama had been fixed (permanently settled estates). Then followed a subsequent general Act which purports to tax agricultural income. As this Act does not use specific words to show that the Permanent Settlement Regulation was intended to be repealed, the two statutes must be read together as if they were quite consistent with each other and the object of the Bihar Act must be taken to tax only such agricultural income as could be taxed consistently with the promise made in the Regulation of 1793. In other words, according to Mr. Das the Bihar Act, when properly construed, cannot be held to apply to agricultural income derived from permanently settled estates, though it may be applicable to similar income from tenures, raiyyati lands and the estate which are not permanently settled as for example temporarily settled estates within the Govt. khas mahal.

Now this question can arise for consideration only if it is held that the tax levied under the Bihar Act is a tax of the same kind as the jama and is in reality an addition to "the burden of the land" which was fixed in 1793 and which was to remain unalterable for ever. Such a view, however as I have already pointed out is not open to us to take in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Barua's case which as I have already stated should be taken to be the last word on the subject. Even, however, if we assume that such a view is open to us to take, it seems to me that the position is not quite so simple as Mr. Das suggests. It was not seriously disputed before us that in spite of the assurance given in Regulation I of 1793 it was within the power of the Indian Legislature to revoke the declaration contained in the Regulation. The earlier history of the income-tax law shows that notwithstanding the Permanent Settlement Regulation agricultural income has been taxed in the past. It was certainly taxed under the Income Tax Act, 1860, but the tax was given up in 1865. Again an income-tax was levied on all income including agricultural income-tax between 1869 and 1873-1874. In 1886 a regular Income Tax Act was passed but agricultural income was specifically exempted under that Act and the exemption is still in force. The reasons, however, for exempting agricultural income was, as has been pointed out by some writers, not that the landlords paid revenue to Govt. but that they paid a cess on land, whereas the other persons paying income tax had not to pay any such cess. As Mr. Sunderam has stated in his commentary on the Indian Income Tax Act, in those days when the Cess Act was passed and income-tax was levied on agricultural income the owners of permanently settled estates carried on a powerful agitation against these imposts on the ground that the new taxation constituted a breach of the Permanent Settlement, but the Government these complaints not be exempting permanently settled estates as such from income-tax but by exempting all agricultural income whether the lands were permanently settled or not.

From this brief history of the income-tax law it appears that the Central Govt. did tax agricultural income when it wanted to do so but for many years past for certain reasons of policy such income was exempted from taxation. Then came the Govt. of India Act which expressly authorised the province to tax agricultural income the authority so conferred being as unqualified as the exemption given in regard to agricultural income under the Indian Income Tax Act. Why should not then the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act be taken to be a repeal of the earlier enactment, because the language which is used in this Act is universal and comprehensive. The Act purports to tax "the total agricultural income of every person" (s. 2) and s. 4 recites in express terms the Act shall apply to all agricultural income derived from land situated in the Province of Bihar. There is nothing in the Act to suggest that it was intended to apply to lands other than those comprised within the permanently settled estates, or so exclude the liability of so large a class of tax payers as are holder of permanently settled estates in Bihar. If these persons were intended to be excluded the Legislature would have used apt words to express its meaning. I think that I might usefully quote here the following observations of Hamilton, J. which were quoted by Rankin, J. in Emperor v. Prokhat Chandra Barua (19) at p. 520* :

"Can s. 33 in view of that history and of its subject-matter, be so read as to make it subject to an unexpressed exception in favour of the rights of Exeter under its charters?"

After quoting this, Rankin, J. added

"There is no rule which entitles Courts of Law to demand express words from the Legislature, or to refuse the office of interpreter in the absence of express words; but the point is that the Legislature dealing with a matter, as to which equality or uniformity may well have been thought a cardinal consideration, has used the plainest and the most express language. The head and front of most its offending is that the words are general, but prima facie they import a calculated universality."

If therefore the other arguments of Mr. Das fall and it is held that the Bihar Legislature was competent to pass the Agricultural Income Tax in the terms in which it has been passed, it might well be argued that the Act has repealed the provisions of an earlier enactment. It seems to me that the "calculated universality" of the language used in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act is sufficient to show that the permanently settled estates were not meant to be excluded. This, in my opinion, is sufficient to dispose of the last point raised by Mr. Das. But I must repeat once more that I have dealt with this point only in defence to Mr. Das's argument and on the assumption that the tax imposed by the Bihar Act is an augmentation of the jama which was fixed under the Permanent Settlement Regulation.

Thus the conclusions which I have arrived at may be summed up as follows: (1) the definition of the agricultural income as given in the Bihar Act seems to be somewhat defective but that does not invalidate the whole Act. On a careful examination of its language it appears that it goes beyond the terms of the definition given in the Govt. of India Act in regard to such revenue free estates as lie within the limits of a Municipality. We do not definitely know whether there are any such estates in Bihar and if there are, what is the total number of such estates; but assuming that such estates do exist, all that can be said is that such estates cannot be taxed and the Act is ultra vires in so far as it purports to tax them. (2) That there is no declaration or promise in the Permanent Settlement Regulation that the zamindars will not be liable to pay income-tax like the other receivers of income and accordingly the Bihar Act is neither repugnant to nor purports to repeal the Permanent Settlement Regulation (3) That the Permanent Settlement Regulation is not an Act of Parliament and can be repealed by the Legislature of the province or provinces affected by it, provided that the procedure set out in the Govt. of India Act is followed. In the present case the Act cannot be questioned as the Governor has given his assent to it after it was passed. (4) That the Agri. Income Tax Act purports to tax all lands and estates permanently settled or otherwise and it will not be correct to hold that by this Act the income from permanently settled estates cannot be taxed. In my opinion the suit must fail and should be dismissed with costs.

Manohar Lall, J.—The plaintiffs who are zamindars holding permanently settled estates in the District of Patna in Bihar, have instituted this suit on October 7, 1939, for a declaration that the Provincial Legislature of Bihar has no jurisdiction to enact the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act (VII of 1938) as amended by the Bihar Agri. Amendment Act (V of 1939) (hereinafter to be referred to as the act) imposing agricultural income tax on their estate which was settled under the Permanent Settlement Regulation (I of 1793) (hereinafter to be referred to as the Regulation) so long as the said regulation stands unrepealed, and for a further declaration that the issuing of and serving of the notice on the plaintiffs by the Agricultural Income Tax Officer under s. 17 (2) and 30 of the Act with a view to their proposed assessment for agricultural income tax was without jurisdiction, illegal, invalid and inoperative. The main defence to the action on behalf of the Province of Bihar was that the impugned Act was competently enacted and did not purport to alter the character of or infringe the conditions of, the Permanent Settlement under the Regulations so that the imposition of agricultural income tax is not invasion on the rights of the zamindars under the Permanent Settlement. It was also pleaded that the plaintiffs have no right to maintain the suit in that their only remedy was to raise their objection in the course of the assessment before the Agricultural Income Tax Officer the requirement of s. 80 of the Civil P. C., were also stated not to have been fulfilled. A number of issues were struck by the first Subordinate Judge of Patna which are to be found at p. 7 of the paper book. The suit was originally valued at Rs. 187-8-0 but upon the objection raised by the defendant the valuation was increased to Rs. 10,001 and the requisite court-fee has been paid thereon. By an order of this Court on hearing the parties and with their consent, this suit has been transferred and for trial to this Court as it involves a decision of important and difficult questions concerning the whole province.

When the hearing of this case began on February 26, 1941, the learned Advocate for both sides agreed that the relevant facts, which are necessary to decide the suit, are not denied by either side including the facts relating to the validity of the notice under s. 80 of Civil P. C. and that the only issue which required to be decided was issue No. 8 namely, whether the notices and the assessment under the impugned Acts are legal, operative and binding on the plaintiffs? Issue Nos. 1, 3, 4, 6, 7, and 9 are merely matters of argument. Issue No. 5 was given up on behalf of the defence. The plaintiffs then, being zamindars holding their estate permanently settled with their predecessor or under the provision of regulation, challenge the validity of the Act upon three grounds, firstly, that the Act has not been validly enacted under the provisions of the Govt. of India Act, 1937 (hereinafter to be referred to as the India Act), secondly, that if it is held to be validly enacted it cannot apply upon its true construction to a permanently settled estate and lastly, that if the Act can be construed to operate as a repeal of the legislative provisions of the Regulation, this involves a direct breach of the promise given under the Regulation. It will be convenient in the first instance to examine the scope of the Act in order to find out the nature of the imposition so that it may be decided to what extent the imposition is inconsistent with the provisions of the Regulation.

The Act which received the assent of the Governor on October 12, 1938, states in the preamble that this is "an Act to provide for the imposition of a tax on agricultural income" and contains the preamble that

"whereas it is expedient to impose a tax on agricultural income arising from lands situated in the Province of Bihar, it is hereby enacted as follows."

Agricultural income is defined by s. 2 (a). The rest of the Act is divided into six chapters of which only Chap. II is relevant for the present purpose. That chapter is entitled "charge of agricultural income-tax" and consists of 13 sections. Section 3 is so framed as to charge agricultural income-tax at the rate which may be specified from time to time; the tax is stated to be charge

"on the total agricultural income of the previous year of every person" and by s. 4 it is enacted that the Act shall apply to "all agricultural income derived from land situated in the Province of Bihar" save as income hereinafter provided. The limits of the taxable income are fixed by s. 5, and the mode of its determination is enacted in ss. 6 and 7. Charitable or religious trusts and wagfs are exempted by ss. 8 and 9. The other provisions in this chapter are not relevant for the present enquiry but it may be stated that s. 5 agricultural income-tax is only payable, if the total agricultural income of the previous year exceeds Rs. 5,000 and that no tax is payable by a person who received agricultural income as defined in s. 2 (a) (1) or by those who are in cultivating possession of less than 200 acres of land. It will be noticed, therefore, that the act imposes a taxation on agricultural income arising from all lands situated in the Province of Bihar subject to the stated exceptions briefly narrated above and does not exempt the agricultural income of zamindars which they receive from permanently settled estates and applied to all persons who receive agricultural income e. g. raiyats under-raiyats tenure-holders, lessees, temporary or permanent, and zamindars.

Such being the ambit of this Act it is now pertinent to consider the question whether the imposition of agricultural income-tax in respect of agricultural income derived by a zamindar from his permanently settled estate is to any, and if so to what, extent inconsistent with the provisions of the Regulation. Fortunately so far as this Court is concerned there is an authoritative decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the celebrated case of Probbhat Chandra Barua v. King-Emperor (9), which must guide in deciding this question. This Court must accept the pronouncement given by Lord Russell of Killowen while delivering the judgment of their Lordships and must reject an attempt to distinguish that decision upon the ground which will be indicated hereafter. His Lordship after, examining all the relevant provisions in the various Bengal Regulations of 1793 came to the conclusion that the Regulation was a master Regulation and then proceeded to examine its terms and specially Art. 6 which was relied by counsel before their Lordships (as it has been mainly relied upon by counsel for the plaintiffs before this Court) and held that their Lordships

"are unable to find in the Regulation any statement or assurance that a zamindar will never be liable to taxation in respect of the income derived from his zamindari, or (to put the matter from another point of view) that a zamindar will, as to so much of his property as consists of income derive from his zamindari, be exempt from schemes of taxation applicable generally to the incomes of the inhabitants of British India."

His Lordship then gives a most valuable paraphrase of Art. 6 which may be usefully quoted here :

"You have in the past been liable to have the amount of the jama increased according as the actual produce of the estate increased ; to enable the Govt. to obtain this you have been subjected to frequent investigations to ascertain the actual produce and you have even been deprived of the management of the estate. All this shall cease. You shall have fixity of payment and fixity of tenure. If you improve the revenue of your zamindari you shall enjoy the fruits of your improvement without fear of the Govt. claiming that because the revenue produced by the estate has increased, the payment you make to Govt. as a condition of holding that estate shall be increased also,"

and a few lines later

"In their Lordships' opinion, while the Regulation contain assurances against any claim to an increase of the jama, based on an increase of the zamindari income they contain no promise that a zamindar shall in respect of the income which he derives from his zamindari be exempt from liability to any future general scheme of property taxation, or that the income of a zamindari shall not be subjected with other income to any future general taxation of incomes."

I have already shown that the Act imposes a general tax on all agricultural incomes and as the Regulations never promised that the income of a zamindar shall not be subject to any future general taxation of incomes (as laid down in Barua's case the Act cannot be held to be a breach of that promise.

But it was strongly contended that the words of Lord Russel quoted above cannot be brought into aid by the defendant because the Act is not an Act to tax all incomes but to tax agricultural income only. The argument was that whereas an Income Tax Act is a general tax in all income irrespective of the sources and can be imposed upon agricultural and non-agricultural incomes of permanently settled zamindaris the tax being a tax on agricultural incomes only and with reference to a particular source it cannot be validly imposed even according to the decision in Barua's case. I do not understand this distinction. If the Indian Income Tax Act can validly tax all incomes including agricultural and non-agricultural incomes, I do not see why the same taxation cannot be imposed by two competent bodies the one taxing non-agricultural income and the other taxing agricultural income of the zamindar assessees. This is exactly what has been provided by the present India Act. But for the exception given in s. 4 (3) of the Indian Income Tax Act it would be payable upon agricultural income also. That tax can now be imposed by the provincial legislature by giving it that power by inserting it as Item No. 41 in List II, Sch. VII. The argument that income tax is a tax on income without any reference to a source loses sight of the sections in the Indian Income Tax Act which specifically mention the sources e. g. s. 4, s. 6 and s. 12.

It is proper that I should state here the other grounds upon which the decision in Barua's case was sought to be distinguished. It was urged by Sir Sultan Ahmad, who gave a forcible reply on behalf of the plaintiff, that that case only decided the taxability of the non-agricultural income arising from the estate of the assessee and that, therefore the observations of Lord Russel should be taken to mean only that there was no promise that non-agricultural income will not be assessed by any future general scheme of property taxation but that either it must be held that the promise under the Regulation was to exempt agricultural income from further taxation or that the point was never decided and remains open to argument. I am unable to accept this contention as sound. At the top of p. 7 the argument of the appellant before the Privy Council has been stated to be in these words.

"He (that is to say, the zamindar assessee appellant) alleges that the jama was a tax and not a rent or rent-charge, and that by the Regulations a legislative assurance of guarantee was given that no tax beyond the amount of the fixed jama would be imposed upon the income of the permanently settled estate."

This income of the permanently settled estate, in my opinion, means both agricultural and non-agricultural income and it is not permissible to argue that the income of the permanently settled estate means in that judgment only the non-agricultural income of the permanently settled estate. This argument was also developed in this way:—The Govt. land revenue is a tax on agricultural income, the limit of that tax was fixed by the Regulation and, therefore, the proposed tax by the Act on agricultural income is a breach of that promise which ensured to the zamindars that all fruits of their own good management and industry will be exclusively enjoyed by them and that the present or any future Govt. will never ask for an augmentation of the tax on agricultural income in consequence of the improvement of their respective estates. An analogy was also sought to be drawn between the Indian revenue system and the English tax land system. It is true as pointed out by Viscount Dunedin while delivering the judgment of the Board in Wadia v. Secretary of State for India in Council (27) at p. 60 that

"the root idea of British rule in India is that he who has the soil must pay, not in kind like a proper tithe, but in money, a certain proportion of what he gets from cultivation, and this money payment can be raised from time to time so as to maintain the proportion to the fruits of cultivation which have increased."

But the observation of Lord Porter while delivering the judgment of the Board in Raja Bhagwan Bakhsh Singh v. Secretary of State (28) at p. 206 are useful to show that "in considering the way in which land revenue is regarded in India no comparison with tenures in England is of such (if any) assistance. Its universality, its quantum, and the tendency of the Indian outlook to regard the Govt. as a sharer in all the produce of the land are matter of importance."

That was a case in which the question arose as to whether land revenue must be deducted in calculating the gross annual profit of a property and it was pointed out that it must be so deducted (these two cases did not concern permanently settled estates).

It is also true that "whatever doubts be entertained as to whether before the British occupation the zamindars had any proprietary interest in the lands comprised within their respective districts, it is now established by high authorities that the Permanent Settlement itself recognises and proceeds on the footing that they are the actual proprietors of the land for which they undertake to pay the Govt. revenue." Per Sir George Lowndes in Gobinda Narayan Singh v. Shamlal Singh (29) at p. 132 approving the well known passage from the judgment of Lord Parker in Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (25) at p. 122*.

But the assessee, the plaintiff, ignores the position of zamindars which is expressly provided by Arts. 3, 4 and 5 of the Regulation, that is to say, the zamindars are "allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever."

In Haradas Achargya Chowdhuri v. Secretary of State for India (12) Lord Buckmaster while considering the question as to how the external boundaries of a permanently settled estate should be decided made these observations at p. 91† :

"Pushed to its extreme it would result in this : that whenever a zamindari had been the subject of permanent settlement and there was any dispute as to its external boundaries the zamindars would never be able to establish title to any portion of it if it happened to be traversed by a navigable river, of variable course, unless they could show what were the exact boundaries of that course at the date of the permanent settlement. Such a conclusion their Lordships wholly reject. The object of the permanent settlement was to confirm the zamindars in their holdings at a fixed and immovable rent, and, if assumption are made, one way or the other, they ought to proceed upon an attempt to do justice to the title rather than to render it insecure."

In the case of Raja Suttosurrun Ghosal v. Mahesh Chandar Mitra (30) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed at p. 13* that the general principle upon which all legislations subsequent to 1793 have proceeded in India was that of putting a purchaser at a sale for arrear of revenue in the position of the party with whom the perpetual settlement of the estate was made. This has been the accepted view as to the rights of a purchaser who purchased a zamindari sale for arrears of land revenue and this was clearly enacted in s. 37 of the Ben. Land Revenue Sales Act (Act XI of 1859). Incidentally attention may be drawn to s. 2 of this Act which makes reference to the kist or instalment of land revenue which is payable by the proprietor of a permanently settled estate. That section shows that the kist or instalment is to be paid in accordance with the original settlement and kistbandi of the mahal. These kabuliats are kept in the office of the Collector to which reference is made from time to time in cases arising under the Land Revenue Sales Act of 1859. In the Barua's case Lord Russel in the paraphrase of Art. 6 which I have already quoted expressly used the words "that a zamindar shall have fixity of payment and fixity of tenure and rejected the argument advanced on behalf of the assessee as unsound that the jama was a tax, not a rent or rent charge."

In my opinion these quotations from these high authorities are quite sufficient to confirm me in the view which I take that all that the zamindar has been promised is a right to remain in quiet possession of his permanently settled estate provided he pays regularly the amount which he agreed to pay by the engagement endorsed by the kabuliat executed in pursuance of the Regulation. It should be stated here that after the promulgation of the Regulation the zamindars were called upon to enter into kabuliat with the Govt. of India through the Collector and in these kabuliats they expressly applied that the estates of which they were in possession as zamindars should be settled with them. But the actual settlements were made with the (30) 11 W R P C 10.

zamindars in possession only if they agreed to pay the assessment fixed after an elaborate investigation by the Officers and if they did not agree to pay the amount of the proposed assessment the estate was settled with other persons who agreed to make that payment. This conclusively shows that the payment which is being made was made in pursuance of the Permanent Settlement of the estate which could be made and was made in many cases, not with the old proprietors but with anybody who on agreeing to pay the jama was placed in possession of the estate with a promise that if he or his lawful successors would go on paying the assessment which they have engaged to pay they will be allowed to hold the estate at such assessment for ever. (In the Pachete case (Secretary of State v. Jyoti Prasad Singh Deo) (31) the kabuliat will be found quoted in the judgment of Lord Pillimore at p. 108*.)

Upon the view which I take of the applicability of the Barua's case it is unnecessary for me to consider the elaborate argument which was advanced as to the intention and historical origin of Art. 6 of the Regulation. We were taken at great length through many historical documents before the Permanent Settlement including the character of the East India Company, various Statutes of George III, William IV and Queen Victoria, Field's Regulations of the Bengal Code, Phillips' Land Tenures of Lower Bengal and the various minutes of Sir John Shore, of Warren Hastings and of Lord Cornwallis. But in my opinion no useful purpose can be served by examining these materials after the decision of their Lordships in the Barua's case. I, therefore, conclude that the Act does apply to permanently settled estate and does not involve a direct breach of the promise given under the Regulation.

I now proceed to consider the next argument that the Act has not been validly enacted under the provisions of the Govt. of India Act. This argument may be conveniently examined under various heads:—(i) The act is ultra vires because the definition of agricultural income given in s. 2 is different from that contained in the India Act; (ii) The sanction of the Governor-General ought to have been taken because the Act repeals an Act of Parliament extending to British India, and (iii) By the Instrument of Instructions the Governor of Bihar should not have assented in the name of His Majesty to the Bill which alters the character of the Permanent Settlement.

Firstly as to the effect of the definition in the Act. Section 311 (2) Govt. of India Act, defines agricultural income to mean "agricultural income as defined for the purpose of the enactments relating to income tax". By s. 2 of Act XI of 1922 (Indian Income Tax Act) agricultural income has been defined. The Act by s. 2 has also defined agricultural income. It will be observed that the whole of sub-cl. (c) which is found in the Indian Income Tax Act definition has been omitted from the definition in the Act and sub-s. (i) of sub-cl. (a) has been altered changing the words "assessed to land revenue in British India" to "assessed to land revenue in Bihar" and by changing the words "subject to the local rate assessed and collected by Officers of the Crown as such" to "subject to the local cess or rate assessed and collected under any Bengal Act or under any Bihar and Orissa Act or under any Bihar Act." It was, therefore argued that by the analogy of s. 141 Govt. of India Act the Provincial Legislature has no power to vary the meaning of the expression "agricultural income" and the whole Act is ultra vires. But s. 141 does not seem to be of much assistance as it provides that "no bill or amendment which imposes or varies any tax or duty in which Provinces are interested, on which varies the meaning of the expression 'agricultural income' as defined for the purposes of the enactments relating to Indian income-tax etc. etc., shall be introduced or moved in either Chamber of the Federal Legislature".

The Act was not passed by the Federal Legislature. But the important question to consider is whether the power of the Provincial Legislature to impose tax agricultural income is Item No. 41 in list II of the Seventh Schedule includes the power to impose tax on agricultural income beyond what is defined in the Indian Income Tax Act. In other words has the definition in the Act substantially varied the definition of the agricultural income in the Indian Income Tax Act? I do not think by the changing of the words "British India" to "Bihar" any variation has been made. The Provincial Legislature having power to impose a tax only in Bihar must have the power to mould the definition so as to suit the provincial condition. Nor does the omission of (c) help the argument of the plaintiff; the omission narrows the definition but does not enlarge the scope. I am also not impressed by the argument that a substantial change has been made because the Bihar Act uses the word income and not revenue in the opening lines of s. 2 (a) (1). Revenue derived from land connotes in the subject under consideration the same meaning as income derived from land. The serious objection, however, is that the words "local rate assessed and collected by Officer of the Crown as such" have been completely altered. This argument has to be examined in some detail.

(31) 53 I A 100; 94 Ind. Cas. 974; A I R 1926 P C 41; 30 C W N 745; 24 A L J 761; 53 C 533 (P C).

The Indian Income Tax Act speaks of a local rate, assessed and collected by Officers of the Crown as such. The local rate has been amplified in the Bihar Act as a local cess or rate. I do not think this is any substantive variation. The Bihar Act has merely used the words "assessed and collected under any Bengal Act or under any Bihar and Orissa Act or under any Bihar Act". The critical question to consider is whether the local cess or rate assessed and collected under these Acts is assessed and collected by Officers of the Crown as such. To begin with it is clear to me that if a local cess or rate is assessed and collected under these Acts not by Officers of the Crown as such then agricultural income on those lands which are subject to such cess or rate cannot be brought within the taxation of the Bihar Act. This was conceded by the learned Advocate-General who appeared for the defendant and in my opinion rightly.

It was argued at great length that the cess which is imposed and collected under the Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880) is not assessed and collected by Officers of the Crown as such. But a perusal of the provisions of Part II makes it clear that the valuation of the land is made under the orders of the Board of Revenue by the Collector of the District who is defined to be the officer in charge of the revenue administration of a District and includes any person specially invested with the powers of a Collector for the purposes of this Act. Sections 14, 16 and 17 describe the procedure which must be adopted by the Collector requiring the holders of an estate or tenure of a certain description to lodge at his office return of all the lands comprised therein. By s. 18 the omission to furnish a return involves the liability to pay a daily fine until the valuation of the lands has been ascertained and determined by the Collector. By s. 22 the Collector is empowered, if he is not satisfied as to the correctness of the return, to fix an annual value of the lands by making independent enquiry. These provisions show that the assessment is made by a Collector who is an Officer of the Crown.

The rate at which the cess is to be assessed on the annual value of the land determined under Chap. II is fixed in the manner provided in Chaps. I and II. The collection of the cess is provided in s. 41 which enjoins every holder of an estate to pay to the Collector annually the entire amount of local cess and by s. 45 it is provided that if the instalment of the local cess or a part thereof payable to the Collector is not made within the time fixed the amount of such instalment may be recovered with interest thereon at $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum. It seems to me, therefore that this local cess is assessed and collected under the Cess Act by the Collector, an Officer of the Crown. But it was argued that as the proceeds of the local cess in each district and all sums levied or recovered as interest or otherwise in respect thereof is to be paid under s. 9 into the district fund of the district, the collection is made on behalf of the District Board. In my opinion this argument is not sound because the destination of the amount of cess collected has nothing to do with the capacity in which the cess is collected.

Attention, however, was drawn to the provisions of Chap. IX which empower the District Committee to determine the rate of the cess for the year in order to prepare an estimate of the income and expenditure of the Committee for the year then next ensuing. It is true that the Committee by s. 148 is required to determine the rate at which it will be necessary to levy the local cess for the year, but s. 150 directs that every such estimate by the Committee under s. 146 shall be forwarded through the Collector of the District to the Commissioner and what is more important is that "the Commissioner may approve and estimate and the rate determined by the Committee." It seems to me, therefore, that these provisions are based upon the view that it is expedient to take advantage of the local knowledge of the District Committee in order to see what should be the proper rate at which cess should be levied. The final authority it will be noticed, is not the Committee but the Commissioner. Section 152 also provides that the Commissioner when re-considering the estimates submitting to him under s. 151 may either sanction the estimate and rate as determined by the Committee or may submit such estimate together with the reasons recorded by the Committee for adhering to the original view to the Lieutenant Governor, and by s. 153 the Lieutenant Governor finally decides the rate and the estimate which should be published so that by s. 156 the rate which is thus published in the Gazette becomes leviable in the district for the year. These provisions strengthen me in the view which I take that the local cess is assessed and collected under the Cess Act by the Officers of the Crown as such.

It was then urged that the Collector under the Cess Act cannot be styled as an Officer of the Crown as such because so it was argued, there is no bar to any private person being specially invested with the powers of a Collector for the purposes of Cess Act. This argument, though attractive, loses sight of the fact that the Collector or the Collector of the District as defined under the Cess Act becomes an Officer of the Crown the moment he is invested with the powers of the Collector for the purpose of the Cess Act. The Collector is also most invariably a member of the Indian Civil Service, and the Provincial Civil Service. It was then argued that as the definition admittedly embraces lands which may be subject to a local cess or rate like the Bihar Municipal Act which is neither assessed nor collected by an Officer of the Crown as such, the whole definition becomes ultra vires as it is not permissible to dissect it so as to make it applicable to those lands which are subject to local cess and rate assessed and collected by Officers of the Crown as such. A sufficient answer to this argument is afforded by the case of Macleod v. Attorney-General for New South Wales (3). In that case the question for consideration was the extent of the definition of s. 54, of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1883 (45 Vic. c. 17). That section enacted that: "whosoever being married marries another person during the life of the former husband or wife whosoever such second marriage takes place shall be liable to penal servitude for seven years."

It was held by their Lordships in the judgment delivered by Lord Halsbury, L. C. that these words must be intended to apply to those actually within the jurisdiction of the Legislature and, therefore, there was no jurisdiction in the colony to try the appellant accused for the offence of bigamy alleged to have been committed in the United States of America. Now it will be observed that the word, "whosoever" is of such width that in its proper meaning it must comprehend all persons all over the world, natives of whatever country. Similarly there is no limit to the applicability of the word 'whosoever' which is equally universal in its application. Notwithstanding the universal application of these two words according to one construction their Lordships construed the words so as to make the enactment within the jurisdiction of the colony to enact it. The words of Lord Halsbury at p. 458* may be usefully quoted here :

"Their Lordships think it right to add that they are of opinion that if the wider construction had been applied to the statute, and it was supposed that it was intended thereby to comprehend cases so as to include those insisted on at the bar, it would have been beyond the jurisdiction of the colony to enact such a law. Their jurisdiction is confined within their own territories, and the maxim which has been more than once quoted 'extra territorium jurisdictio impune non paratur' would be applicable to such a case. Lord Wensleydale, when Baron Parke, advising the House of Lords in Jefferys v. Boosey (32), expresses the same proposition in very terse language..... It appears to their Lordships that the effect of giving the wider interpretation to this statute necessary to sustain this indictment would be to comprehend a great deal more than Her Majesty's subjects; more than any persons who may be within the jurisdiction of the colony by any means whatsoever and that, therefore, if that construction were given to the statute, it would follow as a necessary result that the statute was ultra vires of the Colonial Legislature to pass. Their Lordships are far from suggesting that the Legislature of the Colony did mean to give to themselves so wide a jurisdiction. The more reasonable theory to adopt is that the language was used, subject to the well-known and well considered limitation, that they were only legislating for those who were actually within their jurisdiction, and within the limits of the colony."

It has not been shown to us that the Bihar Legislature had meant to exercise so wide a jurisdiction that they intended to impose a tax on agricultural income from those lands which could not be reached by India Act definition. The more reasonable theory to adopt is that the language was used bona fide believing that they were legislating only for those lands which were actually within their jurisdiction. But reliance was placed upon the observation of the late Sir Shah Mohammad Sulaiman, in the Federal Court judgment in Subrahmanyam Chettiar v. Muthuswami Goundan (6) at p. 183† :

"But I am not aware of any case in which the same section containing similar provisions for contract as for the decree based on it has been considered to be severable so as to make the latter valid, while the former is invalid," and, therefore, it was argued that it is not permissible to dissect the definition of agricultural income in the Act in order to find out that some portion is invalid and the rest is valid. I do not agree with this argument because as pointed out by Varadachariar, J. in the same case at p. 196† :

"any objection based on the wide scope of the Act may be obviated by so interpreting the general terms used in the Act as to limit them to cases with which alone the Legislature was competent to deal."

Sulaiman, J. in the passages relied upon was only pointing out that a part of an Act can be held valid and another part invalid (32) (1854) 4 H. L. 615; 3 C. L. R. 625; 24 L. J. Ex. 81; 1 Jur. (N. S.) 165; 94 R. R. 339.

if they are severable and that if the offending provisions are so interwoven into the scheme that they are not severable, the whole is ultra vires. Indeed in Shyamkant Lal v. Rambhajan Singh (7), at p. 201*, he himself pointed out that:

and then he makes the observation which has been relied upon. In the present case it is within the Province of Bihar Legislature to tax agricultural income provided the agricultural income is as defined in the Govt. of India Act. If the definition unwittingly extends beyond the limit prescribed by the definition of the India Act the whole Act cannot be held to be ultra vires because the subject which is beyond its legislative power is perfectly distinguishable from that which is within its power. I do not propose to deal with the argument as to severability at any length because this has been sufficiently dealt with in the Federal Court judgment from which I have just been quoting. But I may usefully draw attention to the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Attorney General for Canada v. Attorney-General for British Columbia (33) where Lord Tomlin who delivered the judgment of the Board laid down four propositions which he deducted from the decisions of the Judicial Committee in deciding questions of conflict between the jurisdiction applying those propositions I reach the same conclusion.

Lastly it may be pointed out that it will be quite permissible to adopt the definition of agricultural income as given in the Indian Income Tax Act (which is the definition under the India Act) in order to find out whether the land, the agricultural income whereof is sought to be taxed, satisfied the requirements of that definition. In other words the definition given in the Act may be either be ignored or construed so as to make it apply to the subjects within the ambit of the definition given in the Indian Income Tax Act. Perhaps this question is not of importance in this case because it is not shown that the land of the plaintiff from which agricultural income is derived, which is proposed to be taxed, is not subject to land revenue, nor has it been shown to be the subject of local cess or rate which is not collected and assessed by the Officer of the Crown as such. If there is such a land the agricultural income from that land will, as stated above, not be liable to taxation under the Act. Secondly as to the want of the sanction of the Governor-General. The argument advanced was based upon the terms of s. 108 (2) (a) of the India Act which provide that

"unless the Governor-General in his discretion thinks fit to give his previous sanction, there shall not be introduced into, or moved in a Chamber of a Provincial Legislature, any bill or amendment which repeals, amends or is repugnant to any provisions of any Act of Parliament extending to British India."

It was argued that the Act conflicts with the Regulation, which is an Act of Parliament, extending to British India. The learned Advocate-General on the other hand argued that the Regulation does not extend to British India because it applied only to a part of British India, namely Bengal, Bihar and the other permanently settled estates in some of the Provinces whereas British India has been defined by s. 311 of the India Act to mean "all territories for the time being comprised within the Governor's Provinces and the Chief Commissioners' Province". He also pointed out that the India Act itself has drawn in distinction between British India and part thereof and referred to s. 110 (a) and 110 (b). He argues in the second place that the Regulation is not an Act of Parliament. I do not see any escape from the conclusion that the India Act has deliberately drawn a distinction between British India and a part of British India. It appears also that the Governor-General is required to exercise his discretion only where the Provincial Legislature proposes to introduce a Bill which is repugnant to any Act of Parliament extending to the whole of British India and where the Bill is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of Parliament extending to the whole of British India but is repugnant to an Act of Parliament which extends to a particular province only the Legislature and the Governor of that Province may well be left with the discretion to deal with the condition of their own province. But be that as it may as the India Act itself has drawn a distinction between British India and a part of British India in various sections of the Act. I must accept the argument advanced on behalf of the defendant that the Regulation is not an Act of Parliament extending to the whole of British India. Is the Regulation an Act of Parliament? An elaborate argument was advanced before us to ascertain the position of the East India Company at the time when the Regulation was promulgated. It was argued that at that time the only legislative power was in the Parliament and had not been conferred either upon the East India Company or upon the Governor-General in Council and, therefore the Regulation was an Act of Parliament. It is true that the position of the East India Company was somewhat anomalous and it is impossible to discover the precise date when the Company exchanged the character of subject for that of sovereign and obtained for the Crown the rights of sovereignty. But for the purposes of this case it is sufficient to make reference to the following observations made by Sir Arthur Wilson while delivering the judgment of the Board in Hemchand Devchand v. Azam Sarkarlal Chhottamal (34) the passage is at p. 15:

"The time under consideration divide itself naturally into two periods, that of the Govt. of British India by the E. I. Co., down to 1858, and that of direct Govt. by the Crown after that date. The legal and constitutional position of the company during the former of these periods was established in a series of judicial decisions and was finally and fully defined in the Secretary of State in Council v. Kamchee Boyee Sahaba (35). The company exercised a delegated sovereignty over the territories under the Govt. with all the powers in connection with the external of those territories incidental to the exercise of that sovereignty subject, of course, to such restrictions as were imposed by other or by statute. It is obvious that the sovereign power thus delegated to the company could be exercised by it in India only through its agents and officers in the country. Before the Regulating Act of 1773 (13 Geo. III, c. 63) the three Presidencies in India were wholly independent of one another; in the Govt. of each and in the dealings of each with the native States in its neighbourhood, the company acted through its officers charged with the administration of that Presidency. By the Regulating Act the Govts. of Madras and Bombay were placed under the superintendence and control of the Governor-General of Bengal (since become Governor-General of India) and his Council, and close restrictions were placed upon their power of making war or concluding treaties without the approval of the general Central Govt. Subsequent statutes expressed with greater clearness the subordination of the lesser Govts. and repeated the restriction upon the exercise by them of various sovereign powers. But subject to that subordination and to those restrictions, those statutes never took away those powers, but, on the contrary, repeatedly recognised their existence. And accordingly in the East India Company v. Syed Ali (36), this Board held that a treaty entered into by the Govt. of Madras, after compliance with the statutory condition, was a valid exercise of sovereignty. By the Govt. of India Act, 1858, the delegation of sovereign power to the company was determined, and it has since been exercised directly on behalf of the Crown, in India (speaking generally) through the same authorities as before in England through the Secretary of State. Under the sovereign power thus delegated for so long to the company and since 1858, exercised directly on behalf of the Crown, the British Empire in India has been built up."

If the Regulation was promulgated by the East India Company or by its Officers, namely the Governor-General of Bengal the Regulation was promulgated by a body to whom sovereign power has been delegated. This was pointed out by Lord Sebourne in the celebrated case of Queen v. Burah (37) at p. 193 that the "Indian Legislature has power expressly limited by the Act of the Imperial Parliament which created it, and it can of course do nothing beyond the limits which circumscribe these powers. But, when acting within these limits, it is not in any sense an agent or delegate of the Imperial Parliament, but has, and was intended to have, plenary powers of legislation, as large, and of the same nature, as those of Parliament itself."

But if on the other hand the East India Company or the Governor-General of Bengal had not power to make this legislation then how can it be held that it was an Act of Parliament?

Mr. P. R. Dass, who argued the case as an amicus curiae on behalf of the plaintiff, with his usual ability and ingenuity, argued that s. 36 of the Regulation Act of 1773 is the only section under which the Governor General was given the power to legislate for the East India Company and that upon a true construction of this section it must be held that the power to legislate was only confined to the City of Calcutta. He, therefore, argued that the regulation was a piece of legislation which must be attributed to the Parliament and, therefore, was an Act of Parliament. In the first place I do not agree that s. 36 did not give the power to the Governor-General to legislate for the territories of the company beyond the city of Calcutta. The words, "for the territories subordinate thereto" are quite comprehensive to include the territories which were for the time being de facto, though not de jure, under the delegated sovereign power of the East India Company. But even if the argument of Mr. Das is accepted that the Governor-General had no power to legislate for the territories beyond the City of Calcutta in 1773 it does not follow that the Regulation was an act of Parliament, because no Act of Parliament is shown to have promulgated or approved the promulgation of this Act. All that is pointed out is that the Parliament desired that the Court of Directors should order its officers, namely the Officers of the East India Company, to remove the abuses which had been brought to the notice of the Parliament relating to the recovery of rent, taxes and other impositions from the zamin-dars and that if these complaints be found to be based on truth they should be speedily removed. It will be observed that the Court of Directors was the sole judge as to whether the abuses complained of actually existed and ought to be or have been removed. The truth of the matter is that the East India Company was a trading company from 1600 to 1764 it obtained a permanent lease of the Dewani in 1765 from the Moghuls and therefore, the Parliament could not legislate as a de jure sovereign of the territories which were placed under the Dewani and the Nizamat of the East India Company by a permanent lease from the sovereign of India."

For these reasons I am of opinion that the Regulation was not an Act of Parliament and that it did not extend to the whole of British India. It follows that the Act is not illegal on these grounds which I have examined.

Thirdly as to the disregard of the provisions in the Instrument of Instructions. By cl. 18 of the Instrument of Instructions to the Governor it is provided that "our Governor shall not assent in our name to, but shall reserve for the consideration of our Governor-General, any Bill of any of the classes herein specified, that it is to say:—(a) any bill the provisions of which would repeal or be repugnant to provisions of any Act of Parliament extending to British India; (c) any Bill which would alter the character of the Permanent Settlement."

The argument is that the provisions of sub-cl. (c) of this clause have been violated and, therefore the assent given by the Governor to the Act on October 12, 1938 was a disregard of these express instructions. Section 13 of the India Act contains provisions as to the Instrument of Instructions which is issued to the Governor-General and s. 53 contains provisions as to the Instrument of Instructions which is issued to the Governor of a Province. But by the second sub-clause to s. 53 it is distinctly provided that the validity of anything done by the Governor of a Province shall not be called in question on the ground that it was done otherwise than in accordance with any Instrument of Instructions issued to him. It follows that the violation of the provisions of cl. 18 (c) of the Instrument of Instructions to the Governor of Bihar cannot be called in question as expressly provided in the Indian Act. But it may also be observed that notwithstanding the provisions in cl. 18 (a) of the Instrument of Instructions provisions have been made in s. 108 (2) (a) that no Bill shall be introduced in a Provincial Legislature if it is repugnant to the provisions of any Act of Parliament extending to British India. This shows that wherever the intention was that the proceedings would be invalid if these are contrary to any direction in the Instrument of Instructions a provision has been made directly in the Act itself.

Having thus carefully considered the interesting argument under all the three heads I am unable to hold that the Act has not been validly enacted under the provisions of the India Act. For these reasons I would dismiss the suit with costs.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT

Criminal Revision Application No. 169 of 1940

September 3, 1940

DAVIS, C. J. AND WESTON, J.

LILOMAL MANUMAL—APPLICANT
versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 294-A, Second part—Large number of lottery tickets found in shop of accused—Name of accused on counterfoils in space provided for name of seller to ultimate purchaser—Printed forms containing name of accused in capitals and proposal to purchasers to buy shares in lots also recovered—Proposal and sale, if established within meaning of s. 294-A—Publication, by reason of document having been printed in press.

A large number of lottery tickets were found in the shop of the accused. The name of the accused had been entered in the counterfoils, in space provided for the name not of the purchaser of the ticket but of the seller of the ticket to the ultimate purchaser. A printed document headed by the name of the accused in large capitals containing a proposal to purchasers to buy shares each amounting to 1/72nd in lots of twelve tickets of the Irish Free State Hospital Sweepstake, and reciting that the holder of the document was entitled to 1/73rd share of any prize won by any one of the twelve tickets was also found:

Held, that proposal and sale had been established within the meaning of s. 294-A, I. P. C.

Held, also that publication was established by the very fact that the proposal forms had been printed in press; Dew v. Director of Public Prosecutions, relied on.

Cr. R. App. to revise the conviction and sentence passed by the Resident Magistrate, Larkana, dated October 31, 1939.

Mr. Kishinchand J. Bijlani, for the Applicant.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Weston, J.—This is a revision application and the applicant was tried by the Resident Magistrate, Larkana, on a charge under both parts of s. 294-A, I. P. C., that is to say, both for keeping a place for the purpose of drawing a lottery and for publication of a proposal to pay in respect of a lottery. He was convicted under both parts of the section and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200 under the first part and to a fine of Rs. 100 under the second part. He appealed to the Sessions Court, Larkana, and the learned Sessions Judge set aside the conviction under the first part, holding that there was no evidence that the accused, who was a petty shop-keeper, kept his shop for the purpose of drawing a lottery. But in view of the large number of tickets of various lotteries and other documents which were found in the shop, he held that the conviction under the second part was correct and dismissed the appeal, and it is against the second part of the order of the learned Sessions Judge that the applicant now comes to us in revision.

When this matter was being argued for admission it was stated that there was no evidence of any publication by the accused of any proposal or sale, and it is also now argued that the learned Sessions Judge has conceded that there is no direct evidence that the accused ever sold lottery tickets. But in view of the documents seized from his shop, we think there is direct evidence of both the proposal and of the sale of tickets. It is impossible to believe that the accused had the large number of tickets found for any purpose other than that of sale. We find that on certain of the tickets exhibited, the name of the accused has been entered in the counterfoils, in the space provided by the persons issuing the tickets for the name not of the purchaser of the ticket but for the seller of the ticket to the ultimate purchaser. Exhibit 8 in the case is a printed document headed by the name of the accused in large capitals and it contains a proposal to purchasers to buy shares each amounting to 1/72nd in lots of twelve tickets of the Irish Free State Hospital Sweepstake, and it recites that the holder of the coupon Ex. 8 is entitled to 1/73rd share of any prize won by any one of the twelve tickets. A compositor of the Sind News Press at Larkana was examined as a witness and he stated that the coupon Ex. 8 had been printed in the press at which he works, and on the question of publication, in the words of the Chief Justice of England in Dew v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1):

"Once it is established.....that the appellant* was responsible for sending the circular to the printing company to be printed, and that it was printed, there is an end to his appeal, for it is inconceivable that none of the printers read the circular."

We can see therefore no reason to interfere in revision. We do not accept the argument that the sentence is excessive and on the contrary we are inclined to hold that it is lenient.

D. Application dismissed.

Custom (U. P.)—Haq-i-chaharum—Custom to recover haq-i-chaharum, extends also to cases of auction sales of houses—Right can be enforced against vendee.

The custom entitling a zamindar to recover one-fourth of the sale price as haq-i-chaharum in the case of sales of houses is not limited to a private sale alone but extends to a case of auction sale also.

The right to haq-i-chaharum can be enforced against the vendee.

[Case-law relied on.]

S. A. from the decision of the Civil Judge, Allahabad, dated April 27, 1938.

Mr. Shabd Saran, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Mushtaq Ahmad and Ghalib Ali, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's second appeal. The suit was for a declaration that the plaintiffs own the site of a house which has been sold at auction in a decree against defendant No. 2 and has been purchased by defendant No. 1 and that they are entitled to receive one-fourth of the sale price as zar-i-chaharum. The suit was contested by defendant No. 1; it proceeded ex parte against defendant No. 2. The contesting defendant denied the plaintiffs' ownership of the site. He also denied the alleged custom generally and as regards auction sales in particular.

The Courts below have found for the plaintiffs and have decreed the suit. The question before me is whether the right to zar-i-chaharum is established. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court says :

"Thus there are numerous agreements on record commencing from 1873 to show that one-fourth price has always been paid to zamindars. The documentary evidence is so abundant that it is unnecessary to deal with each document. In all of them the plaintiffs have been recognized as owners of the site and one-fourth sale consideration has always been left for them."

As I was left in ignorance as to what the learned Judge meant by "abundant documents," whether he meant five or five-hundred, I asked learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents, when the appeal was first before me, how many such documents there are and he informed me that there are about a dozen documents in which the right of the zamindar to one-fourth of the purchase price was recognized. The learned Judge also finds that on two occasions, once in 1901 and again in 1903, the right of the plaintiff's predecessor to one-fourth of the money paid at auction was upheld in execution proceedings. It does not appear that the alleged custom finds place in a wajib-ul-arz, but I think that there are sufficient grounds for the finding of the Courts below that the custom of zar-i-chaharum is established. The main contest before me is as to whether it applies to auction sales. In High Court Reports, Full Bench, for the North Western Provinces for 1866, p. 63 Heera Ram v. Hon'ble Sir Raja Deo Narain Singh (1) at p. 66, it was held by this Court that where by custom the zamindar is entitled to a quarter share of the sale proceeds as his haq zamindari, he is entitled to recover it on the occasion of sales, either absolute or originally conditional but subsequently becoming absolute by foreclosure, from the vendor and the purchaser. The Court observed :

"We are of opinion that the zamindar is entitled to a decree against Heera Ram, the conditional purchaser, as well as against the vendors. The zamindar's customary due is payable on the transfer by sale of house property; and this equally (after the sale has become absolute) whether the sale was in its inception conditional or not. The zamindar's right is to a share of the purchase money; it is not merely a right to claim that share from the vendor. It is therefore incumbent on the purchaser, if he would acquit himself of all liability, to see that the zamindar is satisfied in respect of his due...."

In Utri Din v. Munshi Prag Narain (2), at p. 65, a Bench of the Oudh Chief Court observed :

"It cannot be doubted that, when a conditional sale has ripened into an absolute sale, there has been a sale within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz."

(1) (1866) N W P H C R 63 (66) (F B).

(2) 11 O C 64 (65).

It was further held in that case that unless the right of the landlord is limited by the wajib-ul-arz to a right to claim haq-i-chaharum from the vendor, the right can be enforced against the vendee also. In Raghu-nandan v. Krishan Dutt (3), it was held that a custom of a grove-holder's liability to pay haq-i-chaharum which is recorded in the fard-i-riwaj-baghat is not limited to private sales alone; it extends to a case where there has been a foreclosure as the result of a compromise between the parties to the mortgage, on the basis of which the mortgagee's claim is decreed by the Court against the mortgagor. In Manni Lal v. Gauri Shankar (4), it was held by a learned Judge of this Court that a custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz entitling the lambardar to haq-i-chaharum in the case of sales of houses is not limited to a private sale alone but extends to a case where there has been foreclosure.

I have not been referred to any authority relating to sales upon a simple mortgage, but I do not think that there is any difference in principle between a private sale and an auction sale, and in my opinion the plaintiffs are entitled to one-fourth of the sale price. It has been held in the first two cases to which I have already referred and also in Dhandai Bibi v. Abdur Rahman (5) and in Kedar Nath v. Datta Prasad Singh (6), that the right to haq-i-chaharum can be enforced against the vendee. In the last named case at p. 649* Sulaiman, J. observed :

"...if the right is based on custom, then it has been held that it is the duty of the vendee to see that haq-i-chaharum is paid to the zamindar. The vendee cannot get rid of his liability by merely proving that he has paid the whole consideration to the vendor. He ought to see that the one-fourth of the sale price actually goes to the zamindar. If the zamindar had not had his share, a joint decree should be passed against the vendor and the vendee, leaving the matter to be decided in a subsequent suit."

For the reasons given above I am of opinion that the view taken by the Court below is correct. This appeal therefore fails and is dismissed. I make no order as to the costs of this appeal. Permission to appeal under the Letters Patent is refused.

Hindu Law—Alienation — Co-parcener — Father entitled to half share on date of mortgage by him—Mortgagee's right to execute decree against father's share—After born son, if acquires right in property alienated by father—Alienation of family property—Only co-parceners alive at date of alienation can challenge it — After born co-parcener has no such right — Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Money sent by debtor to his friend for payment to creditor—Friend sending same to creditor through messenger with letter that money was sent by debtor for payment to him — Payment, if amounts to acknowledgment.

Where at the date of the mortgage executed by the father, the father is entitled to a half share in the joint family property that interest which is vested in him would pass to the mortgagee. The property which is effectively carried away from the family is only a half and the other half would still be the joint family property and it is only in that half and in the equity of redemption in the other half, the afterborn son would be entitled to participate with the other son. This is in strict consonance with the principles of Hindu Law that in a Mitakshara family a member acquires right by birth only in the property which was then in existence and not in the property which has been effectively carried away from the family. [p. 711, col. 1.]

[Case-law discussed.]

Obiter.—The right to challenge alienations of family property is confined to the co-parceners alive at the date of the alienation. Such a right is denied to a co-parcener who though born subsequent to the alienation acquires an interest in the co-parcenary property before the death of the objecting or non-alienating co-parceners. 91 Ind. Cas. 471 (5), explained and relied on. 20 Ind. Cas. 958 (6), explained. 163 Ind. Cas. 712 (8), approved. 135 Ind. Cas. 367 (3), not approved. [p. 709, col. 1.]

Money was sent by a debtor to his friend for making payment to the creditor as part of the principal. The money however, was not actually paid by the friend himself but was sent to the creditor through a messenger with a letter that the amount had been sent to him by the debtor for payment and that it may be credited in the debtor's account.

Held, that the friend was debtor's agent within the meaning of s. 20, Lim. Act, and the payment operated as an acknowledgment of the debt. 94 Ind. Cas. 657 (1), approved.

A. and C. Misc. Petns. against the decree of the District Court, Kistna, dated October 31, 1936.

Mr. V. Govindarajachari, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. Somasundaram and P. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents.

Venkataramana Rao, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge of Kistna in a suit upon a mortgage dated September 19, 1929 executed by defendant No. 1 for himself and as guardian of his son, defendant No. 2, in favour of the plaintiff. Defendant No. 3 is another son of defendant No. 1 born subsequent to the date of the mortgage. The mortgage was for a sum of Rs. 2,500 payable with compound interest at Re. 0-14-6 per cent. per month. The plaintiff alleged that there was payment of Rs. 600 on November 9, 1930 and that the said payment was made by one Kasibotla Suryanarayana-murti on behalf of the defendants. The defendants denied that the said sum of Rs. 600 was paid as alleged in the plaint and defendant No. 1 pleaded that he was not personally liable on the ground that the personal remedy was barred by limitation, the suit having been instituted on March 16, 1936 more than six years from the date of the mortgage. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 denied the truth and validity of the mortgage. Their case was that the amount was not borrowed for any family necessity or for payment of any antecedent debt but for conducting a business newly started by defendant No. 1 himself. Another point taken was that even assuming the mortgage to be true, it was binding only on the mortgagor's share which must be deemed to be one-third, and defendant No. 3 though born subsequent to the date of the mortgage would be entitled also to a third share in the property mortgaged.

The learned District Judge found the mortgage to be true but held that it was not binding on defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on the ground that the amount borrowed was for the purpose of a business started by the father and not for any antecedent debt or family necessity. He also found that Rs. 600 was paid by the said Suryanarayana-murti but he was not an agent duly authorized within the meaning of s. 20, Lim. Act, and therefore the said payment would not save the bar of limitation in respect of the personal liability of defendant No. 1. He therefore held that defendant No. 1 was not personally liable for the debt. In regard to the interest of defendant No. 1 in the property he held that he was entitled to half a share in the suit property and that defendant No. 3 cannot repudiate the alienation made before his birth. The plaintiff has preferred this appeal in so far as the decree is against him, that is, in so far as it negated the personal liability of defendant No. 1. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have preferred a memorandum of objections raising the contention that the lower Court should have passed a decree only for a third share of the property and not for a half share.

Two questions therefore fall to be decided, namely (1) whether defendant No. 1 is personally liable for the debt and (2) what is the share of defendant No. 1 in the property mortgaged which the plaintiff is entitled to sell in execution of the decree in his favour. The first question turns on the determination of the issue whether the payment of Rs. 600 operates as an acknowledgment of debt within the meaning of s. 20, Lim. Act. The payment of Rs. 600 was apparently made towards the principal and was so treated by the plaintiff. In order that a part-payment of a principal can be relied on for saving the bar of limitation within the meaning of s. 20, Lim. Act, it must fulfil three requisites: (1) the payment must be made by the debtor or his agent; (2) the agent must have been empowered specifically to make the said payment; and (3) there must be an acknowledgment of the said payment in the handwriting of or in a writing signed by the debtor or his agent, that is, if the payment was made by the debtor, in the handwriting of or in a writing signed by the debtor or if the payment was made by the agent, in the handwriting of or in a writing signed by the agent. The question is whether the view of the learned District Judge that K. Suryanarayanamurti (P. W. No. 4) in making the payment was not the duly authorized agent of the defendants within the meaning of s. 20 is correct. P. W. No. 4 admits that he paid Rs. 600 in part-payment of the debt. He acknowledges the fact of payment in a letter Ex. B signed by him and delivered to the plaintiff, which runs thus:

"Irusalnamah submitted by Kasibotla Ramayya Garu's son Suryanarayanamurti, resident of Challapall, Divi taluq:

Out of the amount due under the hypothecation deed executed on September 19, 1929, in your favour by Mallela Venkatapayya Garu's adopted son Lakshmi Narasimham, resident of Godugupeta, Bandar, a sum of Rs. 600 (in words, six hundred) has been sent to me to be credited towards the said deed and so I have sent the same to you. I shall get the said amount credited towards the said deed by the said Lakshmi Narasimham.

(Sd.) Kasibotla Suryanarayanamurti,
November 9, 1930."

Mr. Somasundaram on behalf of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 does not dispute the fact of payment but contends that P. W. No. 4 was not an agent within the meaning of the section but only a mere messenger who made the payment and that Ex. B therefore cannot save limitation. On the evidence on record, we are clearly of the opinion that P. W.

No. 4 in making the payment was the duly authorized agent of the defendants within the meaning of the section. P. W. No. 4 is a close relation of defendant No. 1. It was P. W. No. 4 that arranged for the loan. Exhibit B clearly says that the sum of Rs. 600 was sent to him for the express purpose of making the payment on his behalf and crediting the same towards the deed. No doubt P. W. No. 4 says in his evidence before the Court that the money was not sent by defendant No. 1 but he had the money belonging to one Venkata Ramanamma and inasmuch as the plaintiff pressed for the payment of the debt he paid the same on behalf of defendant No. 1. This story cannot possibly be believed in the face of the express recital in Ex. B. P. W. No. 4 says that he told defendant No. 1 that he made the payment of a sum of Rs. 600 to the plaintiff and that defendant No. 1 told him that he would settle later. Though defendant No. 1 as D. W. No. 1 denies P. W. No. 4 having told him that such a payment was made, we cannot accept this denial as true. Four months before the plaintiff filed the suit the plaintiff sent a registered letter Ex. D dated March 3, 1936 to defendant No. 1 wherein the fact of payment of Rs. 600 on his behalf by Suryanarayanamurti was mentioned and no reply was sent thereto. Therefore the recital in Ex. B that Rs. 600 was sent by defendant No. 1 must be true and there is no reason to think that P. W. No. 4 was making a false recital. It is very likely that that sum was sent to P. W. No. 4 as he was the person who arranged for the loan. The decision in Ramkumar Sewchand v. Nanuram Poddar (1) on which Mr. Somasundaram relies does not support him, on the other hand, as in this case, the payment was made by a friend of the debtor acting as his agent but he did not actually pay the money to the creditor but sent it through a messenger with a letter which was similar in terms to Ex. B. It was held that that was a valid acknowledgment within the meaning of s. 20, Lim. Act.

The next question is whether the decree of the learned District Judge directing a sale of a half share of defendant No. 1 is right. The contention of Mr. Somasundaram is that an after-born son is entitled to question the alienation made by a father without any legal necessity when on the date of the alienation there were other sons living who could object to the said alienation and as in this case, on the date of the alienation defendant No. 2 was born and in existence, it therefore follows from this that defendant No. 3 would be entitled to a third share and what would pass to the alienee would only be a third share of the father and therefore the decree ought to have directed only a sale of the one-third share of the father in the property mortgaged. In support of his contention Mr. Somasundaram relies on the decisions reported in Amirthalinga Thevan v. Arumuga Ambalagan (2), Chandramani v. Jambeswara (3) and Muthu Kumara Sathapathiar v. Sivanarayana Pillai (4). Though in Chandramani v. Jambeswara (3) it is stated as settled law that if a son was born after the alienation of the family property by his father, if there were other members who had not consented to and validated the alienation, it can be questioned by an after-born son, the proposition would seem to require reconsideration in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Lal Bahadur v. Ambika Prasad (5). The learned Editor of Mayne's book on Hindu Law comments on that decision on pp. 511 and 512 thus :

"An observation of the Privy Council in Lal Bahadur v. Ambika Prasad (5) would seem to confine the right to challenge alienations of family property to the co-parceners alive at the date of the alienation and to deny such a right to a co-parcener who though born subsequent to the alienation acquires an interest in the co-parcenary property before the death of the objecting or non-alienating co-parceners. The point was not considered and it may not be right to regard the observation as a decision on the question. It would be against the whole current of Indian authorities which were neither referred to nor considered and cannot therefore be deemed to be overruled. If however the observation means that co-parceners born in the family subsequent to an alienation before the death of the other co-parceners who could challenge it, have no right to the property and consequently no right to challenge the alienation it would conflict with what was said by the Board in Ramkrishna Kedarnath v. Jainarayan (6) as well as with the cardinal principle of Hindu Law."

With great respect to the learned editor we are not inclined to agree with these remarks. We are inclined to think that the decision of the Privy Council is a direct decision on the question. In that case the facts were as follows: Ram Din and his brother Pateshwari were two brothers. On August 6, 1895 as managers of the family they mortgaged certain family property. They executed two mortgages, one simple and the other usufructuary. On the date of the mortgage Ram Din had two sons, Awadh Behari and Jantri Prasad, both of them minors. Long subsequent to the date of the mortgages the plaintiffs were born to Awadh Behari. On September 12, 1904 Pateshwari and Ram Din sold the property to the usufructuary mortgagee in part satisfaction of his mortgage and for cash received for payment of the other debts. The suit was brought in 1919 to set aside the sale when the plaintiff's father was alive and his right to set it aside was barred by limitation. Dealing with the right of the plaintiffs to question the mortgages their Lordships observed as follows :

"The respondents, plaintiffs in the suit, are sons of Awadh Behari. In 1895 they were still unborn. This, as will later appear, is one of the most important facts in the case. It follows from it that these two mortgage deeds have always been binding on the respondents. The only joint family estate to an interest in which they succeeded was an estate which to the extent of these two mortgages had already been alienated."

These observations of their Lordships seem to be clear and there seems to be no ambiguity about them. If the matter had rested there, one might have said that they were in the nature of an obiter. The learned Judicial Commissioner of Oudh has rested his decision on the ground that on the date of the sale the mortgages must be deemed to be antecedent debts and therefore the sale was justified. But their Lordships were not inclined to rest their decision on this ground but expressly put it on the ground that the plaintiffs were not born on the date of the mortgage. This is how they deal with the question at p. 801* :

"The effect of that explanation (the explanation of Sahu Ram's case in Brij Narain v. Mangla Prasad (7) in their Lordships' judgment is to show that in the circumstances of this case both of this mortgages of 1895 were 'antecedent debts' which would justify for their liquidation a sale of family property not otherwise improper. In the present case however it is not in their Lordships' judgment, necessary to invoke any such doctrine in order to counter the objection to the sale now being dealt with. Both mortgages, as their Lordships observe once more, were binding upon the respondents. A sale of family property otherwise unobjectionable, which resulted in the removal from what remained of it of the burden pro tanto of these encumbrances, cannot be successfully attacked by those so bound."

This decision is therefore a direct decision on the question whether an after-born son is entitled to impeach an alienation made before his birth. And the case in Ramkrishore Kedarnath v. Jainarayan (6) does not enunciate any principle in conflict with this decision. In that case the facts were as follows: The plaintiffs were the four sons of one Kedarnath who in October 1898 made a disposition of a part of the family property by way of partition to Jainarayan who was alleged to be an adopted son of his undivided brother's widow. The suit was instituted on December 20, 1907 to set aside the said alienation. Plaintiff No. 1 was born on December 20, 1886. The other plaintiffs were born between 1892 and 1894. The learned Judicial Commissioner held that as plaintiff No. 1 instituted the suit within three years of attaining the age of 21, he was entitled to the benefit of s. 7, Lim. Act of 1877, and the suit was not barred as against him, but he held that it was barred as against his younger brothers, who were born after the commencement of what he regarded as the adverse possession of the defendant Jainarayan. Their Lordships dispose of the correctness of this view thus:

"It was however conceded before this Board, and as their Lordships think, rightly conceded, that if plaintiff No. 1 succeeds in the suit his younger brothers born before a partition of the estate will be entitled to share in the relief."

This does not lend countenance to the view that the younger sons are entitled to impeach the alienation. What was meant by their Lordships was that if the elder son recovers the estate the younger son would be entitled to share in it being joint family property recovered for the family. Apparently in Visweswara Rao v. Suryt Rao (8) their Lordships Madhavan Nair and Stone, J.J. were not inclined to agree with the view expressed in Chandramani v. Jambeswara (3) as settled law—vide observations at p. 687*—because in that page the learned Judges after a review of the case-law remarked thus:

"Whether or not an after-born son can effectively join with existing sons to attack or resist an alienation, the cause of action or the right to defend is a cause or right that was in those members of the family that were alive at the time of the alienation and were not consenting."

They express an opinion that if before the after-born son is born, the sons in existence were to die, the right is lost to the after-born son, though the right to set aside an alienation may be within the time from the date when the cause of action accrued to the sons in existence. This seems to be in conflict with the view expressed in Mayne's book at p. 513 where it is stated that it is a right in every member of co-parcenary for the time being and as long as that right in the co-parcenary exists it would be immaterial whether he was alive on the date of the alienation or born subsequently. Much may be said in favour of either view and it may be that the view expressed in Mayne's book is sounder. The scope and effect of the Privy Council decision in Lal Bahadur v. Ambica Prasad (5), may require consideration. But we think that in the view we are taking of the share which the father is entitled to, it is not necessary to decide the point. The question to what share he is entitled is quite distinct from the question whether an after-born son is entitled to question the alienation or not. We will assume he can and deal with the question of the father's share on that footing. So far as our Presidency is concerned, it is accepted law that a co-parcener is entitled to alienate his share for value. What the alienee gets by virtue of such an alienation is not a bare right to partition but a vested interest, the extent of which will have to be ascertained by a suit for partition. The Full Bench decision of our High Court in Chinnu Pillai v. Kalimuthu Chetti (9), has ruled that the interest which an alienee would get would be the share to which the alienor would be entitled at the time of the alienation undiminished by any births or deaths in the family subsequent to the date of the alienation. The rule is thus stated by White, C. J. in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench:

"As pointed out by the Privy Council in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (10), an alienation by a co-parcener of his joint interest in family property is inconsistent with the strict theory of a joint and undivided Hindu family. But the doctrine recognizing this right is well established in the presidency, and it seems to me to be only the logical development of this doctrine that, for the purpose of ascertaining the quantum of interest, alienated; the test to apply should be the state of the family as regards the number of co-parceners, at the time the alienation is made, and not the state of the family when the owner of the interest seeks to reduce his interest into possession."

The learned Judges in Chinnu Pillai v. Kalimuthu Chetti (9), expressly dissented from the decision of the Full Bench in Rangaswami v. Krishnayyan (11), which took the view that the interest of the alienor would be diminished by births of subsequent members of the family. They in effect followed the view expressed by Bhashyam Ayyangar, J. in Ayyagiri Venkataramayya v. Ayyagiri Ramayya (12), where the learned Judge took the view that the matter was concluded by the decision of the Privy Council. The learned Judge at p. 718* observes as follows:

"A co-parcener may profess to alienate either his undivided share in the whole of the family property or his undivided share in some specified portion of the family property or the whole of a specified portion of the family property.....The same thing may take place in the case of involuntary sales, also. In all these cases the sale operates upon the interest and share of the transferor as the same existed at the date of the transfer and the transferee must work out the transfer by bringing a suit for ascertaining what the share and interest of the transferor was at the date of the transfer.....When the transfer is of an undivided interest in the whole of the family property, the transferee will get whatever may be allotted to the transferor's share in a suit for partition. But if the transfer relates to any specified portion of the family property, there is the risk that it may turn out that in a partition of the whole property it is impracticable or inequitable to allocate either the whole or a part of such specified portion of the share of the transferor."

In giving expression to this view his Lordship was only following the decision of the Privy Council in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Prasad Singh (10). In that case the mortgage was executed by the father Adit Shahai and on the date of the mortgage he was entitled to a third share. The question was what passed to the purchaser at the execution sale. In dealing with this contention their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed thus:

"On the other hand, if the law of the Presidency of Fort William were identical with that of Madras, the mortgage executed by Adit Sahai in his lifetime as a security for the debt, might operate after his death as a valid charge upon Mauza Bussumbhurpore to the extent of his own then share."

In the present case at the date of the alienation the father was entitled to a half share in the joint family property and that interest which was vested in him would pass to the mortgagee. The property which has been effectively carried away from the family was only a half and the other half would still be the joint family property and it is only in that half and in the equity of redemption in the other half, the alienation being a mortgage, the afterborn son would be entitled to participate with the other son. This is in strict consonance with the principles of Hindu Law that in a Mitakshara family a member acquires right by birth only in the property which was then in existence and not in the property which has been effectively carried away from the family. In so far as the alienation of the father's interest is concerned, it must be deemed to have been effectively carried away because he is entitled to alienate it for value. If the view indicated in Chinnu Pillai v. Kalimuthu Chetti (9), namely, that the alienee gets the interest which the father was entitled to on the date of the alienation is to be followed, the view taken by the learned District Judge in this case that the father was entitled to a half share and the mortgagee is entitled to sell that share in execution of his decree is correct.

There is only one reported decision which directly deals with this matter and that is a decision of our learned brother Pandrang Row, J. reported in Kasi Visweswara Rao v. Varahanarasimham (13). In that case the father sold the property in 1919. On that date there was only one son in existence and subsequently two sons were born. The alienation was not found to be such as to be binding on the sons. On the date of the suit there were the father and three sons. The question was to what share the alienee would be entitled. The learned Subordinate Judge in that case following Muthu Kumara Sathapathiar v. Sivanarayana Pillai (4), held that the father would only be entitled to a fourth and the alienee would only get a fourth share. Pandrang Row, J. following Chinnu Pillai v. Kalimuthu Chetti (9), held that the share which the father would get would be the share which he would be entitled to on the date of the alienation which would be half and therefore he gave a decree for a half share. The learned Judge declined to follow Muthu Kumara Sathapathiar v. Sivanarayana Pillai (4) and if we may say so with respect, rightly.

The Full Bench in Chinnu Pillai v. Kalimuthu Chetti (9), was constituted for the express purpose of considering the view expressed in Rangaswami v. Krishnayyan (11), that the share of the alienee should be determined not on the date of the alienation but on the date of suit and if subsequent to the date of alienation more members were born the alienee would get a reduced share. At the time when the Full Bench was constituted and the question was discussed there were five Judges but at the time when the judgment was about to be delivered one of them ceased to be a Judge of the High Court and the Full Bench was re-constituted with four Judges and the judgment was delivered.

ed dissenting from the said view in Ranga-swami v. Krishnayyan (11). The judgment was delivered in 1912 and so far as we know, it was accepted as sound law both by the Bench and the Bar and followed till Jackson, J. struck a dissenting note in Muthu Kumara Sathapathiar v. Sivanarayana Pillai (4) and declined to follow the view expressed in Chinnu Pillai v. Kalimuthu Chetti (9). Our own view is that the view expressed in Chinnu Pillai v. Kalimuthu Chetti (9), is the sounder view. In Amirthalinga Thevan v. Arumuga Ambalagaran (2), though the question was not discussed it was the view that was taken in Chinnu Pillai v. Kalimuthu Chetti (9), that was followed. This is clear from the following observations of Tiruvengkatachari, J. in that case at p. 640* :

"The only remaining point to be considered is whether defendant No. 6 who was born after the alienation has any and if so what right in the plaint properties which would entitle him to contest the suit. Under the sale deed, Ex. A the plaintiff acquired only the one-third share of the father Mari Ambalagaran in the joint family properties. The remaining interest therein appertained to the joint family of the alienor ; and it so remained at the date of defendant No. 6's birth with the result that he also acquired an interest in it by his birth."

The view that the father's share was a third and it is only in the remaining interest, that is in the two-thirds the after-born son, defendant No. 6, could be held to have acquired an interest by birth is in strict conformity with the view expressed in Chinnu Pillai v. Kalimuthu Chetti (9). In Chandramani v. Jambeswara (3), the question of share was not considered at all. We are therefore of the opinion that the decree of the learned District Judge in directing a sale of a half-share of the father is correct.

In the result we modify the decree of the learned District Judge by declaring that the father is personally liable to pay any balance that might remain after the sale of his interest in the mortgaged property and the plaintiff will be entitled to apply for a decree for the said balance against the father personally and against the joint family properties in the hands of defendants Nos. 1 to 3. The appellant will have half the costs of the appeal but there will be no costs in the memorandum of objections. Two applications (C. M. P. Nos. 500 and 484 of 1940) have been put in under the Mad. Agri. Debt Relief Act IV of 1938, one by Mr. A. Venkatachalam on behalf of respondent No. 1 and the other by Mr. Somasundaram on behalf of respondents Nos. 2 and 3. The plaintiff will have leave to file a counter-affidavit objecting to the reliefs sought in the said petitions. We direct these applications to be sent to the lower Court for adjudication on the merits. The decree that we pass herein will be subject to any relief which the applicants may get in those petitions.

Order accordingly.

BEAUMONT, C. J. AND KANIA, J.

In re PATIALA STATE BANK.

Government of India Act, 1935, (25 & 26 Geo. V Ch. 42), s. 65—Government Trading Taxation Act (III of 1926) is intra vires the Government of India—Government Trading Taxation Act (III of 1926), s. 2—Patiala State, if falls within "His Majesty's dominions"—Act, whether confined to business carried on in British India—Investment by Patiala State Bank in Government of India securities—Income from it, if taxable—Property in British India taken over by Patiala State Bank from its debtor, a subject of State, in part satisfaction of loan—Income arising from it, if assessable—Act legislates only in respect of Dominion Government's trading operations.

A tax on income accruing or arising or received in British India by a person resident outside British India is legislation relating to something, i. e., certain income, in British India, and therefore, it falls within the very wide and general words of s. 65, Govt. of India Act. Therefore the Govt. Trading Taxation Act of 1926 is intra vires the Govt. of India. [p. 714, col. 1.]

The Patiala State is a State under His Majesty's protection, and therefore comes within the expression "His Majesty's Dominions" in the Govt. Trading Taxation Act. That Act is therefore applicable to Patiala State Bank rendering it liable to taxation under the Income Tax Act. [p. 713, col. 2.]

The Govt Trading Taxation Act is not confined to business carried on in British India. The title, the Preamble and the operative part of s. 2 of the Act make it perfectly clear that it applies to every case in which the Dominion Govt. is carrying on a business, and when that happens, the Dominion Govt. is liable to Indian income-tax, as though it were a company. 127 Ind. Cas. 579 (1), dissented from. [ibid.]

The income from the investment by the Patiala State Bank of a part of its surplus funds in the Govt. of India securities are profits from the business of the bank received in British India, and as such taxable. [p. 714, col. 2.]

The property situated in British India taken over by the Patiala State Bank from its debtor, a subject of the Patiala State, in part satisfaction of a loan advanced to him, is not property occupied in British India for the purposes of its trade or business in British India within the meaning of s. 2, Govt. Trading Taxation Act, but all income arising from such property is liable to assessment by virtue of the provisions of the said Act. By enacting Govt. Trading Taxation Act, 1926 an attempt was made not to legislate generally in respect of the public property of a Dominion Govt. but in respect of its trading operations only. [p. 714, col. 2; p. 715, col. 1.]

Sir Jamshedji Kanga, for the Assessee.

Messrs. M.C. Setalvad (Advocate-General) and G. N. Joshi, for the Commissioner of Income-tax.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is a reference made by the Income-tax Commissioner under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act, 1922, and the substantial question, which arises is whether the Patiala State Bank is liable to be assessed to income-tax under the Govt. Trading Taxation Act, III of 1926. The facts found are that the Patiala State Bank is owned wholly by the Patiala State and carries on banking business. It has no separate entity, and I take it that when the Commissioner says "it is owned wholly by the Patiala State," he means that it is owned and controlled by the Ruler of the Patiala State, that is, the Maharaja, who constitutes the Govt. of the State. The questions raised relate to the assessments for two years, 1935-36 and 1936-37, and in respect of each of those years I gather that a notice was sent to the principal officer of the Patiala State Bank, and he made a return on which the assessments are based. We are not therefore concerned to consider whether the Patiala State Bank was bound to comply with the notices, and to make the required returns, nor are we concerned to consider what would have happened, if the Patiala State Bank had adopted a different course. It is possible that in that event the machinery for taxing a foreign company through its agent would have been applicable, but that is not a matter which calls for our decision. The principal point, which has been argued, and the only question of substance is whether the Govt. Trading Taxation Act of 1926 is a valid Act. The argument of the assessee is that it is ultra vires the Govt. of India. Before determining whether or not it is ultra vires the Govt. of India, it is necessary to consider what the Act, actually means and purports to effect. The title is :

"An Act to determine the liability of certain Govts. to taxation in British India in respect of trading operation."

Then the Preamble is :

"Whereas it is expedient to determine the liability to taxation for the time being in force in British India of the Govt. of any part of His Majesty's Dominions, exclusive of British India, in respect of any trade or business carried on by or on behalf of such Govt."

Then in s. 2 it is enacted as follows :

"(1) Where a trade or business of any kind is carried on by or on behalf of the Govt. of any part of His Majesty's Dominions, exclusive of British India, that Govt. shall in respect of the trade or business and of all operations connected therewith, all property occupied in British India and all goods owned in British India for the purposes thereof, and all incomes arising in connection therewith be liable (a) to taxation under the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the like case a company would be liable."

Sub-s. (2) provides :

"(2) For the purposes of the levy and collection of income-tax under the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, in accordance with the provisions of sub-s. (1), any Govt. to which that sub-section applies shall be deemed to be a company within the meaning of that Act, and the provisions of that Act shall apply accordingly."

Then sub-s. (3) enacts that the expression "His Majesty's Dominions" includes any territory which is under His Majesty's protection. Having regard to the sanads, to which we have been referred, of 1815, 1847 and 1860, I feel no doubt that the Patiala State is a State under His Majesty's protection, and therefore comes within the expression "His Majesty's Dominions" in Act III of 1926. It is to be noticed that the Act applies where a Govt. of the nature specified in the Act, which for simplicity I will refer to as "Dominion Govt.," carries on a business anywhere. I can see no justification for the view, which appears to have prevailed in the only case to which we have been referred in which this Act has been considered by a High Court in India, namely In the matter of Ram Prasad (1), that the Act is confined to business carried on in British India. It seems to me that the title, the Preamble and the operative part of s. 2 make it perfectly clear that it applies to every case in which the Dominion Govt. is carrying on a business, and when that happens, the Dominion Govt. is liable to Indian income-tax, as though it were a company.

Turning to the Income Tax Act of 1922, which is the Act applicable in this case, 'company' is defined in s. 2 (6) as meaning a company as defined in the Companies Act, 1913, or formed in pursuance of an Act of Parliament or of Royal Charter or Letters Patent, or of an Act of the Legislature of a British possession, and includes any foreign association carrying on business in British India, and which is certified as therein mentioned. I think the effect of Act III of 1926 is to add to that definition so as to include a Dominion Govt. deemed to be a company under Act III of 1926. The effect of the charging sections, ss. 3 and 4, is to render the income, profits and gains of a company liable to British Indian Income Tax Act, if such income, profits and gains accrue or arise or are received in British India. So that Act III of 1926 comes to this : that where a Dominion Govt. is carrying on a business anywhere, it is liable to the British Indian Income Tax Act in respect of the income, profits and gains of that business which accrue or arise or are received in British India.

(1) 52 A 419; 127 Ind. Cas. 579; A I R 1930 All. 389; (1930) A L J 579; Ind. Rul. (1930) All. 931.

The Act was, I understand, passed in pursuance of reciprocal arrangements with Great Britain and Dominion Govts., and it is to be noticed that it is in very similar terms to s. 25, Finance Act of 1925, which applies to Great Britain.

The contention of the assessee is that this Act is ultra vires the Indian Legislature, since it does not fall within the legislative powers conferred by s. 65, Govt. of India Act, 1919. That section, so far as material, provides: "The Indian Legislature has power to make laws for all persons, for all Courts, and for all places and things, within British India." The words are expressed in the most general terms, and in effect enact that the power of the Indian Legislature is to be territorial and is to extend to all persons and things within British India. Now, the argument is that income-tax is a tax imposed on persons, and that the Ruler of the Patiala State cannot be regarded as a person within British India. The latter proposition is, no doubt, correct, and up to a point I agree with the contention of the assessee on the first proposition. I think that, properly considered, income-tax is a tax on a person in relation to his income. The tax is not imposed on income generally; it is imposed on the income of a person, natural or artificial, as defined in s. 3. The assessment has to be made against a person, and the tax has to be collected from the assessee. The tax is not made a charge on the income upon which it is levied, and I think, broadly speaking, it is accurate to say that income-tax is a tax imposed upon a person in relation to his income. But, in my opinion, that does not mean that legislation as to income-tax can never be regarded as legislation as to a thing in British India within the meaning of s. 65, Govt. of India Act. In my opinion, a tax on income accruing or arising or received in British India by a person resident outside British India is legislation relating to something, i. e., certain income, in British India, and, therefore, to my mind, it falls within the very wide and general words of s. 65. In my judgment, therefore, Act III of 1926 is intra vires the Govt. of India. That was so held in In the matter of Ram Prasad (1), to which I have referred, though, as I have indicated, I think that the learned Judges in that case were incorrect in treating this Act of 1926 as being confined to a business carried on in British India. If the Act is intra vires, that disposes of the principal question raised by the Commissioner, which is question (1):

"Whether the Govt. Trading Taxation Act (III of 1926) is applicable to the Patiala State Bank rendering it liable to taxation under the Income Tax Act, 1922?

The answer must be in the affirmative.

Question No. (2) as:

"Whether investment by the Patiala State Bank of a part of its surplus funds on the Govt. of India securities constitute trading or business in British India within the meaning of s. 2, Govt. Trading Taxation Act?"

This question is inaccurately expressed. Section 2 does not mention trading or business in British India. We can only answer the question by saying that the income from the investments are profits from the business of the bank received in British India, and as such taxable. Question No. (3) is:

"Whether the property situate at Mussoorie taken over by the Patiala State Bank from its debtor, a subject of the Patiala State, in part satisfaction of a loan advanced to him, is property occupied in British India for the purposes of its trade or business in British India within the meaning of s. 2, Govt. Trading Taxation Act, and whether all income arising from such property is liable to assessment by virtue of the provisions of the said Act?"

Substantially I think the answer to this question must be in the affirmative, but I think that the property, which has been taken over in respect of a bad debt of the banking business, is not property occupied in British India for the purposes of the business, but the income derived from such payments is income arising in connection with such business, and in that sense falls to be taxed. Then question No. (4) is:

"Whether the sum of Rs. 66,720 received by the Patiala State Bank on the sale of its investments during the year 1934-35 being the excess realized by it over the cost price of such investments, which has been included under the heading of profits in the relative profits and loss accounts and balance sheet, is assessable to income-tax?"

That seems to be really a question of fact, and we must answer it in accordance with the facts found by the Commissioner. He has found that these profits on the sale of investments are part of the income of the Bank. It might be suggested that they are accretions to capital, but the Commissioner having found from the accounts of the Bank that they are profits of the Bank, I think we must answer the question in the affirmative. Question No. (5) seems to be covered by the answer to question No. (2). Question No. (6) does not arise. The answer to question No. (7) must be answered in the affirmative. We answer the questions accordingly and direct the assessee to pay costs. Costs to be recovered from the assets of the Patiala State Bank.

Kania, J.—The relevant facts and sections of Acts of the Indian Legislature have been referred to in the judgment just delivered by the learned Chief Justice. The important question argued before us is in respect of the validity of Act III of 1926 described as "an Act to determine the liability of certain Govts. to taxation in British India in respect of trading operations." It was argued on behalf of the assessee that the Act was ultra vires the Govt. of India, whose powers to legislate were limited by s. 65, Govt. of India Act, 1919. It was secondly argued that the Patiala State was not one of His Majesty's Dominions, as stated in s. 2 (3) of Act III of 1926, and, therefore, it was not covered by the Act. It was next argued that the machinery to assess the State under s. 42 and/or s. 43, Income Tax Act, 1922, was not adopted. It was lastly contended that as the State is owned by the Ruler; it was not competent for the Govt. of India to legislate in respect of the Ruler.

The question, whether the Act was ultra vires the Govt. of India or not was raised and decided in In the matter of Ram Prasad (1), and the learned Judges there rejected the contention that it was ultra vires. The argument in substance is that Act III of 1926 makes a Dominion Govt. in respect of its trade or business; wherever carried on, liable to be taxed as a company. The words "in British India" are not used in connection with trade or business or income arising in connection therewith. Where the Legislature wanted to use those words in connection with property occupied in British India, and goods owned in British India, they expressly said so. From the omission of those words in connection with trade or business or income arising in connection therewith, it was contended that the legislative power of the Govt. of India had been exceeded.

In my opinion, that contention is unsound. The only object of the Act of 1926, in my opinion, was to legislate in respect of a particular use of the public property of a Dominion Govt. Under International Law the Legislature of a country does not enact laws which affect the public property of another country. By Act III of 1926 therefore the attempt was not to legislate generally in respect of the public property of a Dominion Govt. but in respect of its trading operations only. It appears that a mutual arrangement was made between the different Dominions of His Majesty by consent, and by s. 2 (3) the Act was made applicable equally to territories which were under His Majesty's protection or over which a mandate was being exercised by His Majesty's Govt. If such a Dominion Govt. carried on trade or business, the Govt. of India enacted that it should be liable to tax under the Income Tax Act, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the like case a company would be liable.

In other words, the legislation was to state that a Dominion Govt. carrying on trade would, for the purpose of the Income Tax Act, be treated as a company in like circumstances. If the state carried on business within British India, its liability would be as defined by the Income Tax Act. If it carried on business wholly outside British India, it would not be affected by the Income Tax Act, because that Act only was in respect of income within British India, either actually accruing or deemed to accrue as defined by that Act. This piece of legislation is covered by the words of s. 65, Govt. of India Act, which permit the Govt. of India to legislate for all persons: for all Courts, and for all places and things, within British India. While it cannot be disputed that the liability to pay income-tax is on the individual, it is a tax on the income. In so far, therefore, as the liability of a Dominion Govt. was stated by Act III of 1926 to be in respect of its income covered by the Income Tax Act, there appears no reason to consider it ultra vires.

With respect, I am unable to agree with the line of reasoning adopted in In the matter of Ram Prasad (1), where the words "in British India" were attempted to be read as connected with "trade" in s. 2 of Act III of 1926. The words "in British India" have to be read in connexion with income by reason of the provisions of the Income Tax Act. But Act III of 1926 does not in terms state that the word "trade" or "business" or "income arising in connexion therewith" have to be in British India. I find no justification for including those words in s. 2 of Act III of 1926, in connexion with "trade," business or income arising in connexion therewith. As I have pointed out, by reason of sub-s. (3) of s. 2; however, the result is the same namely that the liability of the Dominion will be as if it were a company working under like circumstances under the Income Tax Act. The second contention, that the Patiala State was not under the protection of His Majesty, cannot be upheld in view of Sanads III and IV of 1815, which are found printed in Aitchison's "Treaties, Engagements and Sanads" Vol. 1, at pp. 158-159. It is there clearly provided that the Raja had the right of protection from the British Govt. The Patiala State is, therefore, a Dominion under the protection of His Majesty. The third contention that the liability to tax has to be worked out under ss. 42 and 43, and there was no other method by which the State Bank could be assessed, discloses some misunderstanding. In Whitney v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (2), Lord Dunedin pointed out that there are three stages in the imposition of a tax as follows (p. 52*):

"....there is the declaration of liability, that is the part of the statute which determines what persons in respect of what property are liable. Next, there is the assessment. Liability does not depend upon assessment. That, ex hypothesi, has already been fixed. But assessment particularizes the exact sum which a person liable has to pay. Lastly, come the methods of recovery, if the person taxed does not voluntarily pay."

The question of how the person whose liability to tax is determined has to be assessed is a matter of machinery. It is admitted here that the Patiala State Bank (assessee) when called upon sent a return to the Income-tax Officer. We are not therefore, at this stage concerned with the question what would have happened, if the assessee had refused to send a return. I do not propose to anticipate an argument on that point nor to express any opinion on it. The last question, whether the Ruler is liable to be assessed, also does not directly arise. The assessee in the case is the Patiala State Bank. On the facts mentioned in the reference, it is a department of the State. There is a difference between the private property of the Ruler of the State and the property of the State itself. In holding that it was competent to the Govt. of India to legislate in respect of trading operations of the State, I think it is also held that the State as such, and to the extent it is covered by s. 2 (1) of Act III of 1926, is liable to assessment: Statham v. Statham and the Gaekwar of Baroda (3), which was relied upon in this connexion, has in the circumstances no application. I, therefore, agree that the answer to questions Nos. (1) and (7) should be in the affirmative. As regards the other questions, they are questions of fact, and I agree that the answers should be in the affirmative also.

Income-tax Reference No. 2 of 1940

Per Curiam.—The answers in the second reference will be the same as in the first reference, and the same order as to costs. The assessee to pay costs, to be recovered from the assets of the Patiala State Bank.

PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 60 (1) (c), 60 (1), Proviso — Mortgage decree against house—House, if can be sold—Word "or" in Proviso—Scope of.

The house of an agriculturist cannot be sold even in execution of a mortgage decree passed against that property. 51 Ind. Cas. 553 (2), followed.

[Case-law discussed.]

The word 'or' is used in Proviso to s. 60 (1) to include decrees in which no attachment is necessary and mortgage decree is one of this class.

C. A. against the order of the Additional Judge, Peshawar, dated May 16, 1940.

Saiyed Mohd. Aurangzeb Khan, for the Appellant.

Sardar Anoop Singh, for the Respondents.

Mir Ahmad, J.—Mahmud Jan mortgaged a hujra (guest house) and seven houses to Gutta Singh-Ajab Singh. The latter instituted a suit for the recovery of the money. A compromise decree was passed in favour of firm Gutta Singh-Ajab Singh against Mahmud Jan for Rs. 2,100 in the following terms:

"Decree for Rs. 2,100 is hereby passed in favour of the plaintiff against the mortgaged and other property of the defendant in accordance with the terms of the compromise deed."

The compromise deed fixed instalments and on the failure of the defendant to pay two instalments made the whole amount payable in a lump sum. The decree-holder took out execution and attached the property against which the decree had been passed. The judgment-debtor pleaded that he was an agriculturist, and that his houses and hujra could not be attached and sold. The executing Judge found that he was an agriculturist but held that as it was in execution of mortgage decree that the property was being proceeded against the protection afforded by s. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C., did not extend to it. An appeal was preferred by the judgment-debtor. The Court of appeal agreed with the view of the original Judge. The appeal was consequently dismissed. The judgment-debtor has come up on further Appeal to this Court. At the hearing, the learned Counsel for the judgment-debtor admitted that no appeal was competent and asked us to treat his appeal as a petition for revision. He urged that an important question of law was involved and that a petition for revision was therefore entertainable. We agree with him. There seems to be a conflict of authority as regards the question whether s. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C., governs the property sought to be sold under a mortgage decree. A Full Bench of three Judges of the Allahabad High Court considered it in the ruling reported as Bhola v. Kishori, 11 Ind. Cas. 646 (1). Two Judges were of opinion that s. 60 (1) (c) Civil P. C., did not apply to a mortgage decree. They were Richards, C. J. and Tudball, J. Bannerji, J. however dissented. The view of the majority was explained by Richards, C. J. and we could do no better than to quote his own words to show the reasons which made him form this opinion :

"In my judgment, the decisions of the Courts below were incorrect. Prima facie, a man is entitled to mortgage his property if he pleases; and if he can make a valid mortgage, the mortgagee is entitled to a mortgage decree entitling him to sell the property. The only aspect in which the decree of the Court below can be supported is on the ground that the proviso to s. 60 by implication enacts that the mortgage of a house of an agriculturist is illegal. Such a contention, in my opinion, cannot be sustained. The Civil P. C., is an Act which deals entirely with matters of procedure; and prima facie it is very improbable that the Legislature intended to deal with matters of substantive law. Where it was considered necessary for the protection of certain classes of tenants that their powers of transfer should be restricted, the Legislature by express provisions in the Ten. Act has so enacted. It seems to me also that it would be a very strained construction to give to s. 60 to hold that it applied to the execution of mortgage decrees. The section itself is headed "attachment." In the case of mortgage decrees no attachment is necessary and in practice no attachment is ever made. The section begins "The following property is liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree." It seems quite clear that these words only apply to simple money decrees. Then follows the proviso, where it is true that the words are not "attachment and sale" but "attachment or sale." It must however be remembered that the proviso is a proviso to s. 60, cl (1) which deals with simple money decrees. The words 'such attachment or sale' also appear in the proviso, clearly showing that the proviso relates to what immediately precedes. It is argued that the word 'or' appearing in the proviso instead of the word 'and,' necessarily shows that the section relates to mortgage decrees. I do not agree with this argument. There are cases of simple money decrees in which it is not necessary that there should be an attachment, namely when there has been already an attachment prior to judgment or on foot of another decree."

Banerji, J.'s note of dissent is on the other hand in the following words :

"If the Legislature forbids the sale of such a house, a Court cannot by its decree order that a house of that description should be sold. In my opinion the law forbids the sale of such a house. Section 51 (b) provides that a Court may order execution of a decree by attachment and sale, or by sale without attachment of any property. Section 60 of the Code specifies the different classes of property which are liable to attachment, where attachment is necessary, and to sale."

The proviso to the section is to the effect that certain particulars, among which are houses and other building belonging to and occupied by an agriculturist, shall not be liable to attachment or sale. At the commencement of the section the word "and" is used and in the proviso we find the word "or." The proviso, as I understand it forbids both attachment and sale; that is to say, where an attachment must precede a sale, it forbids attachment as well as sale; and where it is not necessary that an attachment should be a preliminary step to a sale, it forbids a sale. Therefore in my opinion s. 60 and the proviso to it take away from the Court power to order a sale of property of the description mentioned in the proviso.

The object of the Legislature is manifest. That object is that certain classes of debtors should be protected against their own improvidence. There can be no doubt that, in the case of a simple decree for money, the dwelling-house occupied by an agriculturist cannot be sold. The policy of the law is that he should not be deprived of his place of residence by a process of Court. I fail to see why if an unsecured creditor of an agriculturist cannot proceed against the debtor's dwelling-house, a secured creditor should be allowed to do so. The policy of the law equally applies to both the cases."

In Niadar Singh v. Sabit Khan (2), a Divisional Bench of the Allahabad High Court consisting of Banerji, J. who was the dissenting Judge in Bhola v. Kishori 11 Ind. Cas. 646 (1), and Rafiq, J. held that the house of an agriculturist was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree obtained upon the mortgage of that house made by the agriculturist. Bhola v. Kishori, 11 Ind. Cas. 646 (1), was referred to. A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court consisting of Walsh, Ryves and Mukerji JJ. again considered this question in the case which is reported in Mubarak Husain v. Ahmad, 84 Ind. Cas. 749 (3). Ryves, J. followed the line adopted by Banerji, J. and held that the house of an agriculturist could not be sold in execution of a mortgage decree passed against the house. The other two Judges however, followed the majority view taken in Bhola v. Kishori, 11 Ind. Cas. 646 (1). It was stressed by them that the chapter in which s. 60 occurs is headed "attachment and sale" and not only "sale." The pronouncement of the Lahore High Court on the point was made by a Division Bench in a case reported in Chittar Mal v. Ram Devi (4). It is a very short judgment. The reason given for refusing to extend the benefit of s. 60 to the property of an agriculturist, which is subject of a mortgage decree was that it would amount to making mortgages by an agriculturist illegal. No authorities were referred to. Ram Chand v. Co-operative Society, Kharar (5), Sita Ram v. Phusal Singh (6), Natha Singh v. Bhag Mal (7), and Khazanchi Shah v. Niaz Ali (8), are all Single Judge rulings of the same Court which followed the Division Bench view reported in Chittar Mal v. Ram Devi (4). We will now proceed to give an interpretation of s. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C. The relevant portion of s. 60 runs thus :

"60, (1) The following property is liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, namely, lands, houses or other buildings, goods, money banknotes, cheques, bills of exchange, hundis, promissory notes, Govt. securities, bonds or other securities for money, debts, shares in a corporation and save as hereinafter mentioned, all other saleable property, movable or immovable, belonging to the judgment-debtor, or over which, or the profits of which he has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit, whether the same be held in the name of the judgment-debtor or by another person in trust for him or on his behalf :

Provided that the following particulars shall not be liable to such attachment or sale, namely ;

(c) houses and other buildings (with the material and the sites thereof and the land immediately appurtenant thereto and necessary for their enjoyment) belonging to an agriculturist and occupied by him."

The underlines (here in italics) are ours. Section 51, Civil P. C., is in the following terms :

"Subject to such conditions and limitation as may be prescribed, the Court may on the application of the decree-holder, order execution of the decree ; (a) by delivery of any property specifically decreed ; (b) by attachment and sale or by sale without attachment of any property ; (c) by arrest and detention in prison ; (d) by appointing a Receiver ; or (e) in such other manner as the nature of the relief granted may require."

The underline (here in italics) is ours. It is obvious that s. 51 (b) contemplates that an execution of a decree may be carried out by attachment and sale or by sale only. This fact therefore takes away all the importance attached to the heading of the chapter which is "attachment and sale." The use of the word "or" in the beginning of the proviso is not an accident for, the Legislature does not use words by accident but by deliberation. This again shows that the Legislature did not mean that the chapter only dealt with cases in which "attachment and sale" took place and to no others. Rather the contrast is significant. In the beginning of the section permission for "attachment and sale" of property is given but where the proviso starts "attachment or sale" are prohibited. To us it is absolutely clear that the word "or" was used to include decrees in which no attachment is necessary and we know that mortgage decree is one of this class. At this point, we will advert to the fact that O. XXXIV, was made a part of Civil P. C., when the Civil P. C., of 1908 was enacted. It was a part of T. P. Act before. The draftsman therefore knew that there were such decrees as mortgage decrees and he would have excepted mortgage decrees from the operation of this section in so many words if it was the intention to do so. He would not have left the Courts to infer it from the cryptic heading "attachment and sale." It should be remembered that the words "a decree" have been used in the beginning of the section. The Courts have on the other hand read the word 'money' in between the 'a' and 'decree' when holding that mortgage decrees are beyond the purview of s. 60, Civil P. C. There is no warrant for this reading of the word 'money' into it. We think that the Legislature would have inserted the word if there was the idea to restrict the section to money decrees only.

Again as pointed out by Banerji, J it is undoubted that the Legislature was anxious to protect the property of the agriculturist from being sold. An agriculturist borrows money voluntarily and it does not make any difference whether he borrows on his personal security or on the security of his property. In either case he has the right to do so and we see no point why in one case the money should not be recovered from his property while in the other it should be done. To us it appears that the protection is absolutely independent of his own acts and has been deliberately provided so that he should not be without a roof over his head and without his tools and seed, etc. I would be quoting a truism if we were to say that the Legislature can make such exemptions and has made them. The Punjab Land Alienation Act is a case in point. We consequently disagree with the two Courts below and hold that the house of an agriculturist cannot be sold in execution of a mortgage-decree passed against that property. Although it has been admitted in this case that the petitioner is an agriculturist it has not been decided as to what house or houses are exempt under s. 60 (1) (c) and what are not. The learned Counsel for the respondent has urged that all the houses are not protected. We therefore accept the appeal, set aside the finding of the Courts below and remand the case to the executing Judge with the direction that he should now decide as to which house or houses fall within the purview of s. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C. The costs of this petition shall follow the event. Pleader's fee Rs. 32.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860); s. 302—Sentence—Youth of 17 committing murder in company with elder relative—Transportation for life held proper sentence.

Youth, undoubtedly, in some cases may be a very excellent ground for giving the lower sentence. It is a very rare thing for the High Court to sentence a youth of 17 or below to death. It would only be in a very exceptional case that this would be done. In fact the normal sentence for a youth of this age would be transportation for life. A very strong case, indeed, would have to be made out in order to justify the hanging of a youth of this age. When a youth of this age commits a murder in company with an elder relative that is another excellent reason for giving only transportation for life.

Cr. A. from the order of the Sessions Judge, Ludhiana, dated September 27, 1940.

Mian Abdul Aziz, for the Appellants.

Maghar Singh in person.

Mr. S. M. Sikri, for the Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Mr. Bhagat Singh, for the Complainant.

Young, C. J.—Ramji and Maghar were charged in the Court of the learned Sessions Judge of Ludhiana with the murder of Gajjan. The learned Sessions Judge found them both guilty, sentenced Maghar to death and Ramji to transportation for life. It appears that Ramji and Gajjan had a dispute over land; whether that dispute concerned one mortgage or another does not appear to us to matter, it is admitted that there was cause of enmity between the two parties. The prosecution has also attempted to prove that Bhan Singh, a relation of Gajjan, had an affair with Ramji's wife but that does not appear to us to be a motive for the murder of Gajjan by Ramji except that it might be added to the general irritation between the two families. On June 4, 1940, at about noon, Gajjan who had been in his fields working came back and prepared himself to have a bath at the well. He left his house only wearing his drawers. On emerging from his house it is said that he was attacked by the two accused, that Ramji hit him on the head with a gandasa and Maghar speared him. Gajjan's wife, Mst. Punjab Kaur, on hearing an alarm, followed her husband from the house and fell on his body to protect him. She too received some injuries. Bhan Singh, a nephew of Gajjan, also appeared on the scene, attacked Ramji with a takwa but was himself injured. Gajjan was taken away to hospital and died two or three days later having made two dying declarations, both in the same terms, in the meanwhile in which he gave the motive and the names of his assailants.

The defence admitted that both the accused were present at the scene but set up a case that Gajjan and Bhan Singh attacked Ramji, that Ramji retreated to his house and that Maghar thereupon came out armed with a gandali and a quarrel took place between the parties and in that quarrel, Ramji and Maghar were injured and they, in their turn, caused injuries to the opposite party. With regard to this defence, it may be stated at once that the medical evidence contradicts the use of a gandali. It appears from the injuries that a gandali was not used but a takwa. In the second place, the accused in their written statements did not mention the presence of Mst. Punjab Kaur or the injuries to her. The same applies to the presence of Bhan Singh and his injuries. It is quite clear therefore that the defence cannot be relied upon. No defence evidence was called. The prosecution in this case depends on the evidence of Mst. Punjab Kaur and Bhan Singh who were eye-witnesses. There are also the two dying declarations. We have carefully examined the evidence of the two eye-witnesses. There is no doubt that Mst. Punjab Kaur was present at the spot as she was injured. There are one or two small discrepancies in her evidence but they are of no importance. A point was made by Counsel that she does not mention the injuries to Ramji but that is easily accounted for by the fact that she was lying on her husband's body. Mst. Punjab Kaur says in her evidence:

"I did not see Bhan Singh either receiving or giving any blows as I was trying to shield my husband."

Bhan Singh, however, does mention the injuries to Ramji and does mention that he gave them. The woman's evidence we must accept. With regard to Bhan Singh he may or may not have some liaison with Ramji's wife but he certainly was present at the spot as he was injured and we equally see no reason to disbelieve his evidence that it was:

Ramji and Maghar who attacked Gajjan. Counsel for the appellant here has argued that this was a fight between the two parties following abuse. We do not think, however, that there is anything in this contention as it would be unusual for Gajjan to take part in a fight practically naked as he undoubtedly was. We accept the prosecution version that Gajjan had only his drawers on and he was unarmed. In these circumstances we must agree with the lower Court that the conviction of Ramji and Maghar is justified. Maghar absconded for 14 days. The learned Sessions Judge has had, in our opinion, acted somewhat curiously with regard to the sentences. The motive undoubtedly was Ramji's. He brought with him to the attack his nephew Maghar. Maghar describes himself as 15 years of age and the medical evidence says that he is between 16 and 17. We have also seen him here in Court and we agree generally with the medical evidence. The learned Judge has given Ramji only transportation for life on the ground that he gave only one blow. Maghar, on the contrary, he has condemned to death. In our opinion, the sentences should have been reversed. The learned Sessions Judge also says that there are several decisions of this Court which say that youth alone is no ground for giving the lower penalty. This is stating the law much too broadly. Youth, undoubtedly, in some cases may be a very excellent ground for giving the lower sentence. It is a very rare thing for this Court to sentence a youth of 17 or below to death. It would only be in a very exceptional case that this would be done. In fact the normal sentence for a youth of this age would be transportation for life. A very strong case, indeed, would have to be made out in order to justify the hanging of a youth of this age. When a youth of this age commits a murder in company with an elder relative that is another excellent reason for giving only transportation for life. We must therefore accept the appeal of Maghar as regards his sentence. We set aside the sentence of death passed upon him and impose instead a sentence of transportation for life; otherwise the appeal is dismissed.

SHWE HLA U AND OTHERS—ACCUSED

THE KING—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 397 as amended by Burma Act (IV of 1940)—Offences committed before March 16, 1940—Amending Act IV of 1940 does not apply—Offence before March 16, 1940, but conviction after that date—S. 397 as it stood before amendment must be applied—Interpretation of Statutes—Retrospective effect, when to be given.

The provisions of Burma Act IV of 1940, have no application to offences which were committed before March 16, 1940. Consequently, the provisions of s. 397, I. P. C., as they existed prior to the amendment must be applied in a case where the accused committed the offence before March 16, 1940, but was convicted after that date, for, it is by reason of the commission of the offence that the offender incurs the punishment and not by reason of his conviction by a Criminal Court. The trial, ending in a conviction, is merely the means whereby a Court of criminal justice ascertains that the accused is the person who has incurred the punishment by having committed the offence. This is made clear by s. 5, General Clauses Act. Cr. A. No. 551 of 1940, Overruled, Cr. A. No. 441 of 1940, approved, Ex parte Raison (1), relied on.

No statute is retrospective unless the statute itself expressly states that it is to be so.

Cr. A. from an order of the Sub-Divisional Special Power Magistrate, Buthidaung, in Criminal Regular Trial No. 37 of 1940.

Mr. U Ni, Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Dunkley, J.—The four appellants were convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Buthidaung of the offence of robbery, under s. 392, I. P. C. and in the case of three of the appellants the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate held that s. 397 of the Code was applicable and therefore, the minimum sentence which could be passed on them was seven years' rigorous imprisonment. The remaining appellant was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. The robbery occurred on February 17. On that date the informant Abdul Motaleb and his friend Abdul Hussein went out to buy a cow. Abdul Motaleb had a sum of Rs. 15 with him for this purpose. They went to Bookay village and enquired of several persons whether there was a cow for sale, but they were unable to purchase one. Abdul Motaleb showed his money to these persons and there is no doubt that he had a sum of Rs. 15 on his person at that time. When the two were returning home, on the way they were attacked by robbers and Abdul Motaleb's coat was torn off his body and taken away by the robbers but was subsequently found, and it was then discovered that the three five-rupee notes had been taken out of the pocket. Both Abdul Motaleb and Abdul Hussein made their report immediately to the headman, and there can be no doubt about the fact that Abdul Motaleb was robbed as they stated. In the report to the headman they said that they had recognized three of the robbers, namely, Shwe Hla U, Shwe Pru Aung and Shwe Tha Aung. Certain persons who came to their assistance said that they had seen the robbers running away and they also recognized these same appellants. Appellant No. 4 Kyaw Zan Hla was subsequently identified by Abdul Motaleb and Abdul Hussain at an identification parade. There was therefore ample evidence to support the convictions of these appellants. The appellants in their defence set up alibis, but the trial Magistrate has given full consideration to the defence evidence and has shown that all the appellants were unable to bring evidence to prove that they were in other places at the time when this robbery occurred. There can be no doubt that the appellants have been rightly convicted. The Magistrate held that the appellant Shwe Hla U was armed with a local made gun, that Shwe Pru Aung was armed with a dagger and that Kyaw Zan Hla was armed with a dah, and his findings in this respect are justified by the evidence.

These appeals have come before a Bench on a certificate of my brother Mackney. On March 16, 1940, Burma Act IV of 1940 came into force, and by this Act the words "uses any deadly weapon" were deleted from s. 379, I. P. C. My brother Mackney has taken the view that this Act is applicable to all offences, whether committed before or after March 16, the trial of which did not conclude until after March 16, and that therefore s. 397 had no application in the present case. His view is that the punishment for an offence under the I. P. C. is not incurred until conviction and a person incurs no punishment who is not convicted. My brother Mosely took the opposite view in Criminal Appeal No. 441 of 1940 and, with the greatest respect, his reasoning cannot be assailed. The matter is concluded by the provisions of s. 5, General Clauses Act of 1898. Section 5 says this:

"Where any Act repeals any enactment hitherto made or hereafter to be made, then unless a different intention appears the repeal shall not.....(d) affect any penalty, forfeiture or punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed against any enactment so repealed."

In Criminal Appeal No. 551 of 1940, my brother Mackney, referring to Burma Act IV of 1940, said this:

"There is nothing in this Act to suggest that the amendment shall not affect the law previously applying to offences already committed but not tried."

This observation is contrary to the fundamental principle of the interpretation of statutes, that no statute shall be deemed to have retrospective effect unless the statute itself expressly states that it is to be retrospective. The view which Mackney, J. is now expressing appears to be that the punishment for an offence is not incurred until the offender is convicted at a trial; but that view is, in my opinion, contrary to the plain meaning of almost any section of the I. P. C. Opening the I. P. C. at random, I happened to open it at s. 302, which says that whoever commits murder shall be punished with death or transportation for life and shall also be liable to fine. The same form of words will be found in any section of the I. P. C. which imposes a punishment. It is by reason of the commission of the offence that the offender incurs the punishment and not by reason of his conviction by a Criminal Court, and clearly that must be so, for it would be illogical to hold that an offender is liable to punishment only by reason of his conviction for the offence and not by reason of his commission of the offence. The trial, ending in a conviction, is merely the means whereby a Court of criminal justice ascertains that the accused is the person who has incurred the punishment by having committed the offence. In my opinion, the provisions of Burma Act IV of 1940 have no application to offences which were committed before March 16, 1940. Consequently, the provisions of s. 397, as they existed prior to the amendment, are applicable to the appellants Shwe Hla U, Shwe Pru Aung and Kyaw Zan Hla. The appellants have been rightly convicted. The sentences passed upon Shwe Hla U, Shwe Pru Aung and Kyaw Zan Hla were legally necessary and the sentence passed on Shwe Tha Aung erred, if at all, on the side of leniency. These appeals are therefore, dismissed.

Blagden, J.—On the merits, or rather demerits, of this appeal I agree with my Lord's judgment and have nothing to add. As to the effect of the partial repeal of s. 397, I. P. C. as from midnight of March 15/16, 1940 on the liability of those who at that moment were guilty but as yet unconvicted of offences under that section the judgment of my brother Mosely in Maung Nge v. Regem (Criminal Appeals, Nos. 441/442 of 1940) seems to me clearly right. Section 5, Burma General Clauses Act, 1898, omitting words which are for this purpose immaterial provides as follows :

"When any Act repeals any enactment.....the repeal shall not.....affect any.....punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed against any enactment so repealed or.....any.....legal proceeding.....in respect of any such punishment.....and.....any such punishment may be imposed as if the repealing Act had not been passed."

In the view of Mackney, J. as I follow it, a criminal as such has not incurred a punishment unless and until he is sentenced. By committing a crime he has only "incurred" risk of punishment. But if this be right the last 16 words which I have read are absolute nonsense. A particular punishment for a particular crime can only be "imposed" once, and if a punishment be not "incurred" till it is "imposed" and had been "imposed" before the repealing Act it would be idle to provide that the same punishment might be "imposed" again after the repealing Act. Therefore, as I see it, the Legislature has clearly distinguished between the 'incurring' and the 'imposing' of a punishment. The language of the section makes it plain that they are two different things taking place at two different times. Obviously, the incurring of the punishment must precede its imposition, and granted that a punishment is "imposed" when sentence is passed, the only preceding events which could possibly be said to constitute its "inurrence" are (a) the making of the charge; or (b) the arrest of the accused or (c) the committing of the crime. A man does not incur a punishment merely by being arrested for or charge with a crime, for either event is quite consistent with his innocence. Moreover, if a punishment is "incurred" at the moment of arrest or charge before a repealing Act, though sentence is not passed till after it, what is the position if, between these two events, the culprit escapes and is at large at the moment the repealing Act comes into force? The only possible conclusion is that a punishment is "incurred" when a crime then involving that punishment is committed. This conclusion is in my opinion favoured by considerations alike of common sense and of English grammar and I am not surprised to find that there is authority for it.

Section 38 (2) of the English Interpretation Act, 1889 is in terms in all material respects identical with the section now under consideration. In Ex parte Raison (1) the applicant had been adjudged bankrupt under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 shortly before the coming into force of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890. The latter repealed the provisions of s. 28 of the 1883 Act, relating to a bankrupt's discharge and substituted other provisions less favourable to bankrupts. Cave, J. held that the applicant's right to apply for his discharge was a right acquired at the moment he became bankrupt though it was not then immediately effective, and consequently, that the application fell to be decided under the repealed s. 28 of the 1883 Act and not under the new s. 8 of the 1890 Act. If a right is "acquired" when it vests, even though it may never become exercisable, a punishment is in my opinion "incurred" when a person becomes legally liable to that punishment even though he may escape detection, escape arrest, or escape conviction. I, therefore, share the opinion of Mosely, J. and of my Lord.
(1) (1891) 60 L J Q B 206; 63 L T 709; 39 W R 271; 8 Morrell 11.

MUNICIPAL COUNCIL, ADONI—

G. V. C. BABU NAIDU—RESPONDENT

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), s. 93 (1)—R licensed distiller owning distillery at B maintaining depots for sale of arrack at A through his agent—Agent at A contracting for sale of arrack on behalf of R—Held, that R must be deemed to be carrying on business at A within meaning of s. 93.

One R was a licensed distiller and owned an arrack distillery at B. Under the terms of his license he was required to maintain depots for the sale of arrack at various places in the District. One of these places was A. The depot at A was in charge of an agent of R and he used to sell arrack to licensed retail dealers. The price was fixed by the Govt. and the sales were restricted to licensed retail vendors. The money received in respect of arrack sold at the A depot was paid by R's agent into the treasury the same evening. R's agent in charge of A depot entered into contracts for the sale of arrack on behalf of his master who made profits on these transactions :

Held, that as a person who sells goods in a particular place must be deemed to be carrying on business in that place R must be deemed to be selling arrack at A. The fact that the prices which he charged were fixed by the Govt. did not make his transactions any the less sales; nor did the fact that the R's only customers at A were licensed retail dealers alter the character of his transactions. The fact that R's agent was required to pay into the treasury at the close of a day's business the moneys which he received for the arrack sold that day had no bearing on the question and the same could be said with regard to the keeping of accounts at B. R sold arrack at A and, therefore, was carrying on business at A within the meaning of s. 93 of the Mad. District Municipalities

Act. It would be a different matter if all contracts for the supply of arrack were made in B and goods were merely delivered in A through an agent. 181 Ind. Cas. 911, reversed, Grainger and Son v. Gough (1), 51 Ind. Cas. 692 (2), 5 Ind. Cas. 744 (3) and 144 Ind. Cas. 486 (4), distinguished.

L. P. A. against the judgment of Wadsworth, J., reported in 181 Ind. Cas. 911.

Mr. M. S. Ramachandra Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Chandra Reddy, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—The appellant is entitled to succeed. The appeal arises out of a suit filed by the respondent in the Court of the District Munsif of Bellary for a declaration that the appellant Council had acted illegally in requiring him to pay profession tax in respect of the three half years ending with March 31, 1931, September 30, 1931 and March 31, 1932 and for an injunction restraining the appellant from levying the tax. The District Munsif held that the respondent was liable to the tax except in respect of the half-year which ended with March 31, 1931. He was of the opinion that the respondent was not liable in respect of that half-year because the notice of demand had not been given within the required period. The respondent appealed to the District Judge of Bellary in respect of the reliefs which had been refused him and the appellant filed a memorandum of objections challenging the correctness of the District Munsif's decision that the respondent was not liable to pay the tax in respect of the first of the three half years. The respondent's appeal failed and the appellant's memorandum of objections was accepted. The result was that the District Judge dismissed the suit with costs. The respondent then filed a second appeal which was heard by Wadsworth, J., who allowed it. The learned Judge held that the respondent was not liable for the payment of the profession tax because in his opinion the respondent was not carrying on business at Adoni.

The facts are these. The respondent is a licensed distiller and owns an arrack distillery at Bellary. Under the terms of his license he is required to maintain depots for the sale of arrack at various places in the Bellary District. One of these places is Adoni. The depot at Adoni is in charge of an agent of the respondent and he sells arrack to licensed retail dealers. The price is fixed by the Govt. and the sales are restricted to licensed retail vendors. The money received in respect of arrack sold at the Adoni depot is paid by the respondent's agent into the treasury the same evening. The question which arises is whether in these circumstances the respondent transacts business in Adoni within the meaning of s. 93 (1), Mad. District Municipalities Act, 1920. The section gives a Municipal Council the right to levy profession tax on a person who transacts business within the municipality for not less than sixty days in any half year. Section 94-A says that if a person employs a servant or agent to represent him for the purpose of transacting business in a municipality the person shall be deemed to transact business there and the servant or agent shall be liable for the profession tax whether or not he has power to make binding contracts on behalf of his employer. Wadsworth, J. held that the respondent was not carrying on business within the municipal area of Adoni and his reasons may be gathered from the following passage in his judgment :

"It is true that the depot keeper at Adoni has authority to deliver goods in return for cash and I suppose that on the narrowest view it might be said that every time he delivered liquor in return for cash there is an executed contract of sale. But his control over the trade is in fact purely mechanical. The price is fixed elsewhere, the vendee must be only certain licensed persons the money is paid straight into an account in the treasury and all these accounts from which profits can be ascertained and with the help of which control can be exercised are maintained in Bellary."

The learned Judge here disregards the essential factor that the respondent's agent in charge of the Adoni depot enters into contracts for the sale of arrack on behalf of his master who makes profits on these transactions. A person who sells goods in a particular place must be deemed to be carrying on business in that place and the respondent sells arrack at Adoni. The fact that the prices which he charges are fixed by the Govt. does not make his transactions any the less sales; nor does the fact that the respondent's only customers at Adoni are licensed retail dealers alter the character of his transactions. The fact that the respondent's agent is required to pay into the treasury at the close of a day's business the moneys which he has received for the arrack sold that day has no bearing on the question and the same is to be said with regard to the keeping of accounts at Bellary. The respondent sells arrack at Adoni and therefore is carrying on business at Adoni within the meaning of s. 93 of the Act. It would be a different matter if all contracts for the supply of arrack were made in Bellary and goods were merely delivered in Adoni through an agent, but that is not the position.

In the course of his judgment the learned Judge referred to Grainger & Son v. Gough (1), Municipal Council of Cocanada v. 'Clan' Line Steamers Ltd. (2), Meera Rowther v. President of the Corporation of Madras (3) and Eastern Distilleries & Sugar Factories Ltd. v. Municipal Council, Negapatam (4). None of these cases lends support to the opinion which he has expressed. The case in Grainger & Son v. Gough (1) had reference to a French firm which sold wine through a commission agent in London. The agent obtained orders from persons in England for the firm's wine which was sold to the customers as it lay in the firm's cellar at Reims. The customer paid the cost of packing and carriage and took all the risk. Therefore the delivery to him took place in France. The question was whether the French firm was exercising a trade in the United Kingdom and it was held that it was not. In Municipal Council of Cocanada v. 'Clan' Line Steamers Ltd. (2) the question was whether a shipping company which had an agent in Madras and a sub-agent at Cocanada was liable to be taxed at Cocanada as a firm transacting business there. The shipping company earned profits by carriage of goods by sea and in the course of its business loaded and unloaded goods at Cocanada. Its head office was at Glasgow, but its principal agent in the Madras Presidency had his office at Madras. The sub-agent at Cocanada had no power to enter into contracts with shippers. This could only be done by the agent at Madras. The company was assessed by the Municipality of Cocanada to tax under s. 53, District Municipalities Act (IV of 1884) for exercising its trade and carrying on business in Cocanada. It was held that the company was not liable for the tax as it was not transacting business in Cocanada. The difference between that case and the present case is that the sub-agent at Cocanada had no authority to enter into contracts on behalf of the company's clients and no contracts were entered into there. All the contracts were entered into in Madras. In the present case, the contracts are entered into in Adoni and the goods are supplied there: Meera Rowther v. President of the Corporation of Madras

(3), was a similar case. A firm had its place of business in Tinnevely, but kept an agent in Madras for the purpose of purchasing piecegoods for despatch to Tinnevely where they were sold. It was held that the firm was not liable to profession tax in Madras. The case in Eastern Distilleries & Sugar Factories Ltd. v. Municipal Council, Negapatam (4), has no bearing at all on the question under discussion. The question there was whether the company had an office at Negapatam and the decision turned on the meaning to be attached to the word "office" in r. 16 of Sch. IV, Mad. Municipalities Act, 1920. That question does not arise here.

After we had intimated that we could not accept the decision of the learned Judge on the question whether the respondent was carrying on business in Adoni an attempt was made to support the judgment on the ground that there had been irregularities in the demands in respect of the three half-years. The alleged irregularities formed no part of the case set forth in the plaint and no issue was framed on the question. The District Munsif did allow the question of the validity of the demand for the first half-year to be raised, but the District Judge reversed his decision on the ground that this contention had not formed part of the respondent's case and the appellant had not had notice of it in time to meet it. It is said that if the Council had had notice, it would have been in a position to show that on the facts the contention could not be maintained. We consider that the District Judge adopted the right attitude in refusing to allow the matter to be raised. It follows that we are not prepared to allow it to be raised in this Letters Patent Appeal. The appeal will be allowed and the respondent's suit dismissed with costs here and in the Courts below.

Hindu Law—Partition—Wife, when can sue for her share—Wife held did not acquiesce in partition but merely stood by and hence entitled to her share—

Wife taking ornaments because she wanted them—On re-opening partition on her suit for share, those ornaments must be taken into account—Wife's share should be so adjusted as to interfere with past transaction as little as possible.

A wife can sue for her share where there has been a partition and she has not been assigned any share and has not assented or waived her rights or acquiesced.

Nobody in the family was aware that the wife was entitled to a share. No provision was made for her in the partition. She was never asked to waive her right to her share. She was allowed to retain, and in fact she retained, certain ornaments. Though the wife used to remain present off and on at the time of the discussion between the parties during the partition she merely stood by and did nothing except claim certain ornaments not as share-holder but because she wanted them :

Held, that the wife did not acquiesce in the partition and consequently was entitled to a share. The fact that she suggested a division of the ornaments and actually got them weighed for the purpose did not involve any agreement or consent with regard to partition. 159 Ind. Cas. 1080 (2) and Ganesh Dutt v. Jewach Thakoorain (3), relied on.

Held, also that in settling the wife's share the value of the ornaments taken by her must be taken into account.

Held, further that on re-opening the partition the proper course in allocating the wife's share was to so re-arrange the property as to interfere with past transactions as little as possible.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the wife of the father of three sons who at one time were the members of a joint Hindu family and who in 1931 or thereabouts separated. The result in partitioning of the property was effected amicably and resulted in the family property being divided into four shares the plaintiff, wife of the father, being, as we think, allowed to retain certain ornaments. The question in this suit is whether the plaintiff is entitled to claim a share. The learned Editor of Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage (10th Edition) at p. 544 observes as follows :

"According to the Mitakshara Law, a wife is entitled on a partition between her husband and his sons to a share equal to that of a son; but she cannot enforce a partition. She may either be the mother or the step-mother of the sons."

That proposition as late as 1930 in Partap Singh v. Dalip Singh (1), was regarded as a proposition about which two opinions could be rationally expressed and it was there observed that it had been strongly argued by an eminent lawyer that she had no such right. All doubt on the matter is, however, set at rest by the decision of the Privy Council in Pratapmull Agarwalla v. Dhanabati Bibi (2), where their Lordships point out that under the Mitakshara Law when the family estate is divided a wife or mother is entitled to a share but is not recognized as the owner of such share until the division of the property is actually made.

In this case, however, it is said that granted that a wife has a right to a share, this particular wife has lost her right to re-open this partition because she consented to it, she took part in it, she acquiesced in it, and therefore she is prevented by the doctrine of acquiescence from now challenging it and she must be regarded by her conduct as having waived her right to a share. It has already been held on a preliminary issue as follows in this very case :

"The weight of authority thus lies in favour of the view that a wife is entitled to sue for repartition and to get her share in it which share was not allotted to her in the partition when she did not acquiesce in the partition or did not waive her share."

We would express the matter somewhat differently, though doubtless it comes to very much the same thing. A wife can sue for her share where there has been a partition and she has not been assigned any share and has not assented or waived her rights or acquiesced. As their Lordships of the Privy Council state in Ganesh Dutt v. Jewach Thakoorain (3), "the mother [the same applies to the wife] is not bound by a partition to which it is not shown she ever assented". At p. 271* they observe as follows :

"The Judges of the High Court apparently considered that acquiescence on the part of the mother was established.....But their Lordships have not been referred to, nor have they been able to discover, any evidence of acquiescence, except a vague statement by the plaintiff that no share was assigned to the mother 'because she did not make any objection'."

We have no reason to think that in this branch of law acquiescence is anything other than it is in other branches of law, and acquiescence is, we think, a branch of the law of estoppel and before it begins to operate it has to have all the factors present that are indicated as necessary by the Lord

Chancellor in Ramsden v. Dyson (4), referred to in Collier v. Baron (5), and, together with the case-law on this branch of law, by this Bench in Kuwarji Madhao v. Bhurelal Ajitmal (6).

In this present case the plaintiff has greatly weakened her position by alleging that she did not know of the partition at all. The learned Judge has found that she knew about the partition, and there is abundant evidence to justify that conclusion of fact, and we accept it. But it is equally plain, in our opinion, that nobody in this family was aware that the wife was entitled to a share. Of the contesting defendants, the two elder sons, only one has gone into the box, and he said: "We never asked her that she had a share in the partition of the property. We never knew that she had any share." It is apparent from other evidence that the only part she took in this partitioning was in connection with the household ornaments. On this plea a witness who strikes us as giving the most truthful evidence is again a witness for the contesting sons, 2 and 3 D. W. No. 4. He says:

"I never told the plaintiff that she had a share in the property and whether she required it or not, I simply asked her if she wanted anything and she simply said that she would be satisfied if she were given the gold which was with her. I told Laxman then and there not to demand the gold which was with her. Laxman agreed to it."

There is other evidence to the effect that that attitude was taken up because these sons were not merely claiming their share in the immovables and houses and money-lending but were claiming to take away from her her ornaments and she objected to that, and the matter was amicably settled by the neighbours saying that she ought to be left with her ornaments. Another witness (2 and 3 D. W. No. 2) says:

"On all these four occasions plaintiff was present. She did not raise any objection to any of the said divisions effected. On all these occasions she did not claim any share for herself in any of the properties except that she demanded the gold which she had with her."

Taking the evidence as a whole it seems to us to be reasonably plain that this is a case in which nobody knew that the wife had any right to a share. No provision was made for her. She was never asked to waive her right to her share. She was allowed to retain, and in fact she retained, certain ornaments, and according to the evidence of the defendants she kept a substantial amount of gold ornaments. That sort of evidence seems to bring this case directly within the Privy Council decision of Ganesh Dutt v. Jewach Thakoorain (3), that is to say, a case where a woman stands by and does nothing at all except claim certain ornaments, and she claimed not as a shareholder but because she wanted them. They were being claimed in point of fact by the sons, and the sons were claiming them as of right and the neighbours came along and persuaded the sons to give up their rights and they gave up their rights for the sake of amity.

The defendants pleaded acquiescence based on her conduct and active part in the partition. They subsequently added further particulars: (1) that she suggested a division of the ornaments and had actually got her ornaments weighed for the purpose, and (2) she used to remain present off and on at the time of discussion between the parties during the partition. As to (2) that comes directly within their Lordships' observations. As to (1) we think that as above indicated that did not involve any agreement or consent with regard to partition but has resulted in an amicable settlement of the claim made by the sons to certain ornaments as theirs but which right they waived and allowed their step-mother to keep them.

Mr. Bobde for the respondents has strongly urged that to allow a partition to be re-opened many years after the event, after all sorts of payments have been made, suits filed by third parties or against third parties, involves immense dislocation. It is of course regrettable that dislocation is involved, but this woman filed this suit in 1933 a very short time after this partition was effected. But we think that the proper course to pursue in allocating her share would be so to re-arrange the property that it interferes with past transactions as little as may be. What she is asking for is a declaration that she is entitled to a fifth. That declaration, we think, she is entitled to. She is further asking for division either through the Collector or through Court according as the nature of the property. As to the working out of the partition we cannot of course say anything at this stage except this, that it is hardly disputed on the evidence already on record that the plaintiff has received gold and silver and that whatever she has so received will be taken into account in settling her share, and that as to what she has received will be Muhammadian Law—Decree against all heirs of deceased Muhammadan for debts due by deceased—Heirs in joint possession of property—Decree-holder held should be allowed to execute decree against property as a whole without interfering with extent of liability of heirs inter se—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 52—Single contract of commission agency held not contract for goods sold and delivered.

Where a decree was obtained against all the heirs of a deceased Muhammadan for debts due by the deceased but the estate was not distributed among the heirs who were in joint possession of the estate:

Held, that there should be decree against the heirs which would enable the decree-holder to execute it against the property as a whole without interfering with the extent of liability of heirs inter se.

A certain firm agreed to act as commission agent for the another firm. There was a single contract, viz., a contract of agency. The commission agent firm submitted accounts annually and the amount due at the end of each year was added to the account for the following year. The former firm sued to recover certain sum found due on adjustment of accounts or alternatively for an account and decree for the amount found due.

Held, that this was not a contract for goods sold and delivered. Consequently Art 52, Lim. Act, had no application.

Mr. J. C. Sett, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. S. Dutt, for the Defendants.

Judgment.—In this case the plaintiff firm has sued the defendants according to the concise statement in the plaint to recover the sum of Rs. 4,736-10-6 found due on adjustment of accounts, or alternatively for an account and decree for the amount found due. The plaintiff firm in March 1933, entered into business dealings with Muhammad Raffique in his firm of Muhammad Raffique and Muhammad Hashim. Those terms have been set out in the plaint and evidence was also given in support of the statements in the plaint. It is quite clear that the agreement that was entered into between the plaintiff firm and Muhammad Raffique in March 1933, was an agreement by which the plaintiff firm was to act as commission agent on behalf of Muhammad Raffique. There are several clauses in which details as to the discount, commission and brokerage payable are set out. The business continued until 1935 when there was a considerable amount due to the plaintiff firm. The last dealings were on February 10, 1935. The suit was filed on July 15, 1937. The plaintiff company has given evidence of the goods supplied and the manner in which the liability arose. Learned Counsel for defendant No. 3, Mst. Sayada Bibi, the widow of Muhammad Raffique, has put forward two contentions. In the first place, he contends that although the suit purports to be a suit for an account or an adjusted account, it is in fact a suit for goods sold and delivered, and he claims that any action for goods delivered after July 14, 1934, is barred by limitation. He relies on Art. 52, Lim. Act.

This contention cannot prevail. In the first place, it is quite clear from the nature of the suit that this is not a claim for goods sold and delivered; it is a claim based on a contract by which the plaintiff firm agreed to act as commission agent for the defendants. There was a single contract, namely, a contract of agency which must be distinguished from the series of contracts which may be entered into each time a sale or purchase takes place. As I have said, this is a contract of agency and should not be confused with a mere contract with a tradesman for the supply of goods on credit. Furthermore, it appears from the evidence that the plaintiff firm submitted its accounts annually, and the defendant in several letters wrote to the plaintiff firm saying "Please credit the amount remitted to my account." The amount due at the end of each year was added to the account for the following year, and after the dealings between the parties had closed and the final accounts had been submitted the defendants continued on various dates during 1935 and 1936 to send remittance to be placed to the credit of their account. In my view, this was not a contract for goods sold and delivered. The cases relied on by learned Counsel do not seem to me to be apposite. Particular reliance is placed on the case of Atmaram Vinayik v. Lalji Lakhamsi (1).

The other question which has been argued by learned Counsel for the defendants is that since the defendants are the heirs and legal representatives of Muhammad Raffique who died about five years ago, the decree in favour of the plaintiff firm should be confined as to each defendant to the extent only of his share of the debt proportionate to his share of the estate. In support of this argument, he has relied on s. 33 of Sir Dinshaw Mulla's book on Muhammadan Law and also on s. 36 of that book. In s. 33 the learned author merely sets out the extent of the liability of heirs for debts and he states there that each heir is liable for the debts of the deceased to the extent only of his share of the debts proportionate to his share of the estate. In s. 36 he discusses the question as to the remedies of a creditor when only some of the heirs of the deceased have been sued, or for a decree passed against him. In this case the suit is against all the heirs of the deceased, and s. 36 of Sir Dinshaw Mulla's book does not appear to me to be applicable. The question really is whether the decree-holder should be forced to execute his decree against each defendant separately, even though the parties are in joint possession. Had the estate been distributed the position might be otherwise, but the estate has not been distributed and the parties are in joint possession. In the circumstances, there should be a decree against the defendants which will enable the decree-holder to execute against the property as a whole without interfering with the extent of the liability of the heirs inter se. There will be a decree for Rs. 4,736-10-6. The contesting defendants must pay the costs of the suit. Interest on decree 6 per cent.

Banker and customer—Fiduciary relation between—When arises—Amount credited in suspense account awaiting directions of creditor—No pass or cheque books issued nor contract as to interest entered into—Relation between parties is fiduciary—Creditor is entitled to preferential claim.

The mere fact that a person had no prior banking transaction with the Bank will not by itself be sufficient to exclude the possibility of the person's having become a customer of the Bank when he paid in the amounts. Again the mere fact that a customer gives directions to a banker to apply in a particular manner moneys standing to his credit will not necessarily make the relationship between the parties fiduciary. Commissioner of Taxation v. English Scottish and Austrian Bank Ltd. (4) and Dharmambal Ammal v. James Voice Pirrie (6), relied on.

Where the account books of the parties show that the amounts were credited in anamath or suspense account to await the instructions of the creditor as regards their disposal and the usual procedure of giving pass books and cheque books was not followed and no agreement was entered into regarding the interest payable on the deposits, the amounts must be deemed to have been received by the Bank in a fiduciary capacity and not as between a Bank and its customer. Consequently such a creditor is entitled to preferential claim over other customers of the Bank. In re Brown, Ex parte Platt (1), Burdwick v. Garick (2), 6 Ind. Cas. 383 (8) and 1 Ind. A. against a decree of the Sub-Judge, Trichinopoly, dated December 12, 1936.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. Sitarama Rao and A. V. Narayanaswamy Aiyar, for the Respondent.

Kunhi Raman, J.—The Official Assignee of Madras who was impleaded as defendant No. 17 in O. S. No. 64 of 1935 on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Trichinopoly is the appellant. He was brought on record as representing the estate of defendants Nos. 1 to 7 who were adjudicated insolvents in I. P. No. 345 of 1935 on September 6, 1935. They were members of a joint Hindu family which was carrying on banking business under the name and style of the S. N. Firm which suspended business on April 30, 1935. Between March 25, 1935 and April 17, 1935 the plaintiff-respondent had paid this firm a total sum of Rs. 6,950 at Trichinopoly in the following circumstances. The plaintiff had arranged to purchase certain lands in the village of Thiruvarambur from one S. V. Nallasivam Pillai of Tuticorin. When the plaintiff told defendant No. 3 of this plan the latter suggested that the transaction could be arranged through the defendant's branch at Tuticorin which he said was close to Nallaperumal Pillai's shop of that place. The plaintiff's case was that the payment referred to above was made by him under an arrangement that the firm of defendants Nos. 1 to 7 should keep the total amount in trust for him until he decided how it should be disposed of. The plaintiff had no prior banking transactions with the defendants' firm. The plaintiff's case was that the amount was not deposited by him with the firm and that when he made the payment, no relationship of banker and customer arose between him and the firm. On the other hand the defendants' firm received the amount in a fiduciary capacity. He, therefore, wanted to recover the full amount from the assets of the firm and not merely in the shape of dividends declared from time to time by the Official Assignee.

The claim was resisted in the Court below, on the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to any preferential treatment in respect of the total amount paid by him, because it was paid by him as a deposit which was to carry interest at 5 annas per cent. per annum in the ordinary course of the banking business of the firm. This contention of the defendants was negatived by the trial Court which has found on the evidence that the amount was paid by plaintiff on anamath account on the understanding that the total amount should be paid back to him when he intended to go to Tuticorin or that a draft should be given to him for the total amount to be paid at Tuticorin by the defendant's branch there. The defendants suspended payment before the plaintiff had made up his mind as to what course he should adopt. The learned Subordinate Judge states in his judgment, and quite correctly too that had the plaintiff adopted the second course and had he taken a draft on the defendants' branch at Tuticorin the position taken up by the plaintiff at the trial might have been untenable. It might then have been assumed that the transaction was an ordinary banking transaction between the plaintiff and the firm which would have relegated the plaintiff to the position of an ordinary customer of the Bank who would have had to take his turn with the other customers of the Bank for obtaining satisfaction. On the ground, therefore, that the Bank held the plaintiff's money in a fiduciary capacity as the result of which the property in the amount did not vest in the Official Assignee, the Court below has recognized the plaintiff's claim to preferential treatment along with such other persons as may be similarly situated. The plaintiff's suit has accordingly been decreed and it is against this decree that the present appeal is preferred.

The learned Advocate for the appellant contends that the money was paid to the Bank to be held "at call," that is to say to be paid back to plaintiff whenever he demanded payment. He points out that this shows that in fact it was paid into a current account to the credit of the plaintiff and that, therefore, the plaintiff must be regarded as an ordinary customer of the Bank and not as a person who had entrusted money to the Bank to be held in a fiduciary capacity.

The learned Advocate for the respondent on the other hand stresses the fact that the plaintiff did not at any time have a banking account with the firm. The amount was paid by the plaintiff at the invitation of defendant No. 3. No cheque book or pass book was given to the plaintiff by the firm. No entry was made of the payment in the current account or fixed deposit register of the Bank. The firm did not produce its fair day book at the trial. No ledger was opened crediting plaintiff with the amount until at any rate April 30, 1935, by which time the Bank had already suspended payment. He, therefore, argues that the payment was made to the firm as bailee or agent and that consequently the view taken by the lower Court is correct.

It must be stated at the outset that the appellant's case that the amount was paid into plaintiff's current account and that it was to carry interest at five annas per cent, had not been substantiated. It seems to us that the test for ascertaining whether there was any fiduciary relationship or only the relationship of banker and customer between the parties is put succinctly in Hart on Banking, Vol. I (Edn. 5) at p. 582, where the decision in In re Brown; Ex parte Plitt (1), is considered. In that case Jullus Plitt handed a cheque to Alexandar Brown, a Banker, with whom he had no banking account, and obtained a receipt to the effect that the cheque was given for collection. Brown was adjudicated bankrupt after he had collected the amount of the cheque and before he had paid the whole of it to Plitt. The trustee claimed the balance of the proceeds of the cheque. Cave, J., observed in the course of the argument:

"Where the debtor is to collect and remit, there is confidence and trust. Where the debtor is to use and repay on demand, there is no trust."

It was held in that case that the relation between the parties was not the ordinary relation of banker and customer. Plitt had handed the cheque to Brown

"for Brown to receive and hold it for him. If so, it is not the ordinary case of banker and customer."

In Burdwick v. Garick (2) at p. 240, Lord Hatherley, L. C., says as follows:

"I apprehend that the true rule applicable to these cases is to be found in Foley v. Hill (3) at p. 35 where it is clearly stated by Lord Cottenham who distinguishes between the confidence reposed in a factor or agent and the confidence reposed in a person who is merely in the position of a banker. A mere banker who takes charge of his customer's money is not in any fiduciary relation whatever to him with respect to the particular coins or notes deposited because it is the ordinary course of trade to make use of them for his own profit. He does make use of them and he invests money deposited with him, and his customer does not require from him those very coins or exchequer bills which he deposited with him. But in the present case we have an agent who is intrusted with those funds, not for the purpose of being remitted when received to the principal, but for the purpose of being employed in a particular manner in the purchase of land or stock, and which moneys the factor or agent is bound to keep totally distinct and separate from his own money; and in no way whatever to deal with or make use of them. How a person who is intrusted with funds under such circumstances differs from one in an ordinary fiduciary position I am unable to see."

The mere fact that the plaintiff had no prior banking transaction with the defendant's firm will not of course by itself be sufficient to exclude the possibility of the plaintiff having become a customer of the Bank when he paid in the amounts. This is made clear in the judgment of the Privy Council in Commissioner of Taxation v. English Scottish and Australian Bank Ltd. (4). On p. 687, occur the following sentences:

"Their Lordships are of opinion that the word 'customer' signifies a relationship in which the duration is not of essence. A person whose money has been accepted by a Bank on the footing that they undertake to honour cheques up to the amount standing to his credit is, in the view of their Lordships, a customer of the Bank in the sense of the statute, irrespective of whether his connection is of short or long standing. The contrast is not between an habitue and a new comer, but between a person for whom the Bank performs a casual service, such as for instance cashing a cheque for a person introduced by one of their customers, and a person who has no account of his own at the Bank."

See also the opinion of Lord Davey in Great Western Railway Co. v. London and County Banking Co. Ltd. (5) at p. 420. Again the mere fact that a customer gives direction to a banker to apply in a particular manner moneys standing to his credit will not necessarily make the relationship between the parties fiduciary. This was made clear in the decision reported in Dharmambal Ammal v. James Vice Pirrie (6), where money was invested in a Bank's Savings Bank Account and a standing order was given that out of this account payment must be made towards certain recurring chit subscriptions payable by the depositor. The scope of the decision in Farley v. Turner (7) is explained in the judgment in that case, and it was held that the depositor was a customer of the Bank and not a person entitled to preferential treatment since no trust was created. The decisions of this Court reported in Official Assignee of Madras v. Rajah Iyer (8), Official Assignee of Madras v. Mellapparan Kanoor Sarvajana Sahaya Nidhi (9) and Official Assignee of Madras v. Smith (10) do not lay down any principles opposed to the rulings quoted above.

The account books of the parties in the present case show that the amounts were credited in anamath or suspense account to await the instructions of the plaintiff as regards their disposal. The defendants' oral evidence shows that when amounts were paid to the Bank in current account or fixed deposit generally pass books and cheque books used to be given and usually agreements used to be entered into regarding the interest payable on the deposits. This procedure was not followed when the plaintiff's moneys were received. Applying the principles of law laid down in the authorities quoted above, we hold that the amounts were received by the Bank in a fiduciary capacity and not as between a Bank and its customer and that consequently the view taken by the lower Court is correct. The appeal therefore fails and must be dismissed with costs payable out of the estate.

Administration—Application in administration suit to spend money on marriage expenses of minor plaintiff—Marriage against the provisions of Child Marriage Restraint Act (XIX of 1929)—Parties to marriage domiciled in Bikanir—Marriage to be performed in Bikanir—Source of income in British India—Application held could not be granted.

In an administration suit an application was made for liberty to spend out of the estate certain sum to meet the marriage expenses of the plaintiff who was a minor and had not reached the age of 16. Both the bridegroom and the bride were domiciled in Bikanir where the marriage ceremony was to be performed. The source of income was, however, in Calcutta:

if such marriage was not punishable according to law of Bikanir. 170 Ind. Cas. 309 (1), relied on.

Mr. B. C. Ghosh, for the Petitioners.

Mr. S. R. Das, for the Respondents.

Order.—This is an application by the plaintiffs for liberty to spend out of the estate, which is being administered by this Court, a sum of Rs. 25,000 to meet the marriage expenses of the plaintiff, Hansraj Bhuteria. The plaintiff is a minor who has not yet reached the age of 16 years. Apparently both the plaintiff Hansraj and his prospective bride are domiciled in Bikanir. The sagai ceremony has taken place in Bikanir, and the marriage ceremony is due to take place at Sujangarh in Bikanir on June 12, 1940. The application is opposed by the executors to the estate. They point out that the marriage would not be valid in India owing to the provisions of the Child Marriage Restraint Act. They also point out that even under the Bikanir Hindu Marriage Act, 1928, the plaintiff will be a minor under the definition contained in s. 2 of that Act, in that he will not have completed his 16th year until June 29, 1940, and the marriage is to be performed on June 12, 1940.

The question whether the Court should allow money to be withdrawn for purposes of a marriage, which the Legislature in British India has made penal, has been considered by this Court in Panmull Lodha v. Gadhmull Lodha (1). The facts there were somewhat different because there were no materials in that case to show whether the members of the family were subjects of an Indian State or whether they were domiciled in an Indian State. In the present instance it seems quite clear that the parties are subjects of and domiciled in the State of Bikanir. On the other hand, the business, which is the main source of income and which comprises most of the assets, is carried on in Howrah and Calcutta. The parties are ordinarily resident in Howrah, and the suit in which this application is made is an administration suit which has been brought in this Court. In the concluding portion of his judgment in Panmull Lodha v. Gadhmull Lodha (1) at p. 1155* Panckridge, J., said:

"Even assuming that the parties to the intended marriage are not British subjects and are domiciled out of British India, it would surely be wrong in principle for the Court to facilitate conduct which the Legislature has made penal as being socially injurious, on the ground that the promotion of the contemplated marriage is not punishable by the law of the place where it is proposed to celebrate it."

It is argued that that statement by the learned Judge was not essential for the decision in the case before him, because it was not established that the parties to the intended marriage were subjects of an Indian State. The principle however remains. In the present instance this application should in my opinion be dismissed. Even on the applicant's own showing the plaintiff, for whose marriage the money is sought, will not have completed his 16th year at the time the marriage is due to be celebrated, and the contemplated marriage would therefore be a penal offence under the Bikanir Hindu Marriage Act. Learned Counsel for the applicant states that he is willing to give an undertaking that the marriage will not be performed until the plaintiff had completed his 16th year. Even in that event, considering the facts which I have mentioned, namely the ages of the parties, the boy being not quite 16 and the girl being only 12, the parties being ordinarily resident in British India, and the property being entirely in British India, the principle referred to by Panckridge, J., in Panmull Lodha v. Gadhmull Lodha (1) seems to me to be applicable, and the Court should not facilitate conduct which the Legislature in British India has made penal. The application is dismissed. Costs of all parties as between attorney and client to come out of the estate. Certified for Counsel.

D. Application dismissed.

C. P. Local Fund Audit Act (IX of 1933), s. 14—Application under—Appeal to High Court—Court-fee payable—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 1, s. 4—Schedules if confer right to impose court-fee.

The District Judge acting under s. 14, C. P. Local Fund Audit Act is not intended to act as a Court but as a special tribunal, in much the same way as it does under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The appeal from his decision to High Court is not from a Court but from a Special Tribunal. Moreover the jurisdiction which s. 14 confers is not revisional, nor can the "appeal" to the High Court be called a "reference." S. 4, Court Fees Act, therefore does not apply nor does.

Art. 1 of Sch. I. No ad valorem court-fee can therefore be demanded on the memorandum of appeal to High Court arising out of application under s. 14.

The schedules to the Court Fees Act only determine the method of assessment and do not confer right to impose and collect court-fee.

Misc. A. against the order of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated March 15, 1940.

Mr. C. B. Parakh, for the Appellants.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, Advocate-General, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of an application made under s. 14 of the C. P. Local Fund Audit Act (IX of 1933) and the question is whether court-fees on appeal should be paid ad valorem on the amount by which the appeal seeks to reduce the decree of the District Judge.

The scheme of the Act is that the Examiner of Local Fund Accounts is empowered to charge such sums as he considers fit under s. 10 of the Act against the persons mentioned there and to certify such charge. What happens thereafter is not clear. This is another of the local Acts which the Courts find so difficult to understand and construe.

Section 14 provides that any person aggrieved by any charge made under s. 10 may either apply to the District Judge or to the Local Govt. to have such charge modified, altered or set aside. If he applies to the Local Govt. that body can, after hearing the applicant, pass such orders thereon as it thinks fit. The word used for the decision of the Local Govt. is "orders". If, however, the application is made to the District Judge, then the District Judge is empowered to confirm, modify or remit the charge, and to pass such decree as he thinks fit. The word used there is "decree".

Then follows the proviso to s. 14. That provides that "the aggrieved person shall have a right to file one appeal in accordance with the provisions of the Civil P. C."

The term used here is "appeal" and it evidently refers to an "appeal" from the "decree" of the District Judge.

Section 13 deals with the matter of recovery and divides all possible cases under the Act into two categories. The first relates to cases in which "no appeal has been preferred under s. 14" and the second to cases in which an appeal has been preferred. In the former case the sum stated in the certificate of the Examiner has to be recovered by the Deputy Commissioner as if it were an arrear of land revenue, and in the latter case "the sum stated in the order of the appellate authority." What is the position of the District Judge in all this.

It will be seen that he has empowered to pass a decree and not to make an order. It will also be seen that the person aggrieved has been empowered to apply (not appeal) to the District Judge and that the only appeal contemplated by s. 14 is the appeal from the "decree" of the District Judge. What the decision of the appellate authority is intended to be I do not know. As the appeal is to be in accordance with the provisions of the Civil P. C. from a "decree" of the District Judge I would have thought that the decision of the appellate authority would have ended in a "decree" in accordance with the provisions of the Code. But s. 13 speaks of the decision of the appellate authority as an "order".

However, reading all these provisions together, I think it is clear that the District Judge is not intended to act as a Court but as a special tribunal, in much the same way as it does under the Workmen's Compensation Act. Many considerations lead me to this view.

In the first place, the appeal or the application, whichever it is, is to the District Judge and not the District Court. In the next place we have the two alternative tribunals of appeal, the High Court and the Local Govt.; and in the third place, we have an astonishingly loose use of the expressions "apply", "appeal", "decree" and "order", terms which have well-known technical meanings when one is dealing with Courts.

The charging section in the Court Fees Act so far as the High Court is concerned, is s. 4. It authorises the levy of court-fees when the Court is exercising the following jurisdictions,

- (1) its extraordinary original civil jurisdiction,
- (2) its extraordinary original criminal jurisdiction,
- (3) its appellate jurisdiction under the Letters Patent, and
- (4) its jurisdiction as regards appeals from the Courts subject to its superintendence; or in the exercise of its jurisdiction as a Court of reference or revision.

The memorandum in question clearly does not relate to the first three jurisdictions, and as regards the fourth, the appeal is not, on the view taken above, from a Court but from a special tribunal. As to the difference between the two see a recent decision of the Division Bench in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Geeta (1), where it was held that an award by a District Judge acting as a Commissioner under the Workmen's Compensation Act is not a "judgment" within the meaning of the Letters Patent because the District Judge is not a Court when acting in that capacity. That this is also the position in respect of orders of the District Judge acting under the Land Acquisition Act is implicit in the Court Fees Act itself. Section 8 deals specially with these cases: In my opinion this section would be unnecessary if the District Judge's awards were "judgments" in the ordinary sense because then exactly the same result in respect of the fee payable would be reached by the application of Art. 1, Sch. I. It is only on the assumption that this article does not apply that s. 8 becomes necessary. There is no similar special provision in respect of the kind of appeal contemplated by s. 14 of the Local Fund Audit Act.

The next type of jurisdiction which s. 4 of the Court Fees Act legislates for is when the High Court acts as a Court of reference or revision. The jurisdiction which s. 14 of the Local Fund Audit Act confers is not revisional, nor in my opinion can the "appeal" to the High Court be called a "reference." A reference can only be made by a Court or some person in authority. Here what is contemplated is an appeal by an aggrieved party. In the circumstances I do not see how any Court at all can be demanded. Article 1 to Sch. I though general cannot apply unless the right to collect is conferred in the body of the Act. The schedules only determine the method of assessment and do not confer a right to impose and collect Court-fees.

D. Order accordingly.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 4 (2)—Resident in British India owning immovable property in Indo China—Account in Bank in Indo China—Right to overdraw to certain limit—Payment of net income in account with Bank and reduction of amount of overdraft—In the year of account, withdrawal of certain sum less than net income and remittance to British India—Remittance, if remittance of profit within the meaning of s. 4 (2)—Assessee, if should receive profits in India in exact form in which they were made—Available profits more than sufficient to cover remittance—Remittance, if presumed to be out of profits.

A resident of Tanjore District owned some immovable property in Saigon in Indo-China, from which he derived income in the shape of rent. He had kept an account in a Bank in Saigon and had a right to overdraw it to a certain limit. In the year of account he paid out of his net income into his account and reduced his overdraft to certain extent. While the overdraft was still at that figure he withdrew certain sum which was less than the net income and remitted it to British India:

Held, that the remittance could not be treated merely as remittance of the proceeds of a loan. The remittance could be properly assessed to income-tax under s. 4 (2) as a receipt of foreign income in British India.

[Case-law discussed.]

A person who has income accruing to him in a foreign country is at perfect liberty to keep it there, or to spend or utilize it in that or any other country in any way he thinks fit. His liability to tax arises not because he makes the profits but because he brings or receives them into British India. It is not necessary that he should receive those profits in the exact form in which they were made, but he must receive them into British India substantially as profits. If the remittance is traceable, and is traced to the assessee's foreign profits there would be ground for holding that the Act is attracted. [p. 736, col. 2.]

If there are available profits more than sufficient to cover the remittance, the presumption to start with is that the remittances came out of the profits, though ultimately the question to a large extent is one of fact. Kneen v. Martin (4), relied on. [p. 737, col. 2.]

O. P. reference by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Iyengar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar and M. Subbaraya Iyer, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—The assessee derives income from immovable property, trade in cloth, money lending and other sources existing within the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer, Tanjore Circle. He is also the owner of considerable house property in Saigon in Indo China. For some years he has kept an account with the Saigon branch of the Banque Franco-Chinoise and has the right to overdraw it to the limit of $50,000. On April 1, 1935, his overdraft amounted to $20,149. It is unnecessary to embark on an inquiry into the purposes for which the $20,149 was used, but it is common ground that it was used in part for paying for repairs to the assessee's properties in Saigon and meeting taxes levied thereon. The period of account was the year from April 1, 1935, to March 31, 1936, and the assessee's net income from his Saigon properties during that year was $18,414. As the result of payments into his account of the income from these properties he had reduced his overdraft to $12,165 by November 30, 1935. On December 7, 1935, while the overdraft still stood at that figure, he withdrew from the account a further sum of $5,719, the equivalent of Rs. 10,000. The $5,719 represented a remittance which he made to British India, and the question which the Court is called upon to decide is whether this remittance represents a remittance of profits derived from his Saigon properties. After making the remittance the assessee continued to draw on the account the various purposes and to make payments in from the rents he received in Saigon. The payments into the account from December 7, 1935, to the end of the financial year amounted to $11,570 and the year closed with his overdraft standing at the figure of $9,441. It is conceded by the assessee that the $11,570 has been rightly treated as being net income.

The assessee says, however, that the payments into his banking account both before and after December 7, 1935, should be treated as payments in reduction of the overdraft. He contends that inasmuch as throughout the year he was still overdrawn, in spite of his payments into the account from the income from his properties, the income-tax authorities are bound to treat the remittance of $5,719 on December 7, 1935, as being a remittance of borrowed money. In the course of his argument Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar admitted that if the overdraft had been completely discharged by payments in of further profits after the new financial year commenced, the position would have been different but the overdraft had not been paid off. On the other hand, the income-tax authorities say that the true position cannot be gathered by treating the payments into the account and the withdrawals as being entirely separate transactions. They maintain that the net result of the assessee's payments in and his withdrawals from the account is that he has reduced his overdraft by $12,695 and has remitted the balance of his total profits ($18,414 less $12,695) to British India.

I am unable to accept as being correct the contention of the assessee that payments into the account from his profits must be treated as separate transactions and regarded in toto as payments in reduction of the overdraft. I consider that the income-tax authorities are right in saying that the account must be examined as a whole and that when this is done the remittance cannot be treated merely as a remittance of the proceeds of a loan. The principles which govern this case are in my opinion to be found in the decisions in V. V. R. Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax Madras (1); Commissioner of Income-tax Madras v. Meyyappa Chettiar (2) and Fellowes Gordon v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (3). In V. V. R. Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras (1) a Bench of three Judges of this Court considered the case of a Nattukottai Chetty firm which was carrying on a banking business in Rangoon and Saigon with headquarters at Karaikudi in the Madras Presidency. The assessee firm received in Rangoon, which was then in British India, a sum of Rs. 1,00,000 from its agent in Saigon. The agent had been instructed by the office at headquarters to borrow and remit that amount to the Rangoon branch. The remitted sum was made up of borrowings amounting to $59,000 and the realization of outstanding loans. The question was whether the $59,000 represented a remittance of foreign profits. It was found that the Saigon branch had accumulated profits which were more than sufficient to cover the remittance and that it had repaid the whole of the borrowed amount within 28 days. It was held that the $59,000 represented in these circumstances a remittance from profits and not from capital. In Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Meyyappa Chettiar (2), this Court applied the same principle.

The facts in Fellowes Gordon v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (3), are very similar to the facts in the present case. The assessee there had plantation in Ceylon, and during each of the years ending April 5, 1928 and April 5, 1931, was for more than six months resident within the United Kingdom. In the year ending April 5, 1928, he received from his agents in Ceylon for the credit of his account with the National Bank of India, Limited, in London, a total sum of £2,200, and in the year ending April 5 1931, a total sum of £1,400. His income from his plantations in Ceylon during these two years was more than sufficient to meet the cost of the remittances. During the whole of the time when the remittances were taking place the assessee was indebted to his agents in Ceylon with whom he had an account. The account started with a debit balance of some Rs. 35,000 and ended with a debit balance of some Rs. 7,000. In the interval between the commencement and the end of the account there were very great variations, some upwards and some downwards, but at all material times the assessee had an overdraft with his agents. There were other transactions which affected the amount of the balance from time to time, but in so far as the balance was reduced, the reductions were due to no other cause than the payment into the account of income from the assessee's possessions in Ceylon. The case was decided by the Court of Session in Scotland and the Lord President (Lord Normand) stated that he was unable to understand on what principle the assessee was to escape income-tax.

"upon the income arising from his Ceylon possession on the full amount of the actual sums being remittances received by him in this country and ultimately traceable to his income."

The Lord President went on to observe :

"It is suggested that the mere existence of an overdraft precludes his liability to tax on the ground that any money paid out of an overdraft and remitted to this country is the money of the lender and not of the recipient. Learned Counsel for the appellant did not hesitate to say that that would apply although there was a very large income in Ceylon, and an overdraft was specially arranged for the purpose of bringing this alleged principle into play. I am quite unable to accept that proposition. A man may have an income in Ceylon and may receive remittances of that income in this country through an account in which he is debtor during the whole period in which the remittances are made. There is no difference between income arising from Ceylon and income arising from this country in that respect. A man may have an income and still be in debt, and the amount of his income may be remitted to him through the hands of his creditor. I can see nothing in Kneen v. Martin (4), which is in any way inconsistent with what I have just said. It is perfectly true that it may not be sufficient to say that you had an income in Ceylon and you have received remittances of less amount than that income in this country. But here the reasonable inference is that what was received in this country was not derived from some realization of capital or from some capital account, but was in truth derived from the income arising from possessions in Ceylon, and I think that the Commissioners, on the facts of the case, were entitled to arrive at the conclusion at which they did arrive, and that the appeal should be dismissed."

As in that case the assessee in the present case had a debit balance with his bankers at the beginning of the period and a debit balance of lesser extent at the end of the period and it is not suggested, nor can it be, that the inference may here be drawn that the remittance was from the realization of capital. The assessee had made profits in Saigon far in excess of his remittance to British India. By merely increasing his overdraft to pay for the remittance does not mean that the remittance was in substance remittance of borrowed money. Having made the remittance the assessee paid into the account out of his profits from his properties in Saigon for more than was necessary to meet the cost of the remittance. The Court must look at the substance of the transaction, and if it does that, I consider the proper conclusion to be drawn is that there was here a remittance of profits. If the assessee's contention was to be accepted it would mean that by manipulating an overdraft account kept abroad and keeping it permanently in debt an assessee would be able to escape taxation of his remittance of profits. The test is from where did the money for the remittance come and in the words of Lord Normand it must be ultimately traceable to his income in Saigon. I can see no difference in principle between the two cases. I would answer the question referred by saying that on the facts of this case the remittance was properly assessed under s. 4 (2), Income Tax Act, 1922 as a receipt of foreign income in British India and I would award the income-tax authorities the usual costs granted by this Court in such case, namely Rs. 25.

King, J.—I agree.

Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—The question that has been referred for our decision is:

"Whether on the facts of this case the sum of Rs. 10,000 was properly assessed under s. 4 (2) as a receipt of foreign income in British India."

The amount mentioned represents a sum of money remitted to the assessee in British India from Saigon in French Cochin China on December 7, 1935, a date which fell within the year of account 1935-36. The income-tax authorities have included this remittance in the assessable income of the assessee, on the ground that it represented foreign profits received in British India within the meaning of s. 4 (2), Income Tax Act, 1922. The assessee objected that the remittance was not of income liable to be taxed under the section but came out of capital, being the proceeds of a loan borrowed in Saigon; and he therefore claimed that it should be excluded in the calculation of his assessable income. This contention has been negatived by the Department, but at the request of the assessee, the Commissioner of Income-tax has referred the question set out above for the opinion of this Court. The Commissioner's conclusion that the remittance was made out of profits available to the assessee in Saigon is obviously in the nature of an inference drawn from facts proved, rather than a finding on a pure question of fact. There is no direct proof adduced to establish a connection between the profits available to the assessee in Saigon and the remittance in question, in the sense that it was wholly or in part identifiable with those profits. But such identification is not necessary, if in substance the remittance is shown to have come out of the profits, and is traceable to that source. The only question, which is of course a question of law is whether the inference drawn can be said legitimately to follow from the facts found.

The facts found are these: The assessee, a resident of the Tanjore District in this Province, owns extensive immovable properties in Saigon, in French Cochin China, from which he derives income in the shape of rents. In connection with these properties, he has to incur expenses, for taxes, repairs, etc. It also appears from the statement furnished by the Commissioner in response to the requisition contained in our order dated November 14, 1938 that the assessee also lends and borrows moneys in Saigon. His monetary transactions are carried on through the agency of the Banque Franco Chinoise at Saigon which has allowed him an overdraft at first limited to $ 15,000 but subsequently increased to $ 50,000. Into his account with this Bank his receipts by way of income from his immovable properties are paid from time to time. Whenever the need arose he drew on the Bank, utilizing the money drawn mostly in Saigon but occasionally for remittance to this country for his use here. In the beginning of December 1935, the assessee's account with the Bank shows that he had overdrawn his account by $ 12,165.23. The remittance in question was as I have said, made by the Bank on December 7, 1935, and appears as a debit in the account of $ 5,719.33 which is the equivalent of the Rs. 10,000. By reason of the remittance the overdraft swelled to $ 17,884. Further credits and debits followed according as the assessee paid in or withdrew moneys, and the account shows that there was at the end of the account year, that is on March 31, 1936, a debit balance of $ 9,441.70 against the assessee.

It has been found as a fact that the net income of the assessee from his Saigon properties during the account year amounted up till the date of remittance to $ 10,184, the total income at the end of the year being $ 18,184, so that whichever date is taken, there was an available income far in excess of the amount remitted. But from this circumstance alone however, it is not right to infer that what the assessee received was income and not capital. The decision in Fel-lowers Gordon v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue (3), most relied on by learned Counsel for the Income-tax Commissioner, concedes this position. The Lord President has said in that case:

"It is perfectly true that it may not be sufficient to say that you had income in Ceylon and you have received remittance of less amount than that income in this country."

Any other view would inevitably result in consequences which the Statute could never have intended. A person who has income accruing to him in a foreign country is at perfect liberty to keep it there, or to spend or utilize it in that or any other country in any way he thinks fit. His liability to tax arises not because he makes the profits but because he brings or receives them here. It is not necessary that he should receive those profits in the exact form in which they were made, but he must receive them here substantially as profits. If the remittance is traceable, and is traced to the assessee's foreign profits there would be ground for holding that the Act is attracted though even here it is necessary to exercise caution so as to avoid the error pointed out by the Privy Council in Income Tax Commissioner, Bombay v. Ahmedabad Advance Mills, Ltd. (5), where machinery purchased in a foreign country with profits made in that country and imported into British India was held not to give rise to a case of profits received within the meaning of s. 4 (2) of the Act. The illustrations given in the last paragraph of their Lordships' judgment are instructive, and indicate the danger of regarding traceability by itself as a conclusive circumstance. On the other hand, it is equally clear that the mere existence of an overdraft cannot save foreign income from liability to taxation as money paid out of the overdraft and remitted to this country is not necessarily the money of the lender, and may be that of the recipient. It is easy to imagine cases, where under cover of an overdraft, income might in truth be remitted and received as such. A man might so manipulate his dealings with a bank, as to leave a permanent debit balance against himself, and yet be held liable to be taxed on his remittances, if it appears that he took advantage of a banking facility as a convenient shield to conceal a receipt of profits. The position is not altered by the absence of deliberate intent, if the true nature and effect of the payments and withdrawals is such as to bring about the same result. There is no abstract rule of law to be applied generally to cases of this kind, and I do not understand the Court of Session to have laid down any such rule in the case cited. The question in each case is, what is the correct inference to be drawn and the Court is entitled to get behind appearances in order to discover the truth.

A man with profits available in a foreign country and wanting to bring them into this country may find it necessary as a measure of convenience to obtain a temporary overdraft, or resort to a temporary borrowing which he proceeds to make good immediately out of his profits. In such a case, the remittance though in forma specifica is a remittance of capital, it is in truth a remittance of profits, and is taxable as such. The loan or the overdraft as the case may be and its repayment by the assessee out of profits may be so connected together by proximity of time or otherwise, as to lead to the reasonable inference that the remittance was in substance a remittance of profits though to start with, it might appear or is made to appear as if it came out of a capital source. The decision of this Court in V. V. P. Firm v. Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras (1), and Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras v. Meyyappa Chettiar (2), are illustrations in point. Granting that ordinarily a remittance of borrowed money is not to be deemed a remittance of profits, Beasley, C. J. in the former case held that the facts there present, namely, the existence of available profits, the fact of the money being borrowed and remitted on the instructions of the assessee, and its repayment within 28 days out of profits collected, justified the finding that it was a remittance not of capital but of profits.

In this connection it may be mentioned that learned Counsel for the assessee fairly conceded that a remittance out of borrowed money beginning in a capital source, would be turned into a remittance of profit, the moment profits were realized and applied to the discharge of the loan. Otherwise, it would become possible for an assessee to evade forever the payment of tax on his foreign income again and again brought into this country by adopting the expedient every time of first borrowing and then utilizing his income for the repayment of the loan borrowed. The presumption underlying the decision in Scottish Provident Institution v. Allan (6), would come to the rescue of the Department in such a case to prevent the Crown being cheated out of its revenue. If there are available profits more than sufficient to cover the remittance, the presumption to start with is that the remittance came out of the profits, though ultimately the question to a large extent is one of fact: Kneen v. Martin (4). If I followed Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar afloat, his only point was that the conversion of what was originally a capital remittance into a remittance of profits takes place not when the remittance is made, but when the profits are applied to the discharge of the loan borrowed and remitted. In my judgment it is the proposition conceded, which I think was rightly conceded, that furnishes the true ground of decision in this case.

If we are to confine attention to the transactions of the assessee with the Banque Franco-Chinoise during the year of account only, the answer to the reference should in my view be in favour of the assessee. It should be mentioned at the outset that there is no suggestion in this case that the transactions with the bank were other than what they purport on their face to be. There is no reason to think that the assessee has adopted a device or invented a scheme through the instrumentality of his banking account to find a way of escape from legitimate taxation. If an inference is to be drawn against him, it must be on a proper consideration of the transactions as disclosed in the account. That his ownership of the Saigon properties and his other affairs in that place rendered it genuinely necessary or expedient for him to spend or invest his money there is beyond question. As already mentioned he has had to incur expenses for repairs, taxes, etc., and has also lent and borrowed money in the foreign country. These are facts which have not been disputed, and indeed they plainly appear from the evidence before the income-tax authorities. For these transactions he had drawn from his banking account in which all the withdrawals appear as debits against him. The debits amounted on December 7, 1935, the date of the remittance, to the sum of $12,165. The whole of the assessee's income during the year, as found by the Commissioner, being less than this sum, why is it to be presumed or inferred that the profits did not go in reduction of the overdraft, but were in part remitted to this country?

I can see at least two reasons against such an inference being drawn, but none in its favour. It was perfectly open to the assessee to apply his income to the discharge of his debts to the Bank on his overdrawn account, with the double advantage of saving himself from the payment of interest to the bank, and income-tax to the Crown. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, a man must be presumed to have done that which was to his advantage, rather than that would result in a detriment. In the second place, and again in the absence of anything to the contrary, when there are debits and credits in an account, the credits should be appropriated towards the discharge of the earlier debits serially in the order of dates. This is the rule of appropriation laid down in Clayton's case (7) and embodied in ss. 59 to 61, Contract Act; and, if this rule is applied to the assessee's account with the Bank, there would still remain a debit balance even after appropriating the whole of the year's income towards the debits prior to the remittance. On this footing there would be a total absence of profits from which the remittance could be deemed to have come.

With very great respect, I am unable to agree that Fellowes Gordon v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue (3), furnishes a parallel governing the decision of the present case. It was proved and found in that case, as in this, that the assessee had derived profits in Ceylon in the years there in question to an amount in excess of the remittances. The account produced there unlike in the present case was of a fragmentary character, showing the debit balances on the various dates of the remittances against the assessee with no information regarding the dealings in the intervening periods. It does not appear from the statement of account there produced, whether or not the whole of the opening balance on April 27, 1927 and July 5, 1930 would be wiped out if the revenue receipts for those years had been appropriated in accordance with the rule in Clayton's case (7), whereas in the present case it is quite clear it is the other way about. This difference in fact strikes me as a material one capable of affording a legitimate ground of distinction. It is also to be observed that the chief arguments on behalf of the assessee in that case were (i) that the account showed a debit balance at the date of each of the remittances and (ii) that it was not material to know from what source the advances made by his agent, were repaid. I may say at once that the first point affords insufficient basis for a correct inference. The second ignores what is to my view an essential source of material information. Against these arguments, the Crown contended, I think quite rightly, that the fact that his current account with his agent was overdrawn at the dates when the remittances were made was not sufficient evidence that the remittances were from a capital source. There are indications in the judgment of the Lord President that this insufficiency influenced the decision. He has drawn pointed attention to it by observing as follows:

"The account starts with a debit balance of some Rs. 35,000, and it ends with a debit balance of some Rs. 7,000. In the interval between the commencement and the end of the account there were great variations, some upwards and some downwards. We are not exactly informed what other transactions took place in Ceylon which affected the amount of the balance from time to time, but this much is certain, that, in so far as it was reduced, the reductions were due to no other cause than the payment into the account of his agents, of income from the appellant's possessions in Ceylon. It, therefore, appears that the income in Ceylon was in excess on the whole, of the total amount of the remittances received in this country by the appellant. That being so, I am unable to understand on what principle he is to escape income-tax upon the income arising from his Ceylon possessions on the full amount of the actual sums, being remittances received by him in this country and ultimately traceable to his income."

The italics are mine. There is no reference in this judgment to the principle of appropriation arising by reason of the rule in Clayton's case (7), or the presumed intentions of the party, as the necessary material for the application of the principle was not available. In its absence it would be perfectly legitimate to hold that the presumption arising from Scottish Provident Institution v. Allan (6), had not been rebutted, and I think that this was the real basis of the Lord President's conclusion. Otherwise, it will be difficult to reconcile the decision with what the Lord President himself stated lower down in his judgment where he pointed out that the existence of profits, and the fact of a remittance are by themselves insufficient. If the matter stood there, I should be prepared to answer the question referred in favour of the assessee. But the matter does not rest there. From the additional information furnished by the Commissioner it appears that in the year 1933-34, the assessee received a remittance of $8,000 from Saigon through his Bankers and out of this amount debited in the account, a portion only, namely $1,680 or Rs. 2,300 had been taxed in 1934-35 as a remittance of profit, leaving a balance of $6,320 untaxed in that year. According to the proposition of law conceded by Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar and referred to already, if this balance has been wiped out by the revenue receipts of the year 1935-36, it is automatically turned into a remittance from an income source though in origin it was from a capital source. The income during the account year was admittedly sufficient to discharge the whole of that balance and certainly to the extent of the whole of the remittance sought to be assessed to tax. It is this fact, which in my judgment turns the scale in favour of the Crown, and I accordingly agree in the answer given by my Lord though as I have explained, I rest my decision on a different ground.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Expression "between the parties to any such instrument," whether applies to questions raised between parties on the one side only of deed regarding their relations to each other under contract—Res judicata—Suit against two defendants on basis that one of them was principal and the other surety—Question which of them was principal and which surety neither agitated nor decided—Subsequent suit by one of the defendants against the other—Defendant in subsequent suit, if can raise defence that he was not principal.

The words "between the parties to any such instrument" as used in s. 92, Evi. Act refer to the parties who on the one side and the other came together to make the contract or disposition of property, and would not apply to questions raised between the parties on the one side only of a deed regarding their relations to each other under the contract. Mulchand v. Madho Ram (1) and Shamsh-ul-Jahan Begam v. Ahmad Wali Khan (2), followed, 137 Ind. Cas. 285 (3), dissented from.

A suit was brought against two defendants on the footing that one of the defendants was principal and the other was surety. The question as to which of the defendants was surety and which the principal was neither agitated between the defendants inter se, nor decided. In a subsequent suit by one of the defendants against the other defendant:

Held, that the defendant (in the subsequent suit) could raise the defence that he was not the principal, such defence not being barred by res judicata.

C. R. P. from an order of the Sub-Judge, Berhampur, dated January 27, 1940.

Mr. P. V. B. Rao, for the Petitioner.

Mr. R. K. Ratho, for the Opposite Party.
Order.—This is an application in revision against the judgment and decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of Berhampur in a suit for contribution which was brought by the plaintiff opposite party against the petitioner. It appears that a decree was obtained by Messrs. Addison & Co., against the plaintiff, the defendant and another person on the basis of a contract of hire and purchase by which the company had sold a typewriting machine on the instalment system. In the contract of hire and purchase the petitioner was described as the hirer and the plaintiff and one B. Maharana as guarantors. Subsequently, the company sued all these persons and obtained an ex parte decree. The company then transferred the decree to one Radha Krishna Sahu who attached the land of the plaintiff. In order to save his land the plaintiff deposited the decretal amount and the decree was satisfied. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit to recover the amount from the petitioner. The defence of the petitioner was that he was not the purchaser of the typewriter, but it was the plaintiff who was the real purchaser of the typewriter and it was he who had been making payments to the company. The learned Small Cause Court Judge held that the defence could not be entertained firstly because the decree which was obtained by Messrs. Addison & Co., was based on the footing that the defendant was the purchaser and secondly because under s. 92, Evi. Act, the defendant could not be allowed to adduce any oral statement for the purpose of contradicting or varying the terms of the contract which had been reduced to writing. Thus, the learned Small Cause Court Judge did not allow the defendant to adduce any evidence in support of his allegation and decreed the plaintiff's suit with costs. The present application is directed against his decree.

In my opinion neither s. 11, Civil P. C., nor s. 92, Evi. Act, can be said to constitute a bar to the defendant's right to substantiate his defence. In the suit which was brought by Messrs. Addison & Co., the plaintiff and the defendant were arrayed on the same side. The suit was brought on the footing that all the three persons who were parties to the contract were liable. The question as to which of the defendants was surety and who was the principal purchaser was not agitated by the defendants among themselves and was not decided. That being so, the decree in the previous suit will not operate as res judicata. As to s. 92, Evi. Act, it is enough to say that there are at least two decisions of the Allahabad High Court in which it has been held that the words "between the parties to any such instrument" as used in the section refer to the parties who on the one side and the other came together to make the contract or disposition of property, and would not apply to questions raised between the parties on the one side only of a deed regarding their relations to each other under the contract: see Mulchand v. Madho Ram (1) and Shamsh-ul-Jahan Begam v. Ahmad Wali Khan (2). The last case is directly in point because in that case a person had sued as a plaintiff on the allegation that though in a mortgage bond he appeared as a co-obligor, he was in reality merely a surety. In that case it was held that evidence was admissible to show that the plaintiff executed the mortgage bond as a surety only.

The opposite view seems to have been taken by a single Judge in Muthukumaraswami Mudaliar v. Gobinda Padayachi (3) but I prefer to follow the decisions of the Allahabad High Court which were decided by two Division Benches of that Court. The decision of the learned Small Cause Court Judge therefore, cannot be supported. It must, however, be observed that the statements made in the document cannot be lightly treated because they at least amount to an admission by the defendant who was a party to the document. Whether the defendant will by his evidence be able to show that the admissions do not represent the correct state of things is a matter on which I cannot express any opinion. The whole question will be decided with reference to such evidence as may be adduced by the parties. The defendant will be given an opportunity to prove his case and an opportunity will also be given to the plaintiff to adduce such evidence as he chooses to offer to support his case that the defendant was the principal and not the surety. The decree of the Court below is, therefore, set aside and the case is remanded to it for disposal according to law. Costs will abide the result. Hearing-fee one gold mohur.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 109 (a)—Applicability—Accused coming within local limits of jurisdiction of certain Magistrate and taking precaution to conceal himself—S. 109 (a) applies.

Section 109 (a) of the Criminal P. It is not limited to the more restricted case of a person who, with a similar object, takes precautions to conceal the fact of his presence within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a certain Magistrate. If a man is taking precautions anywhere in order to conceal his presence, and that concealing is to be effected within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate who receives information, such Magistrate has power to demand security, even though the residence of the person informed against within the jurisdiction is well-known. 113 Ind. Mr. K. P. Misra, for the Applicant.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—The applicant Chhutai Chamar files this revision application against the order passed by a Magistrate of the first class directing him to execute a personal bond of Rs. 200 and two sureties in the like amounts to be of good behaviour for a period of one year under s. 109 (a) and (b) of the Criminal P. C.

He went in appeal to the Additional Sessions Judge of Bahraich, who, however, upheld the Magistrate's order.

The applicant, according to the prosecution case, was seen hiding himself between the night of February 18/19, 1941, along with two other men in the hedges of the forest at a little distance from the motor road in village Billi, Police Station, Bhinga, in the District of Bahraich, in order to commit an offence. The case against him was that he was taking precautions to conceal his presence with a view to commit an offence and further that he could not give a satisfactory account of himself. The case was started against him upon Police Report. It appears that Ram Binayak Singh Constable was on patrol duty along with Waris Ali Constable and a chaukidar on the night in question. When the party got on to the motor road, Ram Binayak Singh suspected that certain bad characters were hiding in the hedges near village Billi at a short distance. The party went towards the hedges and found three men concealing themselves in the hedges. Seeing the Police party, the applicant along with his companions ran away but the Police gave a chase and certain other persons from the neighbouring fields came up on the spot. The applicant was arrested but his companions got away into the jungle. The applicant on being questioned gave a wrong name and address. Waris Ali Constable, however, recognised him. The applicant was found in possession of a house breaking instrument called sabar. The applicant was unable to explain his presence in the hedges at night and did not disclose the identity of his companions. These facts have been fully proved by the prosecution evidence.

The defence of the accused was that he was arrested at Piprehwa, where he had gone with Bhagwan Bania of his village to ask for the gauna of Lala Bania's daughter, who was married to the grandson of Bhagwan. The applicant states that Bhagwan had hired his cart to go to Piprehwa. He attributed his arrest to enmity with Waris Ali, against whom he stated that he had filed an application (Ex. A) to the District Magistrate. The accused produced evidence in his defence.

The learned Magistrate disbelieved the defence and took the precaution of examining Lala Bania of Piprehwa under s. 540 of the Criminal P. C. He denied the fact of Bhagwan Bania's visit to him in order to settle the date of his daughter's gauna. The learned Magistrate also found that the recovery of the house breaking instrument from the possession of the accused could lead to no inference other than that he was concealing his presence at that unreasonable hour 10 or 12 miles away from his home with a view to commit an offence. Accordingly he made the order against the applicant under s. 109 (a) and (b) of the Criminal P. C.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge in appeal upheld the order of the Magistrate.

Learned Counsel for the accused has contended that the story about the applicant's arrest is concocted as village Billi where the applicant is alleged to have been arrested was not within the beat of the Police Constables. This argument was raised for the first time in appeal but the learned Additional Sessional Judge rejected it as being belated as well as being devoid of substance. He found no flaw in the arrest and held that the applicant was actually arrested at the spot alleged by the prosecution. I agree with the view taken by the learned Additional Sessions Judge on the point.

It has been argued that s. 109 (a) and (b) has no application to the case. There is no doubt that cl. (b) of s. 109 is inapplicable and this point is conceded by the Govt. Advocate. I am, however, satisfied that the case is fully covered by cl. (a) of s. 109 of the Criminal P. C. Learned Counsel for the accused has referred to a number of cases of the different High Courts, but in my opinion it is not necessary to deal with any of them, as some of them are clearly inapplicable to the facts and circumstances of the present case and others have already been considered and discussed in a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Phuchai, (I. L. R. 50 All. 909) (1). It was held by the Full Bench that s. 109 (a) of the Criminal P. C. is applicable to a person who, being or coming within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a certain Magistrate, takes precautions to conceal his presence with a view to committing an offence. It is not limited to the more restricted case of a person who, with a similar object, takes precautions to conceal the fact of his presence within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a certain Magistrate.

That case was practically similar in facts to the present case. There also the Police had received information that a number of persons were concealing themselves on a dark night at about midnight in a mango grove outside the abadi of a village with a view to commit some offence. When the Police went to the grove, they found four persons sitting there, who, on being challenged, tried to run away. They were chased, and two of them were captured. They had house breaking instruments with them. When caught, they first gave wrong names and addresses, but later on disclosed their real names and identities. It was held that s. 109 (a) was applicable to the above facts.

It was observed at p. 917* of the report that if a man is taking precautions anywhere in order to conceal his presence, and that concealing is to be effected within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate who receives information, such Magistrate has power to demand security, even though the residence of the person informed against within the jurisdiction is well-known.

Accepting the view taken by the Full Bench, I am of opinion that the order passed against the applicant under s. 109 (a) of the Criminal P. O. calling upon him to execute the bond and sureties is perfectly justified. Clause (b) of s. 109 being inapplicable, the order under that clause is vacated. This will, however, not affect the order relating to the bond and the furnishing of sureties.

Subject to the variation indicated above, the application fails and is dismissed.

Will—Construction—Hindu testator having two widows and no children, bringing up R, a daughter of his wife's brother, as his own daughter—Property devised in favour of one of widows, providing that after her death property should go to his two brothers and R in equal shares—No restriction placed on R's power of alienation—Will held gave absolute estate to R—Hindu Law—Adoption—Adoption of daughter is not allowed.

P a deceased Hindu had two widows, but no children. R the daughter of a brother of one of the widows, was brought up from her infancy with P as if she were his own daughter. Before his death, P had executed a will. By the will, he devised all the properties to his junior wife. She was directed to give one of the houses to the senior wife for residence for her life and also a monthly maintenance allowance of Rs. 10. The rest of the income, the junior wife was allowed to use in any way she liked. As regards the corpus of the estate, she was prohibited from selling it, except certain unproductive properties which she could sell with the consent of his brothers. After her death the whole property was to be divided in three equal shares, two to his two brothers and one to R. There was no restriction on R's power of alienation. On the contrary she was treated on the same footing as the testator's brothers: Held, that the intention of P was to confer an absolute estate on R.

Hindu Law does not permit adoption of a daughter.

F. A. from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Amritsar, dated August 30, 1939.

Messrs. J. L. Kapur and Badri Das, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Mehr Chand Mahajan and Harnam Singh, for the Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The property in dispute is a part of the estate of the late Pandit

Rup Lal, Pleader of Amritsar, who died some time in August 1908. He had two widows, Mst. Teka Devi and Mst. Jai Kaur, but no children. Musammat Ram Rakhi (defendant No. 1) is the daughter of a brother of Mst. Jai Kaur. From her infancy, she had lived with Rup Lal and had been brought up by him as if she were his own daughter. In 1907, when Mst. Ram Rakhi was 13 years of age, Rup Lal arranged for, and celebrated, her marriage in his house and at his expense. On Rup Lal's death, besides the two widows, Mst. Teka Devi and Mst. Jai Kaur, his near relatives were his brothers, Pandit Mul Raj, Barrister-at-Law, and Pandit Sohawa Mal (father of the plaintiffs), both of whom were separate from him. On July 19, 1908, a few days before his death, Pandit Rup Lal had executed a will (Ex. P-5). It is in English, written at his dictation by a friend Lala Din Nath, who also was a legal practitioner of Amritsar. The signatures of the testator, were appended at the end, as also the attestation of his brothers, Mul Raj and Sohawa Mal and the Civil Surgeon of Amritsar. The will was registered a few days after Rup Lal's death and is admitted by all parties. It is also common ground that Rup Lal was the exclusive owner of the properties mentioned in the will and that he had full power of disposition over them. By the will, he devised all the properties to his junior wife Mst. Jai Kaur. She was directed to give one of the houses to the senior wife Mst. Teka Devi for residence for her life and also a monthly maintenance allowance of Rs. 10. The rest of the income, Mst. Jai Kaur was allowed to use in any way she liked. As regards the corpus of the estate, Mst. Jai Kaur was prohibited from selling it, except certain unproductive properties which she could sell with the consent of his brothers, but the sale-proceeds were to be invested in a suitable manner so as to yield a better return; and were to be kept intact. The testator then proceeded to say that

"after her (Mst. Jai Kaur's) death the whole of my property shall be divided in three equal shares, one share shall go to Pandit Sohawa Mal and to his male lineal descendants; second share shall go to Pandit Mul Raj and his male lineal descendants. The remaining one-third shall go to my daughter Bibi Ram Rakhi."

Rup Lal died within a month of the execution of the will, and Mst. Jai Kaur succeeded to his property for her lifetime, and remained in possession till her death, which occurred on October 30 1925. On November 1, 1925, Mul Raj and Sohawa Mal, brothers of Rup Lal and Mst. Ram Rakhi aforesaid, executed an agreement appointing Lala Dina Nath (the scribe of the will) as sole arbitrator to divide the properties which after Mst. Jai Kaur's death "had in accordance with the terms of the will devolved on us, all the three parties in equal shares." Lala Dina Nath gave his award on May 18, 1926 and this award was made a rule of Court by a decree passed by the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, on August 31, 1926. In accordance with the terms of this decree, the parties took possession of the properties respectively allotted to them. About nine years later, on February 8, 1935, Mst. Ram Rakhi gifted to her brother Ram Saran Das (defendant No. 2), certain house property and agricultural land which had come to her under the will and the award. On the same day, she made a will bequeathing to Ram Saran Das some other properties. Two years later, on July 22, 1937, she mortgaged for Rs. 8,000 a shop to a stranger, Mst. Sukh Devi (defendant No. 3). On April 18, 1939, the plaintiffs, who are the sons of Sohawa Mal, brother of Rup Lal, brought a suit against Mst. Ram Rakhi and the alienees aforesaid for a declaration that the gift and bequest to Ram Saran Das and the mortgage in favour of Mst. Sukh Devi had been effected without authority and were not binding upon them after the life-time of Mst. Ram Rakhi, as under the will she had only a limited estate in the properties bequeathed to her and could not alienate them without valid necessity.

The defendants denied the plaintiffs' claim and pleaded that under the will, Mst. Ram Rakhi had become absolute owner of one-third of the properties of the testator and that she possessed full power to dispose of them in any way she liked, uncontrolled by the plaintiffs. The mortgagee, Mst. Sukh Devi, pleaded in the alternative, that the mortgage in her favour had been affected for necessity. The trial Judge held that under the will as well as the award Mst. Ram Rakhi had become absolute owner of the properties which had been allotted to her and that the plaintiffs had no locus standi to object to her alienation. On this finding he has dismissed the suit, without going into the question of necessity for the mortgage. The learned Judge in finding against the plaintiffs has, as stated above, relied upon the will as well as the award of Lala Dina Nath. So far as the award is concerned, the conclusion is clearly erroneous and Counsel for the respondents frankly conceded that he could not support this part of the judgment. The Sub-Judge was much impressed by a declaration in the award that "aj se, har ek fariq har ek shae maqbuza ka wahid malik tasawar kiya jave." This sentence, read with the context, clearly refers to certain movables, which the arbitrator had allotted to the parties and of which possession was stated to have been given to them. In the preceding sentence, these movables were described as "shae" and in this sentence the arbitrator declared that from that day each of the parties would be considered exclusive owner of the "shae" in his or her possession. Obviously, the reference was to those articles only, and not to the immovable properties which had, as stated in the earlier part of the award itself, been partitioned by the parties themselves by mutual agreement. The award therefore did not confer any right on Mst. Ram Rakhi, independently of what she had got under the will.

The real question for decision is the proper construction of the will. As has been pointed out already, the property devised by Pandit Rup Lal had been acquired by himself, and he had full power of disposition. He had no children of his own, but had brought up Mst. Ram Rakhi, as if she was his daughter. Indeed, in the will he described her as such. If she had been his natural daughter, she would have succeeded to the entire property to the exclusion of Rup Lal's brothers. But Hindu Law does not permit the adoption of a daughter and therefore Rup Lal could not adopt Mst. Ram Rakhi and thus make her his legal heir. The best, that he could do, was to bequeath a part of his estate to her, along with his two brothers, who would otherwise have succeeded after the death of his widows. He, accordingly, divided the property equally among all three, giving each a one-third share. And in doing so he did not qualify the bequest to Mst. Ram Rakhi in any manner whatever. The phraseology used in reference to the three bequests is almost identical, and there is nothing in the will to indicate that the estate conferred on Mst. Ram Rakhi was in any way different from that conferred on the two brothers. Indeed, his real intention appears to be clear from a comparison of the terms of the will relating to the bequest to Mst. Jai Kaur with those of the bequest to Mst. Ram Rakhi. It was explicitly stated that Mst. Jai Kaur was to remain in possession and enjoy the income; she was not to alienate the property, except certain specified items, which she was authorized to sell with a view to invest the sale proceeds in more productive investments but these proceeds were to be kept intact. But no such restriction was placed on the property bequeathed to Mst. Ram Rakhi. On the other hand, she was put in the same category as the brothers, who admittedly took their shares absolutely.

Mr. Badri Das for the appellants referred to Moulvi Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1) and Radha Prasad Mullick v. Rancee Mani Dassee (2) in which it had been laid down that in construing wills it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property, that a female heir, whether she is the wife or in any other way related to the testator, takes only a limited estate. In the present case, however, this consideration is completely negated by the facts and circumstances mentioned above. As mentioned above the testator in making the bequests to Mst. Ram Rakhi and his two brothers, put them on the same footing. He stated that one-third share "shall go" to each. He gave no indication that the nature of the estate conferred varied according to the sex of the legatees. The legatees also appear to have understood the will in this manner. In the deed of reference to the arbitration they described Rup Lal's property as having "devolved on us, all three parties, in equal shares." They did not state that the share to be allotted to Mst. Ram Rakhi was for her life-time only. The learned Counsel for the appellants conceded that if Mst. Ram Rakhi had children, the properties allotted to her would devolve on them by inheritance. He merely urged that they were not alienable. But for this contention, there is no warrant whatever. After carefully examining the provisions of the will and taking into consideration the surrounding circumstances, we have no doubt that the intention of the testator was to confer an absolute estate on Mst. Ram Rakhi in one-third of his property which is bequeathed to her. This being so, the plaintiffs have no locus standi to challenge her alienations. The appeal fails and is dismissed, but having regard to the circumstances and particularly the fact that some of the reasons given by the lower Court in support of its decision were manifestly incorrect, we leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 74, 75—Instalment bond with default provision—Article applicable—Option of suing for whole sum on default of six monthly instalments—Suit, when should be instituted—Waiver—Limitation—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Duty of High Court.

In the ordinary way when a debt is payable by instalments and there is no default provision, a new cause of action arises upon each default, and the plaintiff can recover in respect of instalments falling due within three years before suit, [vide Art. 74]. But if there is a default provision, Art. 74 cannot be relied upon, and under Art. 75 if the plaintiff sues more than three years from the first default and there is no waiver, the suit is totally time-barred, that is he cannot recover even those instalments which fell due within three years of suit. But facts should be so interpreted, if possible, as favouring the view that the creditor has waived the exercise of the option on the first instalment when he bases his suit on subsequent defaults which are within limitation and does not seek to found his cause of action on the earlier default. 191 Ind. Cas. 220 (1), relied on.

In a case of an instalment bond payable in monthly instalments with a default clause giving an option to the creditor to sue for the whole amount on failure of six instalments, under the provisions of Art. 75 the creditor can institute that suit within three years of the 6th default, and in that suit he can claim not only the instalments still outstanding at the date of the suit and the instalments which had fallen due within three years of the suit, but also the six instalments which constitute his cause of action. The principle which holds good in regard to the first exercise of the option under the default clause holds equally good in respect of a claim founded on subsequent defaults and accompanied by a waiver of the option which accrues to the plaintiff on the earlier defaults. In effect the plaintiff is in any case entitled to claim the instalments of three and a half years, that is 42 past instalments in addition to the instalments still remaining in the future at the date of the suit.

It is the duty of the High Court acting under s. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act to see that substantial justice is done as between the parties.

C. R. App. of the order of the Munsif (as Judge of Small Cause Court), Kheri, dated April 10, 1940.

Mr. Akhlaq Husain, for the Applicant.

Mr. Siraj Husain, for Opposite Party Nos. 1 and 2.

Order.—This is an application under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act by Lala Gaya Prasad plaintiff whose suit to recover Rs. 146 principal due on a bond for Rs. 170 dated August 27, 1935, has been dismissed with costs by the learned Munsif of Kheri, sitting as a Judge of Small Cause Court.

The present suit was based on an instalment bond for Rs. 170 executed by the defendants in favour of the plaintiff Gaya Prasad on August 27, 1935. It was provided in the bond that the principal was repayable by monthly instalments of Rs. 2 and that on default of payment of six instalments, the creditor would have the option to realise the entire amount of the debt. The first instalment was made payable on September 1, 1935 and subsequent instalments on the 1st of each calendar month. Admittedly no instalments were ever paid towards the debt.

The present suit was instituted on February 24, 1940, the cause of action being stated as having arisen on February 27, 1937, and March 1, 1937. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 146, that is to say he gave up 12 monthly instalments, those which fell due on September 1, 1935, up to August 1, 1936. He claimed by implication to have waived the option which arose on every instalment after the first six up to and including the 12th. He sued to recover the instalments beginning from September 1, 1936, up to February 1, 1937, as if his cause of action had arisen on February 1, 1937. It seems actually that the plaintiff made a simple mistake of calculation. Claiming his cause of action to have arisen on March 1, 1937, that is within three years of the date of suit he could only claim to recover, as part of his cause of action, the six instalments ending on March 1, 1937, and it follows that he stated his waiver incorrectly as a waiver of 12 instalments instead of 13. In my opinion the plaintiff's suit should not be allowed to fail on the ground that he made a mistake of one month in calculation his intention having clearly been to waive his claim to any instalments going beyond the period which he could claim reckoning from the date of institution of the suit. I treat the suit therefore, as having been one of a claim for Rs. 144 only.

This mistake having been corrected, the question now is whether the plaintiff could maintain a suit for the amount of Rs. 144 or his suit was time-barred. By his suit the plaintiff claimed to exercise the option given to him under the default clause as provided by Art. 75 of the Lim. Act. Article 75 provides, for a suit on a bond payable by instalments which provides that if default be made in payment of one or more instalments, the whole shall be due, a period of limitation of three years which begins from the date when the default is made, unless where the payee or obligee waives the benefit of the provision, and then when fresh default is made in respect of which there is no such waiver. There is no doubt that in the ordinary way when a debt is payable by instalments and there is no default provision, a new cause of action arises upon each default, and the plaintiff can recover in respect of instalments falling due within three years before suit, vide Art. 74. But if there is a default provision, Art. 74 cannot be relied upon, and under Art. 75 if the plaintiff sues more than three years from the first default and there is no waiver, the suit is totally time-barred, that is he cannot recover even those instalments which fell due within three years of suit. On the other hand after a consideration of a number of cases of this Court on the point, I myself held in Sheo Narain v. Bageshur (1940 O. W. N., 1081) (1) that :

"The general current of decisions in the Chief Court of Oudh is in favour of interpreting any facts which can possibly be so interpreted as favouring the view that the creditor has waived the exercise of the option on the first instalment when he bases his suit on subsequent defaults which are within limitation and does not seek to found his cause of action on the earlier defaults".

In the present case the plaintiff does not found his cause of action on the first 12 defaults, and it is clear that when he founded it on the 13th default it was by a mistake of description only. The question however, is whether founding it on the 14th where date be seen correctly and the subsequent five defaults the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the suit, bearing in mind that the instalments in respect of which the 14th to 19th defaults took place, fell due more than three years prior to the date of suit.

Learned Counsel for the opposite party has contended strongly that the present suit must fail in any case because the plaintiff has claimed six instalments which were time-barred. On a fair consideration, however, it seems to me that this is a mistaken view. The plaintiff was entitled on the 6th default to institute a suit to recover the whole amount due under the bond. Under the provisions of Art. 75 he could institute that suit within three years of the 6th default and in that suit he could claim not only the instalments still outstanding at the date of the suit and the instalments which had fallen due within three years of the suit, but also the six instalments which constituted his cause of action. It appears to me that the principle which holds good in regard to the first exercise of the option under the default clause holds equally good in respect of a claim founded on subsequent defaults and accompanied by a waiver of the option which had accrued to the plaintiff on the earlier defaults. In effect the plaintiff was in any case entitled to claim the instalments of three and a half years, that is 42 past instalments in addition to the instalments still remaining in the future at the date of the suit.

Learned Counsel for the opposite party on the other hand has sought to argue that the plaintiff's suit, was no less than seven months over due. He contends that as the plaintiff claimed Rs. 146 his cause of action for that amount arose in August 1936, that is to say at the close of the first year of the instalments and that the plaintiff was not entitled to reckon time from the 18th instalment (or as it should have been the 19th instalment), I have dealt with that point sufficiently already. The plaintiff could not be worse off in regard to a claim based a subsequent cause of action than he would have been had he filed his suit when he could proceed on the first cause of action, and the same principle is applicable to cases where the right accrues after six months. Instalments as is applicable where it accrues on the failure to pay one six monthly instalment.

The main ground of argument put forward on behalf of the opposite party is that in all the cases which have been quoted (they were nearly all quoted in my decision in Sheo Narain's case) (1) the claim made by the plaintiff did not include any time-barred amount. Founding on the contention that the six months which furnished the cause of action are time-barred, learned Counsel argues that the claim includes time-barred amounts and must, therefore, fail. It seems to me to be clear that save in so far as there was an error in calculation by which the plaintiff by mistake claimed Rs. 2 more than he was entitled to, there was no claim for any amount which was time-barred, and, therefore, applying the principle applied in other Oudh cases, it is reasonable to hold that the plaintiff had waived the option whenever it accrued to him earlier. In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff's suit was wrongly dismissed as barred by limitation. It should have been decreed for the amount which was properly due to him, namely Rs. 144.

It is the duty of this Court acting under s. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act to see that substantial justice is done as between the parties. I allow this application to this extent that the plaintiff's suit is decreed for Rs. 144 but as to a considerable extent the suit failed on account of the mistakes of the plaintiff and his inability to explain his case, I allow no costs of this application or of the suit.

Foreign judgment—Effect—Creditor's option to bring action in domestic tribunal on foreign judgment—Notification under s. 44, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), whether alters character of foreign judgment—Foreign judgment obtained against some joint promisors or contractors—Suit on original cause of action, if can be maintained against rest in domestic tribunal.

It is a well-established principle of Private International Law that a foreign judgment only creates a new obligation to pay but does not extinguish the original cause of action for the debt. A foreign judgment involves no merger of the original cause of action especially when it has been declared to be a nullity by a competent British Indian Court. The creditor thereupon has the option of bringing an action in a domestic tribunal on the foreign judgment which he has recovered or of bringing in a domestic tribunal a suit upon the original cause of action. It does not matter whether the procedure for enforcing a foreign judgment is by a suit or by an application in the form of execution. The mere fact that by reason of the notification issued by the Governor-General in Council under s. 44, Civil P. C., the plaintiff had the right to enforce the foreign judgment by an application for execution would not alter the legal character of the foreign judgment. In law it would still be regarded as only creating an independent obligation on the judgment debtor to pay the sum adjudged without involving a merger of the original cause of action. Smith v. Nicolls (1) and 176 Ind. Cas. 380 (2), referred to. [p. 747, col. 2; p. 748, col. 1.]

Where the first judgment pronounced against some of several joint promisors or contractors is a judgment not of a domestic Court but of a foreign Court, the original cause of action still subsists and a second suit based on it can still be filed in a domestic tribunal. The promisee who has the right to sue on the original cause of action both in the foreign Court and in the domestic Court may in such a case sue those promisors who are residents or subjects of the foreign State in the foreign Court and so get against them an effective judgment in that Court and may also sue the others who are residents or subjects of British India in a British Indian Court on the original cause of action and so get an effective judgment against them. Judgment.—On January 7, 1929 ten persons jointly borrowed Rs. 18,000 from the Cooch Behar Loan Company Limited hereafter called the company, on a promissory note carrying interest at nine per cent. per annum. Of these ten persons, five were and are residents and subjects of the Cooch Behar State but the remaining five persons were and are British subjects and residents of British India. On January 6, 1932 the company instituted a suit to recover its dues against the said ten persons in the Court of the Civil Judge at Cooch Behar and on April 1, 1932 recovered an ex parte decree for Rs. 21,203 and costs. The five persons who are British subjects and residents of British India (defendants Nos. 1 to 5 of this suit) did not at any stage appear in the Cooch Behar Court, and so did not submit to the jurisdiction of that Court. After the said decree a sum of Rs. 12,236 was realised by the company from the five persons who were residents of Cooch Behar and subjects of that State. They are defendants Nos. 6 to 10 in this suit. Thereafter the company applied on January 17, 1934 to execute the said decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 5 in a British Indian Court, namely the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Jalpaiguri, as in the notification issued by the Governor-General in Council under s. 44, Civil P. C., Civil Courts of Cooch Behar are included. The Subordinate Judge at Jalpaiguri, however, by his order dated March 17, 1934 refused to execute that decree, on the ground that the decree of the Civil Court of Cooch Behar passed against the said defendants (defendants Nos. 1 to 5) was void as that Court had no jurisdiction over them, as they were neither residents of Cooch Behar, nor subjects of the Cooch Behar State, nor had they submitted to the jurisdiction of that Court. On the same date on which the application for execution was filed in the said Court, that is January 17, 1934, the suit in which this appeal arises was filed by the company in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Jalpaiguri against the aforesaid ten persons to recover the balance, namely the sum of Rs. 11,959. The suit was for enforcement of the judgment of the Cooch Behar Court against defendants Nos. 1 to 5, alternatively it was based on the original cause of action, namely on the promissory note, and a decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 5 for the balance due was prayed for. To save the suit from the bar of limitation, so far as it was based on the original cause of action, acknowledgment of liability on the part of the defendants was pleaded. The claim to enforce the judgment of the Cooch Behar Court against the said defendants was given up by the company in the lower Court and that claim has not been reiterated before us.

The learned Subordinate Judge by his judgment dated December 4, 1936 held that the company had the right to fall back upon the original cause of action and that the suit based on the promissory note was not barred by limitation by reason of acknowledgment of liability by defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and of defendant No. 5 who had died during the pendency of the suit and whose heirs are defendants Nos. 5 (a) and 5 (b). He accordingly decreed the suit against defendants Nos. 1 to 5 (b). Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 (b) have preferred this appeal. It is contended on their behalf that (1) the suit based on the promissory note is not maintainable and (2) in any event it is barred by limitation. The first point has been urged on two grounds : (a) that the original cause of action, no longer subsists after the judgment of the Cooch Behar Court, it being merged therein and (b) even if that be not the position, the company having sued and obtained an effective decree in the Cooch Behar Court against some of the joint promisors, e. g., defendants Nos. 6 to 10, cannot again sue the other joint promisors, (defendants Nos. 1 to 5) on the promissory note.

It is a well-established principle of Private International Law that a foreign judgment only creates a new obligation to pay but does not extinguish the original cause of action for the debt. A foreign judgment involves no merger of the original cause of action. The creditor thereupon has the option of bringing an action in a domestic tribunal on the foreign judgment which he has recovered or of bringing in a domestic tribunal a suit upon the original cause of action. Tindal, C. J., speaking of a foreign judgment in Smith v. Nicolls (1) observed

"If therefore the judgment has not altered the nature of the rights between the parties, it appears to me that the plaintiff has the option, either to resort to the original ground of action or to bring an assumpsit on the judgment recovered."

Such being the principle, it does not matter whether the procedure for enforcing a foreign judgment is by a suit or by an application in the form of execution. The mere fact that by reason of the notification issued by the Governor-General in Council under s. 44, Civil P. C., the plaintiff had the right to enforce the foreign judgment by an application for execution would not, in our judgment, alter the legal character of the foreign judgment. In law it would still be regarded as only creating an independent obligation on the judgment-debtor to pay the sum adjudged without involving a merger of the original cause of action. The case in Chormal Balchand v. Kasturi Chand (2) was a case where the plaintiff had sued on the foreign judgment and not on the original cause of action. The effect of the notification issued under s. 44, Civil P. C. was however, considered and it was held that only the procedure for enforcing the foreign judgment in a British Indian Court had been changed thereby, leaving all the incidents of a foreign judgment untouched. In the case before us, there is an additional reason for holding that the original cause of action against defendants Nos 1 to 5 had not been merged in the judgment of the Cooch Behar Court, because from the point of view of private international law the judgment of that Court against defendants Nos. 1 to 5 is a nullity and has been so adjudged by a competent British Indian Court. We accordingly hold that the company's suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Jalpaiguri regarded as a suit based on the original cause of action, e. g., on the promissory note, is a good suit. The first branch of Dr. Sengupta's argument on the first point is accordingly overruled.

The second ground in support of the first point has been urged in the following manner. It is said that a joint promise by two or more promisors creates a joint liability and that this is the law in India. The only effect of s. 43, Contract Act, is to give the promisee the right to sue any one of the joint promisors, without impleading the others in the suit, but it does not make the liability of joint promisors joint and several. A decree recovered against some of the joint promisors accordingly bars a second suit against the rest. For these propositions reliance has been placed on the judgment of Garth, C. J., and Markley J., in Hemendra Coomar Mullick v. Rajendrolall Moonshee (3). The rule laid down in that case is invoked by the appellants' Advocate by saying that as the decree passed against defendants Nos. 1 to 5 by the Cooch Behar Court is a nullity they must be regarded as not being parties in the Cooch Behar Court and the suit filed in the Cooch Behar Court must be regarded as having been filed against defendants Nos. 6 to 10 only. We will assume that this is the true position.

There cannot be any dispute that if the liability is joint and several, a judgment obtained against some would be no bar to a suit against the others. In Hemendra Coomar Mullick v. Rajendrolall Moonshee, (3), it was held that a promissory note executed by several persons jointly creates in India a joint and not a joint and several liability. The rule laid down in King v. Hoare (4) a case of joint contract, and in Brinsmead v. Harrison (5) a case of joint tort, was applied and it was held that a judgment, though unsatisfied, obtained against some of the joint promisors barred a second suit against the rest. The cases in Hemendra Coomar Mullick v. Rajendrolall Moonshee (3) and King v. Hoare (4) and cases of the same type where the same rule has been laid down. e. g. Kendall v. Hamilton (6) etc., were all cases where both the suits, the first and the second; had been brought in domestic Courts.

In India there is a divergence of judicial opinion as to the effect of s. 43, Contract Act. In Hemendra Coomar Mullick v. Rajendrolall Moonshee (3), it was held that that section had not the effect of making the liability of joint promisors joint and several, and had not the effect of making inapplicable in India the rule laid down by Parke B. in King v. Hoare (4). This view has been adopted in Madras. In Muhammad Askari v. Radhe Ram (7), Strachey C. J., and Banerjee, J., took a different view. In Bombay Farran, J., also took a different view of s. 43, Contract Act : Motilal v. Ghellabhai (8). In Shivlal Matilal v. Bridhichand Jivraj (9)

Macleod, J. reviewed the leading cases on the subject and agreed with the view taken in Hemendra Coomar Mullick v. Rajendrolall Moonshee (3). In this Court the principle laid down therein has been followed in many cases. In Krishnadas Roy v. Kalitara (10), however, the specific question we have to decide was not decided, but there are observations in the judgment of both Chatterjee and Richardson, JJ. which imply that a joint contract in India creates a joint and several liability on the part of the joint promisors. The matter again came up for decision in Miss Moselle Solomon v. Martin & Co. (11). The learned Judges Lort-Williams and Jack, JJ., differed on this point, though they agreed in decreeing the appeal on other grounds. In this state of the case-law we would have referred the matter to the Full Bench, but in the view we are taking that course is not necessary. We would proceed upon the assumption that the rule laid down in Hemendra Coomar Mullick v. Rajendrolall Moonshee (3) is a good rule when both the suits are suits filed in domestic Courts. The observation made in that case must be taken to relate to suits in domestic tribunals, for Garth, C. J. and Markley, J. were dealing with the previous judgment of a domestic and not of a foreign Court. The rule laid down by them was expressly based on the decision in King v. Hoare (4). We will have therefore to examine the grounds on which King v. Hoare (4) and other English cases have proceeded.

Parke B. first considered the case of only one debtor or one wrong-doer. He observed that on a judgment being recovered in a Court of Record, the judgment was a bar to the original cause of action, because it is thereby reduced to a certainty and the object of the suit attained. It would be useless and vexatious to subject the defendant again to another suit to obtain the same result. The second suit would be barred on the principle that the matter had passed by the result of the first suit to the domain of judgment transit in rem judicatum. The original cause of action, so to say, had merged in the judgment rendered. It had thereafter no existence, and so could not be enforced by a separate action. Parke B. then considered the case of more than one joint debtor or more than one joint tort-feasor. He said that in such cases as the liability was joint, there was one cause of action for the breach of the joint contract or for the joint tort, and not as many causes of action in number as were parties to the joint contract concerned in the breach or as many persons concerned in the joint tort. As soon therefore there was a judgment against one or some of them the cause of action which was a single one merged in the judgment on the same principles formulated in the case where there was only one debtor or one tort-feasor. After the judgment in law nothing of original cause of action was left.

In some cases which were decided after King v. Hoare (4), it was said that Parke B. had only lay down a rule of procedure but this view of King v. Hoare (4), was negated by the House of Lords in Kendall v. Hamilton (6). In that case it was also pointed out that the rule formulated in King v. Hoare (4), did not proceed upon the principle of election, namely, that the plaintiff by suing some out of several joint debtors had elected to take them as his debtors to the exclusion of those whom he had not joined in the action, but that it proceeded upon two principles of substantive law. The first was the principle of the merger of the cause of action in the judgment—transit in rem judicatum, and the second was a principle of public policy that there should be an end of litigation—there should not be a vexatious succession of suits on the same cause of action—nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa. Such being the basis of the rule laid down in King v. Hoare (4), the said rule cannot in our judgment apply where the first judgment pronounced against some of several joint promisors or contractors is a judgment not of a domestic Court but of a foreign Court, for a judgment of a foreign Court does not operate in merging in it the original cause and the principle of nemo debet bis vexari etc., also does not apply. The original cause of action still subsists in such a case and a second suit based on it can still be filed in a domestic tribunal. On the principle analogous to the principle of cessante ratione legis, cessat et ipsa lex the rule formulated in King v. Hoare (4), and here in India in Hemendra Coomar Mullick v. Rajendrolall Moonshee (3), should not be applied to the case before us because the judgment in the previous suit was a judgment of a foreign Court. If that foreign judgment had been fully satisfied, a suit in the domestic tribunal would have been barred but then on a different principle. The application of the rule laid down in King v. Hoare (4), and Hemendra Coomar Mullick v. Rajendrolall Moonshee (3), to a type of case which we have before us would work great injustice. When a creditor lends money to several persons on a joint promissory note or when a person enters into a joint contract with several persons he relies upon the joint credit, the credit of all of them. According to the English Rule he has to sue them all in one suit, and when all are residents or subjects of the same estate he gets an effective decree against all which he can execute against the property of one and all the defendant judgment-debtors.

(10) 22 C W N 289; 44 Ind. Cas. 80; A I R 1918 Cal. 512.

In India he can sue one or some without making others parties, but that is his own option. He can sue all or some in one action. If, however, some of the joint promisors be the residents or subjects of one State and the others of another State and if the rule laid down in King v. Hoare (4), and Hemendra Coomar Mullick v. Rajendrolall Moonshee (3) be made applicable to such a case the promisee would, on the breach of that joint contract, be compelled to make his election of either proceeding against the first set or the second set of joint promisors. That rule would have the effect of compelling him to have recourse to the security of some of the joint promisors only, when by entering into the contract he intended to have the security of all of them. For the aforesaid consideration also we think that the rule formulated in King v. Hoare (4), and Hemendra Coomar Mullick v. Rajendrolall Moonshee (3), should not apply to such a case. The promisee who has the right to sue on the original cause of action both in the foreign Court and in the domestic Court may in such a case sue those promisors who are residents or subjects of the foreign State in the foreign Court and so get against them an effective judgment in that Court and may also sue the others who are residents or subjects of British India in a British Indian Court on the original cause of action and so get an effective judgment against them. Any other view would work hardship. In Lakshmishankar v. Vishnuram (12), the learned Judges held that a decree passed in a foreign Court (Court at Baroda) against one person on a joint khata account did not bar a suit in a British Indian Court against his partners, though the liability was joint. Though the reason for the decision given was that the judgment of the Baroda Court was not res judicata in the suit in British India, and not the reasons on which we support our judgment, the result is the same. We accordingly overrule this branch of the argument of the appellants' Advocate on the first point.

We do not also see any substance in the second point, the point regarding limitation. On January 27, 1931, the company wrote a letter to all the defendants. By that letter it demanded payment within two months and threatened them with a suit if the demand was not complied with. In reply to this letter, defendant No. 1 wrote a letter to the company on January 28, 1931, (Ex. 27). That letter contains an acknowledgment of liability by him and the suit against him is saved. The company led uncontradicted evidence that the other defendants authorized defendant No. 9 to write this letter on their behalf. The learned Subordinate Judge has discussed that evidence and we do not think it necessary to reiterate the reasons given by him for holding that defendant No. 1 was their agent in the matter of acknowledgment of liability. We accept the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge in this respect and hold that the suit is in time against all the defendants-appellants. The result is that this appeal fails. It is accordingly dismissed with costs to the plaintiff company. The application for adducing additional evidence is rejected.

O. L. Appeal, dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Appeal No. 295 of 1936

AKKI DODDA BASAPPA—

versus

AKKI MALLAMMA AND ANOTHER

—RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law—Widow—Maintenance—Decree for maintenance against undivided members made charge on family property—Subsequent partition does not affect decree—Subsequent partition with consent of widow—Suit by member for declaration that he is liable under decree due to partition does not lie—Question falls under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908).

When a member of an undivided family dies leaving him surviving his widow and his sons and brothers, the widow's right to maintenance is against the entire joint family composed of the sons and brothers of the husband. It may be that if she waits until a partition takes place she may have a lesser right, i. e., instead of a right over the entire family, a right over those persons who take her husband's share. But if before a partition is effected, she gets her right declared, defined and reduced to a certainty by a decree of Court, her rights cannot be taken away by any subsequent partition effected among the members of the family. When therefore, the widow has secured her right fixing her claim against the whole joint family and getting a charge on a reasonable portion of the property the right or charge cannot be taken away from her by any subsequent partition between the members of the family. 188 Ind. Cas. 696 (1), explained, Jayanti Subbiah v. Alamelu Mangamma (4), Lakshman Ramachandra v. Satyabhamabai (5), Karuppa Koundan v. Chinna Nallammal (6) and 177 Ind. Cas. 33 (7), relied on.

Where subsequent to the passing of a maintenance decree creating a charge on certain joint family property, the members of the joint family effect a partition to which the widow is a consenting party, a subsequent suit by one of the members for a declaration that he was not liable for the maintenance of the widow as the result of the partition with widow's consent is not maintainable as the question is one under s. 47, Civil P. C.

A. against the decree of the District Court, Bellary, dated October 13, 1936.

Mr. V. S. Narasimhachari, for the Appellant.

Messrs. D. R. Krishna Rao and K. Umamaheswaran, for the Respondents.

Venkataramana Rao, J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the learned District Judge of Bellary dismissing the plaintiff's suit for a declaration that the decree passed in O. S. No. 3 of 1928 on the file of the Sub-Court of Bellary against himself and defendant No. 2 in favour of defendant No. 1 is not binding on him. The facts are few and not in dispute. Defendant No. 1's husband died in or about 1918 leaving him surviving defendant No. 1, defendant No. 2 his son by the first wife and the plaintiff his brother. On the date of his death defendant No. 1's husband was a member of an undivided family consisting of himself, the plaintiff and defendant No. 2. In 1928 defendant No. 1 filed a suit for maintenance and residence against the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 and obtained a decree on January 23, 1929, by which the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 were directed to pay maintenance at the rate of Rs. 40 per month and arrears of maintenance and the maintenance decreed was made a charge on the property described in Schs. A and B to the decree. The decree also directed the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 to put defendant No. 1 in possession of the house, Item No. 2 in Sch. C to the decree, and defendant No. 1 was to enjoy the same for her lifetime after which it must revert to the plaintiff and defendant No. 2. In pursuance of the said decree, defendant No. 1 was put in possession of the said house and she had been realizing the maintenance in accordance with the terms of the said decree. It is alleged in the plaint that on December 18, 1935, the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 effected a partition between themselves and that by reason of the said partition the plaintiff was no longer bound by the said decree. The allegation in regard thereto is made in para. 5 of the plaint thus :

"Under Hindu Law defendant No. 1 is entitled to be maintained out of her husband's property and there is no such obligation against the plaintiff after the division of the joint family properties. The decree in O. S. No. 3 of 1928 became inoperative after the division between plaintiff and defendant No. 2. The decree in O. S. No. 3 of 1928 is against the joint family properties and there are no such properties now. There is no personal obligation on the plaintiff to maintain defendant No. 1."

It is alleged in the plaint that defendant No. 1 agreed to the terms of the division by which the plaintiff was not to be liable under the decree. The main defence of defendant No. 1 was that she was not a consenting party to the division at all and that the decree in question was obtained by her against the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 personally as well as against the joint family properties of the family, that no partition made subsequently by the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 without her assent would be of any avail or could legally operate to extinguish the decree obtained by her. The defence of defendant No. 2 was that in the partition effected between himself and the plaintiff he got very little property, that the major portion of the property was retained by the plaintiff that it would be unjust to shift the burden of the entire decree on him and in any event the decree in O. S. No. 3 of 1928 continued to be binding on all the parties and could not be declared to be not binding on the plaintiff. The learned District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the suit was incompetent by reason of s. 47, Civil P. C.

In appeal, it is contended by Mr. Narasimhachari, Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant, that by reason of the subsequent partition the plaintiff is no longer bound to maintain defendant No. 1 and the said decree obtained against him must therefore be declared inoperative. He contends that as the decree is a maintenance decree, it is open to the plaintiff to institute a suit by reason of the events that happened subsequent to the date of the decree, that there was a change of circumstances which would necessitate the modification of the said decree and that it is competent to the Court to modify the same in view of the said change of circumstances. He has also urged that the partition is such a subsequent event and under the Hindu Law the obligation to maintain a widow is only from out of her husband's share and as the husband's share has now fallen to defendant No. 2 the proper person to maintain her is defendant No. 2, the plaintiff's obligation having ceased with the disruption of the family. Mr. Narasimhachariar has not been able to cite any authority in support of any of the contentions put forward and he frankly confesses that there is no direct authority on the point. He however contends that the recent decision of the Full Bench in Lakshmiddevamma v. Veera Reddi (1) at p. 343, though not a direct decision on the point would cover the present case. The exact point for decision before the Full Bench was whether the decision in Subrayulu Chetti v. Kamalavalli Thayaramma (2), or the decision in Narasimham v. Venkatasubbamma (3), was correct. Their Lordships were of the opinion that Subrayulu Chetti v. Kamalavalli Thayaramma (2), was wrongly decided and that Narasimham v. Venkatasubbamma (3), should be followed; Narasimham v. Venkatasubbamma (3), decided that

"where the widow of a co-parcener sues for maintenance after there has been a partition, she cannot enforce her right against any of the surviving co-parceners except those who have taken her husband's share."

But Mr. Narasimhachariar contends that the reasoning on which that decision was based would apply to the case in question. We are not inclined to agree with him in this contention. The observations in Lakshmiddevamma v. Veera Reddi (1) at p. 343*, on which reliance is placed, runs thus :

"There is here a clear statement (referring to Smritichandrika) that the duty of maintaining the widow devolves on the persons who take the property of the deceased undivided member of the family and it is emphasized that the duty is dependent on the taking of the property."

But their Lordships proceed further and remark as follows :

"While the family remains undivided the position is different. The property is held jointly and of necessity the amount required for a widow's maintenance has to be paid out of the estate regarded as a whole, but in no circumstances can she claim an allowance greater than the income of her husband's share in the estate."

It seems to us that these observations would apply to the present case. When a member of a undivided family dies leaving him surviving his widow and his sons and brothers, her right to maintenance is against the entire joint family composed of the sons and brothers of the husband. It may be that if she waits until a partition takes place she may have a lesser right, i. e., instead of a right over the entire family, a right over those persons who take her husband's share. But if before a partition is effected, she gets her right declared, defined and reduced to a certainty by a decree of Court, her rights cannot be taken away by any subsequent partition effected among the members of the family. In Jayanti Subbiah v. Alamelu Mangamma (4), Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., made the following observations which are referred to by the Full Bench with approval :

"When an undivided Hindu family consists of two or more males related as father and sons or otherwise, and one of them dies leaving a widow, she has a right of maintenance against the surviving co-parcener or co-parceners, quoad the share or interest of her deceased husband in the joint family property which has come by survivorship into the hands of the surviving co-parcener or co-parceners and though such right does not in itself form a charge upon her husband's share or interest in the joint family property, yet when it become necessary to enforce or preserve such right effectually, it could be made a specific charge on a reasonable portion of the joint family property, such portion of course not exceeding her husband's share or interest therein."

These observations are in strict consonance with the theory of Hindu Law that when a member of an undivided family dies, his share survives to all the members of the family and every member has got an interest therein subject to the principle that so long as there is a son, grandson, and a great grandson of the deceased co-parcener this share of the deceased co-parcener would be taken by the son or grandson or great grandson on a partition on the principle of representation and in their absence only would the shares of the other members be augmented. As observed by West, J., in Lakshman Ramachandra v. Satyabhamabai (5) at p. 509 :

"The rule is a consequence of the doctrine that the right of each co-parcener extending to the whole estate, it is fully owned as to every part notwithstanding the death of one of the joint tenants."

In fixing the quantum of maintenance the measure has always been taken to be the husband's share but as observed in Karuppa Koundan v. Chinna Nallammal (6) and also by Varadachariar, J., in Dandamudi Ramarayudu v. Daudamudi Sitalakshamma (7) the charge created in her favour need not be limited to the husband's share but in certain circumstances may exceed the husband's share. When therefore the widow has secured her right fixing her claim against the whole joint family and getting a charge on a reasonable portion of the property the right or charge cannot be taken away from her by any subsequent partition between the members of the family. The cases relied on by Mr. Narasimhachariar where the maintenance has been reduced or increased according as the circumstances of the family do not affect the question in issue at all, nor can the Full Bench decision be taken as an authority for the position that a right secured by a widow against the entire joint family by a decree of Court is taken away by a subsequent partition between the members of the family. At the partition it is open to members to stipulate that the widow's maintenance may be paid by any one of the members as in this case by defendant No. 2 and that in default of payment the other members may have a right to contribution or indemnity against the person who under the partition was made liable to pay. But that is an arrangement inter se between the members with which the widow has no concern.

Where a widow has secured a charge on certain properties that charge is not defeated by any subsequent transfer of the said properties by the members of the family and she is entitled to enforce the charge in the hands of the transferee. In our opinion partition would be a subsequent transfer and her charge is liable to be enforced in respect of the properties charged in whosever's hands the properties may be. We are therefore of the opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to the declaration sought. In view of this, it is unnecessary to go into the question whether a suit is competent or not. But there is a question of fact raised by the plaintiff, namely that the widow was a consenting party to the partition by which the plaintiff's liability came to an end and therefore by reason of the adjustment thus arrived at between all parties his liability under the decree became satisfied. This would strictly be a question under s. 47, Civil P. C., and cannot be gone into in an independent suit. Mr. Narasimhachariar now requests that the plaintiff may be converted into a petition under s. 47, Civil P. C. We allow the plaint to be treated as a proceeding under s. 47, in so far as the relief based on adjustment of the decree is concerned and direct the plaintiff to strike out para. 5 of the plaint and all other allegations in the plaint in so far as they have a bearing on the question raised in para. 5 which has been decided against him by this judgment. We therefore direct the District Judge of Bellary to go into the question whether defendant No. 1 was a consenting party to the partition and agreed to take her maintenance only from defendant No. 2 and agreed to treat the liability of the plaintiff as satisfied under the decree. It is open to the defendants to file a counter affidavit raising such objections as they may be advised in regard to the premises. Subject to the directions given above, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs—one set.

SINGAMPALLI VENKATA PUNNAYYA

—RESPONDENT

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), s. 8.—Debt incurred before October 1, 1932—Decree passed after commencement of Act—Debt cannot be scaled down under s. 8.

A debt for the repayment of which a decree has been passed after the commencement of the Mad. Agri. Relief Act, is not liable to be scaled down in accordance with s. 8 of the Act when the debt is one incurred before the October 1, 1932. The word 'decree' in ss. 7, 8 and 9 must be taken to refer to decrees passed before the commencement of the Act. 192 Ind. Cas. 400 (1), held no good law.

C. R. P. to revise an order of the District Munsif, Tenali, dated July 9, 1938.
